A NEW CONGRESS CONVENES

(AN EDITORIAL)

World attention is focused this week on Washington, where a new Congress convenes with the Democrats in firm control.

Gone is the administrative-legislative split which existed for two years while the Republicans dominated the law-making machinery.

Gone also is the myth that a majority of the people favored the special-interest legislation which the 80th Congress enacted.

In the White House is a man who took a people's program direct to the people and won. The winning was done on a New Deal Platform which most of labor strongly supported.

The people knew what they were voting for on Nov. 2. They expect results—not excuses—from the new Congress. They expect the men and women for whom they voted to carry out campaign promises to the best of their ability.

Liberal Democrats now have an excellent opportunity to make our economic and political systems function more efficiently—and for the benefit of more people—than they have in the past.

It's doubtful that such an opportunity will knock twice in succession at the door of any political party in America—unless it delivers the goods.

Emil Rieve:

Hits Report Which Urges State Rule Over Idle Pay

EMIL RIEVE, CIO vice president, has issued a sharply-dissenting minority opinion to the report of the Advisory Council on Social Security of the Senate Finance Committee.

Rieve, who is also president of the CIO Textile Workers, based his dissent on two major points:

1. The position of the majority of the committee that unemployment insurance and the employment service be continued on a state, rather than federal, basis.

2. A protest against a majority proposal that employers' payroll tax be reduced from 1.5% to 0.75%, with an additional tax of 0.75% on employes.

Rieve's dissent on the state control issue was in addition to a dissent which he signed along with Nelson H. Cruickshank, director of social insurance activities for the AFL; Sumner H. Slichter, Harvard professor; J. Douglas Brown, dean of the faculty, Princeton, and John Miller, National Planning Association.

RIEVE'S CONCURRING dissent declared that a national system would be far more efficient, would "make possible adequate benefits, would promote necessary mobility of labor during full employment or national defense emergencies, would meet the realities of our national economic organization, would overcome the present widespread differences in treatment of workers and of employers, and would make possible the development of a unified, comprehensive, adequate program of social insurance against the hazards of sickness, medical care, old age and survivorship as well as unemployment."

Rieve, in assailing the majority's recommendation that the payment by employers be cut, with the employe paying more, pointed out that this would be equivalent to a wage cut of about 1 cent an hour with no appreciable gain for the employe.

"I have never accepted the idea that the unemployment insurance contribution should be split equally between employers and employes. I certainly cannot agree to the idea that workers will show sufficient interest in unemployment insurance only if they pay for it," he said. "In Jersey, in spite of employe contribution for this program, the State CIO has been unable to secure representation on the state advisory council and labor has lost representation on appeals boards.

"When one system takes the place of 51 state and territorial systems, the number of complexities, ambiguities and uncertainties would be reduced by approximately 50/51sts; hence it will for the first time be possible for a single person to understand unemployment insurance in the U. S."

CIO OFFICIALS have objected to the makeup of the Advisory Council, which had only two labor representatives, compared to six industry and nine public members. They recall that in 1938 another social security committee had four labor, four industry and eight public members.

The committee named by the Senate Finance Committee, of which Sen. Eugene Millikin (R., Colo.) was chairman in the 80th Congress, included these members identified as "public" members:

Chairman Edward R. Stettinius, Jr.; Slichter, Frank Bane, of the Council of State Governments, Brown, Mary H. Donlon, New York Workmen's Compensation Board, Miller, William I. Myers, New York State College of Agriculture, Florence R. Sabin, scientict, and Ernest C. Young, Purdue University.

But Stettinius, though he is listed as president of the University of Virginia is a former official of U. S. Steel; Bane is a campaigner for states' rights, and Miss Donlon is an appointee of Gov. Thomas E. Dewey.

Other Name—

Ku Klux Klansmen are using an old dodge — name switching — to avoid federal punishment of subversive activities, Gilbert Harrison, American Veterans' Committee head, has warned Atty. Gen. Tom Clark.

Harrison charged that a new organization, the Associated Klans of Georgia, is "identical with the Knights of Ku Klux Klan, Inc." which has long been on the government's subversive list.

Hits N. J. Law

New Jersey's new cash sickness insurance law "is disrupting peaceful labor-management relations," Carl Holderman, N. J. State CIO president, charges.

In a letter to Gov. Driscoll, Holderman urged him to recommend "immediate amendment" of UCC regulations "to require collective bargaining and secret balloting on sickness insurance," as well as "appropriate" changes in the law itself "to rectify the many injustices that have developed in the operation of private plans."

Provocative Pamphlet

"Labor is particularly qualified to bridge the gap that has been growing between Europe and the United States," U. S. Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas said in his address to the CIO convention at Portland, Ore.

Justice Douglas' explanation of that statement should interest every thinking American.

The speech is now available in pamphlet form.

The price: 10c a copy; 20 for $1; 100 for $4; 1000 for $35; 5000 for $150.

Right Wingers Win a Three UE Locals

Members of the big Local 601, Westinghouse, Pittsburgh, ousted Thomas J. Fitzpatrick, president, who lost his bid for reelection to Philip Conahan, former head of the local.

Conahan won by a 8324 to 5215 vote. An entire slate of followers of CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, former president of UE, and Harry Block, former Pr dent of District 1, UE, went i office with Conahan.

In Minneapolis, members of cal 1140, UE, largest CIO local Minnesota, the right-wing w complete control of the office An entire right wing slate of de gates to the Hennepin Cou CIO council went into office, suring an end to Communist do ination of that body.

U S. Sues To End Segregatio At Washington Airport

UNCLE SAM, at long last, has taken steps to clean up a mess in his own back yard.

A law suit will soon be filed, the Civil Aeronautics Administration announced last week, against proprietors of restaurants at the Washington National Airport. Basis of the legal action: refusal by the restaurant operators to serve meals to Negroes.

The airport is located across the Potomac river from Washington in Virginia. Restaurant spokesmen said they were bound by Virginia segregation laws.

Negro groups, CIO officials and numerous public officials have maintained that the airport is under Federal control, and that Virginia laws don't apply.

The Department of Justice, after studying the statutes, ruled that Federal regulations covering the airport also apply to the restaurants, which are leased out to private operators. The CAA immediately ordered a non-segregation policy for customers of the restaurants.

Negro civic leaders and students from Howard University then entered the restaurants and asked for service. They were refused, the restaurants still maintaining they were bound by Virginia law.

A day later the CAA said it was asking the Dept. of Justice to bring suit to end the segregation practice.

Jim Crow at the airport h long been a problem of conce in the nation's capital. Ma travelers—both Negroes a colored foreigners — have be subjected to embarrassment a discomfort by the refusal of a port eating places to serve the

Murray Protests This Aggression

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has asserted that "we feel that the action of the Netherland government in suddenly and wantonly attacking the people of Indonesia conforms neither to the morality of our civilization nor to the practical political needs of western Europe and the United States." Map shows where the Dutch troops were landed by air (1) and sea (2) on Java, one of the group of Islands constituting the Indonesian Republic. Well-equipped Dutch troops easily overwhelmed the Indonesian Republican troops shown at right. The United States together with Syria and Colombia submitted to the United Nations Security Council a resolution calling on both sides to cease fire forthwith and to withdraw immediately to positions they held before the fighting started, but the proposal was not supported by a majority of the nations, including Russia which latter failed to obtain adoption of two resolutions. ECA halted aid to Dutch and Republican sections of Indonesia.

81st CONGRESS MEETS AMID HOPEFULNESS

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

NOVEMBER 2 pays off this Monday, January 3.

The 81st Congress, garbed in as bright a New Look as milady ever sported, gets down to work this week.

What the Congress will produce, nobody knows at this time.

But, as Congress prepares to convene, there's lots of hoping.

In CIO circles, for instance, there is strong hope that the President will issue a rousing call—in his "State of the Union" message—for action on the program which won him re-election. And there is hope that Congress will carry the ball to enact that program.

Republicans, and big business lobbyists, have made no secret of their hopes—that the 1949 New Deal will be slowed down, perhaps discarded, through technicalities, flank attacks and that old reliable talk-talk-talk.

Washington was due to see the last of the 80th Congress on Friday, Dec. 31. The "awful Eightieth" was to hold a one-day, lame-duck session, from which nothing very bad could emerge (Pres. Truman could veto any "surprise" bill, and the 80th would be out of office and hence unable to over-ride such a veto.)

So the 80th was expected to vote itself a travel allowance, receive some reports of committees, and adjourn itself into oblivion.

* * *

One of those committee reports was certain to take a last slap at American unions. The Joint Labor-Management Committee, set up under the Taft-Hartley Act, was scheduled last week to release its final report. The committee, headed by Sen. Ball (R., Minn.)—a Nov. 2 casualty—has long been hostile to labor.

The weekend was also scheduled to find the 81st Congress putting its house in order. Caucuses were being called to name each party's leaders in the Congress.

There appeared to be little contest there. Rep. Sam Rayburn (D., Tex.) will return to the post of Speaker, which he lost in 1946 when the Republican tide ran heavy. Rep. John McCormack (D., Mass.) will again be Democratic leader.

On the Senate side, Sen. Alben Barkley (D., Ky.) will be elected on a temporary basis to the job he'll get by law on Jan. 20, Inauguration Day: president of the Senate. At present, when the nation has no vice-president, the Senate elects a majority member to that office. After Jan. 20, the vice-president automatically becomes the Senate's presiding officer (usually, it's a pretty dull job).

Among the deflated Republicans, Sen. Taft is campaigning—with probable success—for re-election as Senate GOP leader, though the GOP liberal wing doesn't like his ultra-conservative attitude.

* * *

One tipoff to the shape of things to come will be the Democratic caucus' selection of members of the House Ways and Means Committee, which appoints the membership of every other House committee. Liberal Democrats are striving to assure a majority of Northerners on the committee's Democratic side; in the past, it has been heavily weighted with Southern polltaxers.

The first sessions of both House and Senate are apt to be the scene of parliamentary scuffling over proposed changes in Congressional rules. The rules—usually carried over from the past—come up for routine approval at the start of each session.

Liberal Senator Wayne Morse (R., Ore.) has indicated he'll seek to outlaw the filibuster. In the House, many members are out to curb the overwhelming power of the House Rules Committee, which acts as a "traffic cop" on all bills before that body.

Some Congressmen have said they'll also try to get the badly-tainted House Un-American Activities Committee abolished through an amendment to the rules.

Rep. John Rankin (D., Miss.), a leading Congressional bigot, won permanent status for the Committee two years ago through such a maneuver. Opponents of the Thomas-Rankin group would like to turn the tables next week.

* * *

There'll be one other opening-day fight, of less far-reaching importance. When the GOP took over two years ago, it fired the old Senate chaplain, and hired a new one.

Question: who'll say prayers to the 81st Congress?

Tobin Says Unions Aid Nation's Welfare

Increased productivity and greater bargaining power are the two factors which have contributed most of the constant improvement of purchasing power of the American wage earner, Labor Secy. Maurice Tobin said in a New Year's Day statement.

"The year 1949 finds the American wage earner better off than any other wage earner in the world," Tobin declared, "and assured that his freedom will be protected and his economic advantages improved."

"The growth of the labor movement has given him a greater participation in group economic and political decisions, and a more direct voice in his Government. American wage-earners and their unions have contributed to the strength and welfare of the nation."

AFL CONSIDERING CIO'S JOINT LEGISLATIVE PLAN

PRES. A. F. WHITNEY of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen is ready to meet with CIO representatives to plan joint action on a legislative program.

The AFL Executive Council, meeting at Miami, Fla., as the CIO News went to press, was expected to reach a decision on the "joint action" proposal, made by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

Murray, with approval of the CIO vice presidents, made the proposal in letters sent to AFL Pres. William Green, Whitney, Chairman H. W. Frazer of the Railway Labor Executives Association and Grand Chief Engineer Alvanley Johnson of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers.

Green recently wrote Murray that the AFL Executive Council would send "a definite answer to your communication and invitation."

Green added that a year ago the AFL council replied to a similar proposal for joint action by expressing "the opinion that the best method of bringing the entire force of labor to bear in the fight would be to establish organic unity between the AFL and the CIO."

At that time the CIO maintained that first things should be put first and that the two big labor organizations should learn first to work together on the legislative front before considering organic unity.

AFL leaders and delegates from central labor bodies at the November AFL convention in Cincinnati noted the satisfactory results in the elections achieved through cooperation with the CIO and other labor organizations.

Whitney's letter to Murray listed five dates when the rail labor leader would be engaged and said that "if you will name the time and the place of the meeting that will not conflict with the dates herein mentioned, I will be glad to accommodate myself to it."

Murray's letter to the AFL and the rail unions stated that resolutions adopted by the AFL convention and the programs of railway labor organizations demonstrate "that both the CIO and the AFL are in substantial agreement in their support of the legislative stand pledged.

"The greatest contribution our respective organizations can make towards realizing this constructive program is through united action on the part of the CIO and the AFL, together with the railway labor unions.

"Such unity of action is imperative and of vital importance if the mandate given by the people to the 81st Congress is to be realized through the enactment of appropriate and long-delayed legislation."

Murray said he was prepared to designate a committee selected from among the CIO's executive officers and vice-presidents to meet with spokesmen from the other labor organizations.

AH, YES, BUT TOO LATE

We had intended not to open our editorial mouth this week regarding our pet peeve—the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Our plans, however, were upset when two leading GOP members of the group—Reps. Mundt and Nixon—proposed an 8-point "reform" program for Committee hearings.

Their proposal came just a short time after the Committee did a dirty hatchet job on the character of the late Lawrence Duggan and just a few days before the Committee was to pass from GOP to Democratic control.

Their proposed program, for the most part, is a good one. It would give recognition to one thing the Committee has generally ignored—the fact that a person's civil rights should not go out the window the minute he or she goes through the door to the Committee's hearing room.

Nevertheless, we have a feeling that Mundt and Nixon are trying to accomplish by their proposal what they failed to accomplish by their "pumpkin papers" revelations—saving the life of the House Un-American Activities Committee.

There is nothing in the record of the Committee as a whole or in the recent behavior of Mundt and Nixon to indicate that a sincere concern over civil liberties prompted their proposal.

The Committee time and again has been guilty of the abuses which the Mundt-Nixon program might abolish.

Mundt and Nixon had ample opportunity to reform the Committee, which they dominated after its chairman, Rep. J. Parnell Thomas, was indicted on salary kickback charges. They didn't avail themselves of this opportunity, however.

Best solution to the problem is to abolish the Committee.

REAL DANGER IN SPREAD OF IDEA

The blundering probes of the Committee have been bad enough, but their influence on public thinking may prove in the long run to be considerably worse. There already is considerable evidence that this is true.

One "Little Un-American Activities Committee" has been proposed in Prince Georges County, Md., which adjoins Washington. There are reports that similar committees are in the making elsewhere.

The proposed Prince Georges group, suggested by business interests, presumably would ride herd on the patriotism of persons whom members of the group suspect. This would be done despite the fact that the group has no legal standing and no monopoly on Americanism.

The U. S. got a bitter taste of false patriotism during World War I from "Americanism" groups which popped up here and there. Many innocent persons were persecuted merely because they had "German sounding" names.

The problem of subversives was handled, wisely, during World War II by government agencies with trained personnel.

We cannot afford now—despite the "cold war"—to engage in widespread witch-hunting. We cannot afford to permit groups throughout the country to impose their own particular concepts of patriotism on their neighbors.

If new laws are needed to protect our nation from foreign spies, then new laws should be enacted.

If new law enforcement agencies or methods are needed to keep our government from being damaged or overthrown, then let us create such agencies and work out new methods.

But it's time to call a halt on those who would destroy freedom in feeble attempts to preserve what they consider democratic liberties.

Flip-Flop Boys At It Again

Latest Campaign Designed to Sell Idea Labor Played Minor Political Role

By ALLAN L. SWIM

IT'S HARD to believe, but many radio and newspaper "experts" have made three almost complete flip-flops in approximately two months.

On and prior to Nov. 2 they asserted with absolute positiveness that Dewey would become President and that the Republicans would retain control of Congress.

On Nov. 3 and for a few days thereafter they hailed the Truman-Democratic victory as a political miracle performed to a large extent by organized labor.

By late December, however, they were saying that the unions had virtually no effect on the outcome of the November balloting.

IT IS impossible to view these major flip-flops as merely the purely accidental gyrations of immature minds.

They follow too closely the pattern smart operators would work out if trying to sell the idea that nobody expected the Democratic platform to be translated into legislation.

"Mr. Truman is beholden to nobody" is becoming the stock phrase of those who would like to see the President forget all of his campaign promises.

An effort is being made to sell Congress, the general public and the unions themselves the idea that the unions don't really want or expect repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

And there's good reason to suspect that other groups which played prominent roles in the Democratic victory—groups like the farmers—will soon be told they had practically no effect on the November election.

Truman and the Democratic Party deliberately chose a program designed to appeal to the nation's liberal forces and to draw the strong opposition of the GOP and the Dixiecrats.

The CIO and most of the other labor organizations favored the Democratic program, so they threw their support behind the Truman-led campaign.

NO AMOUNT of minimizing by the "experts" can erase the fact that organized labor played a major role in the Democratic victory.

Certainly, labor alone did not re-elect Truman. The farmers alone didn't re-elect Truman. No single group was solely responsible.

His re-election and the election of a Democratic majority was a victory for a lot of people who were fed up with the special-interest legislation of the GOP-controlled 80th Congress.

And these people, after expressing their opinions at the ballot boxes, aren't going to let the "experts" talk them into believing they didn't know what they were voting for and have no right to expect the Democrats to deliver.

THE ANTICS of the "experts" are more amusing than dangerous—and it's reasonable to suspect that the Nov. 2 "miracle" didn't teach them any lasting lessons.

It's a bit galling, however, to watch them shove the same old peas around in the same old shell game they worked in pre-election days.

And don't be surprised if they attempt, by the end of 1949, to sell the idea that the Republicans won a great victory in November!

FSA Head Proposes 'A New Feeling of Security'

"YOUR Federal government, as represented by FSA (Federal Security Administration), expects—within the next ten years—to bring a new feeling of security to every man, woman and child in the nation, white or black, Protestant, Catholic, or Jew."

That's what Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing says, in the article "More Security for You" in the January issue of the American magazine. The article continues:

"Now—about the greater security of your immediate future: If the 81st Congress is willing, and I feel that it is—certainly President Truman is, having repeatedly expressed himself publicly—we will make it possible for all 62,000,000 Americans now employed to participate in Social Security protection, including lay-offs for illness and disability, for all children to enjoy the benefits of education, including college through scholarships or government-insured loans, and for every employed person and his family to visit a doctor, or a dentist, or an oculist whenever they need care.

"No doubt, this last item is the most startling. It has been maligned and misunderstood ever since we proposed this measure for your security and that of your children and the nation. . . .

"Much of the opposition to the National Health Program has been stirred up by the medical profession itself. Just why, I'm at a loss to understand. I am convinced that it will help the profession immeasurably. If we were trying to force anyone into the program, that would be different, or if we expected to hire them on yearly salaries. All doctors will be free to join the program or not. The doctors, themselves, will participate in fixing the fees. There's no doubt in my mind that the group, as a whole, will make a great deal more money.

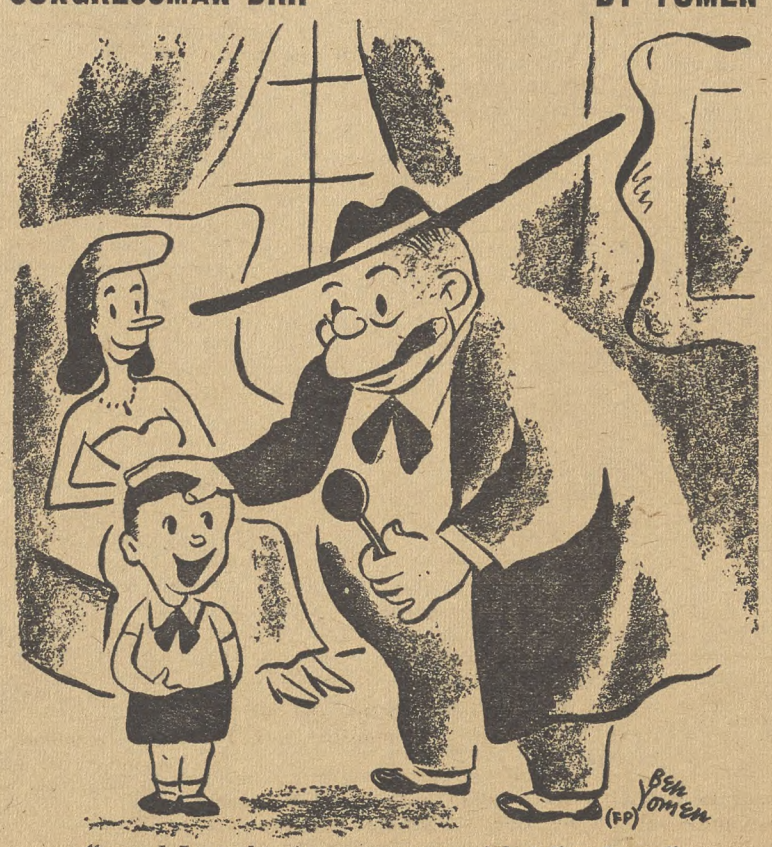
Most of the financing of the opposition is being done by the big pharmaceutical manufacturers, who combine drugs into pills and capsules so that a doctor can prescribe the finished product, which can be purchased at retail drugstores. . . .

"SECURITY for the child means, certainly, the sure knowledge that he will receive an education. As I wrote in the February, 1948, issue of The American Magazine, 2,000,000 school-age children are receiving no education whatever. If you include all children from ages 5 to 18, the number goes up to between 5 and 6 million . . .

"But there's often just as much difference between rural and urban schools as there is between Negro and white. It's a problem that simply cannot be adequately financed on a local level. It's a job for the states, with federal aid. It will take at least $500,000,000 per year to make a dent in this miserable condition. . . .

"Some people will tell you that these advances for the good of the general welfare are approaches toward Communism. The exact opposite is true. Security is the best defense we have against Communism . . ."

CONGRESSMAN DRIP BY YOMEN



"—and I resolve to cross every picket line I see."

Word 'Communism' Was Not Even Mentioned

IT WAS JUST an incident—perhaps an unimportant one—in a long and sometimes bitter battle for control of a CIO council.

On one side was a handful of reasonably capable Communists and fellow travelers. On the other was a small group of anti-Reds.

In the "middle" was a large group of delegates who had no strong feelings regarding Communism but didn't approve of Red-baiting at a time when the U. S. and Russia were military allies.

This seemingly gave the Commies an advantage—but, then, the right wing changed its tactics.

FIRST TEST of the new program of the right-wingers came when one of the Commies introduced an innocent-sounding resolution.

It expressed strong disapproval of the "persecution" to which a former legislator was being subjected in a state many miles from the city in which the council was located.

"This man is being persecuted merely because he's a member of a minority group in his state and because he's a friend of organized labor," declared the man who presented the resolution.

Another delegate gained the floor and said, "This council and all groups in the CIO must come out strongly against persecution wherever it exists."

AT THIS point one of the right-wing leaders asked the chairman for permission to speak on the resolution.

"I'm against persecution of all kinds and I particularly dislike persecution based on race prejudice," he said.

"I never heard of this fellow who's supposed to be getting a kicking around and I suspect most of the other delegates here never heard of him either. Does the chairman object if I ask some questions of the delegate who submitted the resolution?"

The chairman said he didn't object.

"Just how is this man being persecuted?" the delegate asked.

"Well, he's being kicked around by some of the state officials who don't believe in labor unions."

"How is he being kicked around?"

"For example?"

THE MAN who had been asking the questions sat down and one of his colleagues rose to his feet.

"This fellow who's being persecuted—just what did he do for the labor unions?"

"When he was in the Legislature a few years ago he favored the bills which labor supported."

"What bills?"

"I don't remember exactly. I wasn't there."

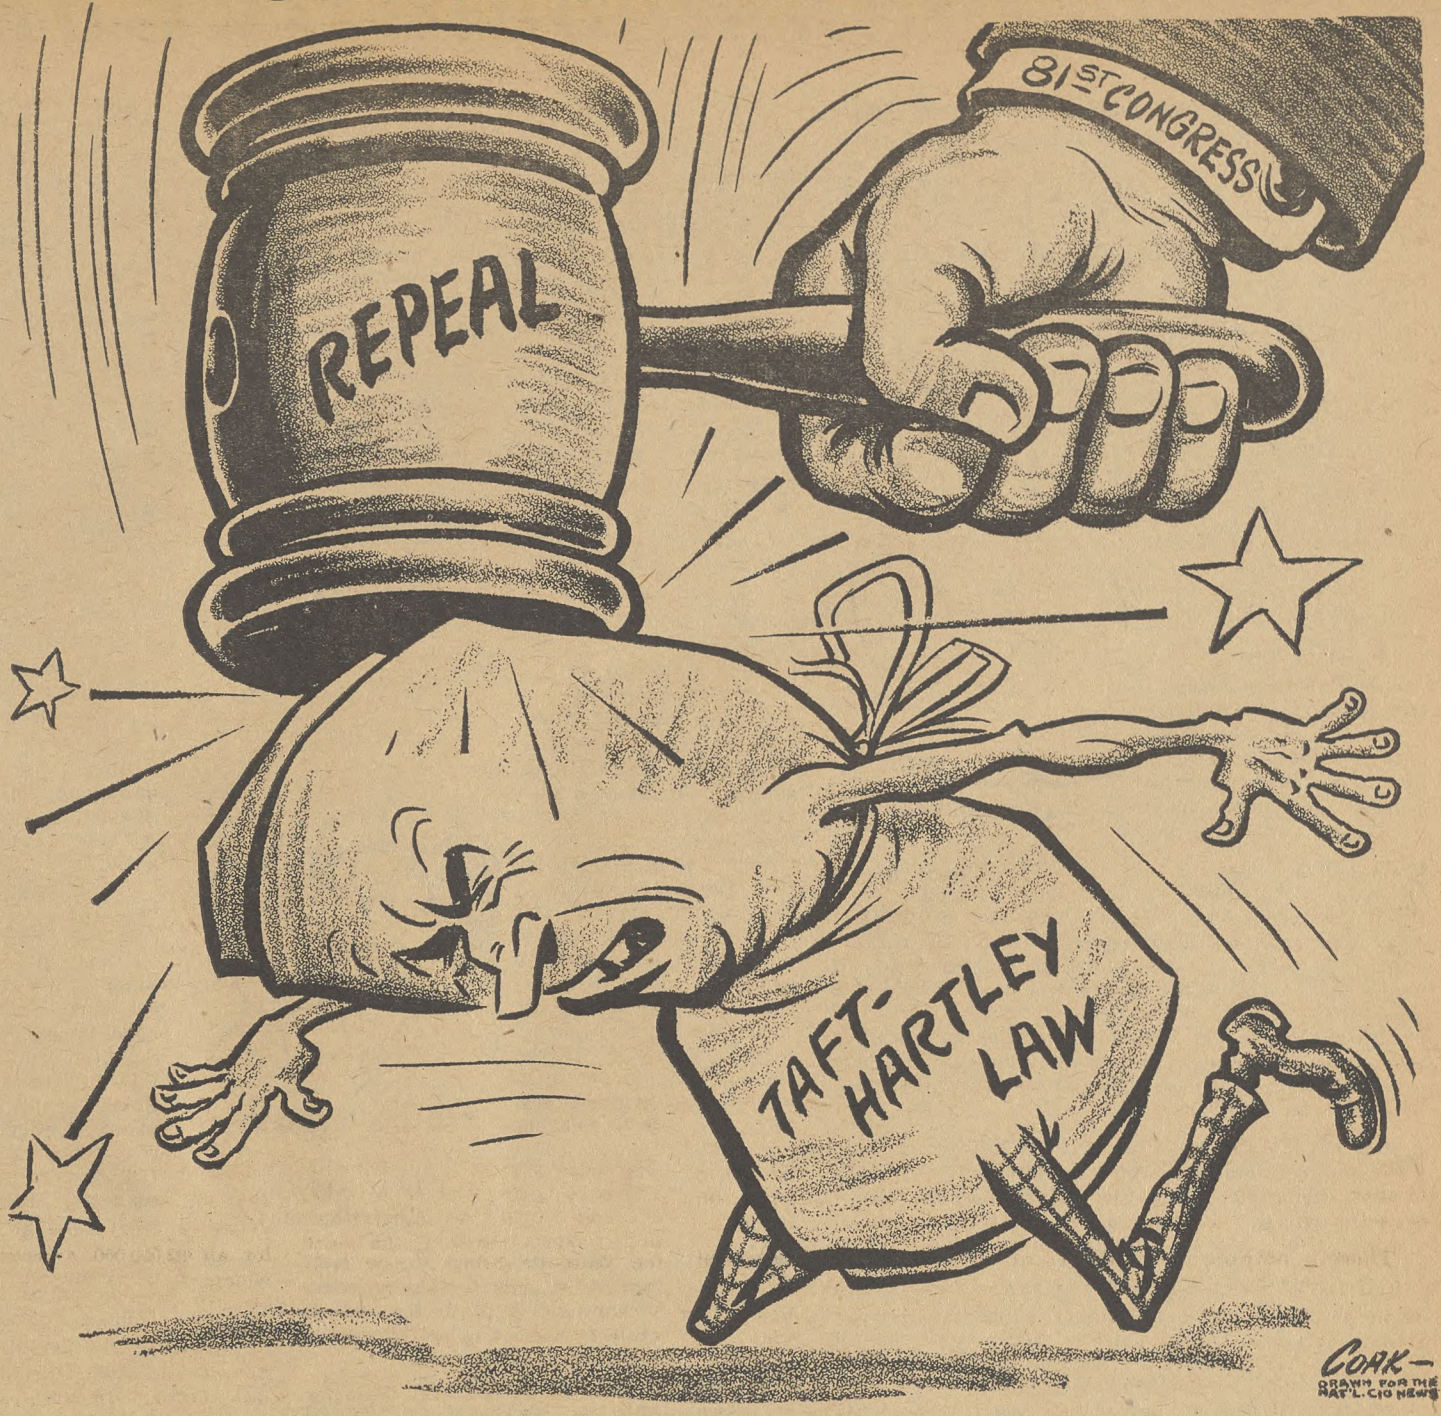
"Can you tell us something about this man's background?"

"Well, as I said before, he's a real friend of labor and he's a member of a minority racial group and . . ."

After some 30 questions failed to produce informative answers, a delegate declared, "This council has no business voting for a resolution when nobody knows anything about the jerk involved. I wish those guys would quit wasting our time with those mimeographed resolutions which are sent all over the country by a certain group outside the CIO."

Delegates then cast a vote of about 15 to 1 against the resolution. The Commies sat through the rest of the meeting in unhappy silence. A. L. S.

CONGRESS COMES TO ORDER



Cleveland Plain Dealer:

'Murray Was Right' In Defying Rep. Clare Hoffman

Many daily newspapers all over the land carried editorials backing the stand of CIO Pres. Philip Murray in refusing to appear before the one-man "sub-committee" of Rep. Clare Hoffman (R., Mich.).

We could not reprint all of them, but the following, from the Cleveland Plain Dealer, is somewhat typical. The Plain Dealer, incidentally, has certainly not built up a reputation for being a friend of organized labor.

MURRAY WAS RIGHT

C. I. O. Pres. Murray was completely justified, this newspaper believes, in refusing to obey a subpena issued by a one-man subcommittee of the House Labor Committee, consisting of Rep. Hoffman.

Murray challenged the validity of the subpena on the ground that there was no legal authority for Hoffman's appointment as a one-man subcommittee. He also expressed the opinion that any subcommittee ought to include representation from the minority party in Congress as well as the majority . . .

MURRAY'S action has focused attention on an issue which should be resolved by the next Congress. That is the establishment of an orderly and uniform procedure for the conduct of investigations and hearings conducted by Congressional committees.

There is no question that Congress has virtually unlimited authority to investigate matters which have any bearing whatsoever on legislative enactments proposed or in effect. It can investigate its own members or other branches of the government . . .

Thus the powers of a legislative committee are extremely broad, but the procedure for the conduct of a legislative investigation has never been explicity defined. For that reason there has been widespread criticism of the manner in which various Congressional investigations have been handled. Each committee has been a law unto itself, and has made its own rules. The result, in some cases, has been chaotic and has led to grave injustices.

THE SITUATION should be corrected, without in any way impairing the investigating powers of Congress, if Congress would establish a uniform procedure under which all committees would be required to function.

We have several suggestions along this line. No subcommittee should be appointed except by a majority vote of the full committee, not merely by the chairman or a majority of those present. No subcommittee should consist of less than three members, or be composed entirely of members of one political party. And no subcommittee report should be made public until after it has been approved by a majority vote of the entire committee.

These provisions would put a curb on Congressmen who are over-enthusiastic, irresponsible or whose main objective is publicity.

Witnesses also should be protected by a stipulation that they could confer with their attorneys if they so desired, although counsel for witnesses should not be permitted to take part in the proceedings. Also, any person accused of misconduct in a public hearing before a congressional committee should have the right to confront his accuser and to testify in rebuttal.

OUR APPROVAL of Murray's refusal to obey Hoffman's subpena does not mean that we believe there was anything improper in the subject Hoffman was proposing to investigate. He wanted to find out who was responsible for organizing and carrying out a "commando" raid on an industrial plant in Michigan which was attempting to operate in spite of a strike. Such violence is unlawful and cannot be condoned, and the House labor committee has every right to investigate it if it believes such an investigation would be helpful in framing legislation to prevent a repetition of such an outrage.

But we doubt whether the full committee or a subcommittee appointed with the approval of the full committee would have gone to the extreme Hoffman did in calling Murray as a witness.

In our judgment, Hoffman's action was motivated more by a desire to be meddlesome, to satisfy his long-standing grudge against organized labor and to get publicity for himself, rather than to adduce information helpful to Congress.

Shmoo Is Shmoocially Conscious!

PROBABLY the last place in the world you'd expect to find a social message would be a popular comic strip.

Especially a comic strip that has 40,000,000 daily readers.

But, one comic strip, which has 40,000,000 daily readers, has preached a social message. The comic strip is Li'l Abner, by Al Capp. So that far more than the 40,000,000 could get the message, it has been put out in book form entitled "The Life and Times of the Shmoo," and it's a pleasure to read it.

THE SHMOO

Unless you were one of the 40,000,000 lucky ones or have been fortunate enough to have read "The Life and Times of the Shmoo," you don't know what that "ev'rything" means.

THE BOOK explains it this way: "Thar's more Shmoos in the world than anything! They lays aigs (eggs, that is) at the slightest excuse!! They also gives milk!! And, as fo' meat, broiled they makes the finest steaks—fried they come out the yummiest chicken—and all white meat, mind yo'!! And, as for upkeep, there is none—they don't eat anything!

"There's no waste! the hide makes the finest leather—or cloth, depending on how thick you slice it! The eyes makes wondiful suspender buttons—and there are absolutely no bones."

HOW COULD one have the heart to kill one of these cunning creatures for food or clothing?

Well, that's made easy too. Li'l Abner, his mouth watering at the thought of all that food, looked adoringly at a shmoo. "H-He dropped daid!" cried Abner.

"Of course," answered the Old Man of the Valley of the Shmoon, where Li'l Abner found the Shmoon (that's plural for Shmoo, natch.) "Go ahead and broil him! When yo' looks at a Shmoo as though you'd like t'eat him, he dies of sheer happiness."

"Golly, wif these around, nobody won't nevah hafta work no more! All hoomanity kin now live off th' fat o' th' land—namely, Shmoon!"

According to Cartoonist Al Capp: "You are about to enter Dogpatch, an average stone-age community. How do Dogpatchers live? (We use the term 'live' in its most laughable sense, of course). Well, they live entirely on their turnip crop. Every year they plant—every year the turnip termites grimly devour it."

Immediately, life changed for Dogpatch—and, eventually, most of America, so the book says. (When roasted, shmoon "tastes like catfish.")

(Shmoon love to race. In a 10-yard dash, two start out. At the half-way mark, they have multiplied into dozens. When they cut the tape, "there are hundreds of 'em. The winner wasn't even born when the race started.")

THE FAMILIES of Dogpatch were happy. Theirs had become the ideal life.

Then, enters the villain, Soft-Hearted John—and we can assure you no name is less appropriate.

Now comes the social message.

A sleek limousine finds itself in Dogpatch. In it are two obvious Union Leaguers, one named P.U. They are signing up labor to work 16 hours a day, seven days a week for $7. Dogpatchers, they figure, "haven't been spoiled by that silly fad of working a mere 8-hour day."

LI'L ABNER (and Shmoon)

They had decided to move their plant here—a run-away plant, that is—and hire Dogpatchers. They also figure that if they could pay less maybe the board might give them a half-million-dollar bonus. They had a rude awakening. The Shmoon had beaten them to Dogpatch, and everybody was happy.

THE TWO gents hasten back to a "certain large Eastern city which shall remain nameless," though the cartoon shows a street sign saying 42d and Broadway. There, things were in a bad way—for profiteers, that is. The Shmoon had spread "from Natchez to Mobile and from Memphis to St. Joe." 'Twas chaos.

Fatback J. Roaringham—"whenever people discuss swine, his name is prominently mentioned"—cried out:

"If we don't do something fast, everybody will be happy!"

Some silly industrialists thought maybe this was the dawn of the "shmootomic age." Some envisioned "shmoo shoup" and "good shmoomer men," "shmoosical comedies," etc. But not Fatback. "Shmoon must go!"

So, he hired D. D. Teasdale and his "shmooicide Squad," which is led, natcherally, by "Dan'l Shmoone."

Teasdale laid it on thick with Fatback. He opined that Shmoos must make Fatback feel mighty low. "I can't gouge anybody with shmoos around," sobbed Fatback.

SO, on to Dogpatch and many another community went Dan'l to eradicate the "great menace"—the Shmoo.

Shmoon were marched up, six at a time, and shot. When the day was over, it looked as if every Shmoo was daid.

"Oh, cuss my normal way of life!" cried one Dogpatcher. "Ah hates goin' back to it. Work and worry, day and night. No matter how much ah earns, prices is just a li'l higher!"

Soft-Hearted John was in seventh heaven. "They complained about mah prices befo'! Wait'll they see th' new ones!!"

Things looked dark again.

* * *

But, Daisy Mae, Li'l Abner's would-be—but never-quite-makes-it—girl friend, spied him carrying a bundle. She pulled it apart and lo and behold! it contained—A "boy-shmoo" and a "she-shmoo!!" Maybe it'll start again.

At the end of the book, Li'l Abner philosophizes: "Folks don't need these Li'l Shmoos. They already got one—the earth itself!

"Jest like these li'l Shmoos, it's ready t' give ev'rybody ev'rything they need. If only folks stopped a-fightin' and' a-grabbin', they'd reelize thet this Shmoo — th' earth — got plenty o' ev'rything. Then, they'd be ready fo' these Li'l Shmoos—except then (chuckle) they wouldn't need 'em!!"

CHEESECAKE

There you have a social message from one of the world's most popular and beloved "comic" characters. You get entertainment—there's plenty of that, chum—and you get a message at the same time, thanks to Li'l Abner and Al Capp.

We hope a lot of people read "The Life and Times of the Shmoo"—it's shmoognificent!—A. R.

Demand Grows For Curbing Big Business

THREE developments in Washington indicate Big Business is not going to get by with its attempt to conceal big profits, as its spokesmen attempted to do before the sub-committee of the Joint Committee on the Economic report.

The 79th Congress set up the joint committee to make annual reports on the economic life of the nation and also authorized creation of the President's Council of Economic Advisers. Developments indicating that Big Business is not going to have everything its own way as it did during the 80th Congress are:

1. The U. S. Dept. of Commerce reported that the national income showed an increase of $5.6 billion in the third quarter of 1948, and that corporate profits went up 6% over the preceding quarter. Corporate profits have mounted by "about the same amount" as they did in the second quarter over the first quarter, the report said.

2. Evident impatience of Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.) with the testimony of big business representatives who appeared before the Joint Committee,. O'Mahoney, slated to head the entire committee, when it is organized in the 81st Congress, when interviewed by Labor Press Associates, said:

"They've (big business spokesmen) been scared by the election results and have used these hearings to make some propaganda against assuming their joint share of taxes."

3. Announcement by the Natl. Federation of Small Business, Inc., that a poll of its members showed they wanted Federal anti-trust action to protect small businesses from monopolistic trends.

The federation reported:

a. Of those balloting, 92% favored Justice Department Anti-Trust Act enforcement "to prohibit manufacturers from operating retail stores where such operations promote monopoly."

b. More intense Sherman anti-trust enforcement was asked by 93% of federation members, "to stop the increasing tendency on the part of some giant firms to dominate the activities of their independent dealers."

c. Members voted 83% for more effective enforcement of the Robinson-Patman Act "to prohibit allegedly unfair manufacturer or supplier price discriminations between various of their retailers."

d. Finally, 75% of voting members opposed "any use of pricing methods involving freight absorptions to create or maintain monopolies. The report said 68% opposed "all systems of agreements between manufacturers to pay transportation charges to local or distant markets for the purpose of creating or maintaining industry-wide price-fixing arrangements."

Murray's New Year Greetings

"The U. S. will have a wonderful opportunity during 1949 to demonstrate to the world that the great material and moral advances can be made under political democracy and capitalism," CIO Pres. Philip Murray said in a New Year's message.

"How well we take advantage of that opportunity will have much bearing on the future political and economic structure of the world.

"Our deeds—not our pious pronouncements—will do much to stem or to advance the spread of Communism. Millions of persons are seeking a way of life better than the one they now have. They will seek to copy the example we set if it is good enough.

"During the coming year we must do everything we can to put our own house in better order. And by 'we' I mean the entire population of our country.

"Inflation continues to be our most pressing domestic problem, and we must solve it soon if we are to avoid economic tragedy. The continued sapping of consumer purchasing power by outrageously high prices must cease.

"One of the big contributions we could make to our own future as well as to the future of mankind would be to make really secure the civil liberties spelled out for us in the Constitution. We cannot afford to force some of our people into second-class citizenship because of their race, creed or color.

"The new Congress, which convenes soon, can do much toward the establishment of the type of society which can be held up as a shining example to the rest of the world. Each of us, as individuals, can and should lend a helping hand in this endeavor.

"The Congress of Industrial Organizations will do everything it can during 1949 to help steer our nation—and other nations—along the path to peace and prosperity."

'The Legacy of Sacco and Vanzetti'

BY ARTHUR RIORDAN

"If it had not been for these thing, I might have live out my life talking at street corners to scorning men, I might have died, unmarked, unknown, a failure.

"Now we are not a failure. This is our career and our triumph. Never in our full life could we hope to do such work for tolerance, for Joostice, for man's onderstanding of man as we do now by accident.

"Our words—our lives—our pains — nothing. The taking of our lives—lives of a good shoe maker and a poor fish peddler—all! That last moment belongs to us—that agony is our triumph."

More than 20 years—since August 23, 1927—have passed since Nicola Sacco—"the good shoe maker"—and Bartolomeo Vanzetti—"the poor fish peddler"—were "executed" by the State of Massachusetts.

Those 20 years have convinced most of the world that Sacco and Vanzetti, two gentle theoretical anarchists, were killed for a crime they did not commit—were murdered because the State of Massachusetts, as then constituted, feared their political ideas.

Those italicized words above were written by Vanzetti after the conviction.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt are among the many people who have led the fight to clear the names of Sacco and Vanzetti.

At the time of the conviction and through the investigation, a goodly-sized group of liberals fought with every legal method at their command to save the two men. But, unfortunately, it seemed obvious that the vast majority of American people felt that either the two men were guilty or that they should be executed anyway, just because of their beliefs.

However, the world has changed with the mounting evidence that this was an injustice.

Take the case of William Allen White, famous Emporia, Kan., editor. First, upon their arrest and during the trial, White backed Sacco and Vanzetti. Then, when the Lowell Committee, appointed by a weak governor, declared the men actually were guilty, White reluctantly came out against them. However, in 1937, he wrote:

"I am now satisfied that Sacco and Vanzetti were innocent of the crime for which they were executed. Their execution was a crime for which America lost prestige in the eyes of millions all over the world."

THE INNOCENCE of the two has been amply demonstrated. But, what effect have they had on the world—what legacy did they leave to humanity?

That question is well and brilliantly answered in a new book "The Legacy of Sacco and Vanzetti," by G. Louis Joughin, of the staff of the New School for Social Research, and Edmund M. Morgan, professor of law at Harvard Law School (since 1925, two years before the execution). You will note in this review that Harvardman Morgan shows remarkable courage in writing a defense of Sacco and Vanzetti.

Prof. Arthur M. Schlesinger, professor of history at Harvard and a long-time worker in the Sacco-Vanzetti cause, has this to say of the new book:

"An arresting and cogent evaluation of the legal and sociological aspects of the case."

(To a non-Harvard man, that means he thinks the book is swell.)

"The Legacy" has three main sub-divisions: 1. "The Legacy to the Law: Doubt"; 2. "The Legacy to the People: Conflict;" and 3. "The Legacy to Literature: Faith: The beginnings of Historical Judgment."

I am not going to take them up in any regular order. Rather, I'll give you the highlights and hope that you'll grab a copy of this book at once and read it.

● For instance — did you know that a total of 144 poems have been written about the case?

Wrote Witter Bynner: " . . . the death we meant for them became our own."

● Did you know that at least six plays have been written with a Sacco-Vanzetti theme?

They include Maxwell Anderson's "Winterset," Maxwell Anderson's and Harold Hickerson's "Gods of the Lightning," Samuel N. Behrman's "Rain From Heaven," James Thurber's and Elliott Nugent's "The Male Animal," Pierre Yrondy's "Sept ans d'agonie; le drame Sacco-Vanzetti" and "The Sacco Vanzetti Case," a part of the radio series, "Those Sensational Years."

● Did you know that at least eight novels and a satiric sketch have been written about the case?

Of course, most people have read—or have heard of—Upton Sinclair's monumental "Boston," but there are these others:

H. G. Wells' "Mr. Blettsworthy on Rampole Island," John Dos Passos' "The Big Money," James T. Farrell's "Bernard Clare," Bernard De Voto's "We Accept with Pleasure," Ruth McKenney's "Jake Home," Louis Thinet's "Le Drame Sacco-Vanzetti," C. E. S. Wood's "God's In His Heaven—All's Wrong With the World" (a collection of satiric conversations.); Norman Asch's "Pay Day."

● Did you know that the late Heywood Broun, founding father and first president of the CIO Newspaper Guild, was fired by the New York World for espousing the case of Sacco and Vanzetti?

Broun, an alumnus of Harvard, wrote: "From now on, I want to know, will the institution of learning in Cambridge which once we called Harvard be known as Hangman's House?" (This was a reference to the fact that A. Lawrence Lowell, Harvard president, had chairmaned the Lowell investigation committee which ruled against the two men.)

Part 1—The Legacy of Doubt

The authors use a study by Prof. Karl N. Lewellyn, of the faculty of the Columbia Univ. Law School, to touch off the Legacy of Doubt. He wrote:

"You may take or reject our American institutions. But you cannot take them, you cannot honor them, without taking on yourself the burden of indignation, of wrath, of reform, if you should find that a man has been put away for what he had not done. A man. Any man. Foreigner, radical, or revolutionary, draft-dodger or desperado.

"It is not that man, it is your institutions which are at stake."

Joughin and Morgan then go on:

"This is its legacy to the law: it has revealed defects in our system of administering criminal justice, defects inherent in trial by jury and in the over-emphasis upon the adversary features of our processes of litigation."

This section reviewed in detail the legal aspects of the case and how "justice" had committed murder rather than showing mercy. (I will not go into details on the legal aspects, since space would allow only excerpts.)

The names to remember on the legal side of the picture: District Attorney Frederick G. Katzman —whose prosecution gave the impression that he intended at all costs to railroad two men—and Judge Webster Thayer, who refused to give the men a fair trial, a new trial, a new judge.

Then, there was jury foreman Harry Ripley, who, an affidavit declared, had used the expression: "Damn them, they ought to hang anyway," regardless of evidence.

Part 2—The Legacy of Conflict

This section goes into the attitudes of the people of Norfolk County towards Sacco—a skilled craftsman who sometimes made as high as $80 a week—and Vanzetti, who did lowly work of all sorts. It also touches at length on the defense committees which entered the cases.

● Did you know that James M. Curley, later Governor, U. S. Congressman and oftimes mayor of Boston, once gave $10 to the defense fund?

One of the most active in the defense work was Gardner (Pat) Jackson, now in co-op circles.

It is interesting to recall that Louis Stark, now the New York Times' dean of labor reporters, wrote in 1938 of an interview he had with Thayer in 1922:

"The judge said: 'I hope the New York Times is not going to take the side of these anarchists.' . . . The newspapermen, I found, with one exception, felt that the trial had been unfair. . . . It was obvious that to him (Thayer) a philosophical anarchist was the same as a murderer."

ONE OF THE sorriest characters in the whole case is Gov. Alvan T. Fuller of Massachusetts. He was weak; he was vacillating. In short, he had no guts.

(But, strangely, some people at that time didn't realize his chickenheartedness and animus to different ideas. Fiorello LaGuardia, for instance, a staunch defender of Sacco and Vanzetti, said of Fuller, with whom he had served in Congress: "There is no prejudice in his makeup.")

Fuller said he'd investigate the case. His choices for what he called his Advisory Committee: Lowell, Samuel W. Stratton, president of the Mass. Institute of Technology, and Robert A. Grant, a novelist and traveler. Lowell and Grant were the active members of the committee. Stratton did almost nothing but sit there.

The Lowell Committee—as it naturally became known—started its hearings. "The Harvard president ran the hearings, wrote the original draft of the findings and appears to have dominated the group's thoughts from beginning to end," the authors found.

"Incontrovertible evidence was assembled which proved that Lowell's material was wrong; he accepted the new proof and apologized to the witnesses whose word he had doubted.

"Absolutely none of this is in the printed record."

Of course, the committee's findings were pre-destined. Sacco and Vanzetti didn't have the chance of a snowball in hell.

Alfred E. Smith was asked his opinion about the case. Said he:

"I won't know what to think about it. I haven't studied the case . . . But, if I had, and it left me in such a state of mind that I had to call in a couple of college presidents to tell me what to do, I'd call that a reasonable doubt and let 'em go free."

Joughin and Morgan call that "an ethical imperative."

THE conclusion reached by the book:

"The issue of life or death for these two men led to a great battle in their day. They lost that one engagement, but their influence is still felt. The legacy of Sacco and Vanzetti to society lies in the emphasis which their fate gave to the continuing warfare between the forces of democratic and un-democratic action."

Our conclusion:

This is the most comprehensive and readable analysis of the Sacco-Vanzetti situation that we've ever seen. It is well worth reading to get a better understanding of one of the worst "railroad" jobs in American history.

"The Legacy of Sacco and Vanzetti," by G. Louis Joughin and Edmund M. Morgan. Harcourt, Brace. $6.00.

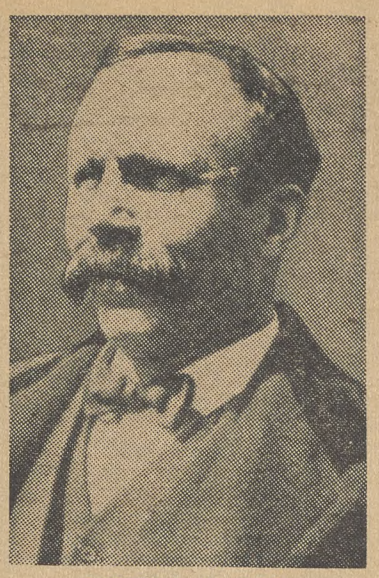
The Case:

Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, Philosophical Anarchists, were arrested in 1920, charged with the murder of a factory paymaster during a holdup at a shoe factory in Braintree, Mass. They were convicted in July, 1921, of that murder.

Numerous appeals for new trials or commutations or pardons were made to Judge Webster Thayer, the trial jurist, and to Gov. Alvan T. Fuller.

Every appeal was rejected, despite the fact admitted doubt was cast on the testimony of many witnesses and despite the fact Celestino Madeiros, a professional bandit, confessed the Braintree murder and said Sacco and Vanzetti were not at the scene.

The case caused widespread demonstrations in America and all over the world. The two men were electrocuted August 23, 1927.



NICOLA SACCO

BARTOLOMEO VANZETTI

Filene Ignored

The appeal for mercy for Sacco and Vanzetti, made by E. A. Filene, noted Boston merchant and philanthropist, was ignored.

Disruption

The Communists tried to disrupt a Sacco-Vanzetti protest meeting held July 7, 1927, in Union Square, New York City, under the auspices of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers (now in CIO) and other middle-of-the-road unions.

"The Battle of Union Square" was soon under way. The police "won" by beating up everybody in sight.

Vanzetti Choice

One of the defense lawyers said after the verdict:

"I felt there was so little evidence against Vanzetti—almost none, in fact—that I believed there was a good chance of his acquittal if I should push home the fact.

"But, I felt sure that, in that case, Sacco would be found guilty. I thought there was a fighting chance the jury would disagree as to the two, but if they acquitted one, I knew enough of juries to feel sure they would soak the other. So I put the case to Vanzetti.

"What shall I do?"

He answered: "Save Nick. He has the woman and child."

Union Spirit Is Still His

When Louis J. Geiser, Louisville, Ky., former officer of Local 862, CIO Auto Workers, was appointed Stark County clerk, one of the first things he did was to announce that he would try to increase the salaries of his deputy clerks from funds accumulated by the clerk's office. The funds totaled between $60,000 and $70,000.

Before taking the post of deputy clerk in 1946, Geiser was employed for 23 years at the Louisville branch of the Ford Motor Co. He helped form Local 862 in 1941 and was a member of the executive board and a trustee.

Appointed to the county clerk's post by Judge Horace Baker upon the death of the former county clerk, Geiser will serve at least until the election next November.

AFL Will Cooperate With CIO in Penna.

Pennsylvania's organized labor will unite on a legislative program to be presented to the 1949 legislature. More than 600 delegates to an AFL legislative conference at Harrisburg, Pa., approved a plan to work together with the CIO, the United Mine Workers, the Intl. Assn. of Machinists and other unaffiliated unions for major improvements in the state's labor laws.

'Fortune' Survey:

Top Business Men Expect 1949 Slump

A BUSINESS recession with from two to four million unemployed was forecast for 1949 by top business executives questioned in a Fortune Magazine survey.

The magazine's "Executive Forecast" poll discloses that 65% of business leaders expect business to be either "moderately" or "sharply" down in the new year. Seventy-eight percent feel that war is "unlikely" during the same period and assert that war is not a factor in their business for the year ahead.

Fortune points out that since the poll was taken in mid-November, the election of Pres. Truman may have influenced the replies.

THAT pessimism was not shared to the same extent by more than 4,000 economists questioned by Fortune. Only 41% expect a downturn in 1949 and nearly 20% think business might be moderately better, compared to 9% of the business executives.

Plans to curtail investments were reported by 22% of the businessmen, compared to 58% whose plans were unchanged and 14% who were planning to increase investments in new plant and durable equipment.

"Along with reduced investment, if present plans mature, will go some reduction in employment," Fortune says.

"UNEMPLOYMENT is not expected to reach catastrophic proportions — a majority put it between two and three million by next July, which can still be read as virtual full employment," according to Fortune. "But a sizable minority think unemployment might reach three to four million in the next six months."

Discussing the wage outlook for 1949, Fortune says: "About two-thirds of the executives expect to pay more for labor during the first half of 1949, which would seem to imply that they have, privately at least, accepted the inevitability of the fourth round. Just under half are expecting a further increase in the cost of materials. For all lines, about 24% expect to increase their prices as compared with 22% six months ago."

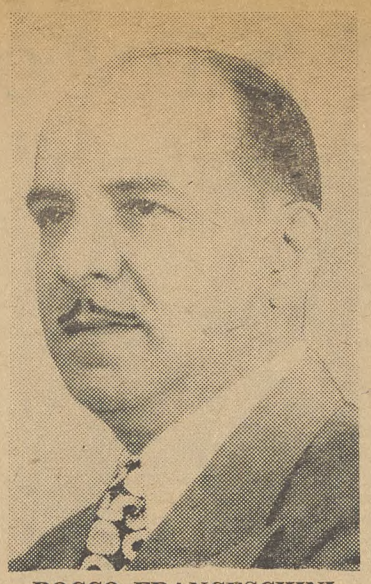
"Although fewer executives now report an increase in labor productivity and more suggest that it is staying the same," Fortune says, "this may not be especially discouraging. It is a reasonable inference that most industries have now solved their postwar problems of morale, discipline and inexperience, and that productivity as a result has become stabilized."

ELEANOR COAKLEY

Recording secretary of the Toledo CIO Council, who has been named press secretary to U. S. Rep.-elect Tom Burke (D.), of the 9th Ohio District. Burke, vice mayor of Toledo, is ending his term as executive secretary of the Toledo CIO.

Miss Coakley was involved in a famous case last year when Paul Block, publisher of the Toledo Blade, demoted her from reporter to library worker after her election to the CIO post. He declared she had lost her objectivity by taking a CIO office. Protests from the CIO Newspaper Guild and from the CIO won her reinstatement to her former job. A past president of the Toledo Guild, she will work in Washington.

HOST TO GOVERNOR: Pres. Frank J. Benti of the Rhode Island CIO Council (center) is congratulating Democratic Gov. John O. Pastore (r.) on his re-election. The occasion is a dinner sponsored by the state CIO council and attended by 300 business, industrial, civic and labor leaders. Major Ambrose P. McCoy of Pawtucket is at the left.



ROCCO FRANCESCHINI

Shoe Union Head Dies

PRES. ROCCO Franceschini of the CIO United Shoe Workers of America died Dec. 27 at the Norwegian Hospital, Brooklyn, N. Y., where he had undergone an operation. He was 49 years old.

He became president of the international union May 1, after his election in a membership referendum.

In his message of condolence to Mrs. Franceschini, CIO Pres. Philip Murray said her husband will be "long remembered in the labor movement."

"I am deeply shocked at the untimely death of your husband," the wire read in part. "I extend to you and yours my deepest sympathy over the blow that has struck you. I hope and pray your sorrow will be tempered by the knowledge that your husband contributed an unforgettable share in improving the lot of thousands of workers in the shoe industry and that that contribution indirectly spread to other thousands in other industries. It is rare that one man has had the opportunity to do so much for his fellow man. He will be long remembered in the labor movement . . ."

Active in organizing shoe workers 22 years, Franceschini obtained his first union post in 1935 when he became an officer of the AFL Boot and Shoe Workers in New York City.

In 1937 he took a major part in leading the New York City Shoe Workers into the CIO. Elected in 1939 as secretary-treasurer of Joint Council 13, of the CIO Shoe Workers in New York City, he held that post until his election to the presidency.

Franceschini, who resided in Brooklyn, is survived by his wife, a son and a daughter.

Rogge To Fight Atomic Firing Rule For UE

O. John Rogge, former assistant U. S. attorney general, has been retained by the CIO United Electrical Workers to represent the union in its suits against the U. S. Atomic Energy Commission and the General Electric. The commission ordered GE to withdraw UE's bargaining rights at its plants.

Rogge and UE General Counsel David Scribner will handle the union's case, which asks the Federal District Court in Washington, D. C., to uphold collective bargaining rights of several hundred workers employed at GE's plants in Schenectady, N. Y.

ECA Puts Off Cargo Switch

Labor protests are believed to have played an important role in the decision of the Economic Cooperation Administration to postpone, at least until Feb. 1, its plans for abandoning the rule that 50% of Marshall plan bulk cargo must be carried in American vessels.

The threatened increase in the amount of bulk cargo business to be awarded foreign shipping was vigorously objected to by both AFL and CIO maritime unions. The threat was withdrawn for the time being after a meeting of ECA's 12-man public advisory commission, on which the AFL, the CIO, and the Railway Labor Executives Association are represented.

Although no official report on the board's meeting has been released, it was learned that the union spokesmen played a key part in the board's dissent from ECA Administrator Paul Hoffman's proposal.

After its meeting Hoffman, in announcing the postponement of the change, said that the new Congress would have a chance to consider the matter. Several Congressmen have pointed out that the 50% requirement is written into the Marshall plan appropriation, and so ECA has no power to change it.

Union Seeks Rises For Govt. Workers

CIO Government Workers Union has announced that it will ask the 81st Congress for a bill granting pay raises to federal employes and reorganizing civil service classifications.

GWU, affiliated with the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, was formed last year when dissident locals left United Public Workers claiming it was dominated by pro-Communists.

The pay bill which GWU now seeks proposes raises of 20% to 30%, particularly for those workers in the lower brackets. The salary hikes suggested range from $400 to $1000 a year and provides a minimum wage of $1.00 an hour.

The proposal includes a reclassification of jobs to streamline government personnel procedures and make them more understandable to the rank-and-file federal workers.

"We hope to convince Congress," said Legislative Chm. Harry Leet, "that what is needed is not only the skeleton of a new classification scheme, but a complete overhauling of the federal pay structure in line with postwar realities."

Court Orders Fur Firms To Obey Pact

BY UNANIMOUS decision the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court, upheld the demand of the Furriers Joint Council, CIO Fur and Leather Workers, that New York fur manufacturers must live up to the collective agreement and must arbitrate any disputes that arise under the contract.

"The court's decision outlaws the efforts of the manufacturers' association to abrogate the contract concluded last May after a five-week lockout and general strike won by the union," the union reported.

"Fifteen thousand fur workers are affected by the decision.

"At the same time, the court's ruling knocks the props from under an injunction case and a $5 million damage suit which the manufacturers had instituted against the union."

More Married Women Than Single Work

Proponents of the theory that the woman's place is in the home had better look twice at a Census Bureau report.

This report, issued on a survey made of the proportion of married to single women holding jobs, reveals that nearly 3,000,000 more married women are in the labor force. Of the 8,000,000 working married women, 7,000,000 live with their husbands.

The high marriage rate in the post-war period is one of the reasons for this, the report explains —in 1948 there were nearly 6,000,000 more married couples than the number reported in 1940.

Potofsky Backs Drive Of Red Mogen Dovid

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers has pledged support to the 1949 national membership drive for the enrollment of a quarter of a million members on behalf of the Red Mogen Dovid, Israel's counterpart of the Red Cross.

Enrollment of a large membership will make it possible for the Red Mogen Dovid to send to Israel 400 ambulances, plus additional first-aid medical supplies urgently needed by the Israeli Government.

Exclusion of Negroes From Semi-Public Project Flayed

EXCLUSION of Negroes from Stuyvesant Town in N. Y. City, upheld last week by a N. Y. Appellate Court decision, has been condemned as "indefensible" by Walter White, secretary of the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Stuyvesant Town is a semi-public urban redevelopment project of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. The Appellate Court decision reaffirmed a lower court opinion.

"Morally the Stuyvestant Town policy of excluding Negro citizens is indefensible," White said. "Tax limitation, involving money belonging to all the people, has been granted this corporation. Yet a part of the population, simply and solely because it happens not to be white, is arbitrarily barred from occupancy of the apartment project thus created."

Action against the Metropolitan was brought by the NAACP, the American Jewish Congress, the American Civil Liberties Union and a number of other organizations on behalf of three Negro veterans whose applications for apartments were refused on racial grounds. Pointing out that the development was built with financial assistance of the city and state and that it received a 25-year tax limitation amounting to a fifty million dollar saving, the complainants charged that discrimination of any kind would have been unconstitutional if the city or state had built the project alone.

CIO's Own Pension Plan Guarantees $100 A Month After 65 Years Of Age

By GLORIA CAPLAN

THE NATL. CIO has put a "new look" on pension plans, a style that promises to sweep the collective bargaining field much as Christian Dior's designs swept the feminine fashion field.

"Best in the country" is how U. S. Treasury officials and other impartial pension plan experts have described the program the CIO now has in operation for its Washington office employes. Naturally, Natl. CIO officials—in this case "management"—and the employes think it's tops, too.

Here's why it is considered a model plan:

- It is wholly "employer"-financed.
- The money is invested in U. S. Government bonds in each employe's name, and thus belongs to the employe, whether he leaves before the retirement age or not. This is radically unlike most plans in operation, under which the amount accrued reverts to the employer if the employe leaves before retirement age.
- Interest on the bonds, said by Treasury officials to be the highest of any of the 11,000 pension plans in the country, permits highest benefits to the employes.
- The program provides severance pay as well as pensions.
- It is jointly administered by the union and "management."

LIKE THE STORY of most pension plans, this one begins with a collective bargaining session late in 1946, when the office employes union, Office & Professional Workers Local 167, requested a welfare program.

At that time, it was agreed to investigate the possibilities of adopting a pension plan. Such a plan was to be retroactive to May 1, 1947, effective date of the contract.

Shortly thereafter CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, who negotiates for "management," and the union's health and welfare committee, headed by Pres. Thomas P. Moran, began exploring to find a plan which would provide both severance pay and pensions.

The plan they were seeking had to have more than that, though. It had to cover all employes in the national office, provide a minimum pension of $100 a month, be able to finance adequate pensions for employes then within 15 years—or less—of the retirement age, and most important—it had to be one the CIO could afford, since it would bear the total cost.

BY THE BEGINNING of 1948, 15 insurance companies and the U. S. Treasury Dept. had submitted pension plans for consideration.

The Treasury Plan had been drawn up at the CIO's request by Joseph Swire, the U. S. Treasury Department's CIO liaison man. The union committee found it superior in all respects but one—the insurance plan would have provided larger pensions for older employes.

"But all other aspects of the Treasury plan were better," commented Carey. The insurance plan, he explained, would cover only about half the employes because of a requirement of three years' service for eligibility. Furthermore, the committee found, not all the money put into the insurance plan would accrue to the employes, since "expense and profit are obviously considerations in any plan proposed by a commercial insurance company.

"In the Treasury plan, all the money invested is returned to the employes with interest."

The insurance plan would have submitted to negotiation the amount to be returned to an employe who left before retirement. The Treasury plan, simple and inexpensive to administer, returned to the employe the full amount invested in his name, plus interest.

BEFORE FINAL acceptance of the Treasury plan, it was submitted to Commissioner of Internal Revenue George Schoeneman in Baltimore, Md., for advice on legal and tax problems involved. Later it was discussed with Henry Schmidt, Bureau of Internal Revenue Agent in Baltimore. Schmidt praised the plan highly and offered suggestions for some minor revisions, which were incorporated.

Last September, a board of trustees was appointed to administer the plan. The Rev. George G. Higgins, assistant director of the social action department, Natl. Catholic Welfare Conference, was named chairman. Representing "management" are CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Carey. Thomas P. Moran, office union president, and Richard E. Bauer, business manager of the CIO News, represent the union. CIO General Counsel Arthur Goldberg was designated counsel to the board and CIO Comptroller Leo Tearney was appointed comptroller of the fund.

Thus, after almost two years of investigating and comparing and seeking advice from the most competent authorities, the plan was put in effect on Sept. 4, 1948, and made retroactive to May 1, 1947.

HERE IS HOW it works: Take the hypothetical case of a 40-year-old employe earning $4000 a year.

Mr. X began working for the CIO on May 1, 1947, date on which the "employer" contributions to the pension fund began.

(Employes on the payroll before this date had accrued severance pay under previous contracts. This was placed in their individual pension accounts.)

Since Mr. X is under 50 years of age, the CIO contributes annually 6% of his salary—$240—to the pension fund. One-eighth of this amount—in this case $30—is placed in a contingency fund. Purpose of this fund is to finance pensions for older employes who will soon reach the retirement age. If Mr. X had been 50 or over on joining the plan, the CIO would have doubled its contribution to 12% of his annual salary.

Mr. X has 25 years to go before his retirement at age 65. Thus, by 1972, the CIO will have contributed $5250 into the fund for Mr. X. These contributions were periodically invested in U. S. Government Series E bonds in the name of Mr. X and have been steadily accruing interest. By the time of his retirement, this interest alone—itself having been invested and re-invested at the end of each 10-year period—will amount to roughly $2000.

After 25 years of service, therefore, Mr. X will have about $7250 in bonds in his own name.

(Incidentally, had he left the CIO for any reason before this date, he would have received the full amount in his account at the time of his leaving.)

The plan provides a minimum lifelong pension of $100 a month, including old age benefits under the Federal Social Security Act.

Life expectancy is considered to be 77 years. Thus Mr. X is expected to live 12 years after his retirement. The total amount in his retirement fund is about $7250 when Mr. X reaches 65. This is divided by the 144 months he is expected to live beyond this age. (If he lives longer, payments continue regularly nevertheless.) This amounts to $50 a month.

Add to this the U. S. Social Security benefits, at least $43.50 a month. These taken together would give Mr. X $93.50 a month. But the plan stipulates that benefits must be at least $100 a month, including Social Security payments. Thus the additional $6.50 is taken from the plan's contingency fund to give Mr. X a monthly pension of $100 a month the rest of his life.

For many CIO employes, most of whom had accrued severance pay before the pension plan became effective, the pensions will amount to much more. The maximum payment among those now employed at the office, based on present salaries, will run to $220 a month.

Already CIO's two largest unions are studying the possibilities of adopting the plan for their employes. Joe Swire reports that his office is receiving numerous inquiries about the plan from groups all over the country investigating the possibility of using it.

But neither Swire nor Carey nor Moran expect employers to grab at the opportunity to install this brand of pension plan. Not all management thinks like CIO "management." Most employers balk at financing such plans without comparable contributions from the employes. And in cases where employers foot the bill themselves, they usually administer the plan themselves. In such cases, as a rule, employes who leave before the retirement age and required length of service, receive nothing.

Proud of being the first, Carey and Moran are hoping that CIO bargaining units through the country will attempt to incorporate this model pension and severance pay plan in their contracts.

It's worth shooting for.

CIO Committee Director Says

Housing Expediter Woods Can't Say 'No' to Landlords

SINCE enactment of the 1947 Federal Rent Law some 430,000 families have been hit by rent increases dished out by Federal Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods.

Add to these the approximately 30,000 individual units on which local rent boards are permitting increases each month and the thousands of "voluntary" rent hikes tenants are paying to obtain living space or to keep peace with the landlord and you get some idea of the rate at which rents are going up these days.

At its Portland, Ore., convention last month the national CIO passed a resolution urging the replacement of Woods with a "competent" rent administrator.

On Dec. 18 the rent administrator added one more grievance to the long list CIO people have compiled against him since the beginning of his administration.

It was a 14% rent increase—Christmas present to the 22,500 tenants of Wilmington, Delaware—that has the Delaware State CIO Council and the Natl. CIO Housing Committee Director Leo Goodman up in arms.

Woods granted the 14% increase in Wilmington after the local rent advisory board recommended a 20% boost.

NEITHER Deleware State CIO Pres. Gilbert Lewis nor Goodman, however, was too surprised at the Board's recommendation. The board, they charged, was packed with real estate interests. In fact, one of the so-called "public" members of the board was one of the biggest real estate owners in town, and another "public" member was a building contractor.

Under the Federal Rent Law the case automatically goes to an Emergency Court of Appeals, since there was a difference between Woods and the local board on the amount of the increase.

The hearing is scheduled for Jan. 17, and at that time the CIO will present testimony against the increase and the legality of the local board which first proposed the boost. The Wilmington city council, whose president James LeFerve has fought the increase from the beginning, will be represented by an attorney opposing the rent hike.

The CIO will base its case on the following arguments:

- The Board is illegal, since it is heavily weighted on the real estate side. The Federal law makes it mandatory that local boards represent the community.
- The sample of landlords used by the board was insufficient for determining the landlord's financial status, since only 331 landlords returned the questionnaires. Among these was one owner of 438 units. The board included each of these units in its figure showing the size of the sample.

(Woods did not question the size of the sample, even though the law requires it to be "representative.")

- The CIO will ask what justification the Board had for recommending a 20% increase and what justification Woods had for granting 14%, when the local board gave facts substantiating only a 9.2% increase.

"The Wilmington case is one of a steady stream of rent hikes that have been flowing from Woods' office," Goodman said. "In Oklahoma County he ignored our protests that the advisory board was unrepresentative and went ahead to approve a 15% boost.

"The Emergency Court later split the difference between the board's request for 25% and Woods' approved 15%. It set the increase at 20%.

"In Jamestown, N. Y., he's just granted a 20% increase.

"He obviously just can't say 'no' to the landlords."

The Credit Union: It's the Nemesis of Loan Sharks

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

"BEWARE of loan sharks!" That this warning is gradually making headway among CIO members is shown by the growing interest being taken in credit unions.

To the list of CIO affiliates which already have well-established savings and loan associations run on a cooperative basis, new groups are continually being added.

One of the new groups is the credit union formed in New Orleans by members of the CIO Textile Workers' employed at the Lane Cotton Mills. It is the largest credit union formed so far in Louisiana, union officials say. To establish it, the union negotiated a plan with the company under which $56,000 a year will be checked off the workers' pay for the credit union.

IN DETROIT, another interesting development in credit unions is under way in connection with the two big stores run by the Motor City Cooperative, which has organized a Federal credit union to make loans to members to finance purchases of co-op appliances. The Motor City Co-op is supported by members of the CIO Auto Workers and other labor groups.

Files at the Bureau of Federal Credit Unions, Federal Security Agency, in Washington, show that a number of CIO unions with members employed in industries throughout the country have taken out Federal credit union charters.

The Bureau is the government agency set up to administer the Federal Credit Union Act, passed in 1934 and amended in 1940, '46 and '48.

AMONG THE credit unions formed by CIO groups listed in the Bureau's files are brewery workers in Pennsylvania, oil workers in Ohio, maritime workers in New York, railroad station employes in Chicago, clothing workers and longshoremen in California, auto workers in various cities, and others.

The UAW, which leads in the number of credit unions set up by CIO groups, reports that 150 of its locals have savings and loan associations in operation. One of these is the Ford River Rouge Local 600, the UAW's largest, with some 60,000 members.

Formed in 1943 by a tiny group with assets of $24, the Rouge Credit Union today has assets of $300,000, owns its own building and has more than 8000 members. It is completely independent of Local 600, with membership open to all Rouge employes and members of their immediate families regardless of union affiliation.

FIGURES ON just how many CIO members belong to credit unions are not available, for, as in the case of the Rouge credit union, many of these cooperative savings and loan groups to which union workers belong are open to anyone in a particular plant, shop or company, and function as independent organizations under charters obtained either from the Federal or a state government agency.

Only in cases where the union applies for the charter in its own name can it be identified in the Federal Credit Union Bureau's files as a "labor" group.

Although many of the credit unions to which CIO members belong may have been set up under some form of agreement with management, and bear the name of the company, the number of those initiated directly by CIO unions are on the increase, as officials and members on the alert for such ways of extending the union's influence and help become more conscious of their value.

SOME HELPFUL information for CIO affiliates that are considering the advisability of forming credit unions can be found in a 24-page pamphlet, "How to Own Your Own Bank," published by the UAW-CIO Education Dept., 28 West Warren, Detroit 1. Mich., price 5c a copy.

The pamphlet explains that a credit union is in effect, a cooperative bank set up for members so they can have a place to borrow money at fair rates of interest, and also get into the habit of saving regularly.

"One important thing a credit union accomplishes," says the pamphlet, "is to open your eyes to the mumbo jumbo bankers and financiers used to manipulate your money.

"A CREDIT UNION is a bank, but there is nothing about the operation of a credit union or a bank that is mysterious or magical. Anyone with a little bit of common sense and some understanding of human beings can run a credit union or be a banker.

"But the money monopolies pretend banking is some kind of black magic, and they use our money for manipulations that enrich them at our expense. . . . By banking in credit unions working people clip the wings of the money monopoly. They keep control over the money they have and don't let the monopolists play around with it."

The various steps to be taken in organizing a credit union are outlined simply in the pamphlet, and its operations and necessary expenses are described.

Pointing out that credit unions are one of the simplest and easiest kind of cooperatives to organize, the pamphlet declares that just the help these small banks give workers "in fighting back loan sharks and the debt burden makes them worthwhile."

Boss Pats Union On Back

DO UNIONS help management in better operation of its business?

Few employers would ever admit that unionization has increased efficiency. But William J. Block, publisher of the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, boasts of that achievement.

"The Guild has raised the standards of workers in Guild-covered departments. As a direct result, you have improved competency. Your staffs are more proficient. I feel we have made progress with the Guild's help."

Paul Weber, executive secretary of the Detroit Newspaper Guild, has been appointed press secretary to G. Mennen Williams, governor-elect of Michigan. Weber is a member of the board of the Michigan CIO.

Soviet Unions To Hold First Meeting Since Before War

THE FIRST convention of Soviet trade unions since long before the war is scheduled for April 1, 1949.

The announcement, issued by the All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions, indicated that the Moscow meeting will bring together more than 1000 delegates to represent the unions' claimed membership of upwards of 25 million members.

Reflected in the announcement were the vast differences between American free trade unionism and the type flourishing in the Communist Soviet Union.

The convention call said the "Tenth Trade Union Congress will indicate the objectives to be attained for a new improvement in all trade union work, for the raising of the role of the trade unions to that of a school of Communism."

In Washington there was some speculation about the meaning of a phrase in the Soviet trade union announcement hinting strongly that the convention would cause the "bold elevation to leading posts" of new officials and groups developed since the last convention.

Slogans under which the convention will meet call for a hurry-up to complete ahead of schedule the Stalin Five-Year Plan, "the raising of the productivity of labor, the lowering of costs and the improvement of the quality of production, and the improvement of the standard of living of the Soviet people. . . ."

American labor officials have repeatedly criticized the Soviet labor organizations as state-controlled or dominated.

They have charged that because of Communist party control—a control extending also to government and industry—the unions cannot function independently in the interests of their members.

Present head of the All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions is Vassily Kuznetsov, who is also a vice-president of the World Federation of Trade Unions. An engineer by profession, Kuznetsov studied at Carnegie Tech in Pittsburgh in the early '30s.

He has represented the Soviet labor organization at a number of international conferences.

Report Red-Led Labor Group In China

FORMATION of an All-China Federation of Labor, apparently under Communist control, was the product of a 500-delegate convention at Harbin, Manchuria, last August, according to a report in the bulletin of the World Federation of Trade Unions.

An official report of the meeting claimed that the delegates represented about 2,800,000 members, both in Communist sectors of North China and in the Kuomintang-controlled areas in the southern part of the nation.

A leading figure in the convention was Chu Hsueh-fan, member of the WFTU Executive Bureau, who visited the U. S. on a number of occasions during the war. At that time, he appeared to be sharply anti-Communist, but his position changed in the immediate post-war period.

The Chinese federation's policy statement calls for a "new democratic revolution against American imperialism and the reactionary Kuomintang regime."

Its new constitution proclaims that it is based on the principle of "democratic centralism . . . namely, the minority must submit to the majority." Affiliated unions, the constitution says, are obligated to "comply with the aims and constitution" of the organization "and to carry out all its decisions."

U. S. Moves To Recover Coast Oil

An important round in this fight began recently when Atty. Gen. Tom Clark filed suit in the Supreme Court for federal jurisdiction over tidelands off the Texas and Louisiana coasts. The Court ruled in June, 1947, that the government has first rights to the California coastal lands, and Clark is asking that they apply the same reasoning to the Gulf coast.

The tidelands battle has been raging since 1946 when Truman vetoed a bill making the lands the property of the states. In the 80th Congress, the wealthy and powerful lobby succeeded in pushing a similar bill through the House but it died in the Senate.

MILLIONS of dollars a year are involved in the dispute. Millions will go to the federal government in taxes if the land is established as federal land, or to the states if they win it.

The oil companies want the states to control this wealth, because the states don't regulate them the way the federal government does. The oil lobby is believed by the Democrats to have financed the Dixiecrats in the recent elections, hoping they would win enough Congressmen to insure control by the states.

Truman, on the other hand, campaigned under the banner of federal control of the tidelands. Labor has long urged federal control of these lands. The CIO passed a resolution at its Portland, Oreg., convention asking that the lands be returned to the federal government.

TEXAS AND Louisiana officials have announced they will fight the court case and their representatives in Congress will wage a battle there. "You can't print what I think," was the comment of Gov. Beauford Jester of Texas when he heard that Atty. Gen. Clark had filed the suit. He called the administration case "an effort to nationalize public property and natural resources."

OIL SCABS GET EARFUL: Locked out members of the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union use signs and megaphones to tell scabs at the Union Oil Co. refinery in Wilmington, Calif. what they think about strikebreakers. The strike against West Coast oil companies began last September, but all of the firms except Union Oil have settled with the Oil Workers. Contributions to aid the strikers should be sent to Oil Workers Intl. Union, 210 Lodge Bldg., Fort Worth, Texas, which will distribute the funds to the striking locals.

Men Near Pensions Accused of 'Violence'

"I've never told a lie in my life. I won't tell a lie to save a job. Yes, I threw a couple of rocks. There were two men inside the plant, up on a hill 200 yards away. I threw in their direction, but of course I couldn't have hit them at that distance."

Bill Clemmons, 45, is an active member of the Baptist church and an employe for seven years at the big Shell Oil Corp. refinery in Martinez, Calif., until he was fired recently along with 37 other workers for "strike violence."

He made these remarks at a panel hearing held in connection with a strike of the CIO Oil Workers against Shell and other companies. The strike was called because the companies refused to grant their employes pay rates equal to those in other states.

The union's paper tells the story of how Bill Clemmons and four of the other 38 Shell workers, who oddly enough were in line for pensions, were booted out of their jobs after working for the company for many years.

It is the story of how a powerful corporation controlled by foreign interests—Royal Dutch Shell of which the Shell Corp. is a part, has refineries in England, France, Germany and many other countries—accused, tried and sentenced these American citizens of Martinez, under the "colonial" system which prevails in the management of their far-flung properties.

John M. Sullivan, 58, another of those fired, has worked for Shell at Martinez for 24 years. In three months, he would have been eligible for a pension.

Wayne Lynn, 57, had been with the company 21 years. He had 20 months to go for a pension. H. C. Donnelly, 46, had worked for Shell 32 years, with a pension a year and a half away. Emil Sobero, 51, with Shell 23 years, was due for a pension in three years.

"These five men are rather typical of the 38 citizens Shell Oil Corp. fired," says the union's paper. "The little town of Martinez is puzzled about it all—and more than a little angry. The people of Martinez know these fellows well—know that they helped build the town and that they helped build a big refinery for Shell.

"No doubt the people of Martinez are proud of these men—proud that they reacted like red-blooded Americans when given a dirty deal. We wonder if the people of Martinez will ever again be proud of Royal Dutch Shell."

Two Unions Will Not Renew UOPWA Pacts

The CIO Nat'l Maritime Union and the CIO Transport Workers Union have revealed that they will not renew contracts with the United Office & Professional Workers for their office staffs.

Officers of both unions asserted that in recent intra-union fights between supporters of national CIO policy and pro-Communists, employes hired through UOPWA sided with the "left wing."

NMU and TWU will continue to pay union wage scales, and meet customary conditions, their leaders said. The TWU employes have already signed application cards for membership in TWU itself.

Few NLRB Rules Made Since Nov. 2

THE NATL. Labor Relations Board had a good month in November as far as its record of cleaning up back business is concerned, a report of activity during the preceding month revealed. The board also reported that it has reduced its backlog of pending cases more than 50% in the past eight months.

But while routine NLRB business clicked along after the Nov. 2 election results pointed to a need for rule changes in labor-management relations, there has been a distinct drop in the number of precedent-making interpretations of the Taft-Hartley law.

DURING November the NLRB reduced its backlog of cases 11%, largely because the flood of union shop authorization elections, made necessary by the Taft-Hartley law, has slowed down. These polls droped 25% in number from October, and the number of union shop cases filed in November was less than a fifth the number asked for seven months ago.

Yet the NLRB admitted still having on its books 579 cases filed under the old Wagner Act, before the Taft-Hartley law took effect. These include 503 unfair labor practice cases and 76 petition for collective bargaining elections.

The effectiveness of the delay process in these old matters was dramatized recently when the U. S. Supreme Court heard oral argument on an NLRB case concerning unfair labor practices committed in January 1945. The company, Stowe Spinning Co., a southern textile firm, still holds out against NLRB orders of two years ago.

During November, unions were charged with one-fifth of the so-called unfair labor practices recognized by the Taft-Hartley law. Bosses got rid of unions in half of the 10 decertification elections permitted under the law.

As usual in recent months, the number of collective bargaining elections applied for and the number held, the heart of labor relations, was well below the pre-Taft-Hartley monthly level.

Guild CAREs

The Newspaper Guild, CIO, has exceeded the goal of CARE contributions set by its convention last summer.

The convention urged that $5000 more be raised to purchase CARE packages for needy European newspaper workers. Last week, the campaign ended with $10,934 contributed. The campaign was directed by Wilbur Bade, editor of the union's paper. The drive started as a result of a suggestion in a letter to the paper from William L. Tischel, Boston member.

Paul Christopher, CIO's Tennessee State Director, reported that employes of the American Enka Corporation's mill at Lowland, Tenn., a few miles out of Morristown, voted for the CIO by a three to one majority over the American Federation of Labor.

Miss. Dir. Robert Starnes reported that the AFL was defeated by the CIO by a subtantial majority, at the Laurel Textiles, Laurel, Miss.

Ala. Dir. Carey Haigler reported that at Brewton Weaving Co., production workers chose the CIO over no union representation.

Vol. XII WASHINGTON, D. C., JANUARY 10, 1949 82 No. 2

FAIR DEAL: President Truman, gesturing with both hands, outlined a Fair Deal program for the nation in his "state of the union" address to the 81st Congress. He asked the lawmakers to enact measures which he advocated during his re-election campaign. Repeal of Taft-Hartley and re-enactment of the Wagner Act were requested. He struck out at small special-interest groups and monopolistic practices and called for curbs on inflation. He stuck to his guns on civil rights. His program was in many respects similar to that of the CIO. For details turn to Page 2.

Wood Union Members Die In Tornado

SCORES OF CIO Woodworkers were killed or injured last week in a tornado which reached the crescendo of its fury at the timber-processing town of Warren, Ark.

The Associated Press reported that the casualty list for the entire town was 54 known dead and more than 250 injured.

Visiting the scene two days after the disaster, Ark. Dir. Lee F. Tucker of the CIO Organizing Committee said that the havoc was indescribable.

"I feel safe in saying that two-thirds of the injured and the dead are members of the Woodworkers. The Bradley Lumber Co. where they were employed and near which many of them live was in the heart of the destruction.

"The storm destroyed the homes and furnishings of 300 members of the families of CIO Woodworkers."

News stories said that the hardest hit region was the mill town section of Warren, where the Bradley flooring mill is located. Timber in the mill, the Associated Press reported, was reduced to virtual matchwood, and many houses in the vicinity were blown away or smashed.

A worker at the mill was quoted as saying that the wind hurled huge timbers through the air like "so many toothpicks."

A Bradley Co. watchman told reporters that 11 men saved themselves by taking refuge around a locomotive in one of the shops. The engine was covered with timber, but the men escaped serious injury.

(Eighteen hundred men were employed at the plant, where a new contract was being negotiated. The CIO is engaged in an organizing campaign at the Southern Lumber Co., which caught fire during the storm. Heavy rain and hail, which accompanied the tordano, failed to extinguish the fire, which burned for several hours.)

Wis. Anti-Strike Law Is Upheld

A state law barring strikes by public utility workers has been upheld by Circuit Court Judge Daniel W. Sullivan.

Lawyers for Local 18, CIO Gas Coke & Chemical Workers and Division 998, AFL Street & Electric Railway Employes immediately announced the decision would be appealed to higher state courts and to the U. S. Supreme Court if necessary.

The court acted on the suit brought by the unions to test the constitutionality of the strike ban, which passed the legislature in 1947.

Group Dental Program

Group Health Association, Washington, D. C., has announced that the opening of its new dental clinic marks the first group dental program in the U. S. Group Health has been providing medical treatment on a pre-paid basis for several years.

Michael Ross, CIO director of international affairs, has entered George Washington University Hospital in Washington for an operation. He is expected to be away from his office for several weeks.

4 Officials Of CIO Unions Europe-Bound

Four CIO union officials are Europe-bound this week for talks with British and continental trade union leaders.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey was scheduled to fly from New York to London on Sunday, Jan. 9. Departure of three others named by Pres. Murray a few weeks ago was delayed when the S. S. Queen Mary, on which they were scheduled to leave, got stuck in the mud off France.

The group that will leave during the middle of the week comprises Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the United Rubber Workers; Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the United Steelworkers; and Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the United Automobile Workers, representing UAW Pres. Walter Reuther.

They will discuss with leaders of the British Trades Union Congress the future of international labor cooperation and the future of the World Federation of Trade Unions, with which non-Communist labor groups have shown increasing impatience in recent months.

The WFTU executive bureau meeting opens in Paris Jan. 17, with Carey representing the CIO in place of Vice-Pres. Frank Rosenblum of the clothing workers, who was unable to leave the country because of business.

The CIO group will also attend a meeting of the ERP Trade Union Advisory Committee, scheduled for Paris later this month.

Survey Shows

Some MD's Spurn AMA

The American Medical Association does not echo the views of all US MDs in its campaign against national health insurance, a survey prepared by the Committee for the Nation's Health shows.

AMA's governing body, the House of Delegates, which ordained a $25 per doctor levy to fight proposed health insurance legislation, doesn't represent rank-and-file physicians, CNH declared. While half of the nation's practicing physicians are under 45 years of age, 95% of the delegates are over 45, and 70% over 55, the liberal organization pointed out.

CNH said that only 15% of the AMA big-wigs are general practitioners, although 50% of the country's doctors are. And while 30% of our medics work in communities with less than 5000 population, only 8% of the delegates are from the small towns.

As many as 15% of all doctors replying to a questionnaire declared that they are willing to participate in a national health insurance program. Another 24% was "undecided." Only 61% stuck to the AMA "no participation" line.

CNH explains that the poll was taken during the 80th Congress when there was no chance for the passage of a health bill. A much better response would be forthcoming if the bill makes headway now, CNH believes.

How About It? Give PAC a $1

Several T-H Repealers Offered

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

A BLIZZARD of bills—the most important of them designed to carry out Pres. Truman's "Fair Deal" program—hit the Congress last week.

Senators and Congressmen filed them in batches. Bills to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act and re-enact the Wagner Act were available for almost a dime a dozen.

The new proposals have a long road to travel through the Congressional Committee system. What comes out is apt to be different in many respects from the bills that went in during the first days of the session.

(HR 1 in the House was offered by Rep. O'Toole (D., N. Y.) and proposed a $25,000 annuity for former Presidents; HR 2, by the same Congressman, proposes that the United States provide a residence for the Vice-Presidents.)

In the House, freshman Rep. McGrath (D. N.Y.) slipped in the first Taft-Hartley repealer. It was numbered HR 211. Rep. Blatnik (D. Minn.) offered a similar repealer (HR 231), as did Rep. Kelley (D. Pa.) with HR 237, and numerous others followed their lead.

Sen. Elbert Thomas (D. Utah), new head of the Senate Labor Committee, proposed legislation on three matters of key importance to labor—T-H, higher minimum wages, and a federal aid-to-education bill identical with the one passed by the Senate and buried in the House a year ago.

BOTH SENATE and House Labor Committees will be kept busy considering the complex legislative problems involved in repealing Taft-Hartley, re-enacting the Wagner Act, and strengthening or extending other laws already on the book.

CIO's position on the T-H problem is clear. It has urged repeal of Taft-Hartley and re-passage of the Wagner Labor Relations Act. Then, as Pres. Murray pointed out last week (see col. 5), CIO will be prepared to enter into negotiations for whatever other constructive legislation may be deemed necessary.

There was some understandable confusion on Capitol Hill as Congress opened about handling of T-H. Washington correspondents were busy playing a new game—guessing whether Congress would remove T-H from the lawbooks in a one-package or two-package operation.

But Pres. Truman's message—and the Nov. 2 election returns—made clear that T-H had outlived its usefulness. Whatever finally comes out of the Congress it will be a long step away from the bill which Republican labor-baiters triumphantly passed over the Truman veto in June 1947.

He said the President "seems to want to continue many important features of the Taft-Hartley law"—although a reading of the President's speech offered no such easy conclusion. "Perhaps Congress will find that practically all of the provisions should be continued," he said.

More likely they won't—judging from the make-up of the 81st Congress. (A CBS reporter revealed that 102 new Congressmen had bid for places on the House Labor Committee; most of them will be disappointed).

The minimum wage law—with its present 40c base pay—is also due for overhauling. The CIO asked for wider coverage and a minimum of at least $1 an hour; the President asked for "at least 75c an hour."

With many wage-hour bills up for study, Sen. Myers (D. Pa.) proposed a stop-gap measure (S. 58) to lift minimum rates to 75c at once, pending passage of permanent improvements in the present law.

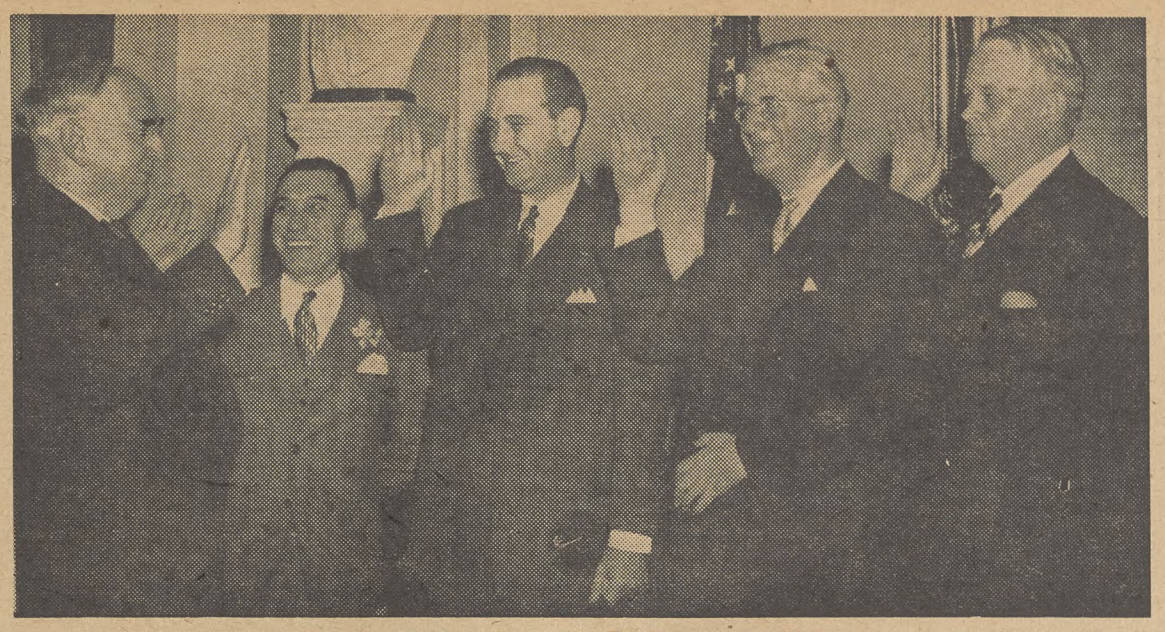
"An increase . . . is an immediate, urgent necessity," Myers said.

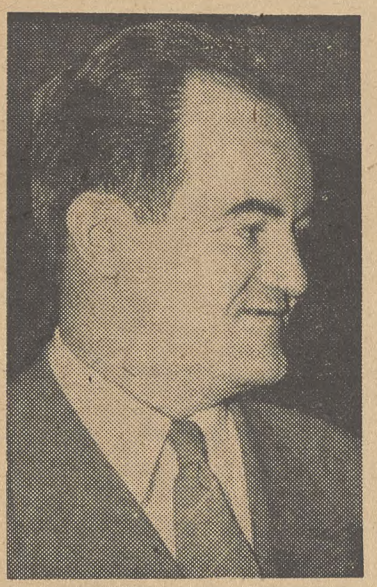
The aid-to-education bill had 14 sponsors — nine Democrats, five Republicans. A national health insurance bill was offered by six Democrats—Murray (Mont.), Wagner (N.Y.), Pepper (Fla.), Chavez (N.M.), Taylor (Ida.) and McGrath (R.I.).

Similar bills were offered in the House, as well as proposals on improving social security, public power and housing.

Committee hearings on the various proposals are expected to start shortly as the 81st Congress gets down to business. It was easy to note the heavy round of applause when the President said, toward the end of his speech:

"In the months ahead I know that I shall be able to cooperate with this Congress."





Paul H. Douglas (Ill.), second from right, who is one of the three liberal Democrats chosen as new members of the Senate Labor Committee, is shown (above) taking the oath of office for a seat in the Upper Chamber. In the picture are, l. to r., Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg (R. Mich.), retiring President Pro Tem administering the oath, J. Allen Frear, Jr. (D. Del.), Lyndon D. Johnson (D. Tex.), Douglas, and Robert S. Kerr (D. Okla.). Other new liberal Democrats on the Senate Labor Committee are Matthew Neely (W. Va.) and Hubert Humphrey.

Murray on Speech:

Truman Has 'Kept Faith'

CIO PRES. Murray hailed the State of the Union message delivered to Congress last week by Pres. Truman.

Here is Pres. Murray's statement:

"The President, in his message, has kept full faith with the people who elected him. The program is in the best tradition of constructive American liberalism. It will offer hope to democratic peoples throughout the world and assure domestic prosperity. We feel confident that it will command the support of the Congress and of the American people.

"We hail in particular the President's plain and urgent request for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and the re-enactment of the Wagner Act. We feel certain that the Congress will heed the mandate of the election and the President's message in promptly achieving this objective.

"Once the Taft-Hartley Law is repealed and the Wagner Act is re-enacted, the CIO stands prepared to make constructive recommendations to the Congress in the field of labor-management relations. We are sure that both labor and management groups, meeting within the spirit and framework of the President's message, can reach substantial agreement, once the Wagner Act is restored, on any problems that may arise.

"This can be done with full recognition on all parts that to preserve our democratic freedoms, government-by-injunction in the field of labor relations must be eliminated and wage-freezing avoided.

"The CIO renews its pledge to lend support to the President's program in the interests of a better America."

Murray To Be Guest

CIO Pres. Murray will be honored guest at a dinner in New York on Wednesday, Jan. 12, sponsored by Labor & The Nation Magazine and officers of the New York State CIO Council.

The affair will be held in the Grand Ballroom of the Hotel Commodore.

House Bottleneck Broken

THE DELAYING tactics by which the 80th Congress and in particular, the House—bottled up key legislation will not occur in the 81st Congress.

On opening day, Pres. Truman scored a smashing triumph when the House voted overwhelmingly to strip the Rules Committee of its "dictatorial" powers.

It was Rules which killed much important legislation in the last term, especially the housing bill, which had already passed the Senate and which had been approved by another House committee.

The new system was adopted by a voice vote after a test on a technical phase had passed 273 to 142. Voting for it on a roll-call were 225 Democrats, 49 Republicans and one American Laborite. Against were 31 Democrats and 111 Republicans.

The "bolt" of the 49 Republicans caused widespread surprise. All of the Democrats who broke with their party's caucus came from the South.

Here were the issues at stake:

a. Rules had for years ignored the wishes and voting strength of the majority. Suppose another committee had approved a bill, 15-0. Rules—or the majority of Rules—could pigeon-hole the bill. Only way to get it on the floor was through a petition signed by 218 Representatives, a procedure rarely successful.

b. The new Administration, believing that the wishes of the original committee should prevail, asked that, should Rules refuse to send a bill to the floor, the chairman of the original committee could, after 21 calendar days, move that the measure go to the floor for action. The House could decide then whether it wanted the bill passed.

The bolt of the 49 Republicans "can be regarded as a protest against the way in which the present Republican leadership of the House has used the power of the Rules to block progressive legislation," according to the New York Times.

Labor Unit 'Liberalized'

THE SENATE Labor and Public Welfare Committee, which will have much to do with the President's call for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law and reenactment of the Wagner Act, has been strengthened by addition of three forthright liberals.

All campaigned for repeal of T-H.

Appointment of the three followed a controversy among some Democrats over a plan whereby the committee would consist of seven Democrats and six Republicans, in order that Sen. Irving Ives (R., N. Y.) could remain on the committee.

This caused a storm of protest from liberals who felt that Ives' build-up reputation of being progressive on labor matters was offset by his record of support for T-H. Further, it was argued that he had been considered the Senate spokesman of Gov. Thomas E. Dewey.

The full line-up of the Labor committee will not be:

Democrats: Elbert Thomas (Utah), chairman; James E. Murray (Mont.), Claude Pepper (Fla.), Allen J. Ellender (La.), Lister Hill (Ala.), Neely, Douglas and Humphrey.

Republicans: Robert A. Taft (Ohio), former chairman; George D. Aiken (Vt.), H. Alexander Smith (N. J.), Wayne Morse (Ore.), and Forrest C. Donnell (Mo.).

All the Democrats except Ellender are rated as liberals. Aiken and Morse are also given that rating.

Also praised were the Democrats' appointments of new members of the Banking and Currency Committee, which handles social security, anti-inflationary and housing laws.

New members are Douglas and Sen. J. Allen Frear (Del.).

HE DID IT AGAIN!

Some of the political "experts" have been "double crossed" again by that man from down Missouri way.

You remember how it happened the first time?

He couldn't possibly be re-elected President of the U. S. He was finished. All that remained was the mere formality of voting Dewey into office.

Ah, and then came that cruel, cruel Nov. 2!

It didn't take too long for some of the experters to begin figuring out what President Truman would do when he made his next major move.

He, of course, had no real intention of proposing that Congress enact the program he advocated when campaigning. Why, he'd merely made a lot of political promises in the hope of winning votes.

That's what they said.

And then came Jan. 5 and Truman's "state of the union" message to Congress.

On that day he went right down the line. He asked Congress to pass laws that would make his program a reality.

He said he wanted legislation that would benefit the majority of the American people—not the small special-interest groups.

He asked for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and for a real civil rights program.

His talk sounded much like some of his earlier campaign speeches—and, in a sense, it was a campaign speech. He's campaigning now to get Congress to put its OK on his program.

Some of the "experts" will tell you, of course, that Truman won't be able to get many of his proposals translated into law.

We're not inclined to pay much attention to such talk because of their poor guessing in the past and because we believe members of Congress know a majority of the people support the Truman program.

Certainly there will be opposition—perhaps strong opposition—to portions of the Truman program. The sledding at times may be extremely tough.

But there's no discounting the fact that Truman is a real scrapper who slugs with all he's got when it becomes necessary. And he's got a comfortable Democratic majority up on Capitol Hill. ★ ★ ★

BOTTLENECK IS BROKEN

The new Congress had been in session less than two hours when House members smashed a bad bottleneck in which many important legislative measures were choked to death in the past.

The House Rules Committee was shorn of the power to bottle up for months on end bills which it wanted to prevent from coming to a vote on the floor.

This action was a pace-setting victory for the Truman forces, but it was more than that.

It was a move under which the House said it wanted no more of this business of letting a handful of strategically placed men exercise "veto" power over measures upon which the full House was not permitted to vote.

Another bottleneck that needs to be smashed is the filibuster, which permits measures to be literally talked to death.

Hate Peddlers And Mill Owners

Both Fan Race and Religious Prejudices In Violation of Civil Rights

By ALLAN L. SWIM

OLE Gene Talmadge, the colorful Georgia demagog, slouched down in his chair, pushed his hat far back on his head, snapped his red galluses and declared:

"I like Niggers—in their place. And a Nigger's place is at the back door of a white man's house with his hat in his hand."

There was no bitterness in his tone and he wasn't trying to shock me, for he knew that I, too, was a Southerner familiar with such talk.

He wasn't running for office at the time. He wasn't making a startling, new pronouncement. He was merely repeating a statement that he and others like him had made time and again.

I felt that I would be wasting my breath if I argued with him.

ON THE day before interviewing Talmadge I talked for several hours with Dr. Samuel Green, the rather colorless Grand Dragon of the Ku Klux Klan.

The KKK wasn't really out to get the Catholics, he said, and "Niggers aren't too bad when they stay in their place."

Yes, sir, he declared, his outfit was a fine American organization with high Christian ideals—and one of its chief aims was to "protect pure white Southern womanhood."

He accused me of being one of those "damn newspaper smear artists" bent on destroying the KKK and good, old Southern traditions.

I felt that I would be wasting my breath if I argued with him.

I SPENT months traveling around the country, talking to men like Talmadge and Green and digging out information about outfits which preached race and religious hate.

A Real Battle

One of the most bitter fights among members of the new Congress is expected to result from efforts to obtain enactment of civil rights legislation.

The men ranged all the way from Hate Spewing Gerald L. K. Smith to an Atlanta coal dealer who heads an outfit called the Free White American Gentile Army.

The organizations ranged from the Klan to the Independent Order of Minute Men.

After each interview and each investigation I felt I would be wasting my breath if I argued with the hate peddlers.

ONE HATE merchant threatened to beat me into a bloody pulp. One threatened to throw me out of his office. Several threatened me with big libel suits.

None of the threats were carried out. No hooded Klansmen called on me. None of the strong-arm boys worked me over. Nobody took a shot at me.

I was luckier than many others.

I was lucky because I learned from first-hand experience something that many of our people seem not to realize—the fact that there are quite a few "little domestic fascists" crawling around in our midst.

And I learned, too, that there are quite a few men and women in our country who actually do not believe in the civil rights that are spelled out in our Constitution.

SEVERAL years after completing the "hate peddlers" newspaper assignment I became connected with the CIO's Southern Organizing Drive.

Within 12 months 21 organizers on our staff had been physically assaulted merely because they were union organizers.

Race and religious prejudices were fanned by mill and factory owners in their efforts to keep employes from joining the CIO.

Union groups were brazenly denied the rights of free speech and free assembly in numerous towns.

Law enforcement officers on company payrolls conveniently turned their heads while company "goons" went to work on organizers and local union leaders.

THESE personal experiences are related here only because of the light they may possibly shed on the task confronting those who would push a real civil rights program through the 81st Congress.

The demagogs and many of the Southern industrialists preach the same sermon of hate and prejudice. They do so partly to retain their political and economic power and partly because they've never done otherwise.

They will fight especially hard to retain those "old Southern traditions" which are designed to keep one race of people—the Negroes—and one class of people—the workers—subjugated.

The CIO for months has been engaged in a widespread campaign to give Southerners in both groups a greater measure of economic and political freedom.

It's time for Congress to quit twiddling its thumbs and take action, too.

Murray on Education:

'Revise Social Study Courses in Most Schools'

"WHEN I say education, I do not mean the false thing that has passed for education through the years—the old idea of teaching a boy and girl only enough to enable them to work in a menial capacity until their dying day.

"I mean a process by which boys and girls, regardless of their race, creed or national origin, can avail themselves of all the good and constructive experience of men from the beginning of time."

This is how CIO Pres. Philip Murray defined education in an interview on labor's plans for public education, reports B. F. Brodinsky in an article in the January issue of The Nation's Schools based on talks with various union officials, CIO and AFL.

"I look back on my service as a member of the Pittsburgh board of education as one of the most rewarding public activities of my career," Murray told Brodinsky. "I deplore the fact that so few labor representatives are in such positions.

"Organized labor will have to enter politics on the local level—nominate and elect its friends to boards of education, or nominate and elect a mayor who will appoint labor members to the board, in proportion to labor's membership in the community."

THE article quotes Pres. Murray as expressing the opinion that the contents of social studies courses are one-sided, and place "too much emphasis on militarism, palace-politics, business economics, nationalism, and not enough emphasis on the story of the common people's role in American history."

Murray summed up the CIO's position on this question, writes Brodinsky by saying: "The time has come to revise the social studies courses in most schools, with an emphasis on the hopes and aspirations of all the people whose children attend the schools."

Brodinsky found that in spite of some harsh criticism of public education, union officials on the whole found many praiseworthy aspects in the work of public schools. Approved were efforts being made to teach practical citizenship, tolerance, good health and safety habits.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP By YOMEN

"Since my vote went down this year, Miss Smith, you'll have to take a pay cut."

He Was The 'Whole Works' That Day

Sometimes they'll offer to sell you airtime for practically peanuts. At other times they'll try to keep you off the air regardless of what you're willing to pay.

Some follow schedules almost as strict as those of the big networks. Others seem to have no schedules at all.

It was on a "practically-no-schedule" station that a CIO representative found out about the difficulties of broadcasting.

THE CIO man finally completed his radio script at about 2 a.m. and tumbled into bed for a bit of troubled sleep.

At 8 a.m. four local unionists met him in his room for an hour of rehearsal. Then they hurried to the nearby radio station.

There was a youngster in the control room, playing phonograph records—and there was a receptionist-stenographer at her desk.

"We're here for the CIO program that's to go on the air at 9:15," the CIO man told the receptionist.

"Oh, my goodness!" she declared. "I forgot about that program and I didn't tell our announcer to come in. I guess we'll just have to call the program off."

THERE was a brief argument, during which the CIO representative said the program had been advertised for 9:15 and that a cancellation was out of the question.

The receptionist - stenographer smiled sweetly and said. "You sound like you might be a radio announcer. Could you handle the show?"

The CIO man, glancing at a clock whose hands pointed to 9.12, said, "Sure I can handle it. I've had a lot of radio experience."

The five union men dashed into the studio, took their places at the microphone and waited for the lad to cut off the record-playing machine.

At 9:15 sharp the studio became silent.

THE "announcer" gulped a couple of times, moved close to the mike and began talking.

"This is station———. The following program is presented by the Congress of Industrial Organizations."

The "announcer" then became an actor and late in the show he became a news commentator.

He also served as director of the program, motioning his charges closer to or farther from the microphone and doing those other things which he imagined radio directors did.

Everything went along smoothly until it became apparent that the local unionists were talking much faster than the script writer - announcer - actor-director thought they would.

So, when they ran out of script he began ad libbing.

The hands on the studio clock finally showed the program had only seconds to run—and at this point the CIO triple-threat man was sweating profusely.

He dragged out a few sentences more and then relaxed as one does when a tough job has been completed.

Suddenly he remembered that he was the announcer, too, and that he had promised the station owner each program would end with a "disclaimer."

Using his best announcer voice, he said:

"The program you have just heard was presented by the Congress of Industrial Organizations. The views expressed were not necessarily those of Station ———."

As the unionists walked toward the station exit the receptionist-stenographer glanced up, smiled and went on beating her typewriter as if nothing unusual had happened.

Chicago Housing Criteria Blasted

'Federal Govt. Has Higher Standards For Animals'

Almost 450 persons were suffering and a few—or perhaps, one—were profiting from the conditions at a Chicago tenement described in this article in the January issue of Work, monthly publication of the Chicago Labor Alliance, an organization of Catholics, Protestants and Jews:

"SIX TOP city officials yesterday inspected a seven story, garbage stuffed tenement where an estimated 450 Negroes are living with no toilet facilities, limited water supplies, dangerous electrical wiring, and no heating system . . .

"In all the flats dangerous homemade electric wiring was strung about the walls. There was no running water above the fifth floor and no toilet in working order in the building. Air shafts and an elevator shaft without an elevator were stuffed with garbage and human waste. Makeshift heating was installed in each flat."

That was the story in the Chicago Tribune about a Chicago tenement at 215 East 31st St. It was the same in all the other papers. County Judge Edmund Jarecki described the place as "not fit for human beings to live in."

WE CONSULTED bulletins of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. The Federal government has higher standards for the caring of animals than we in Chicago maintain for housing human beings destined to see God.

Farmer's Bulletin No. 1419, Care and Management of Farm Work Horses: "Abundance of light and proper ventilation of the stables are essential for complete sanitation and the health of the horse."

Farmers' Bulletin No. 1393, Principles of Dairy Barn Ventilation: "The stabling of animals on dark, poorly ventilated, dam barns affect their health and helps t spread tuberculosis among the stock when ever the germs are present."

FARMERS' Bulletin No. 1487, Practica Hog Houses: "Proper housing is an impo tant factor in the successful raising o hogs. If little pigs are to get the right kin of start in life, they must have plenty o sunlight."

Farmers' Bulletin No. 1554, Poultr Houses and Fixtures: "Growing chicks and laying hens need comfortable houses that are dry and roomy, with plenty of fresh air and sunlight. It never pays to overcrowd them. The houses in which chicks are brooded and reared should be so constructed as to promote the most efficient growth in the chicks."

Attempt To Make Workers 'Goat' Foiled

The attempt to blame Government workers for failure of the Washington, D. C., Community Chest campaign to reach its goal is thwarted in this editorial in the January 1 issue of Labor, publication of 15 railroad labor organizations:

They Always Blame the Workers

Anything unpleasant—such as high prices, a railroad wreck or "industrial disputes"—is promptly blamed on the workers by most daily papers. Following that custom, a Washington editor publicly scolded government workers this week for the shocking failure of the Capital City's "Community Chest" money raising campaign.

This time, the workers had an able defender in C. G. Davidson, Assistant Secretary of the Interior, who headed the money raising among government employes.

He wrote the editor pointing out that the government workers contributed $125,000 more this year than last year, while the campaign as a whole fell 26 per cent short of its goal. Obviously it was the businessmen of Washington—including wealthy newspaper owners—who did not do their part.

Like Salmon?

Think of this next time you eat some canned salmon.

Children under 16 were found to be working at long as 19 and 20 hours a day and up to 87½ hours a week in a salmon cannery in Alaska. Your salmon may or may not have come from such a place, but fish canneries have long been notorious for violations of child labor laws.

Inspectors for the Dept. of Labor's Wage-Hour and Public Contract Divisions reported in December that 12 out of 47 concerns investigated in Alaska were violating the child-labor provisions of Federal labor laws. Eight of these were canneries.

Significant Provisions Of State Unemployment Insurance Laws, August 1, 1948

Prepared by the Bureau of Employment Security for ready reference and comparative purposes. Because of the impossibility of giving qualifications and alternatives in brief summary form, the State law and State Employment Security Agency should be consulted for authoritative information. In general, the States cover employment in most types of business and industry, except employment for railroads, which is covered by a separate federal law.

unemployment insurance, the ting arrangements, which al- ovide incentives for employers yment have operated (a) to ng of unemployment insurance ake employers anxious to have squalified from receipt of bene- tribute unemployment so as to minimize those entitled to compensation by preventing the unemployment insurance system from fulfilling one of its major social functions—that of maintaining the stream of purchasing power.

"The experience of unemployment insurance indicates that adequate social security cannot be secured on the basis of state legislation. The state-by-state approach is fatal, no matter how bolstered by federal taxes with off-sets, or by federal subsidies or Federal standards; no two state systems are identical and the variations have no national basis.

"(a) The highest standards under any state laws are not as favorable as a Federal system ought to be. Under a system in which each state system stands alone, the risk factors produce an average benefit level necessarily lower than is possible under a Federal system involving the same aggregate risk. No reinsurance or pooling arrangements can substitute for a straight Federal system.

"(b) The major factors in the improvement of unemployment insurance systems and their major defenders, when they are under attack, are the workers and their representatives. The necessity for working on 51 fronts at all times makes both improvement and defense very difficult.

"(c) Operation of 51 state and territorial unemployment insurance systems produces enormous and unnecessary complexity of administration. Under the best of conditions the separation of authority and responsibility inherent in the existing administrative arrangements makes for needless turmoil and uncertainty.

"(d) The State systems of unemployment insurance have tended in some cases to spread elements of disunion in the labor movement. Some labor organizations have believed the false claims of employers that States with better than average unemployment risks will provide benefits more liberal than could be afforded in a national system. The claim has surface plausibility but is basically false.

"(e) State-by-state administration of unemployment insurance and of the employment services tends to aggravate unemployment by erecting barriers around the labor markets within each State. The health of the national economy requires the maintenance of a unified national labor market as in the war. This cannot be done under the existing systems of unemployment security."

Obvious

From the table at the left, it seems obvious to anyone except the most rabid States' Righter—or most rabid employer—that the state system is a mass of unfairness, confusion, inefficiency and downright stupidity.

IN THE adjoining columns, the patchquilt quality of unemployment compensation under state control is shown.

The application of the procedures listed in the table obviously could lead to weird decisions—and do, as the article below will show.

Why is there so much unfairness in state setups? Main reason seems to be the wide practice of unfair apportionment of State house members.

Representation

FOREMOST proponents of the States' Rights principle are two seeming extremes which are actually working for the same general objectives.

We refer to professional States' Righters of the South and to the Republican Party.

What of a Southern State like Georgia, which is ruled now by Gov. Herman Talmadge, son of the fabulous Gene? And what of New York, which is presided over by the Little Man Who Didn't Get There, Thomas E. Dewey?

GEORGIA: There is a lot of talk every four years about the unfairness of the Electoral College system and that it should be abolished. None of this talk has ever been heard to come from a professional Southern politician.

In Georgia, however, the governor is elected by a "unit system." Under this rotten borough system, counties get two to six unit votes.

Fulton County (seat of Atlanta) has a population of 392,866 and gets 6 unit votes. Echols, with a population of 2964, gets two unit votes! Thus, Echols and two other slightly larger counties offset Fulton's vote. In 1946, Gene Talmadge's opponent got the majority of the popular vote; Gene won with a wide margin in unit votes.

Incidentally, Atlanta has 123,000 registered voters. One small county has 241, but they have one-third of the strength of Atlanta's 123,000.

Now let's move up to NEW YORK, the Empire State. New York City, with its about 8,000,000 population, has 55.3% of the state's population. New York has a state House of 150 members. It has a Senate of 56 members.

Yet, New York City has only 67 of the 150 and 25 of the 56—44.6% in each case!

That's Tom Dewey's state.

Long Delays

The CIO Textile Workers report that unemployment compensation checks in New Hampshire are weeks late because of fund-cutting by the 80th Congress. The members of Local 550, Newport, N. H., are asking Congress for action.

Enforcement

HOW FAIR are the various states in their granting of unemployment compensation? Here are some examples, taken from official sources:

● Shift employment—a serious problem in mass industry.

Responsibilities to families and personal necessity often lead persons to reject employment during certain hours.

A mother naturally wants work at hours which would permit her to care for her children properly. It is obvious that day nurseries can't fulfill this entire job.

Wives who must work to help keep the family in necessities want to work the same hours as their husbands, a fair enough wish.

Despite these and many other reasons, state courts and appeal boards have many times refused to take into account these patent social necessities.

IN MICHIGAN, a woman wished to work on the afternoon shift (3:30 P. M. to 11:40 P. M.) at Ford because she wanted to be at home in the mornings so that she could awaken her two sons, aged 10 and 17, get their breakfasts and send them off to school.

She worked the afternoon shift for more than a year and a half, was laid off, applied for unemployment compensation.

The commission first ruled her eligible, but upon being informed that she was available only for afternoon shift work, denied compensation. A referee and the appeals board overruled the commission. The State Supreme Court sustained the commission. Note the lack of knowledge of the court:

"It may be assumed that, in a so-called 'around-the-clock' operation, the work on shifts does not vary in character . . . She took such position, not for any reason connected with the character of the labor itself, but rather because of the situation in her home."

That's just one example. In later issues of the CIO News, you'll see more.

● Wages—State laws prohibit the denial of benefits for the individual's refusal of work at wages which are substantially less favorable than those prevailing for similar work in the locality.

But many appeal and court decisions appear to give inadequate consideration to the impact which acceptance of work at a particular wage would have upon the individual's economic status. For example.

In Louisiana, a claimant, a seamstress, had averaged $22 weekly in her past employment. She refused an offer of work in a laundry at 31c an hour because of the wage. She stated there would be nothing of her daily wages of $2.48 left after paying car fare, luncheons, etc.

She stated her willingness to accept $20 weekly in her customary occupation or in any other work she could do.

The appeals referee disqualified her for two weeks. Incidentally, she had five children.

In future articles in future editions, we will give many further examples of unfair application by state bodies.

Toll Unity Continues In Toledo

LABOR POLITICAL unity, gained in the 1948 Taft-Hartley elections has turned out to be more than a passing fancy in Toledo, Ohio.

The United Labor Committee, formed to elect Congressman Tom Burke, has become a permanent organization with representatives from CIO, AFL, Mechanics Educational Society of America and Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen.

Burke is a member of the CIO Auto Workers and until his election as Congressman was secretary-treasurer of the Toledo CIO Council.

Subcommittees of the new organization were formed and elections will be held in February. The resolutions committee invited all segments of labor to join the political group and most of Toledo's unions are represented on it.

Frank Fischer and Charles Ballard, co-chairman of the Committee declared: "We have built in Toledo today what we sincerely believe to be a lasting instrument for the good of the people as a whole.

"By this time it should be apparent that the interests and welfare of the men and women who work for a living are essential to continued and increased community health and progress. We intend to forward those interests with a sharp eye open to check any of those, wittingly or unwittingly, who place any private immediate or transient interest ahead of the general welfare."

TWU Leftists Get Setback

FOLLOWERS OF CIO Transport Workers' Pres. Michael Quill and TWU Secy.-Treas. Gustav Faber have scored another victory in their fight against a left-wing minority in the union.

New York Supreme Court Justice William C. Hecht, Jr., has granted a substitution of attorneys in the suit of TWU Local 100 Pres. Austin Hogan against Faber and Paul Lerman, a New York printer.

Hogan's suit, filed by Harry Sacher, former TWU attorney, charges Faber and Lerman with embezzling $8,000 of Local 100's funds. Both have denied the charge. Faber charges the suit is a left-wing plot.

Hecht's ruling substituted the firm of John F. O'Donnell and Asher W. Schwartz, which represents Local 100, for Sacher. Hecht declared that "the real plaintiff is not Hogan, but rather the association of which he is president."

The board of Local 100 has ordered Hogan to withdraw the suit, which he refused to do. O'Donnell and Schwartz have announced they will withdraw the suit, which they say has no merit.

The members of Local 100 will meet this week to act on a petition of 15,000 members asking for the ouster of Hogan.

Bad Timing

Milton Berle on ABC:

"The trouble with Tom Dewey is that his timing is bad. Every time he runs for President, someone else is running, too."

Trib Finds Plot:

Could Rent White House For 2 Million Yearly

THE Chicago Tribune—still being printed with scab varie-type—hates the thought of a Democrat—any Democrat—being President.

It has a staff member named Walter Trohan who'll do any type of a hatchet job the Trib wants.

(Trohan is the guy who ghost-wrote the book in which Jim Farley vented his animus toward the Roosevelt family.)

Last week, Trohan, adding two and two together, estimated that Pres. Truman costs the American people "more than $5,000,000 a year."

Yes, $5,000,000!

Here's how:

Salary	$75,000
Expenses	40,000
Emergency fund	1,000,000
White House costs	1,000,000
Ground maintenance	250,000
Repairs	1,000,000
Staff	100,000
Total	$3,465,000

But, say you, that's not "more than $5,000,000."

That proves you don't have the initiative of a Trohan.

This is the way he explains the other $2,000,000:

"The White House rental value is over 2 million dollars a year."

So help us.

Steel Wants Profits, Not Export Controls

THE STEEL barons' fight to eke every possible dollar of profits out of the nation's consumers, and out of our defense and foreign aid programs, is continuing unabated.

Meeting in New York the Nat'l Association of Steel Exporters demanded that Commerce Dept. controls on the export of the crucial metal be ended, so that they can channel steel out of the country on the basis of profit, not foreign or domestic need.

Part of their propaganda balloon was pricked by Office of Int'l Trade's Asst. Director Francis McIntyre. He pointed out that actually licenses to export had been issued last year for more steel than was actually shipped out. The exporters claimed that the licensing system holds up shipments destined for Marshall plan countries.

Another government official, Federal Trade Commission Chairman Robert E. Freer, answered steel industry inspired attacks on FTC's anti-basing point decisions. Freer declared that ulterior motives prompt the complaints of "some businessmen" about the "confusion" that has arisen from FTC and Supreme Court rulings on the basing point system of delivered prices.

THEY ARE attempting to convince other business men that FTC will rule against all delivered prices, while in fact the Commission's objection is solely to basing point systems designed to destroy competition, Freer pointed out.

He charged that there is a concerted attempt to amend the anti-trust laws to legalize monopolistic pricing systems, and hinted that the investigation of FTC by the special committee of the expired 80th Congress headed by Sen. Homer Capehart (R. Ind.) was a part of the scheme.

"The industries from which the initial clamor came are those which do not want competition and whose leaders have in the past expressed their idea that price competition is a ruinous process which must be systematically restrained and prevented," the FTC chief declared.

While the steel industry last week was taking its time studying plans for increased and more economical production, offered to it by Dr. G. A. Zotos, anti-fascist Greek engineer, threats of curtailed production in one of America's vital industries were heard.

The big business daily, the New York Journal of Commerce, said that the industry won't be able to handle demands for increased auto production and much needed freight car construction as well.

The J of C predicted that if the government approves plans for more rolling stock the auto industry will have to abandon its hope of producing more cars.

This dilemma has not, however, resulted in any lessening of the steel makers' resistance to expanding their plant capacity.

450,000 in Norway Unions

There are 450,000 dues-paying members in the Norwegian Federation of Labor, a survey released in Oslo revealed.

This may not seem a large number to the nearly 16,000,000-member American labor movement, but it means that with the present rate of organizing continuing there will be a round half-million union members in the Scandinavian democracy in 1949. That's one-sixth of Norway's total population.

The half million in '49 mark is the goal of the Norwegian Federation of Labor, which this year will celebrate its 50th anniversary.

GOP TOO SLOW: When the Republican majority of nine in the Deleware Senate was unable to agree on a candidate, for president pro tem, the Democrat minority of eight nominated a Republican, Mrs. Vera G. Davis for the post. She joined with the Democrats to win the election. Here Gov.-elect Elbert N. Carvel (now lieutenant-governor) is administering the oath of office to Mrs. Davis.

Oil Union Rejects Proposal

By RAY DAVIDSON

"THERE'S plenty of fight left in us yet," striking members of Oil Workers Intl. Union told the Union Oil Co. in California recently.

After four months of up-hill and often discouraging fighting, the California strikers told that company that its latest strike settlement proposal was no good. They voted it down, in secret balloting, 984 to-131, (Approximately 600 strikers did not vote; they're the fellows who scattered over the country to work on temporary jobs.)

The battle against Union Oil Co. is the last remnant of the bitter 15,000-man oil strike which raged in California last September, October and part of November. Other struck companies made settlements during November, but Union Oil locked out its strikers by telling them that regardless of terms reached, it would re-employ only a small percentage of the strikers.

The latest—and rejected—company proposal would have provided re-employment of a large proportion of the strikers. Remainder would have been placed in an employment pool to be rehired in order of seniority "as vacancies occured."

The unionists are holding out for re-employment of all strikers with seniority and other benefits unimpaired. Meanwhile, retail sales of Union Oil products are reported to have dropped to about 50% of normal.

CIO's Mich. Program

THE CIO HAS offered a legislative program for Michigan.

The program, adopted by the CIO Council's Legislative and Political Action Committee at a meeting in Lansing, includes:

- Complete support of the national CIO's legislative program.
- Expansion of Workmen's Compensation to provide substantial increase and benefits, and extension of benefits for as long a period as is needed by the injured worker. Reorganization of State Labor Dept. Repeal of anti-labor laws.
- Taxation based on ability to pay.
- An FEPC.
- Veterans' benefits.
- Much needed social legislation.
- Reapportionment of legislative districts.

Michigan's governor-elect, G. Mennen Williams, won with full support of the CIO. National magazine articles have said labor support was the biggest factor.

NMU Reinstates Myers

Former Vice Pres. Frederick Myers of the CIO Natl. Maritime Union and two other seamen recently suspended by the New York NMU port agent have been reinstated.

NMU Vice Pres. Jack Lawrenson, who made the announcement, said there was no link between the reinstatements and a court suit brought by three of 22 suspended seamen to compel the union to restore them to the shipping rolls.

$2388 IN BACK PAY: Doc Smith, Houston, Texas, a member of the CIO Woodworkers, accepts two checks totaling $2388, back pay and expenses paid by the Southern Pine Lumber Co., Diboll, Texas. The money is being presented by Clifford Potter, employe of the NLRB before which the union brought an unfair labor practice charge after Smith was beaten and chased from town by a county constable who, the union said, admitted receiving $215 a month from the company as a "gift."

HST's Speech Adds Interest To TVA's Yearly Report

PRES. TRUMAN'S declaration in his State of the Union address that "we should apply the lessons of our Tennessee Valley experience to our other great river basins" lent added interest to the year-end report of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Citing electric power revenues, savings from flood control and navigation, and rate of economic progress in the Valley, the report showed that the Tennessee Valley program of regional development is paying off. The report said:

- TVA dams saved almost $15,000,000 in flood damages during 1948.
- River traffic in petroleum, automobiles, grain, aluminum, fertilizer, coal, iron and steel reached a new high.
- The power system generated nearly 15 billion kilowatt-hours, about ten times as much as in 1933. Power revenues were nearly $50,000,000.
- The Federal government has received $2 billion additional revenue from increased income taxes in the Valley.
- Two new dams, Watauga and Holston, were under construction during the year.
- Electric service went to nearly 105,000 consumers, 71,000 rural consumers.
- At a time when utilities all over the country have been asking permission for rate increases, TVA reduced its rates $225,000.
- TVA's chemical plant at Muscle Shoals produced 153,000 tons of triple superphosphate, 6,000 tons of calcium metaphosphate, 27,000 tons of fused tricalcium phosphate, and 155,000 tons of ammonium nitrate.
- The food freezing industry, which TVA helped develop, grew into a $5,000,000 industry.

N. J. CIO Fights Bias in Bowling

The New Jersey CIO Council is seeking to keep the American Bowling Congress' annual tournament out of Atlantic City, N. J., because of the sports organization's discrimination policies.

In a letter to Gov. Alfred Driscoll (R), Arthur Chapin, civil rights director of the state CIO, asked him to ban the tournament because the ABC, "which sets itself up as the official agency that determines championship bowlers, limits competition to members of the white race."

In Dixie and Pa.

CIO Wins JobsBack For Score

IN DIXIE and in Pennsylvania the CIO's fight against discriminatory firing met with success recently when a score of men were ordered reinstated to their jobs.

In Dixie the NLRB ordered 16 men reinstated at the Georgia mill of Macon Textiles, Inc., and another man reinstated with $2,388.19 in back pay and expenses at the Southern Pine Lumber Co., Diboll, Texas.

These victories were hailed by Director Van A. Bittner of the CIO's Southern Organizing Campaign as an aid to the further organization of the South's industrial workers.

The firing of the 16 occurred during Macon Textile's long campaign against the efforts of Area Director R. E. Starnes and his men to organize the plant.

On the night before the NLRB election, it was testified, D. W. Barnes, one-time general superintendent and now no longer connected with the mill, drove his speeding automobile onto a sidewalk where Starnes was talking to one of his staff. Starnes was not hit by the car, however.

The other Southern case involved Doc Smith, a war veteran of 27 months' service, who was discharged by the Southern Lumber Pine Co. Ruling that Smith's discharge came as a result of his activity in behalf of the CIO Woodworkers, the Board ordered him reinstated to work and paid for time lost. This totaled $2,388.19. Smith rejected the offer of reinstatement because a CIO organizer found him a better job at higher pay in Houston, Texas.

IN Pennsylvania an arbitration board reinstated three members of the CIO Steelworkers who had been fired as "old men" by the Birdsboro Steel Foundry & Machine Co. The company was ordered to give them back pay to March 12, 1948, date of their discharge.

In addition to the three involved in this suit, the company sought to discharge a number of workers hired during the war, whom it termed "war babies," and 66 other elderly employes, some of whom had spent 50 years at the plant.

Restoration of 1936 Merchant Marine Act Urged By CIO Unit

A REPORT ON merchant marine policy prepared by CIO Maritime Committee Secy. Hoyt Haddock in time for the opening of the 81st Congress said that the merchant marine act of 1936 should be restored.

The CIO Maritime Committee is critical of more recent congressional measures as replacing "incentives for better management with incentives for financial manipulation and connivance."

Poor management by shippers and shipbuilders, as well as public neglect, are blamed by the Maritime Committee for the decline of the merchant navy from its wartime peak. High overhead costs, lack of aggressiveness in going after business, and poor labor relations are set forth as employers' prime errors.

Among the legislative recommendations of the CIO body are increased appropriations and guaranteed steel allocations for shipbuilding, a requirement that subsidized lines build vessels necessary to maintain their lines, return of ships under military control to private operation, guarantee the right of seamen to strike in port, and other improvements in merchant marine personnel policy.

It Was A Tie On 'In The Family

THE FAMILIES of a California dairy rancher and a New York CIO shoe salesman are $100 richer this week.

They reached a tie on the first CIO "IT'S IN THE FAMILY" show broadcast Tuesday nights at 10:30 p. m., EST, over the American Broadcasting Co. network.

The families, chosen from the studio audience at Radio City in New York, were Mr. and Mrs. Steven Haney of Crowslanding, Calif., and Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Rieger of the Bronx, N. Y. Rieger is a member of Local 1268, CIO Retail Shoe Salesmen's Union.

The two family groups were asked a series of questions on labor and current events by Quizmaster Joe O'Brien.

"IT'S IN THE FAMILY" will be heard every Tuesday night at 10:30 p. m., EST, over the ABC network until the end of June. CIO members planning to visit New York should make a point of watching the show; they may find themselves on the air competing for prizes in U. S. savings bonds.

What we have been hearing the past few days is particularly pleasing although too long delayed. What we are hearing is not reports from CIO representatives and directors but the voices of congressmen lifted in behalf of labor objectives, supporting legislation for the benefit of the great American public instead of the selfish few.

These new liberal sentiments, as contrasted with the infamous attitude of the 80th Congress, constitute a direct report from the field of the activity of many CIO men and women throughout the naion in electing liberal legislators.

Much remains to be done in wiping out of the Congress and out of the legislatures of the 48 states, the agents of reaction and selfish interests. But we have learned that organization, the mobilization of labor in a great united effort can and will achieve success. We look forward to greater and stronger organization.

U. S. Can't Condone Violence

State Dept. Sees Eye To Eye With CIO On Indonesia

THE U. S. Department of State agrees with the CIO that the Dutch-Indonesian dispute can be satisfactorily solved only by recognizing the "legitimate desires of the Indonesian people for self-determination and self-rule."

The statement of State Dept. policy was contained in a letter to CIO Pres. Murray from Acting Secy. of State Robert Lovett. Murray had written to Secy. of State Marshall on Dec. 23 voicing CIO's approval of U. S. leadership in seeking a speedy end to hostilities in Indonesia and voicing CIO support of future steps to halt Dutch aggression in the area.

The State Dept. statement was written shortly before Marshall and Lovett resigned. Pres. Truman said their policies will continue.

Lovett's reply noted that the American government has consistently urged for more than a year to the Dutch "the necessity of reaching an agreement with the Republic (of Indonesia.)"

"The United States cannot, of course, indorse or condone a solution by force of such a problem as that of Indonesia," Lovett wrote to Pres. Murray. He added "emphatically" that the U. S. government has not "abandoned hope of a constructive solution to the Indonesian problem in which the legitimate interests of both sides may be safeguarded and enhanced."

In urging the Netherlands government to accept a decent settlement of the Indonesian problem, Lovett added, the U. S. "was mindful of the proved national character" of the Indonesian Republican regime.

THAT GOVERNMENT, headed by Pres Sukarno and Prime Minister Hatta, has labored "under signal difficulties" but it has "resolutely taken action against and eliminated a Communist revolt against its authority, engineered by a Moscow-trained and disciplined Communist agent," Lovett recalled.

By opposing the Communists, Lovett wrote, the Indonesian government showed it recognizes the fact that international Communist forces, "in paying lip service to the nationalist ideal in any country . . . have no other end in view but the subversion of that ideal, the rigorous suppression of nationalism in the future, and the institution of alien controls of far-reaching and tyrranical character."

Since the Dutch apparently recognize the interest of all governments and peoples — including their own—in achieving peace in Indonesia and throughout the world, Lovett continued, the U. S. hopes the Dutch will "seize the present opportunity to make concrete demonstration" of its intents to satisfy the legitimate aspirations of the Indonesians for self-rule.

The "legitimate demands" of the Indonesians and the "legitimate interests" of the Dutch could both be protected by an agreement between the two parties along the lines suggested by the U. S. representative to the UN's Committee of Good Offices, the letter declared.

THE AMERICAN plan provided for Indonesian elections under safeguards of "freedom of expression and franchise"; formation of a provisional government by the Indonesian Parliament; transfer of sovereignty to the new government; and the writing of a democratic constitution.

The Americans, Lovett pointed out, has called on both parties to cease fire, to withdraw to positions held before Dec. 18—when the new Dutch aggression started —and to release all political prisoners.

This U. S. plan for withdrawal of troops failed to win the necessary votes in the UN Security Council, however, and the Dutch failed to comply with those resolutions adopted by the UN. As a result, the basis for a negotiated settlement outlined by the U. S. no longer exists.

"It emphatically does not mean," Lovett wrote Murray, that the U. S. has "abandoned hope of a constructive solution" to the Indonesian problem. But the U. S. "cannot of course indorse or condone a solution by force of such a problem as that of Indonesia," he added.

Lovett's letter indicated that acceptance by the Dutch of the Indonesians' right to democratic self-rule under a free government would help solve the problem.

If the Dutch show such a recognition of Indonesian rights, "the now naturally acute apprehensions of the Republican leaders and sypathizers may be allayed . . . the spectre of guerilla warfare and sabotage need not materialize; and the Dutch and Indonesians may join efforts toward a common and mutually beneficial goal."

Union Leader Says ECA Helps

NORWAY MEAT RATION 22 lbs. A YEAR

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

LIVING CONDITIONS in Norway are pretty rugged today, with food, clothing and other necessities rigidly rationed, but things would have been much worse without the Marshall Plan aid, Haakon Lie, general secretary of the Norwegian Labor Party, said in Washington last week.

When the full effects of the plan get going, Lie said, Norway expects to achieve full recovery quickly.

Lie is in this country as one of the members of a group of seven Norwegian unionists who have come to the U. S. A. under the Economic Cooperation Administration's technical assistance program to study American production methods and to make friendly contacts with trade unionists here.

The group from Norway is the first of a series of "productivity teams" from various countries that the ECA plans to bring to the United States. Later groups will come from England, Denmark and other Marshall plan countries.

THE YEAR 1948 was "very lean," Lie said, for the three million people of the little country that fought on bitterly to the end in spite of the wreck the Nazis made of their resources. Imports had to be cut drastically, textiles alone by 50%, and a drought last year added to Norway's difficulties.

The meat ration is 22 pounds a year, Lie said, less than a half a pound a week, and clothing is in such short supply that people have to wait their turn for a long time to get a coat or suit.

Attempts of the Communists to turn the workers against the Marshall Plan are falling flat, Lie said, and their influence in the unions is on the decline. It is very important, he added, to get the Norwegians to understand that Communist charges that the plan is an imperialist scheme and a Wall Street plot "is one of the biggest lies of the century."

Lie is the only one of the seven-man productivity team from Norway who has been in the U. S. A. previously, and the only one who speaks English.

During the remaining two weeks of their three weeks' trip, the Norwegian labor men will visit industrial plants and talk to trade union leaders in Pittsburgh and Youngstown, Pa.; Detroit, Mich.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Knoxville, Tenn.; the New England area, and New York City.

Harriman

Urges More ECA Support

THE WELCOME mat is out for increased activity by American and European unions to speed the success of the Marshall Plan.

W. Averell Harriman, top man in the European set-up of the Economic Cooperation Administration, declared:

"The European Recovery Program owes much to the free democratic trade unions of Europe for progress made in 1948 toward the rebuilding of self-reliant nations united in their purpose of establishing more stable and more secure living for all.

"Trade unionists in Europe who have come forward not only to support, but also to further actively the Marshall Plan, have become a leading force in the European reconstruction.

"The willingness of trade unions of Europe to assume this leadership and to accept their full share of the responsibility in the advancement of European recovery has firmly assured the success of the plan.

"The confident backing given to the Marshall Plan by the American labor movement from the start has made possible the enactment and realization of the full scope of the program.

". . . We welcome their increased participation in our work in order that 1949 may bring even greater progress along the road to a better standard of living and a firm world peace."

Republicans in Red, Ask Cash and Ideas

"MILITANT" Republicans are being asked to fork over some more cash, along with a bit of advice on how errors committed in the last election campaign can be avoided in the future.

The fund-raising has fallen $500,000 short of its goal, laments the Republican National Committee. It says it has spent $330,000 more than was taken in.

"We are sure you are no happier than we over the outcome of the Nov. 2 election . . . Yet, with an eye to the future, we must remember that there are more than 21,000,000 Republican voters who are just as determined as we to bring back victory to our Republican banner, in the 1950 Congressional elections," says the Republican Committee.

Those textile manufacturers like Textron, who are closing down mills in the U. S. A. to move southward, are happy to know all about that. Laid-off members of United Auto Workers Local 724 in 10 Lansing small shops will be the first to benefit. Printed cards obtained from their local union office certifying them as unemployed will be honored for 30 days at the co-op store.

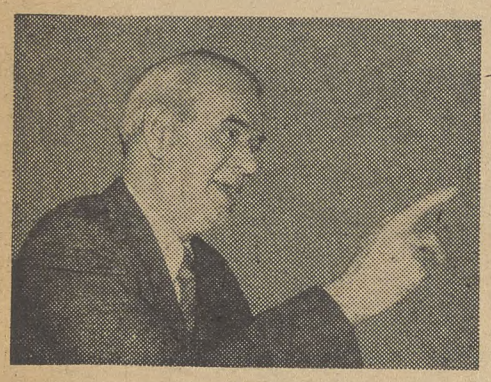
Erase T-H, Re-enact Wagner Act

Congress should quickly repeal the Taft-Hartley Act, and re-enact the Wagner Act, CIO Pres. Philip Murray said in a speech prepared for the annual banquet of Labor and Nation magazine in New York City.



Murray, who was awarded the magazine's distinguished labor leadership citation, said:

"The CIO has much to offer this country. Our program is directed toward progress today and in the future. Our program will be adopted, because it meets the needs and traditions of all our people. It is a program which labor and its friends must support and apply, so that all of us—in America and the world—may enjoy a better tomorrow.

"The outline of such a plan for America was submitted to the Congress last week by President Truman in his magnificent State of the Union message. That message contained many of the ideas which labor in America has been supporting in the last decade. We applaud our President for starting so early to carry out the pledges he made to the people during the 1948 campaign.

"We will demand of the new Congress that it, too, move quickly to erase the Taft-Hartley Act from the law books, to re-enact the Wagner Act and to legislate the great program sponsored by the CIO during these past few years.

"This will be a primary task for organized labor in the next few months—to weld support behind this program and to insure that it is properly and effectively carried out. It will require all our imagination and intelligence and skill."

Murray, unable to be present because of a bad cold, was honored with the magazine's annual citation for service to labor and the country. (See story on Page 3.)

THE CIO DEPT. of Education and Research, completing an 18-month study of all phases of the country's tax structure, has recommended a drastic shift in the federal tax burden from low and middle incomes to corporation profits and high personal incomes.

The study, entitled "A Federal Tax Program to Promote Full Employment," said that jobs for all "represent the key to a healthy post-war America." Such a goal, it added, requires maintenance of a high national income and "stimulation of purchasing power in the hands of the large body of American families." In this connection, it suggested a $4,200 income tax exemption for a family of four persons.

The booklet, an attractive 32-page publication containing charts and tables, will be widely distributed among legislators, financial experts and teachers. The study was prepared under the supervision of Stanley H. Ruttenberg, CIO Education and Research Director.

The CIO program called for a $6.5 billion cut in individual income taxes in the lower and middle ranges, and a $1.3 billion cut in excise taxes. This would be more than offset by a $6.2 billion increase in corporation profits taxes and $1.8 billion gains from mandatory joint income tax returns, increased capital gains taxes, removal of tax exemption from certain securities, and higher, tighter taxes on estates and gifts.

THE STUDY, anticipating arguments that lower corporation and high-income taxes would spur "incentive to produce," declared:

"Clearly it does not follow that lower taxes on business will mean more production; it may mean that more will be available for dividends to those who represent the saving rather than the consuming backbone of the country . . . If those who do the bulk of consuming have large portions of their incomes taxed away, no amount of tax reduction to business for incentive purposes will supply the consumption power required to buy industry's product.

The study pointed to five general conclusions about taxes:

"1. Immediate, substantial tax cuts for the average man are possible within the framework of the proposed budget.

"2. Substantial reductions in expenditures are not possible until national defense, international obligations and veterans' costs are sharply curtailed.

"3. The present debt is comfortably within the range of safety as generally recognized by experts.

"4. As long as employment and production hold up, operation within the bounds of a budgetary surplus seems advisable, i. e., maintenance of revenues at least to equal expenditures.

"5. Revenues should be obtained, however, by a revised tax structure which redistributes the taxes among corporations, wealthy individuals, and low income groups."

THE STUDY pointed out that the federal tax structure is now so constituted that "no more dickering with expenditures will result in savings sufficient to reduce taxes for the average man and retain the budget in balance unless at the same time other taxes are increased."

The $4,200-a-year tax exemption for a family of four, the CIO tax study asserted, would relieve about 20 million families from paying income taxes. "Relief for this group is not only necessary to make tax free a minimum amount for living purposes, but also because those in the low bracket bore the brunt of wartime tax increases."

Increased exemptions, rather than changes in the income tax rates, are the only practical method of achieving major benefits in the lower income brackets, the study said, and it recommended that the increased exemptions be "restricted for the present time to individuals with net incomes of not over $5,000."

The study also called for "carry-over" privileges of at least two years on personal exemptions, so that a man employed one year and unemployed the next might be able to take advantage of exemptions unused in any one year.

The study called for closing of unjustified loopholes in the tax structure which it said are of principal benefit to those who least need tax protection.

IN THIS connection it criticized the present system of split-income reporting and called for mandatory joint returns by married couples, which the study said would increase revenues by over half a billion dollars a year.

Capital gains tax rates should be jumped from 25% to 50%, the study said, because in most cases they represent personal income, and the mandatory holding period should be increased from six months to 12 months. It also called for payment of capital gains taxes upon the death of the holder of such capital.

In calling for removal of tax exempt status from many types of state and local securities, the study said the present subsidy "by income taxpayers to the states and localities is clearly inequitable."

Tax collection gains of $1 billion a year would result from tightening of present just provisions of estate taxes, reducing exemptions on gifts and estates, and preventing the splitting of gifts and estates—a device which results in a 30%—or $245 million—annual loss to the government from holders of considerable wealth, the study said.

Excise taxes should be drastically reduced and eventually removed from all items except where tax regulatory functions are held desirable—such as narcotics, firearms, etc.—the study declared.

Corporation income taxes should be sharply increased, the CIO declared. It pointed out that although corporation profits are at all-time highs, the proportion of revenue paid by corporations is now only 23% of the total, a drop of 2% from 1940 when profits were far lower. An increase of about $5 billion in corporation taxes, and a drop of a similar amount in individual income taxes would re-establish the ratio of tax payments existing in 1940, the study said.

The CIO booklet urged a 75% tax on those profits exceeding 125% of the corporation's 1936-39 profit tax exemptions; and an additional tax on undistributed profits, the rate to be that of the first bracket rate applicable to such profits if they were distributed.

Budget Points Way To Social, Economic Advances

By NATHAN ROBERTSON
Labor Press Associates

PRESIDENT TRUMAN'S budget has taken the ground out from under the conservatives who contended he could not carry out his campaign promises without wrecking the Treasury.

The President's budget, submitted to Congress last week, provided funds to begin carrying out all his campaign promises—from housing to medical insurance—and yet would transform the treasury deficit left by the Republicans into a surplus of more than $3,000,000,000 provided Congress enacts the taxes asked by the President.

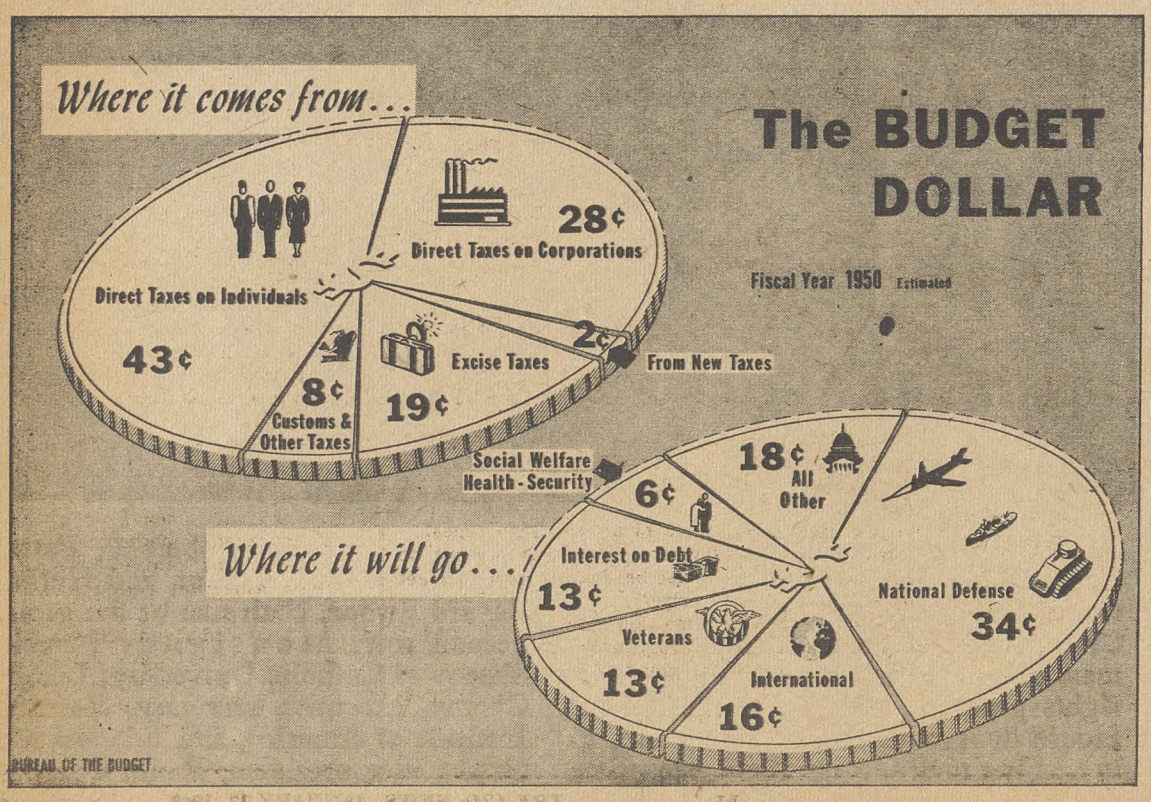
No budget message in history has proposed such far reaching social and economic advances as this one. It includes funds for almost half a hundred new and important regulatory agencies of the government, the labor department, and by and large all of the things the average man wants his government to do.

MANY of the President's own supporters—when they read his State of the Union message to Congress—feared that he was promising more than he could carry out without wrecking the Treasury. But President Truman has included them all in the budget without creating a deficit, provided Congress follows his recommendations on taxes.

The author of this article is a specialist in economic and political reporting. He was head of the P. M. Bureau and chief of A.P.'s Senate staff.

Here are some of the new programs the President has included in the budget:

- A start on a national medical care insurance program.
- Increased funds for public assistance grants.
- Higher employes' accident compensation rates.
- Slum clearance, low-rent housing, farm housing and housing research.
- Special assistance for rental and cooperative housing.
- Increased loan funds for the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation and the Federal home loan banks.
- Federal aid to education totaling $300,000,000.
- Survey of educational needs.
- A long needed National Science Foundation.
- Flood control in the Missouri River Basin.
- Commercial production of synthetic liquid fuels.
- Starting the St. Lawrence seaway and power project.
- Anti-inflation program.
- Export controls.
- Rent controls.
- Industrial safety program.
- National Commission Against Discrimination in Employment. (FEPC)
- Salary increases for top government officials.



ALL OF these things have been proposed on top of expanded appropriations for such necessary and important programs as hospital construction for veterans; conservation and development of natural resources; anti-monopoly enforcement; operation of the National Labor Relations Board; and labor statistics.

The President's budget totalled almost $42 billion. It was the biggest peace-time budget in history. But as the President noted, $32 billion of this was proposed to meet fixed expenditures flowing from past wars, or preparing for future defense, such as military expenditures, aid to Europe, veterans benefits, and interest on the public debt.

This left only $10 billion for all the regular expenses of government and the new programs proposed. Not much room there for the much talked about economizing. In fact the President made it clear he had done all the economizing that could be done in line with the needs of the country. And in proposing to increase taxes, the President emphasized the need for a balanced budget in good times such as these, with surplus revenue to apply to contingencies and for retirement of the debt.

Aside from national defense and the other basic expenditures which cannot be cut without reneging on national obligations, the President's budget proposed:

For social welfare, health and security, $2.4 billion.

For agricultural programs, $1.7 billions.

For transportation and communication facilities, $1.6 billion.

For all other purposes—including housing, education, labor, finance, commerce and industry and the costs of general government, $2.3 billion.

WHAT THE President did in framing this budget was not to cut government services to the revenue figure provided by the Republican 80th Congress, but draw up the kind of budget he felt the country needed and propose the taxes necessary to finance it.

How much healthier this is than the way the 80th Congress met the situation by inadequate appropriations and a deficit is told in the following figures showing government receipts and expenditures for last year, this year, and next year if the tax increase is granted:

Receipts	$42,211,000,000	$39,580,000,000	$44,985,000,000
Expend.	$33,791,000,000	$40,180,000,000	$41,858,000,000
	Surplus: $ 8,419,000,000	Deficit: $ 600,000,0000	Surplus: $ 3,127,000,000

'2-Package' Deal Demanded In T-H Repeal By CIO, AFL

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THIS is Inauguration Week —and there's not going to be much work done in Washington.

It will be a lavish inauguration —thanks to a "non-economy" outlay voted by the Republican 80th Congress. It was probably the most expensive wrong guess in the history of Congressional appropriations.

There'll be a 3½ hour parade (CIO has a float entered in the line-up); an Inaugural Reception; an Inaugural Ball; and countless other celebrations.

It's not apt to be a week in which the 81st Congress does much work. But once the ceremonies are out of the way, Capitol Hill is slated for heavy activity. Here are some highlights of developing issues:

TAFT-HARTLEY: Should Congress take a "two-package" approach by first repealing T-H and re-enacting the Wagner Act —and then vote on other proposals for labor legislation? Or should it combine all the labor legislation in "one package"?

The question has been the subject of much talk and much confusion.

CIO and AFL both favor the "two-package" method. They want T-H a dead-letter and the Wagner Act on the books before questions like secondary boycotts, jurisdictional disputes, "health-and-welfare" strikes, etc., are discussed.

Sen. Elbert Thomas (D. Utah) head of the Senate Labor Committee, and Rep. John Lesinski (D. Mich.), head of the House Labor Committee, left the White House after seeing the President and said they favor the single package method.

But after conferences with CIO and AFL officials, Lesinski told reporters that if there's no agreement in the committee on a one-package bill to repeal T-H, re-enact the Wagner Act and add whatever other clauses may be agreed upon — then he would favor the two-step approach.

The New York Times last week quoted one high labor official who sharply criticized the "one-package" idea. He said: "The one-package idea is designed to save the faces of some Congressmen. The voters at the last election favored changing faces, not saving them."

Lesinski was accompanied on the White House visit by Rep. John Kennedy (D. Mass.) and Rep. August Kelly (D. Pa.), both members of the Labor Committee.

WAGE-HOUR LAW: A number of bills designed to improve the Wage-Hour law's provisions and its coverage have been filed in both branches of Congress, and have been referred to the two Labor Committees.

An action schedule hasn't yet been worked out. Sen. Thomas indicated he might hold T-H repeal in Committee until other less controversial measures have been handled — though labor groups want T-H to get first spot on the calendar.

With industry groups promising to fight many Wage-Hour improvements, Sen. Myers (D. Pa.) has suggested a quick operation to lift the minimum wage to 75c an hour. After that has been done, he suggested a more detailed bill be worked out on other aspects of the minimum wage program.

DEPT. OF LABOR: Pres. Truman is expected soon to offer suggestions for strengthening of the Labor Dept.—a top-priority item in CIO's legislative program.

The President's budget message proposed a $4.1 million increase in the Labor Dept. appropriations, lifting the total to $19.6 million for the year starting July 1.

About $3 million of this would be an increase in grants to the states for improving industrial safety work, while most of the remainder would go to the important Bureau of Labor Statistics.

FILIBUSTERS: Sparked by Sen. Wayne Morse (R. Ore.), the Senate is giving thought to machinery to close off the unlimited debate through which minority groups have prevented action on vital bills.

Such a move would limit the power of the conservative Southern Democrats. Their power in the House, exerted through the Rules Committee, was drastically reduced by rule changes on the opening day of the session.

Morse and Sen. Myers (D. Pa.) favor rules through which a simple majority of the Senate can limit debate to one or two hours per member.

Another group would require the present two-thirds vote to limit debate, but would close some loopholes which in the past have given the green light to the filibuster method. Morse argues that the approach is unrealistic.

Senate Rules Committee hearings are scheduled for the near future.

HEALTH INSURANCE: Pres. Truman is slated to send to Congress a special measure proposing a national health insurance program. It would be financed by a payroll deduction tax along the lines of social security. Doctor's bills thus would be paid from the government funds.

"We Call Him Taft-Hartley."

DISPLACED PERSONS: Discrimination features in the Displaced Persons bill passed last June would be wiped out by a bill offered last week by Sen. McGrath (D. R. I.) and Sen. Neely (D. W. Va.). A similar bill was filed by Rep. Celler (D. N. Y.).

The bill would permit 400,000 DP's to enter the U. S., as Pres. Truman had originally requested, and would remove discriminatory features of the GOP bill passed in 1948. These tended to limit the number of Catholics and Jews who could qualify for entry, and would wipe out special guarantees of jobs and homes now needed before war refugees can enter the country.

RENT CONTROL: A 27-month extension of rent control was proposed in a bill filed last week by Sen. Myers (D. Pa.). The present rent control measure expires March 31.

A number of other rent control proposals are due to be offered in both branches of Congress.

ANTI-INFLATION: A sweeping anti-inflation bill is being prepared by the Administration to carry out the major recommendations contained in the President's message.

CIVIL RIGHTS: Pres. Truman has several civil rights bills prepared and will do something "right away" about seeking their passage, according to leaders of the Natl. Council on Civil Rights.

The group included such figures as Herbert Bayard Swope, New York publicist; former Sec. of War Robert Patterson; Morris Ernst, lawyer and civil liberties advocate; Msgr. Maurice Sheehy of Catholic University and others.

Swope said the group asked for creation of a permanent civil rights commission. After talking with the President, they predicted the civil rights program in Congress would have strong White House support.

Murray To Labor And Nation Banquet

'We Demand of Congress That It Quickly Erase T-H'

PRES. TRUMAN deserves praise "for starting so early to carry out the pledges he made to the people during the 1948 campaign," CIO Pres. Murray said last week in a speech read to a New York banquet sponsored by Labor and Nation magazine.

Murray, honored with the magazine's annual citation for service to labor and the country, was prevented by a severe cold from attending the function. His speech was read by Vice-Pres. James Thimmes of the United Steelworkers.

"We will demand of the new Congress that it, too, move quickly to erase the Taft-Hartley Act from the law books, to re-enact the Wagner Act and to legislate the great program sponsored by the CIO during these past few years," the CIO president said in his speech.

"This will be a primary task for organized labor in the next few months—to weld support behind this program and to insure that it is properly and effectively carried out."

Pres. Murray's leadership of CIO received high praise from other union officials at the banquet. Speakers included Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Clothing Workers; Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers; Pres. Joseph Curran of the Natl. Maritime Union; Pres. Louis Hollander of the New York State CIO Council, and Editor J. B. S. Hardman of Labor and Nation magazine.

ALL OF them mentioned Pres. Murray's influence in raising the living standards of workers and of broadening the vision and scope of the American labor movement.

Much of Murray's speech was devoted to a discussion of labor's role in the modern "human welfare" state and in meeting problems outside its "original limited field of bargaining over wages, hours and working conditions."

Some of Pres. Murray's observations:

On political action: "The CIO entered the political arena because the trend of events made political action necessary to preserve our basic trade union rights . . . The CIO-PAC will expand its influence and activities in future elections . . . There will be other victories in 1950.

"Last year we defeated your Mr. Dewey. Jack Kroll, the director of PAC, tells me that two years from now. labor and the people of Ohio are going to win a very important seat in the Senate of the United States." (Taft's seat.)

On the housing problem: "We must build decent homes for the American people—at once. Our housing is indeed the shame of the nation.

On Labor-and-Nation Magazine: "Under the very able leadership of my old friend, J. B. S. Hardman, it has built a unique place in our labor movement. It is a source of real stimulation for officials and members of our union."

Kroll Says

Court Decision Upholding Anti-Union Laws Call To Political Action In States

LABOR has "received a new lesson in the hard facts of political life" from the U. S. Supreme Court.

That was the conclusion drawn by Jack Kroll, CIO Political Action Committee director, from the high court's decision that states are free to pass laws barring all forms of union security — the closed shop, the union shop and maintenance-of-membership arrangements.

"The court has sounded a clarion call to political action," Kroll said. "It has presented us with a 48-headed monster which we must destroy before it destroys us.

"In those 15 states which have anti-union security laws, we must get rid of the state legislatures which passed them. In the other 17 states which have other forms of anti-union laws, we must equally exert our efforts to secure their repeal.

"And in the states where there is at present no such legislation, we must be doubly alert to meet any threat that may arise."

Kroll said the Supreme Court decision shows the wisdom of CIO-PAC's program for development of strong state and local political action groups.

The answer to the Supreme Court, he concluded, "is political action in every state, county, ward and precinct."

Why Murray Got the Award

The "distinguished leadership" citation to CIO Pres. Murray by Labor and Nation magazine was presented—

"Because he has steadfastly fought and brilliantly lead in the historic struggles of labor in this decade to ease the burden and to elevate the reward of millions of toilers, and thus contribute to the health of the nation, its strength and its cohesion;

"Because he has effectively taught and successfully brought millions of workers in the nation's basic industries, discouraged, neglected and hitherto unorganized to assert their American rights and to participate intelligently in the tasks of individual citizenship and political state building, and thus helped make democracy more meaningful and more enduring."

ONE OR TWO PACKAGES?

Why, it was only 90 days or so ago that the columnists and commentators were devoting a lot of attention to the new "teeth" that would be put in the Taft-Hartley Law after Dewey became president.

Now they're discussing the methods by which the old "teeth" will be pulled.

The procedure suggested by labor is simple. The Taft-Hartley amendments would be repealed and the Wagner Act would be reinstituted. Then new amendments—if any are required—would be added.

This is preferred by labor over the "one-package" deal which some Congressmen are pushing.

The single package might easily open the way to a long delay and keep T-H on the statute books for months. It also would give T-H advocates an advantage they don't deserve in light of last November's election returns.

Labor is merely asking for a reversal of the procedure which was used to create T-H. Congress started with the Wagner Act as the basis of discussion. Labor would like for the Wagner Act to again be used as the basis of discussion for any future labor amendments.

Organized labor long ago declared T-H was unfair and unworkable. The Democratic Party and its Presidential candidate made repeal of T-H one of the big planks in their campaign platform.

The Nov. 2 election results were as much a mandate for Congress to repeal T-H as Congress is likely to get on any subject.

Consequently, Congress should follow a procedure which will bring about the best results in the shortest possible time. The first step should be outright repeal of T-H and restoration of the Wagner Act.

BUDGET SHOWS WHERE IT GOES

The Federal budget for the upcoming year may be a dull and ponderous document which few persons will read, but it's a real eye-opener for those who do not know where the money comes from or where it goes.

Under the budget proposal individuals, through direct taxes, would pay 43c of each $1 Uncle Sam collects. Direct taxes on corporations would produce 28c, excise taxes 19c, customs and other existing taxes 8c and new taxes 2c.

How the money would be spent makes an even more interesting story.

National defense would require 34c of each $1, international affairs 16c, veterans affairs 13c, interest on the national debt 13c, social welfare, health and security measures 6c, and all other government activities 18c.

This means national defense and international affairs, which are closely related, would take exactly half of each tax dollar. Veterans affairs, also closely related, would bring the amount to nearly two-thirds.

The thing which sticks out like a bandaged (but small) thumb is the amount for social welfare, health and security—6c. This is less than half the amount sought for interest on the national debt and less than one-fifth the amount that would be spent on national defense.

It is not our purpose here to quarrel with those who determine how much will be spent to protect the nation, care for war veterans and play the vitally important game of world politics.

But we do intend to point out that the world is really in a mess when a government plans to spend more than 10 times as much for military and allied activities as for social welfare, health and domestic security.

Bosses Should Have Been There

They Would Have Learned CIO Will Complete Job Of Organizing The South

By ALLAN L. SWIM

REALLY, IT was as refreshing as a cold shower on a sizzling hot summer afternoon.

Without regard to race, creed or color, more than 600 CIO members from throughout the South jammed themselves into Atlanta's Red Men's Wigwam, for many years a meeting place of the Ku Klux Klan.

There was no left-wing, right-wing struggle, no jockeying for position, no political battle. During the two-day session Communism was mentioned two or three times and then only briefly.

It was a trade union meeting devoted to the trade union subject of organizing.

SOUTHERN employers should have attended that session. They would have departed convinced that the South will be organized by the CIO.

Southern politicians should have been there. They would have learned that the Dixiecrats and States Righters are going to have a big—and losing—battle on their hands in the future.

Those who have been saying the Southern campaign is "about to fold up" should have been there. They would have learned they didn't know what they were talking about.

CIO members from other parts of the country who engaged in some of the tough campaigns of the past should have been there. They would have witnessed the same kind of spirit that was present when steel, auto, rubber and packing were organized.

BECAUSE OF the size of the Atlanta meeting and the publicity that resulted, many persons probably will get the idea that "Operation Dixie" is being "revived."

That is not the case. The campaign has been going ahead under full steam since the summer of 1946. It will continue until the South is organized.

Nobody knows exactly how long that will take, but the job will be completed.

It's an important job, not only from the standpoint of the entire CIO but from the standpoint of the entire nation.

Under the per capita increase voted at the CIO's last convention all affiliated unions will share equitably in the financing of "Operation Dixie."

All of them will share in the benefits that will come from a well organized South.

IT'S IMPOSSIBLE for any one person to measure accurately the progress the CIO has made below the Mason-Dixon line, but it has been tremendous.

A survey would show how many new locals have been established and how many new members have joined CIO unions, but this would tell only a small part of the story.

You can't measure the impact on public thinking that has resulted from CIO's activities, but it has been strong.

You can only guess at the large number of wage increases in non-union plants that resulted directly from CIO-increased wages in unionized plants.

Perhaps you can't measure these things, but you can tell that the South has been noticeably changed by the CIO.

YES, THE Atlanta meeting was as refreshing as a cold shower on a sizzling hot summer afternoon.

You looked around the room and saw organizers who had been brutally beaten. You talked with them and you didn't hear them complain.

Nobody raised the question of whether the South could be organized. They accepted eventual organization of the region as a certainty.

You heard staff members talking about going back to organize plants at which they lost elections earlier in the drive. You heard about plants which had been organized after two or three failures.

You got the feeling you were among men and women who knew the real meaning of the word "crusade."

Optimistic

Dir. Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee told CIOers from all over Dixie, "We have just been laying the foundation—1949 will be OUR year."

Best Essay To Win Trip to CIO Parley

The Executive Board of the New York State CIO Council has announced that a state-wide essay contest for high school students will be held on the subject: "Why American Workers Should Join Labor Unions." The prize winner will get a trip to the 1949 National CIO convention.

ADA Leader Says:

House UnAmerican Committee Helps Reds

IN A radio debate over radio station WQQW, Washington, D. C., Joseph L. Rauh, Jr., chairman of the executive committee of the Americans for Democratic Action, gave the following reasons for the abolition of the House Committee on Un-American Activities:

1. The Committee has sought to suppress opinions with which it disagrees.
2. The Committee has aided the "real" Communists by lumping all liberals and progressives with them.
3. The Committee has violated every safeguard for the individual in the Bill of Rights.
4. The Committee presumes guilt, not innocence. It now seeks to justify its continued existence by presuming that Alger Hiss is guilty. The so-called pumpkin papers, for which it loudly claims credit, turned up in the hands of a Whitaker Chambers, as the result of a libel suit and a series of accidents. These papers do not justify 10 years of Committee activity slandering the careers of loyal Americans.
5. The FBI can do the job on spies; the Judiciary Committee can handle needed legislation.
6. The Committee has continually played Dixiecrat and Republican politics to discredit the New Deal. The Committee joined in the Republicrat campaigns and became a principal issue in the election. The people have spoken for a renew Deal and the time to abolish the Committee is now.

Rauh was joined in calling for the end of the committee by Irving J. Levy, a former solicitor of the Labor Dept. Arguing for the continuance of the committee were Rep. A. L. Miller (R., Neb.) and Herbert S. Ellis, a Republican defeated for re-election as a Congressman from West Virginia by M. G. Burnside (D.).

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP By YOMEN

"Cheer up—he didn't ask for an increase in the liquor tax!"

And It Happened Just Like That!

ANYBODY who's had experience at it will tell you that union organizing usually is tough, heartbreaking work.

Get a group of the old-timers together some evening and they'll tell stories that nearly make your hair stand on end.

And then, like as not, one of them will spin a yarn that is quite different from the rest—a yarn like the following:

He had troubles a-plenty. He had cases before the War Labor Board, election petitions before the NLRB and was in the midst of several local organizing drives.

He wasn't in a good humor and he was not in a mood to take on another job.

At this point his door opened and in walked a well-dressed, young Negro man.

"What can I do for you?" asked the CIO man in a tone which indicated he didn't especially want to do anything for anybody.

"We want a union down at our plant," the visitor said.

THE CIO representative softened up a bit, asked his visitor to sit down and started asking him about the plant at which he worked.

"How many people are there who would be eligible for a union? He asked.

"We've got 31 and they're all good boys," was the reply.

The unionist mentally stacked up the 31 potential members against several thousand in another plant for which he had organizing plans and decided he'd have to let the smaller one go by the board for a while.

"Well, I'll tell you how it is," he said. "I haven't anybody to assign to your plant just now, so all I can do is to give you some membership cards and get you to sign up the fellows."

He handed the man 31 cards and after wishing him good luck returned to his paper work.

SEVERAL busy days passed and the CIO man had so much on his mind that he gave little if any thought to the plant with 31 employes who might become members.

Then his earlier visitor walked in again.

"Well, how's it going?" the CIO man asked.

"Pretty good," replied the visitor.

"Have you signed up anybody down at your plant?"

"Yes, I signed up everybody.

"Everybody?"

"Yes, everybody—and I didn't have any trouble, either. As I told you when I was up here before, we want a union at our plant."

He placed 31 signed membership cards on the CIO man's desk and asked, "What do we do next?"

GLANCING at his calender and picking out a date which would permit him to be on hand, he said, "We'll hold a meeting up here next Thursday night."

The session was set for 8 p.m. and the small hall chosen for it was well filled when the CIO man arrived. He went to the front of the room, banged a table with his fist and said, "The meeting will come to order.

"I'd like to have a report first from Brother ———— on who's here and how things are moving along."

The fellow who had visited the CIO office twice and had signed up all of the potential members rose to his feet and reported:

"We've got 30 members here—and I'm awfully sorry about that fellow who did not show up. He's the nightwatchman and he couldn't get off."

"But he sent a written excuse."

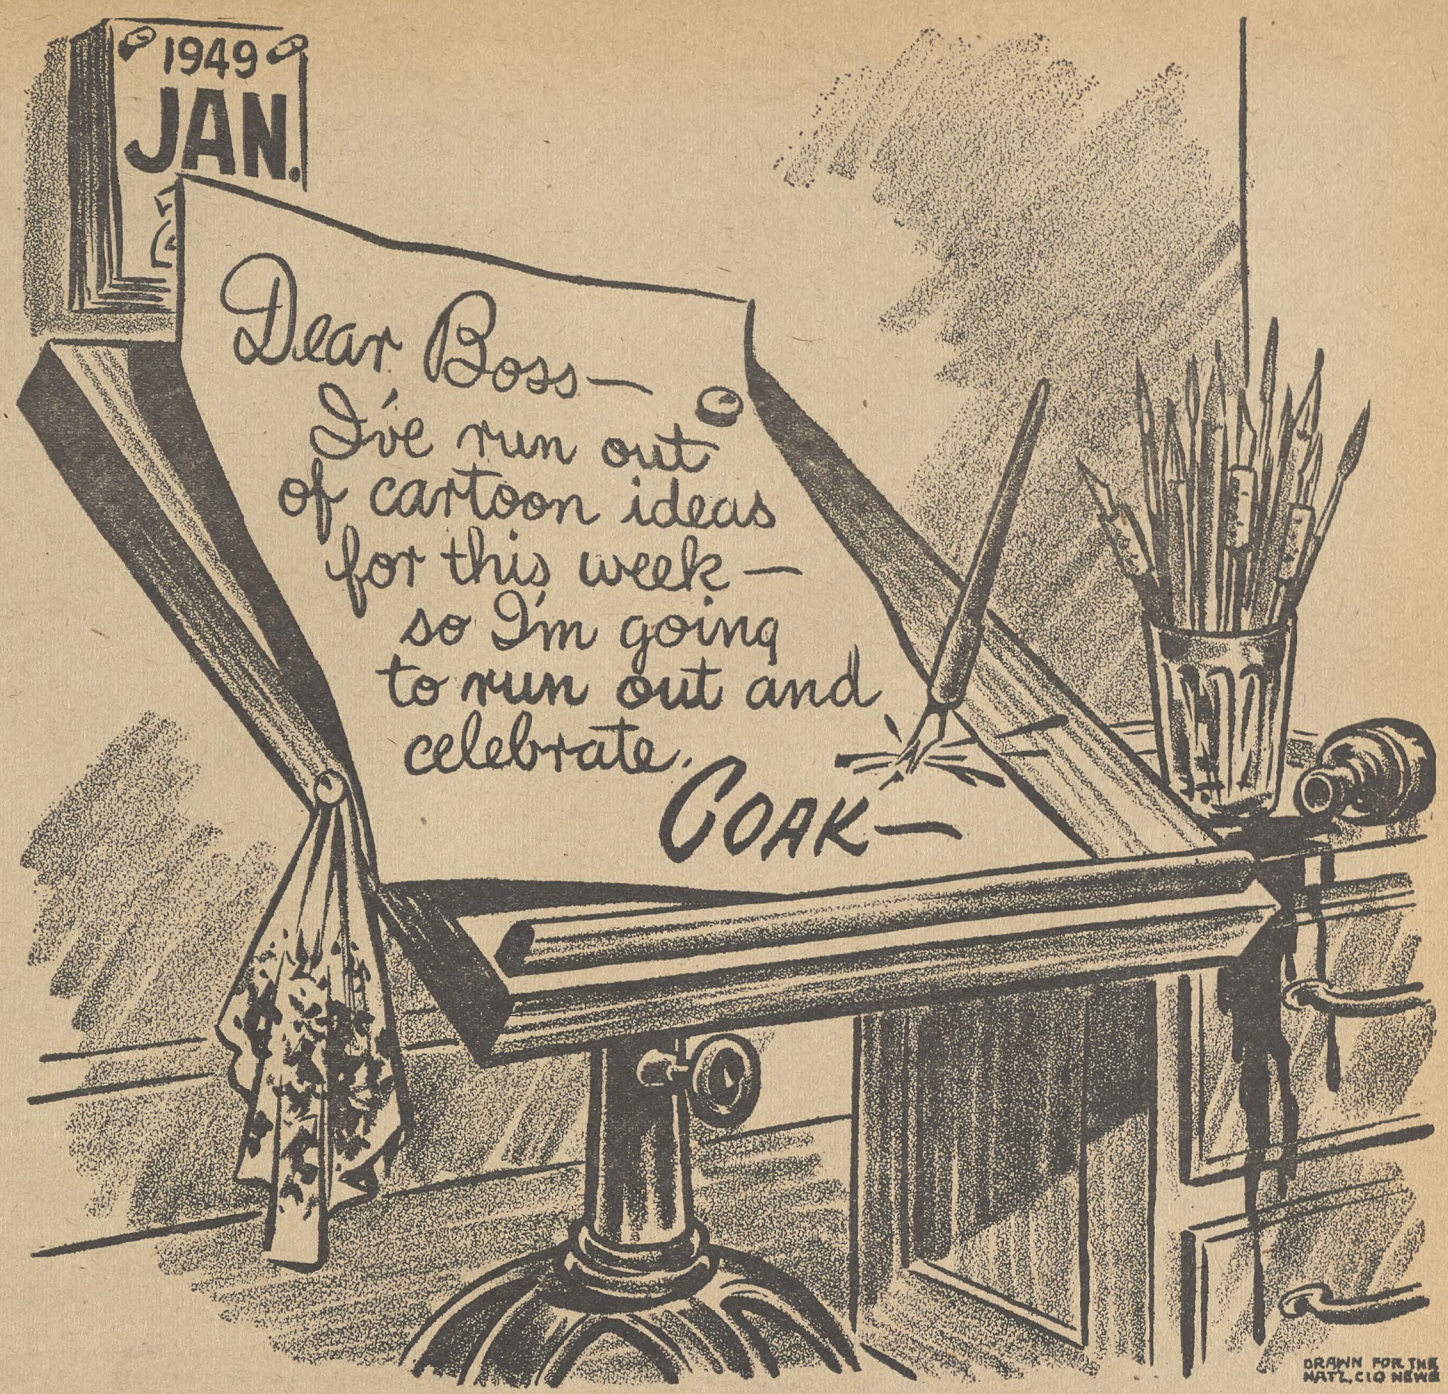
INAUGURATION WEEK



Former Occupation Adviser:

AMG Snubs German Trade Unions, Favors Industry

SERIOUS CHARGES that German trade unions are being snubbed by the American Military Government which is practising the opposite of what it preaches, are levelled at Gen. Lucius Clay by William Harlan Hale, a former policy adviser to the U. S. Information Control Services in occupied Germany.

Writing in the December issue of Harper's Magazine, Hale says that Clay's directives "have consistently maintained that democratic labor unions should be encouraged in order to strengthen Germany's social fabric against unrest and Communism.

"But American Military Government still refuses to return to German unions the bulk of the property taken from them by the Nazis in 1933. When the State Dept. offered Clay some money to buy newsprint for German union publications, he refused to take it.

"German labor is not represented on the Joint Import-Export Agency, a military government group that works closely with German industry in laying plans for the country's economic future. The economics and finance divisions of Military Government habitually call in German employers for advice and often take it, but the manpower division—which has to do with labor and ranks low in the American administrative hierarchy—has seldom invited German union leaders into its confidence."

As an instance of how distant the relations between American authorities and German workers have become, Hale cites the case of the Ruhr steel workers who threatened to strike last spring when the former general manager of a big steel cartel was appointed to an Anglo-American production board. The workers protested that the manager represented "an old order that should be purged," Hale states, "while the Americans, according to the New York Times, 'supported him for his views on free enterprise.' "

HALE SAYS that critics of Clay's policies "point out that he has allowed German industrialists to band together in associations which may allocate materials and markets—something American management has been forbidden to do since the Sherman and Clayton Acts were passed. He has not held out parallel accommodations to German labor, however.

"Last June in fact, when the Hesse State Parliament submitted for his approval a bill giving labor a voice in the management of industry, he vetoed it on the grounds that it was 'un-American.' "

Richard L. Strout of the Christian Science Monitor, also calls attention to criticism of AMG policy toward German unions printed in the London Economist, conservative British weekly.

"There is no excuse for refusing the (German) unions any voice in shaping policies which affect workers," says the Economist. "Yet the American authorities have created the impression that this is precisely what they intend to do.

"This senseless snubbing of responsible trade union leadership cannot fail to be a major factor in the battle against inflation. The astonishing rises in production that have occurred in recent months can hardly be maintained if disillusion and disgust spread to the ranks of the workers."

Cards Used In Fight Against Bias

"I'D BE ridiculous to object to Negroes serving me a soda or selling me a dress when I've had them in my home cooking and tending the baby," said a lady.

"Many of my customers are colored. If they spend their money in my store, I ought to give them a fair chance to earn it, too," said a merchant.

"It's not the custom here, that's all. Let the high class stores hire Negroes as salespeople, and I'll be glad to follow along," said a storekeeper.

These are some of the answers given local volunteer interviewers during a survey they conducted for the Council for Unity of New Rochelle (N. Y.) to find out about employment practices in the town.

The New Rochelle project in community action, as described in a striking pamphlet issued by the Council for Unity, 50 Weyman Ave., New Rochelle, offers some fine suggestions for promoting fair employment policies.

The Council also offers to supply citizens of the town with cards which they can send to stores, utilities and tradesmen with whom they do business, carrying this message:

"I urge, and will support you heartily in the policy of hiring and upgrading employes on the sole basis of ability and character regardless of racial or religious background."

It Can Happen, in Many States

Take Better Job, Lose Right To Unemployment Compensation Payments

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

MANY STATES, in their operation of unemployment compensation, seem to be attempting to chain workers to their jobs.

There is nothing in the law which says you can't go across the street to work for another boss at more dough, or better hours, or in a more comfortable plant. But, these states are ruling, such a move means you are starting anew on unemployment compensation credits and, if you are laid off in the new job before you work the required period, no compensation.

Big business talks a lot about free enterprise. But, its lobbyists have won their drive in many areas to avert freedom of enterprise by workers.

Traditionally, workers have always been on the lookout for improvement. Sometimes it was just across the street, sometimes in another state. Other times, family requirements or health were responsible for changes or moving.

How is this "chaining" halting a number of so-called "voluntary quits?" Here are examples:

PENNSYLVANIA: An employe of the Sun Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., Chester, which is owned by the Pew family, quit to go into business for himself. The Superior Court held that he had quit for "good cause" and was entitled to compensation.

The court said: "It must be a good cause which animates a man to seek fullest expression and amplest development of his highest skills and capacities and to strive for steady employment, be it his own business or in the service of others."

The State Supreme Court overruled the Superior Court, saying "the 'good cause' thus referred to is not the 'good cause' which under the act justifies an employe voluntarily leaving his work."

The court went on: "If a workman can quit a job to go into private business and then when that business fails, he can still reap the benefits of this compensation act, the latter will, in many instances, be used as a short cut to a temporary pension."

The same court also ruled that "to hold a married woman who quits her job to join her husband in a new domicile (where she has a legal obligation to go) is voluntarily becoming 'unemployed' for 'a good cause' within the meaning of the act, is to open the door to so much fraud on employers (emphasis added) that one may doubt that such a construction of the act conforms to the canon that 'all laws should receive a sensible construction.'"

Following the Sun Ship case, the State Board of Review disqualified a man who sent his wife to California for health reasons and then followed her because he could not afford two residences. The board held that under the "Egregiously rigid construction of the law," this was not "good cause."

Egregious means both "remarkable" and "conspicuous for bad quality."

He was laid off because of lack of work, but, because of a union contract, had acquired seniority rights. It took him four months of diligent search to find a new job, as night watchman and janitor, at 40c an hour. He worked from 7 p. m. to 6 a. m., seven days a week. He was recalled to his old job, and a month later was laid off.

AGAIN COLORADO: A woman left employment with the phone company in Denver to move to Portland, Ore., so she could live with her father. She filed an interstate claim. The Denver phone company asked that she be referred to it for employment, despite the fact she now was living in Portland.

The referee applied the provision of the state law which says "no work or employment shall be deemed unsuitable because of its distance from the individual's residence." The referee said her quitting was "not being in any way of an immediate or compelling nature."

He also remarked that the phone company had "purchased" unemployment insurance for her.

He applied the maximum disqualification (16 weeks' postponement and reduction of 16 times the weekly benefit amount.)

IOWA: Claimant left work and accepted a better job, from which he was separated for lack of work after 10 full weeks and two partial weeks of employment. He was disqualified as a voluntary quit. (Under the Iowa law, the applicable exception from disqualification applies only after 12 full weeks of employment.)

KANSAS: A woman had been employed in Kansas, but moved to a small town in Oklahoma where her husband was attending school.

Kansas held her unavailable, saying that when a claimant quits a job to move, she must show prospects for employment in the new area to be somewhat similar to those in the area where she left.

This would, of course, disqualify anyone who moved out of the largest city in the state.

ALABAMA: A woman was laid off from her employment because of a coal shortage. She subsequently married and moved to another city many miles away. When she filed for payment, her previous employer—just like the one in Denver—mailed a letter to her last known address in the city where she had been laid off and offered reemployment.

The referee conceded it was impracticable for her to return to her former employer, but disqualified her for failing to show good cause in not applying for available suitable work.

ALABAMA has also disqualified claimants for such reasons as leaving because of inability to procure adequate housing, loss of a claimant's only means of transportation and in order to get a better job.

FLORIDA: After a man's wife was compelled to leave the state because of ill health, he quit work in Florida to join her. The referee's amazing reasoning:

"Ordinarily, a wife is legally obligated to reside with her husband at the domicile he selects and it is generally considered that when a wife leaves a job to go with her husband to another location where he has a job, her leaving is with good cause. This case is the reverse of that general situation in that the husband left work to follow his wife."

So, he was disqualified.

TENNESSEE: A man filled in his off-seasons with work other than that of farming his acreage. During one off-season, he was unemployed and filed a claim.

The Board of Review ruled that a farmer necessarily is fully employed for the year round.

TO YOUR HEALTH, SIR: These three Congressmen—along with Sen. Robert F. Wagner (D., N. Y.)—have jointly offered legislation for improved social security and a national system of pre-paid medical care. They are: Sen. J. Howard McGrath (D., R.I.), chairman of the Democratic Natl. Committee; Sen. James E. Murray (D., Mont.) and Rep. John D. Dingell (D., Mich.). Wagner, Murray and Dingell have offered health plans in previous Congresses.

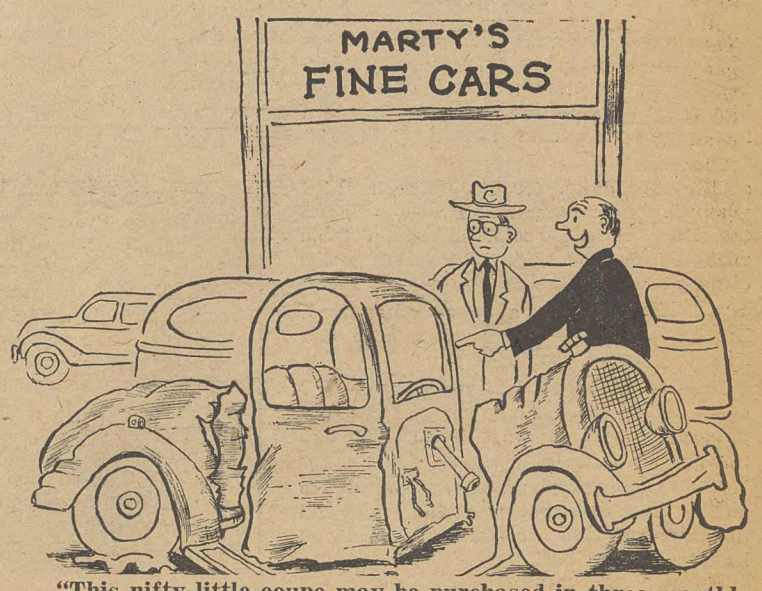
Deakin Accuses Red of Planning Strikes

Arthur Deakin, head of Britain's biggest union, has charged that the Communists intend to try to cripple the Marshall Plan in Britain next August with series of strikes in key industries.

Deakin, secretary of the Transport and General Workers' Union, told a press conference that he could not disclose the sources of his information "or they will dry up" but, he said, the evidence which had reached him was "so strong as to leave me in no doubt." Deakin is also president of the World Federation of Trade Unions.

Harry Pollitt, secretary of the British Communist Party, called Deakin's statement nonsense and challenged him to publish details.



"This nifty little coupe may be purchased in three monthly installments."

Bittner To Dixie Parley: 'We've Laid Foundation—1949 Will Be Our Year'

By ALLAN L. SWIM

VAN A. BITTNER looked down from a slightly raised platform at more than 600 CIO members who packed the room and declared:

"This is not a pep meeting. There's already more pep here than the non-union employers of the South can handle!"

There was heavy, spontaneous applause and a nodding of heads which indicated the listeners believed Bittner knew what he was talking about.

Bittner smiled and continued his opening address to the first big "Operation Dixie" meeting that had been held since he became director of the CIO Organizing Committee in the summer of 1946.

"We have just been laying the foundation—1949 will be OUR year," he said.

"The CIO Organizing Committee has just one program in the South. We're organizing working men and women, regardless of their race, creed or national origin. If these men and women are good enough for God they're certainly good enough for the CIO.

"Regardless of how long it takes, we are going to complete the job of organizing the South.

"Our campaign was not inaugurated to hurt anyone. We're fighting not for labor alone, but for all of the citizens of this region.

"Let me make one thing clear. There is no place in the Southern campaign for a single, solitary Communist! This organization of ours is an American institution fighting for America."

Referring to North-South differentials, Bittner asked, "Who will say publicly that the men and women who work in the South are not entitled to as high pay and as good working conditions as men and women enjoy anywhere in the U. S.?"

Bittner predicted repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and added, "Regardless of what Congress does, we're going to organize the South and we're not going to depend on the government to do it for us."

His talk set the pace for a two-day meeting last week at Atlanta. The entire Southern organizing staff and union leaders from all over the region attended.

EMIL RIEVE, president of the Textile Workers Union, told the meeting that "we're not predicting that the job of organizing this region will be completed in a year or two—but it will be done no matter how long it takes.

"I don't believe anybody can argue with me that this part of the country isn't better off because of the CIO."

He said the minimum wage in the textile industry "not many years ago" was 18c an hour and that nobody in the organized portion of the industry gets paid less than 94 cents today.

TWUA, he said, had less than 35,000 members when first organized and "now we have around 125,000 dues-paying members in the South alone."

Criticizing certain practices of industry, Rieve said, "You cannot have a profit system without profits, but industry must not take all the profits the traffic will bear."

VAN A. BITTNER
Director, CIO Organizing Committee

AN ALBUM containing the picture of every member of the Southern organizing staff was presented to Director Bittner on behalf of the staff by George Bandanzi, executive vice president of the Textile Workers and an assistant director of the CIO Organizing Committee. (Councils Dir. John Brophy is shown in background.)

"WHAT IS GOOD for labor is good for the American people as a whole," said Jacob Potofsky, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

He sharply criticized the "textile barons who exploit labor" and said the only force combatting exploitation is the organized labor movement.

He commended Bittner for his leadership of the Southern membership drive and referred to the drive itself as a "spiritual crusade."

Referring to charges of some anti-union employers that CIO representatives who were sent into the South are carpetbaggers, Potofsky declared:

"The men and women of the CIO are not carpetbaggers—because carpetbaggers exploit. The exploiting is done by industry, not by us."

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD, CIO vice president and director of organization, said that there is no "magic formula" for organizing.

"But to organize successfully you must have sincerity and you must have faith in yourself and the organization you represent," he said.

The job of establishing unions "has always been tough," he said, and sacrifices are always required.

"In this country there have been more martyrs to the cause of labor than to the cause of Christianity—if you consider martyrs those who lose their lives fighting for the thing in which they believe."

Haywood paid tribute to the spirit displayed by the men and women who "formed the early CIO unions in the South" and to the present organizing staff.

He concluded his talk by saying, "The greatest union in the world is the United States."

REV. GEORGE HIGGINS, assistant director of the Social Action Department of the Natl. Catholic Welfare Conference said, "You can be sure that in your efforts to organize industry in the South and elsewhere in the United States you have the full backing of the Catholic Church. When you have completed your organization job your work has just begun."

Sherman Dalrymple, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Organizing Committee, referring to the organizing staff, said, "I've never worked with a finer group of men and women anywhere in the labor movement."

Willard Townsend, president, Transport Services Workers: "I want to join in the high tribute that is being paid to the great leader of the Southern organizing drive—Van A. Bittner."

John Livingston, vice president, Auto Workers: "The CIO has already proven that a real job can be done in the South."

John Green, president, Shipbuilding Workers: "The CIO's Southern organizing drive is a great project that will be completed."

Charles Lanning, secretary-treasurer, Rubber Workers: "This organizing campaign is all-important to the CIO and to all the forces of democracy."

Arthur Goldberg, CIO general counsel, said that as a Bar Association member he was connected with the only group represented at the meeting which was privileged to have a "closed shop."

PROBLEMS OF organizing and techniques which may solve them were discussed during the second day of the meeting.

Reports on organizing progress during 1948 and prospects for 1949 were given by the following:

State Dirs. William Smith of North Carolina, Franz Daniel of South Carolina, Ernest Pugh of Virginia, Charles Cowl of Florida, Charles Gillman of Georgia, Carey Haigler of Alabama, Paul Christopher of Tennessee, Lee Tucker of Arkansas, Fred Pieper of Louisiana, Robert Starnes of Mississippi, and Robert Oliver of Texas.

Other speakers included John Brophy, CIO Industrial Union Council director, and Jerome Cooper, CIO Organizing Committee general Counsel.

Full-Time Job

"Our staff must devote its full time to organizing and to organizing alone," Bittner said. "In this region political action and legislative work will be handled by the industrial union councils and the various internationals of the CIO—not by the organizing staff."

Best Organized Town

One of the big laughs of the meeting came from Bittner's remark, "I used to say, 'Take Mississippi—you can have it,' but you can't have it now because the CIO is in Mississippi. Why, Laurel, Miss., is the best organized town in the U. S."

WINNING SPIRIT: Picket lines such as this one helped win the five-month strike of the CIO Woodworkers against Green Bros. Lumber Co., Elizabethtown, N. C. The strikers were undeterred despite 136 arrests. Settlement included paid holidays, re-employment of strikers, check-off; seniority, grievance and arbitration provisions.

HELPED MAINTAIN MORALE: Each week the strikers got their supplies from the union store. In the background is Pres. John Lewis of the CIO Woodworkers local, who along with other officers took turn running the store. Groceries were sold to members of other unions and strike sympathizers at slightly more than cost.

4-Month Oil Strike Settled

SOME 2000 CIO Oil Workers in California have voted to accept the Union Oil Company's last offer and return to work, thus ending a bitter four months' lockout.

Earlier, the strikers had turned down a company proposal which would have barred approximately 400 OWIU from being rehired.

Union Oil was the last of the major California oil companies to come to terms.

The union waged an intensive boycott campaign, which reportedly cost the company 50% of its retail business. Settlement followed week-long conferences arranged by the state conciliation service.

Rubber Union To Act on Wages

The 1949 wage program of the CIO United Rubber Workers will be formulated at a meeting of the union's International Policy Committee Feb. 21 at Cleveland, Ohio.

Formal notice of the meeting was sent to all local unions by Pres. L. S. Buckmaster before his departure last week for Europe on a CIO mission.

"The purpose of this meeting is to give consideration to the advisability of formulating new wage increase demands throughout the industries represented by our local unions," his letter to the locals said.

The union's General Executive Board will meet prior to the Policy Committee meeting. About 200 delegates from local unions are expected to attend the meeting.

Heart Disease Toll

Heart disease cost American workers more in loss of life, disability and medical expense than all other major diseases combined, according to the American Heart Association. Statistics reveal workers lose 152 million work days annually due to diseases of the heart and blood vessels.

Signers of T-H Affidavits Decrease 28%

More than one-quarter of the local and national union officers who last year filed non-communist affidavits have filed them again this year.

One of the reasons for the drop was believed to be that local union officers have forgotten the affidavits must be signed once every 12 months.

The NLRB reported that of the 106,234 local union officers who had signed affidavits up to Nov. 30, 1948, only 76,851 are currently on file, a decrease of 28%.

National unions now in full compliance number 178, an increase of two above the number qualified on Nov. 30, 1948. Local unions in compliance dropped from 11,078 at the end of November to 7,889 currently in compliance.

HST To Get Pay Boost If Congress Acts Fast

The Senate, acting on the first piece of legislation of the 81st Congress, voted promptly to increase the President's pay by $25,000—to a total of $100,000. That salary, like any John Q. Citizen's, is taxable.

In addition, the President gets a $50,000 annual expense account. That account is tax free and the President doesn't have to account for how he spends it.

The pay boost passed by the Senate by a 68-9 vote. The House is scheduled to act on the same bill early this week.

The President now gets a $75,000 salary and a restricted expense fund. He pays considerable taxes on the $75,000—it's been estimated that after taxes and payment of White House food bills, the President winds up with less than $80 a week to keep the Truman family in haberdashery and evening gowns.

The 33% boost proposed under the bill would put the Chief Executive's salary somewhat in line with the post-war rise in living costs, and the expense account would remove a considerable burden from the Truman cost-of-living.

The same bill also proposes pay boosts for the Vice-President and the Speaker of the House. Unless the bill is passed by Congress before January 20, however, Pres. Truman would get no benefit from it. The Constitution forbids the President to receive a pay increase during any one term in office.

Murray Lauds Acheson Appointment

CIO PRES. Philip Murray has applauded the appointment of Dean Acheson as Secretary of State and praised the appointee's "established reputation for sound liberalism."

In a letter to Acheson, Murray wrote:

"I want to extend the congratulations of the CIO, as well as my own, upon your appointment as Secretary of State.

"We believe that your appointment to this high office will be applauded by democratic-minded people everywhere. Your long and distinguished career of public service and your established reputation for sound liberalism offer assurance that our foreign policy will continue to be directed toward the goal of an enduring peace which all Americans desire.

Acheson

"You will enter upon your office at a time in which the international situation remains critical and continues to be a matter of great concern for all of our people. Our country has renounced isolationism and has recognized our responsibility in world affairs. The CIO believes that a sound, progressive America can give encouragement to the peoples of the world to improve their living standards and to widen the horizon of their political liberties."

HOUSING SHORTAGE: Forced to make their home in an old store, the Nichols family in Chicago was struck by tragedy when fire broke out. Here the parents weep at the funeral of their three children, aged 1, 2 and 4, who perished in the flames.

Hoffman Taken Off House Unit

CLARE HOFFMAN, the most vocal labor-baiter in Congress, is being dropped from the House Labor Committee.

Hoffman was top-ranking Republican on the Committee, but GOP leaders removed him from the group in the course of a reshuffle of all committee assignments. Hoffman, a member of the Labor Committee for many years, stays on the House Expenditures Committee, of which he was chairman during the 80th Congress.

A gray-haired little man who wears suits without pockets, Hoffman has roamed up and down the country in recent months holding "sub-committee hearings" at every labor dispute that interested him.

He used brow-beating tactics against union representatives, threatened contempt citations, and interfered on a number of occasions with the peaceful settlement of strikes.

Hoffman's methods came in for a rebuff last December when he sought to subpoena CIO Pres. Murray to a hearing on a Michigan steel strike. Murray refused to appear, on grounds that Hoffman's one-man committee had no authority to issue subpeonas.

Hoffman growled but conceded Murray was probably "morally right" on his stand.

Drive Launched For Reserve Seabees

The Navy has launched a drive for 75,000 skilled construction men as a standby reserve organization of Seabees.

Recruits enlist in the inactive Volunteer Reserve for call to active duty only in the event of a national emergency.

Recruits will receive full Navy credit for the kind and amount of their civilian experience. Credit for civilian experience applies both to the veterans and non-veterans.

TWUA Intl. Plans Dixie Branch

PRES. EMIL Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers Union of America has announced that the union will establish a branch of its international headquarters in Atlanta, Ga. about March 1. Rieve made the announcement at a meeting of TWUA's southern staff at Atlanta.

The new headquarters will be more than a regional office, Rieve said. It will provide space for himself, the other general officers of the international union, and the heads of the organization's principal divisions and departments, he explained. There will, of course, be a full-time staff in addition.

Rieve said the union's move had two parallel objectives—to accelerate organization, in cooperation with the CIO Organizing Committee, and to improve the administration of existing contracts and the services offered to workers covered by them.

"It is our hope that the new office will enable us to provide a greater number of services for our members in the south, and more assistance to employers in the joint administration of our contracts," Rieve said. "Naturally we also hope to increase the number of employers with whom we have cause to meet.

"I expect to spend about half my time in the south from now on. The other general officers, and the heads of the principal divisions and departments of our union, will do the same."

ECA Forms Union Council

A TRADE Union Advisory Council which will be the exclusive consultant agency on all Marshall Plan matters of interest to labor has been set up by the Organization for European Economic Cooperation of the Economic Cooperation Administration.

Decision to establish the council was agreed upon unanimously by 19 Marshall Plan countries, ECA announced.

A joint statement issued by Clinton S. Golden and B. M. Jewell, ECA labor advisers to Administrator Paul G. Hoffman, said that the formation of the council gives recognition to "the potentialities of the non-Communist labor movement in Europe as an instrument to speed recovery of the participating countries.

"Further, it will strengthen the support of labor for the Marshall Plan and assure real participation in the program," they added. "Both American and European labor have a great part to play in the reconstruction and rehabilitation of Europe—this new recognition will undoubtedly intensify labor's cooperation."

Honored By King

King George recently gave royal awards to two British labor representatives — Pres. William Lawther of the National Union of Mineworkers, and secy. Arthur Deakin of the Transport & General Workers Union. Deakin is also president of the World Federation of Trade Unions.

Farm-Labor Councils Advocated By CIO

Farmers in Ohio have been invited by the State CIO Council to join with CIO groups in setting up farmer-labor councils on a county level for the mutual advantage of both groups.

This program and the CIO's general legislative policies of direct interest to farmers were explained by Associate Education Dir. George Guernsey of the National CIO at a meeting of Ohio farmers' representatives Jan. 13, in Columbus.

The meeting was one of a series being held in various parts of the country by the Dept. of Agriculture's Production and Marketing Administration. Delegates were members of committees elected from each county in Ohio.

Fur Union Reports Pay Increases

Wage increases ranging from $5 to $15 a week in 1948 brought a total of nearly $25 million more pay to the 100,000 members of the CIO Fur & Leather Workers in the U. S. and Canada, the union's executive board reported at a semi-annual meeting held recently in Boston, Mass.

Other gains reported were increased holidays and vacations, health and life insurance.

Anti-Quill Leaders Lose

The three top officers of the CIO Transport Workers' largest local have been ousted by a membership meeting, which voted by a margin of about 50 to 1 to dismiss the "anti-Quill" leaders.

First to be removed was Austin Hogan, president of the New York local 100 since 1937, and formerly executive vice-president of the international. His position was abolished at the union's Chicago convention in November, when Intl. Pres. Michael Quill led a complete right-wing sweep.

Ousted with Hogan were James Gahagan, first vice-president of the local, and Peter MacLachlin, recording secretary.

All were charged with adherence to the Communist party line and acting against the interests of the union.

For the Deserving

Bittner told those attending the recent Southern drive conference that the CIO Organizing Committee will turn new organized groups of workers over "only to those unions which can properly service them."

TWU Threatens Strike At American Airlines

CIO Transport Workers Union at American Airlines have voted a nation-wide walkout unless an agreement is reached soon.

The strike vote, involving some 4500 maintenance and supply workers, followed by about two weeks the signing of a new agreement between the union and Pan-American World Airways. According to TWU Vice Pres. William Grogan, that contract provides a 10¢ hourly boost and many improvements in working conditions for some 5000 employes.

At American Airlines, the union is seeking a 16c hourly boost, scaled down from an original 28c. The present wage scale, TWU spokesmen said, is from $1.40 to $1.50 an hour, considerably lower than the new PAA rates.

Two CIO Meetings Are Postponed

Two CIO meetings, originally scheduled for Jan. 25 and Jan. 26, have been postponed.

The CIO vice-presidents will meet on March 1, and the Executive Board will convene in Washington March 2, it was announced by Pres. Murray's office.

Union Sues Company For $98,000

THE CIO Steelworkers has filed a $98,000 damage suit against the Shakespeare Co., Kalamazoo, Mich.

The suit, filed in Federal district court at Grand Rapids, Mich., charges the company illegally cancelled its union contract, and illegally refused to recognize either the national steel union or its Local 3619. It is also charged that the firm unlawfully coerced and intimidated striking members of the local and caused the union "great loss, damage and injury in the form of strike relief, strike administration expenses and loss of dues payments."

Such damages and loss, the union contends, have amounted to $98,000 since the strike began in September, and will continue to amount to more than $5,000 each week the strike continues.

The suit also asks the court to affirm the union's bargaining rights under the contract and to declare the agreement illegally terminated.

Following breakdown of negotiations during a contract reopening, the union called a strike on Sept. 7. Two days later the company mailed notices to the union and its members "purportedly" terminating the agreement. The following month it announced that certain life, accident, hospitalization and benefit insurance programs had been cancelled.

The union charges the contract cancellation is "ineffective" because the company failed to give 60 days' notice of intention to terminate as required by law.

UAW Parley To Make Plans

A PREVIEW of the CIO Auto Workers' wage drive, and of its social security program and political plans for 1949 will be given by UAW Pres. Walter Reuther at the union's three-day education conference which opens Jan. 20 in Milwaukee.

Key UAW leaders from every local in the country will attend and help work out "an effective union program through democratic planning," UAW Education Director Victor Reuther said.

Final details of the union's social security and insurance program will be worked out at the conference with the aid of technical authorities including Murray Latimer, industrial relations consultant, who directed the President's Guaranteed Annual Wage Study, and Wilbur Cohen, technical adviser to the Social Security Administration.

Operation of the UAW's insurance plan at Kaiser-Frazer will be explained publicly for the first time.

Other speakers and advisers at the conference will include CIO General Counsel Arthur Goldberg; Kermit Eby, former CIO Education and Research director; G. Girard Davidson, Asst. Secretary of the Interior; Murray Lincoln, president of the Cooperative League of the U. S., and Robert Lynd, author of "Middletown."

Survey Finds

Pollsters Are Honest But Dumb

A SPECIAL committee of the Social Science Research Council has come up with a verdict on those poor professional pollsters — the men who said it was Dewey hands down.

The verdict:

* (In laymen's language) "You're honest but dumb."

* (In social science language) "The Pollsters over-reached the capabilities of the public-opinion poll in attempting to pick, without qualification, the winner of the 1948 election."

The experts found two basic errors in the way the Roper, Gallup and Crossley polls were conducted last year. There were errors of sampling and interviewing; and errors in forecasting what people will do, regardless of what they say they will do.

One trouble, the scientists said, is that the Gallup staff decides whether any particular person who is interviewed fits the category (rich, poor, old, young, etc.) which his answers are supposed to represent.

Both the Roper and Gallup polls under-estimated the Democratic vote in 1940 and 1944 by about two percentage points. In 1948 they were 5% off on the Truman vote.

The pollsters are reportedly not happy with the social scientists' study. Their gripes: (1) nobody knows how strongly any group in the population is going to turn out at the polls; (2) that last-minute shift to Truman.

A recent article in the New York Times bitterly attacked the methods used by one poll organization to "prove" that workers really like the various provisions of the Taft-Hartley law.

The poll conducted by Opinion Research, which is closely associated with Dr. George Gallup—"discovered" that up to three-quarters of all workers approve T-H provisions, when those provisions are not labeled as part of the Taft-Hartley law.

But, the Times article showed, the survey — which was widely quoted in the press, in industry and in Congress was based on fewer than 600 questionnaires. Nevertheless, the results of this unscientific method were hailed as showing what workers generally believe.

Sure, They (Dixiecrats) Try to Kid Us, But That Day's Over

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

FRIEDA SCHWENKMEYER, a veteran organizer for the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers in the South was worried. She was wondering how the workers in the union were taking the heavy downpour of Dixiecrat propaganda swamping the radio, newspapers and public meetings. Were they falling for it?

The town where she was working, some time before the Nov. election, was in one of the "worst" Dixiecrat states, where the downpour of reactionary political propaganda was heaviest. Were the workers being influenced by the theories of "white supremacy," and "divide and conquer" which they heard and read constantly? She had to find out.

So one afternoon she called the members of the union together and gave them a little talk, explaning that the Dixiecrats program was aimed really to divide the poor people, black against white, for the interest of the big landlords and industrialists. She went to town on the Dixiecrats.

"As I talked, I watched the boys nudge each other. The girls smiled," Frieda said in telling the story. "I wondered if they were just tolerating me or laughing at me. I didn't know while I talked how the people felt, but I had to speak my mind."

When she had finished, one of the members turned to his neighbor and said: "See Bill, isn't that just what we've been saying? Thurmond and Wright want us to go back to work in the cotton patch for $1 a day. Sure, they try to kid us, but that day is over."

Frieda was pleasantly surprised. "It turned out," she said, "that every one in that group had agreed long ago that the Dixiecrats and their theories were all wrong. My discussion only clarified the situation, so that now they talked about it openly to each other."

This little story, which Frieda Schwenkmeyer has told in the Jan. 15 issue of Advance, her union's official paper, offers a clue to a mystery that political wiseacres are still scratching their heads trying to solve:

Why didn't the mass of the people believe what they were told before the November election? Why didn't they vote the way the polls told them they would?

The solution to the mystery is simple—so simple that it is hard for many to understand. The working people (and that's the great mass of Americans) are catching on. They're getting wise to the tricks.

As the union member in Frieda's story put it, "Sure, they try to kid us, but that day is over."

Ready for Action

Plan Meet To Set Off Store Drive

A THREE-DAY conference to put into high gear the union's nation-wide drive to organize department store employes will open Jan. 27 in Washington, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers announced last week.

Key union organizers from every part of the country, together with the union's general executive board will attend the meeting, which will be held at the Hotel Raleigh.

Potofsky said that regional headquarters for the department store campaign are being set up in every major city, as rallying centers for employes seeking unionization under the Amalgamated banner.

The union, which already has organization in more than 500 cities in 38 states, will establish special offices in new territory. In New York City, Potofsky said, a separate department store organizing office will be set up immediately in the heart of the Fifth Avenue shopping district.

Exec. Vice-Pres. Hyman Blumberg and Louis Hollander, ACW vice-president and co-manager, New York Joint Board, will be in over-all charge of organizers in the New York area.

Frank Graham, head of the University of North Carolina and a leading southern liberal, will be honored by the Amalgamated at a banquet in Washington Jan. 29. He is scheduled to receive a Hillman Memorial Foundation Award from the union.

A FEW MILD and cautious criticisms of certain provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act are expressed in the first annual report of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, submitted to Congress last week by Director Cyrus S. Ching.

The experience of the Service, set up by the T-H law as an independent agency in August 1947, Ching says, "is not sufficiently comprehensive to warrant making legislative proposals with respect to many of those provisions at the time of the writing of this report."

He promises, however, to make legislative recommendations later, if called upon to do so.

Ching, a former executive of U. S. Rubber, emphasizes repeatedly in his report the importance of genuine collective bargaining. He warns that government mediation should not be regarded as a substitute for it, but rather as a means for assisting union and company in their negotiations.

"Government clears the way for collective bargaining," he says, "by designating bargaining representatives, laying down some minimum ground rules, and then, through the Service, giving assistance to the parties when there are obstacles to settlement.

"Under our system, Government does not write the ticket."

Ching found that the provision of the T-H law dealing with national emergency disputes which requires appointment of a board of inquiry in advance of a stoppage deadline, "has the effect of interfering with the collective bargaining of the parties."

His major criticism involved the provision requiring an 80-day "cooling off" period under injunctive order of a court, which he said, "tends to delay rather than facilitate settlement of a dispute.

"Parties unable to resolve the issues facing them before a deadline date, when subject to an injunction order, tend to lose a sense of urgency and to relax their efforts to reach a settlement. They wait for the next deadline date (the date of the discharge of the injunction) to spur them to renewed efforts."

In the maritime dispute involving the Pacific coast longshoremen, Ching says, the injunction period acted as a "warming up" rather than a "cooling off" period.

Ching expresses no opinion in the report, however, as to whether "this experience dictates the desirability of a shorter injunction period or an injunction period of indefinite duration."

Another fault Ching finds is the "mandatory last offer ballot" which requires management's final proposal to be submitted to a vote conducted by the NLRB.

Three Changes Made in Southern Staff

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and organizing director, has announced the appointment of Fred Pieper to a "vital spot" with the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee. Pieper was CIO Regional Director in New Orleans and Louisiana State director for the Southern Organizing Committee.

CIO Organizing Committee Director Van A. Bittner has announced three changes on his Southern drive staff.

Robert W. Starnes, director for Mississippi, has taken on the additional duty of director for Louisiana. He fills the vacancy left by Fred Pieper.

Harry Scott, an area director of the Paperworkers, has been named an assistant director. He will act as a liaison between Bittner and the 11 "Operation Dixie" state directors.

Negro Voting Ban Held Illegal

A three-man Federal district court has declared unconstitutional the amendment to the Alabama constitution requiring applicants for registration to be able to "understand and explain any article of the Constitution of the United States."

The court held that the amendment was intended to be and was being used "to discriminate against applicants for the franchise on the basis of race or color."

The suit was brought by a group of ten Negroes who had been denied the right of franchise by the Mobile County board of registrars. The court's decision had an immediate effect upon the Mobile County board, according to press reports.

Up until the ruling on Jan. 7, only 104 Negroes were registered under the two-year-old amendment in Mobile County. In three days after the court had ruled, however, the Mobile County board had registered 32 more Negroes. "Applicants were asked only routine questions. None was questions about the U. S. Constitution," the Associated Press reported.

The CIO in Alabama opposed the law when it was proposed in the 1945 session of the State Legislature and fought it in the referendum election in 1946.

Truman Urges 18 Steps To Avoid Depression

By GLORIA CAPLAN

"THE PEOPLE of the United States have just enjoyed another year of bountiful prosperity," but we can lose it if we leave the future to chance, Pres. Truman has warned the nation.

It will take positive action to avert an ultimate depression, the President said in his Economic report to Congress. And he urged the enactment of 18 specific legislative measures which, he said could turn the trick.

There was nothing new or revolutionary about any of the proposals. Most of them are part of the program the President has been seeking from an adamant, unfriendly Congress since his first days in the White House. Many of the recommendations date back to Roosevelt, whose pleas for social legislation—housing, health, education, social security improvements—fell on deaf ears after 1938.

Last week, as the President faced a new, Democratic Congress, betting was strongly in favor of his receiving a large part of what he asked.

AS FOR OUR economic health the past year, we were far better off than in the post-World War I period, largely because of affirmative legislation taken since then. Farm price subsidies, legislative strengthening of the banking system, social security which contributes to a feeling of stability, and other factors contributed to our prosperity.

But there were less attractive elements in the picture, too. The Republican tax cut, passed over the President's three vetoes, sliced the Treasury surplus thus contributing to inflation. Corporate profits zoomed to $21 billion, contrasted with 1947's $18 billion profits, he said. This was "in excess of the levels needed to furnish incentives and equity funds for industrial expansion and to promote sustained economic health . ."

AS FOR PRICES, there were some decreases, but many basic materials in short supply continued their upward spiral.

Thus the need for stabilizing measures—both anti-inflationary and anti-deflationary. The legislation recommended includes the following:

Tax Increase: The most effective weapon against inflation, the Chief Executive stated, is a budget surplus. He asked additional revenue of $4 billion a year to come chiefly from additional taxes on corporate profits, but also from additional estate and gift levies. The higher corporate tax—he did not specify whether on excess profits or undistributed profits or an increased rate—"can be applied without unduly interfering with prospects for continued business expansion and with assurance that profits, after taxes and dividends, will be sufficient for investments and contingencies."

Extended Social Security: An increase in social security contributions, which would act as a further anti-inflationary device; 2) An increase in old-age, survivor's and unemployment benefits as well as extension of coverage; 3) Improvements in the relief program "to meet basic human needs of the less unfortunate;" 4) A national health insurance program and federal grants for hospital construction; 5) An insurance system to protect workers against income losses through temporary or permanent disability. (Varying degrees of such compensation are now provided by the states.)

Higher Minimum Wage: An increase to at least 75c an hour. The present minimum is 40c.

Government Promotion of Production: Shortages of critical materials are impeding production and limiting the national security program. (Though not mentioned by name in this particular speech, the President has often referred to the critical need for more steel.) He asked enabling power and funds to make surveys of the needs and to "deal with this problem of capacity and supply."

Allocation Powers: "The need for mandatory controls still exists." He asked authority to allocate key materials in short supply. Among these, the speech later mentions, would be building materials—a move which would channel scarce materials into vitally-needed housing, instead of into such non-essentials as bowling alleys.

Selective Price Controls: "We are still in a situation where the prices of certain critical materials or commodities of vital industrial or consumer importance are moving upward for the third consecutive year or longer." Controls, therefore, would not be general, but would be concentrated, presumably, on basic materials in short supply which affect other prices down the line. Wage controls would be authorized to prevent such boosts as would necessitate a price increase.

However, the Chief Executive said, "I still firmly hold, that wage increases based upon productivity and designed to provide a rising standard of living embody the American way. I still firmly believe that the normal processes of collective bargaining will result in sound wage adjustments without application of any government authority related to wage adjustments without application of any governmental authority related to wages if business and Government make genuine efforts to hold down excessive prices and profits and to reduce the cost of living."

Rent Control: Rents should be controlled at least two more years.

Develop Natural Resources: The government should be permitted to help develop such resources as essential minerals and metals, electric power and oil and some chemicals and fertilizers. One measure specifically recommended was development of the St. Lawrence River waterway and power project.

Housing: "The steady decline in new housing starts since last May adds fresh evidence to the need for housing legislation." The President asked the passage of the need for housing legislation." The President asked the passage of the unenacted parts of the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill with the number of public low-cost units to be increased from 500,000 over five years to 1 million over seven years.

Federal Aid to Education: A federal program of aid to elementary and secondary education, and study to be made to determine national education needs.

With only a few minor exceptions, the program was identical with the CIO's. To CIO leaders it was vindication of their pre-November faith in Truman. To big business, the speech vindicated their pre-election fears—that Truman, if elected, would attempt to curb profiteering.

And to the average citizen, it was proof once again that the man from Missouri was in there pitching for him as he promised.

FRANK ANNUNZIO

Annunzio Gets Ill. Labor Post

Frank Annunzio, secretary-treasurer of the Illinois State CIO Political Action Committee, has become the first CIO leader ever to have been appointed Director of Labor in Illinois.

The appointment was made by Gov.-Elect Adlai Stevenson over the vigorous objections of the AFL, which had supplied the previous Labor Director under Republican Gov. Dwight Green.

Citizens' Group Suggests:

Watch-Dog Agency To Guard Rights

A FEDERAL "watchdog" commission to protect the nation's civil liberties was advocated at the White House last week by a committee of prominent citizens.

The proposed Commission on Civil Rights should devote itself to "fact-finding, assist in preventing conflicts, prepare recommendations for the improvement of civil rights practices, call attention to developing civil rights problems, and make its reports available to the President and the people."

The group which called on President Truman represented the Natl. Citizens Council on Civil Rights. Suggestions for a permanent civil rights commission were first contained in the report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights, more than a year ago.

The National Citizens Council said it had been inspired by that report and by the President's recommendations to Congress in February 1948 "to study the subject and offer the support of our citizen group. . . . You have paved the way. We are glad to follow."

No Civil Rights Commission can do the job by itself, the Council said. It called for passage of civil liberties laws covering employment, schools, voting rights and the protection of life and property against mob violence.

It also advocated, as did the President's Committee report a year ago, that the Civil Rights Section of the Department of Justice be strengthened.

The Council, which has been urging communities to study their own local civil rights problems, pointed out that those who oppose U. S. democracy "make capital of the gap between our ideals and our everyday practices.

"To the extent that we are ignorant of our own shortcomings, or close our eyes to them, we nurture disease and eventual decay, for a free country cannot remain static."

Nation Stirred By Ga. Trial

A WHITE man was on trial in a Georgia courthouse, accused of participating in the slaying of a Negro.

Twenty-five minutes after the jury went out to deliberate, it returned with the verdict—"not guilty."

Charges against a second defendant similarly accused, were immediately dropped.

But before the jury got around to its hasty "deliberations" there were incidents in the trial that stirred the nation. They may even cause some previously-reluctant Congressmen to vote for federal anti-lynching legislation.

PRINCIPAL witness for the prosecution was the slain man's wife, a school teacher, who testified that she and some relatives were in the automobile driven by her husband, Robert Mallard, when an armed band of hooded, white-robed men stopped the car. A shot, fired through the windshield, killed her husband. Mrs. Mallard identified William L. Howell, the defendant, as one of the gang.

But Mrs. Mallard's testimony counted for nothing with the all-white jury. Two of the jurors had been permitted to step down from the box and testify that they wouldn't believe her on oath. But they vouched for the fine character of the defendant. Then they resumed their seats as "impartial" jurors.

Indignant protests immediately went up in all other parts of the country.

George Weaver, director of the CIO's Committee Against Discrimination, stated:

"I don't know whether the defendants are guilty or not. But I do know that that trial did not constitute an effort to determine their guilt or innocence.

"How long, I wonder, will Southern Negroes have to live in fear, how many more murders of Negroes will have to go unprosecuted, before some Congressmen realize the need for Federal protection against lynchings?

Said the Washington Post: ". . . squalid perversion of moral and legal principles."

ORGANIZATIONALLY SPEAKING

By Allan S. Haywood

CIO Reg. Dir. James Leary reports that a union contract has been negotiated for the employes of the Barnett & Ramel Optical Co., Kansas City, Mo. Since all employes are members of Local 1258, OIWOC-CIO, the company negotiated a contract without an NLRB election. The organizational work was done by John E. Stakley, Oscar Calhoun and D. E. Parker, members of Local 1258. In a union security election at the Kansas City Dressed Beef Co., Kansas City, Kans., the workers, members of Local 36, UPWA-CIO voted 51 to 3 in favor of a union security provision. Field Rep. Frank L. Brown of UPWA-CIO handled the organizational work.

Thomas J. Gallagher, Director of Organization IUMSWA announces that in an NLRB consent election held for the Williamstown Foundry Corp., Williamstown, N. J., the workers voted as follows: Number eligible to vote 74, total votes cast 69, IUMSWA 56, AFL 10, neither 2, challenged 1.

Vice Pres. Mertz of the ALA-CIO reports that in an NLRB election held in the Danner Press Co., Akron, Ohio, every lithographic employe voted for ALA-CIO as his exclusive bargaining agent.

In Atlanta, Ga., on January 8-9, the Southern Organizing Committee met with SOC Director Van A. Bittner presiding over all organizers and directors in the entire South, Southwest, and West areas that were in attendance.

The over-all purpose of the meeting was to make 1949 a banner year in the field of organizing in the South. Constructive and practical instruction was given by Director Van A. Bittner and George Baldanzi, TWUA executive vice president and an assistant director of the committee.

1949 should be a banner year for unions throughout the rest of the country too. There are many workers to be organized. The November election proved that the people are alert and want to retain the spirit of the New Deal. The CIO played an important role in the election. We must continue to organize the unorganized. The opportunity is here and we must grasp it.

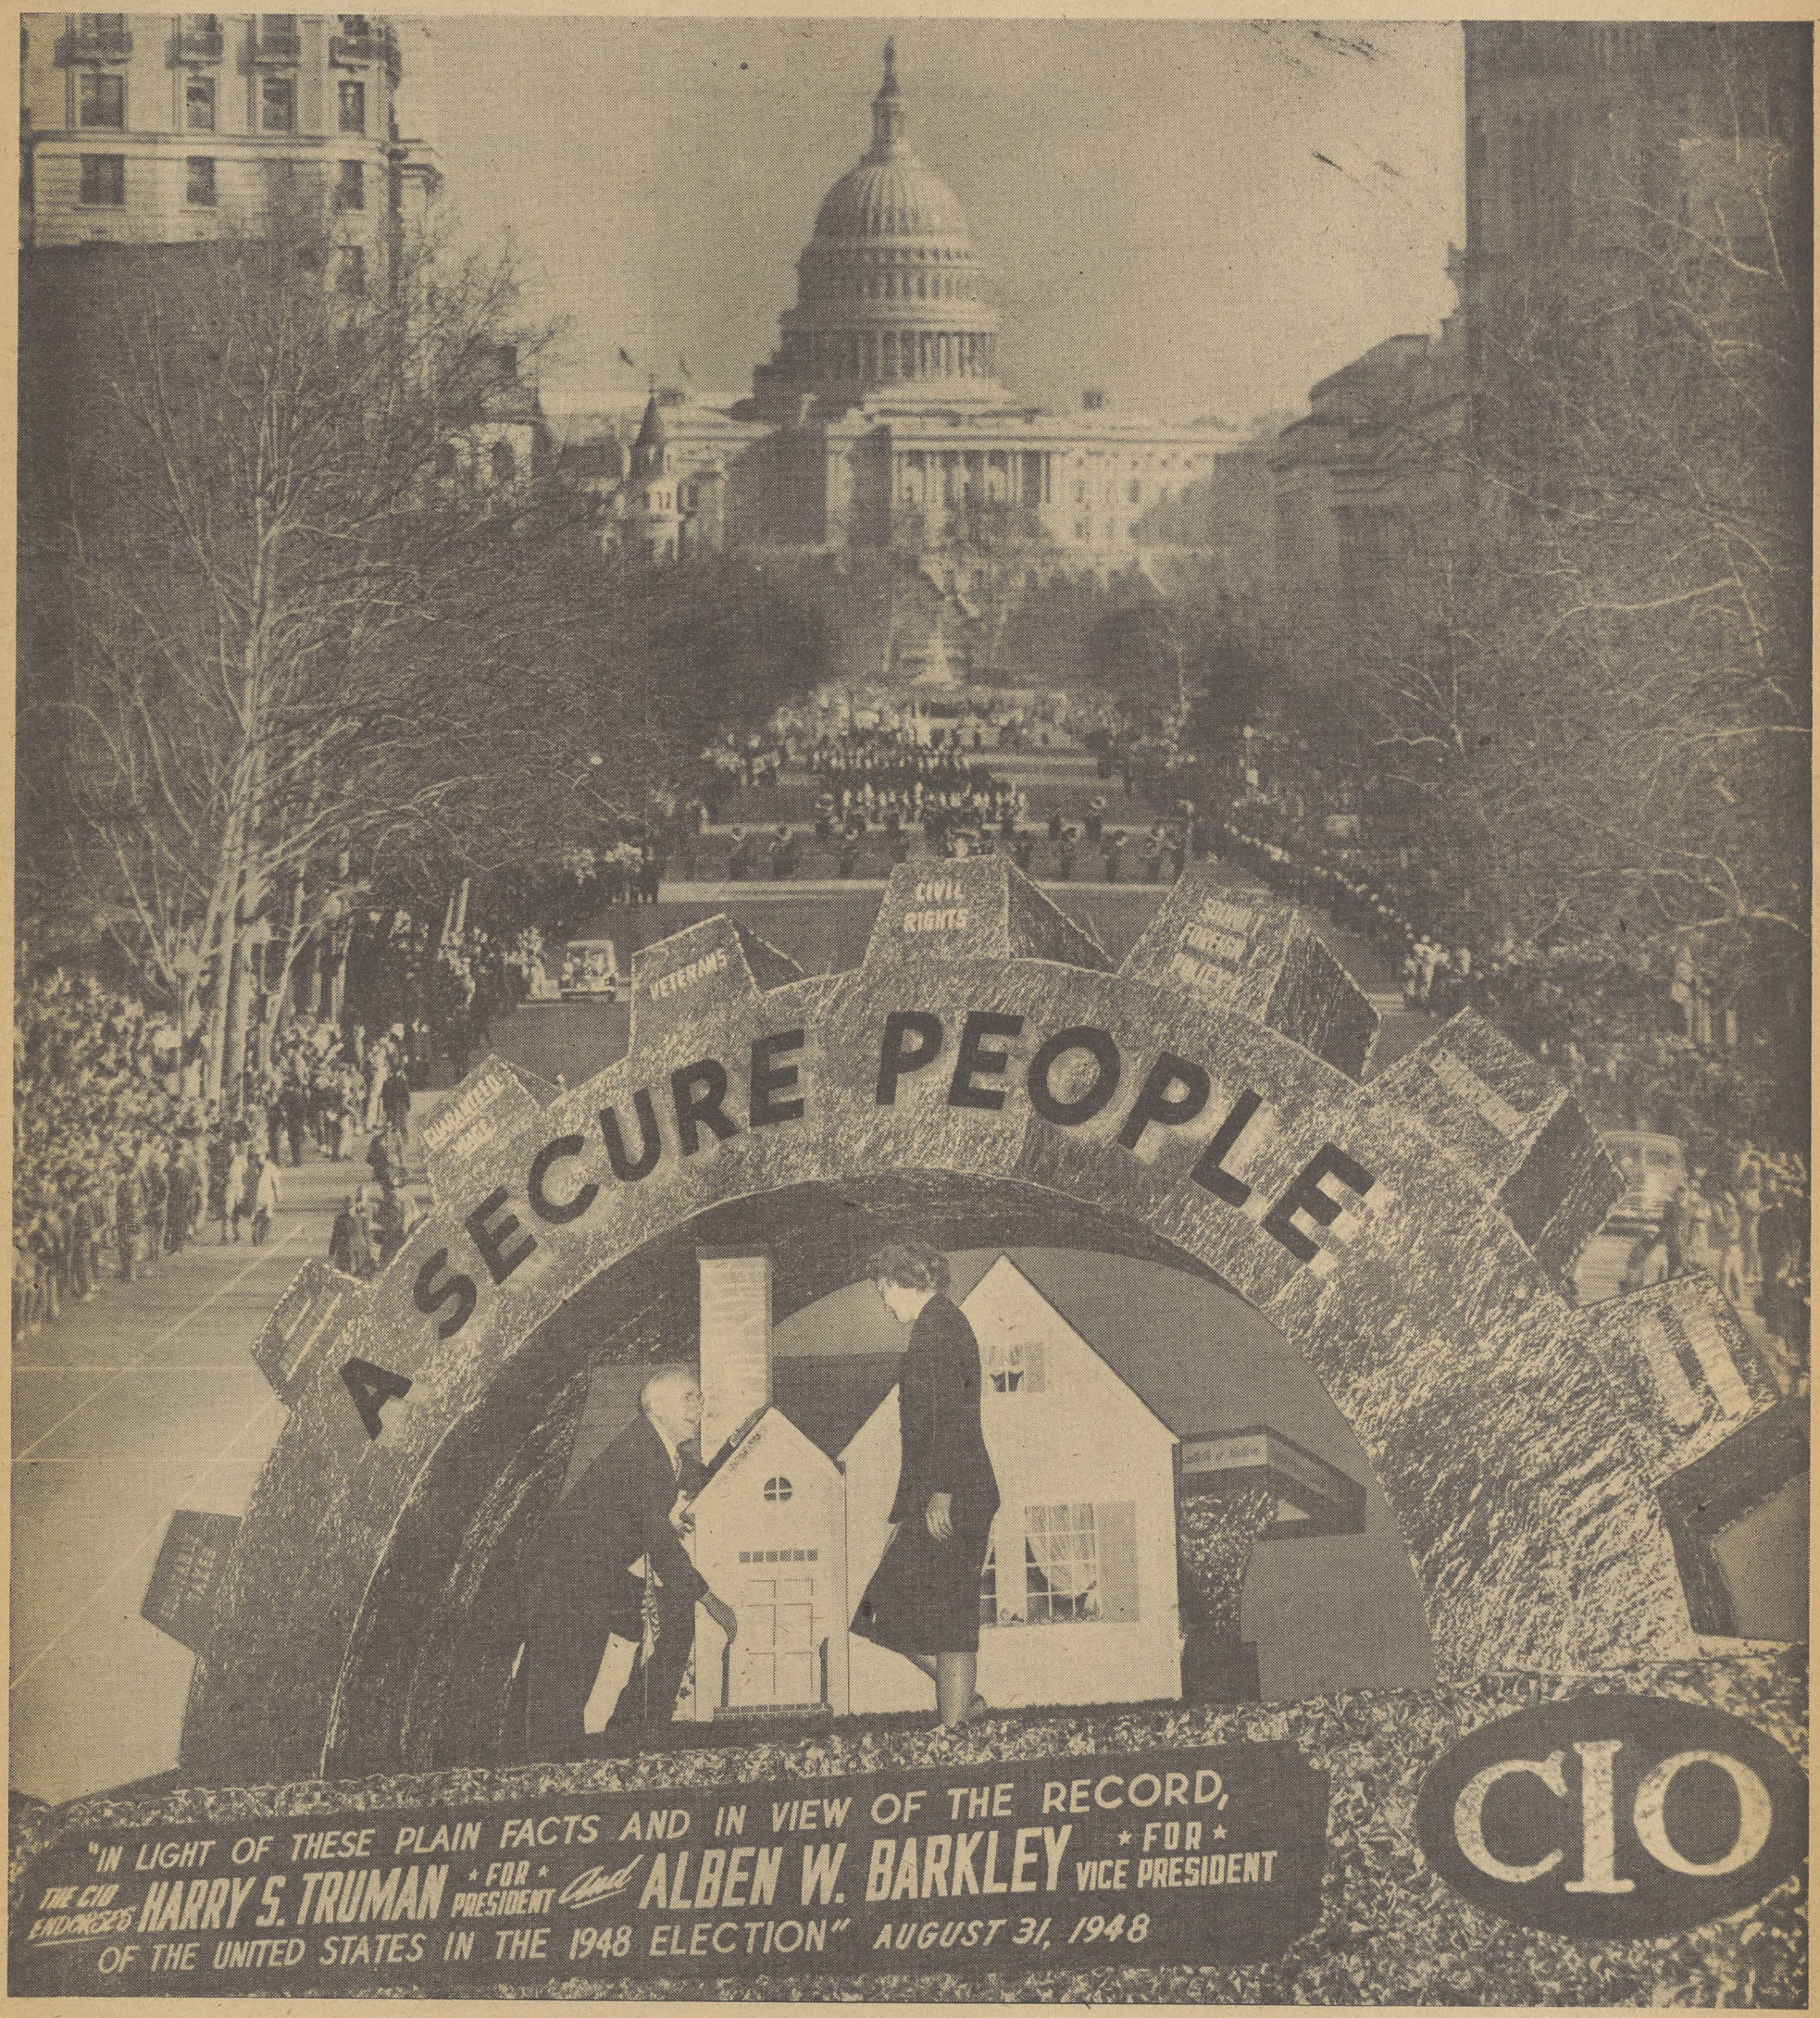
Vol. XII WASHINGTON. D. C., JANUARY 24, 1949 82 No. 4



CIO JOINS CELEBRATION: A crowd estimated at nearly a million saw the parade that followed the inauguration of President Truman at Washington. Apparently recognizing the role that the CIO played in Truman's election, spectators cheered this float, which bore a quotation from the decision of the executive board backing Truman.

Security at Top of UAW's Demands

FIRST official announcement of the CIO Auto Workers' basic economic demands for 1949 was contained in a letter sent by Union Pres. Walter P. Reuther. The proposals, which put major emphasis on pension and social security plans had been adopted unanimously by the union's International Executive Board.

The demands are:

1. An adequate pension and retirement program.

2. A comprehensive social security program including health, hospitalization, medical, surgical, disability and life insurance provisions.

3. A wage increase to restore the buying power of wages to the level of June, 1946, when OPA was destroyed.

In his letter to the local unions, Reuther said:

"We in the UAW-CIO are no longer willing to tolerate a continuation of double standards in our industry. Under these double standards top corporate executives provide generous pensions for themselves while denying them to the workers who cannot possibly save for their old age out of current earnings.

"These double standards are economically stupid and morally indefensible and we are determined to mobilize the full power and resources of our union to win pension plans and social security for our people

Need Seen For Good, Cheap Car

THE TIME is ripe for production of a good, low-priced car which "us common folks" can afford.

Ammunition, monthly magazine of the United Automobile Workers, suggests in its current issue that what the country really needs is not a 5c cigar but low-price, 6-cylinder, 6-passenger car, weighing about a ton.

Such a car, on a 105-inch wheelebase and with 80 horsepower, could be made to sell for $1,000 retail, the magazine said.

In fact, it's already being done—but for the export market. General Motors is making such a car, designed and engineered in Detroit, for Australian customers. A similar Ford product, the Vedette, is being made in France, although it was designed and engineered in Detroit.

The article appeared about the time of layoffs of some 3,500 Kaiser-Frazer workers. Business observers have indicated that all but the cheapest-priced cars are now running into a "buyer's market."

The UAW magazine commented:

"When the auto companies introduced light cars abroad, they considered the pattern of purchasing power and income. They knew that to market their cars abroad, they had to reduce the price.

"In the U. S., however, they continue to make luxury cars out of scarce iron and steel for well-to-do families at the expense of the families of farmers and wage-earners."

Big Biz Gives U.S. New 'Sag'

- The country's economy is "sagging" — because of the load of super-profits and super-prices imposed by big business.
- Even the richest corporation won't stay prosperous if its middle and low income customers lack the money to buy the product of industry.
- If industry won't change its "hell-bent-for-depression" policies, then Uncle Sam had better step in—and quickly—to get things corrected.

This not-too-optimistic viewpoint was expressed last week by the Economic Outlook, the monthly publication of the CIO Dept. of Education & Research.

It derided efforts by industry to make their profits look "small"; charged that workers and consumers have in effect been made to pay the costs of new factories built by private corporations out of super-profits; and suggested that the government quickly use broad powers of the Employment Act of 1946 to meet "the threat of a new depression and the final destruction of free enterprise by monopoly."

Commented the Outlook:

"Until American management leaders understand that prosperity depends on prosperous families, continuously able to buy because of high incomes and low prices, they are dangerously misleading the nation. . . .

"As spokesmen for the consumers who have so largely paid for business expansion during the last three years, government has a moral right and a congressional mandate to take measures to restore enterprise to its competitive function and insist on price-and-profit policies which do not undermine the national well-being."

The Outlook charged that Big Business has been "sapping the buying power of the customers on whom it ultimately depends. . . . By following this blind policy, Big Business is destroying the mass American market for its products on which its own future profits are ultimately dependent. Like 1929, it is the direct road to depression."

TO INDICATE the size of profit returns, the Outlook published a chart showing that profits netted by 343 manufacturing corporations during the first three-quarters of 1948 constituted an 18.7% return on investment. This was an increase from 16.3% for the same period a year earlier.

Business "has been embarrassed" by the level of its profits and the public attention directed to corporation earnings, the Outlook said, and a "nation-wide campaign is underway to convince the American people . . . that profits are not really large. . . ."

"The CIO believes in reasonable profits, but not in mirages," the Outlook commented. "Despite embarrassed efforts to explain them away, profits are too high for the nation's welfare.

"For three years, inflated prices and corporate earnings have enriched a few at the top by siphoning off the purchasing power base which is essential to maintain prosperity and full employment."

Business management, the Outlook continued, "has failed to live up to the grave responsibility which has been concentrated in its hands. Three years late, but more necessary now than ever, the unstabilizing effect of piling up unreasonable profits must be ended."

Rep. Rankin Off Probe Group

THE "New Look" 81st Congress last week turned its attention to the House Un-American Activities Committee—and when they were through with it, there was little that resembled the past.

House Democrats approved a move to rid the Committee of two of its three remaining Democrats—Rep. Hebert (La.) and Rankin (Miss.). Then they nominated four new members—all of them lawyers and presumably men of sober regard for constitutional rights.

Rep. John Wood (D., Ga.), a non-New Dealer, heads the group. He is the only holdover on the Democratic side from the Thomas-dominated committee which gained so many headlines last year.

It is expected that in the new atmosphere, Wood will "go along" on a more responsible course.

Rankin was removed on the basis of a rule that no Democrat heading a House committee could hold membership on a second committee. Rankin is chairman of the House Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Hebert—who went along with the Un-American Committee majority much of last year, though he became more critical of its policies after November 2—was dropped after the Democrats adopted a rule that only lawyers could hold Democratic seats on the group. Hebert used to be a newspaperman.

THREE OF the new Democratic members ran for election with labor support—Rep. Francis Walter (Pa.), Moulder (Mo.) and McSweeney (Ohio). The fourth, Rep. Burr Harrison (Va.), voted for the Taft-Hartley Act and voted wrong on many important issues in the 80th Congress.

The GOP has not yet nominated its minority members of the committee. Rep. Parnell Thomas (R., N. J.), the guiding light of the group during its last two years, is ill and under indictment on a salary kickback charge. He may be dropped from the group.

Rep. Richard Nixon (R., Calif.) has been a leading figure in the group, although at the end of December he let it be known that he favored some reforms. Nixon made little public mention of such beliefs when the committee was in its hey-day.

Meanwhile Rep. Arthur Klein (D., N. Y.) has proposed two resolutions affecting the committee.

One would broaden its function to include probes of all types of civil-liberties violations. The other would authorize an investigation of the conduct of Robert E. Stripling, the committee's chief investigator until last Dec. 31.

Rep. Klein is interested in Stripling's announcement he has sold his memoirs, covering a 10-year period with the committee, to the Hearst-controlled King Features Syndicate.

Curran Calls Sea Unions

A MEETING of all unions of sea-going workers to make plans to "refloat the American merchant marine" has been called for Feb. 7 by the Natl. Maritime Union.

Invitations to the Washington meeting were sent by NMU Pres. Joseph Curran. He voiced concern over "short-sighted" government maritime policies.

"These policies in administrative circles and in Congress are alarming, and affect the American people generally as well as all of us in the maritime trades," Curran said.

"Unemployment among seamen—shipyards trades as well as allied trades—throughout the country is constantly rising, and continued neglect in this all-important industry means that these skills may become lost to America."

Affidavit Hearing Is Set

THE CIO Steelworkers' 18-month fight against Taft-Hartley non-communist affidavits will come up to the U. S. Supreme Court Feb. 28.

The high court last week agreed to hear arguments on that date involving the steel union and the Inland Steel Co., Indiana Harbor, Ind. The union has challenged the constitutionality of the affidavit requirement.

At the same time the court will hear arguments in a second case, involving the CIO American Communications Association.

The steel union has maintained a policy of not signing the affidavits as a matter of principle. The affidavits are required from officers of a union under the Taft-Hartley act before the union can use the facilities of the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

Before T-H was passed, the steel union accused Inland of an unfair labor practice in refusing to bargain over a pension plan covering workers in the plant. The NLRB last year ordered the firm to bargain on the matter, but only if the union signed the affidavits and filed financial registration requirements under T-H.

The USA-CIO filed the financial information with the government, but appealed the affidavit issue to the Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago. The court ruled against the union, and it then asked the Supreme Court to review the case.

CIO Lapel Buttons Again Available

In response to the requests of CIO members throughout the nation, the CIO Publications Dept. has obtained a quantity of CIO lapel emblems. The emblems are gold-filled, bear the letters CIO in gold on an oval field of blue and have a safety clasp.

These emblems were difficult to secure for a number of years because of the shortage of materials.

Prices are: 10 to 49, 25c each; 50 to 99, 24c each; 100 to 499, 23c each; 500 or more, 22c each. Order from CIO Publications Dept., 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

A legislative program for increased unemployment and workmen's compensation benefits, a minimum wage of $1 an hour and $500 million in pay increases for state employes has been proposed by the New York State CIO Council.

Action Expected Soon In T-H Repeal Drive

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

CONGRESSIONAL gears are beginning to move the legislative machinery toward action on the Taft-Hartley Act.

Developments may come quickly. Last week there were hints of plans, groupings and accusations—all of them leading to a sure guess that Taft-Hartley will be in the headlines within the fortnight.

These developments have already taken place:

1. President Truman is planning—according to a New York Times dispatch by Louis Stark—to meet with Administration leaders in Congress and perhaps with key labor officials to discuss strategy on T-H.

2. Sen. Claude Pepper (D. Fla.), a leading member of the Senate Labor Committee, said he would press for speedy action by the group to bring out legislation repealing T-H and re-enacting the Wagner Act. He said he would fight any "filibuster" by Sen. Robert Taft (R. O.), either in committee or on the Senate floor.

3. The House Labor Committee, finally organized last week, will settle down to work as soon as possible. With its heavy pro-labor wing, committee action should be quickly forthcoming.

4. Sen. Myers (D. Pa.) announced he had invited representatives of all branches of labor to a dinner meeting Jan. 26 to discuss labor legislation problems.

A PRIORITY spot for the Taft-Hartley matter has been assured by both Vice-Pres. Barkley and Sen. Lucas (D. Ill.), the majority leader in the Senate, the New York Times story said. It was predicted that the White House meeting would give a green light for action on the problem.

Pepper said that "labor well understands what Sen. Taft is trying to do" in delaying immediate action on T-H repeal.

"We are not going to let Sen. Taft's obstructionism and filibustering prevent us from carrying out the pledge in our Democratic platform," Pepper declared.

Taft is planning a parliamentary maneuver to amend the T-H repeal bill, to death. The amendments would contain many provisions of the anti-labor law. While most, if not all, would be certainly defeated, either in committee or on the Senate floor, the process would take time.

But Sen. Pepper said flatly, "He wont get away with it."

There has been some discussion in the Senate Labor Committee on the schedule of bills to be considered. Chairman Thomas (D. Utah) indicated earlier that he would favor getting through with "non-controversial" items before tackling T-H.

BUT ONE SUCH "non-controversial" issue—the $300 million aid-to-education bill—was held up in the Senate Labor Committee by a series of proposed amendments. The delay should be short, however, since the bill was passed by the Senate last year, though it failed to clear through the House.

Sen. Thomas's own bill calls for repeal of T-H and re-enactment of the Wagner Act—the so-called two-package proposal.

The House Labor Committee has been described in the press as favoring a one-package proposition—T-H repeal, Wagner Act re-enactment, and adoption of measures on secondary boycotts, jurisdictional disputes, etc., as suggested by Pres. Truman in his State of the Union message.

The one-package method had been opposed in general by labor, as not meeting the requirements of the situation and endangering the whole repeal process. In addition, nobody has known for certain what the "package" would contain.

But last week Rep. Lesinski told a delegation of CIO Electrical Workers that his position had been garbled in the press.

"I associate myself with Maurice Tobin (secretary of labor) who favors the two-step process," Lesinski was quoted as saying.

Quick improvements in the Wage-Hour law, lifting minimum pay rates from 40c to 75c an hour, were forecast in the House by Majority Leader John McCormack (D. Mass.). He voiced "hopes" that the Labor Committee would speedily report such a measure, and that it would be passed in double-quick time by the House.

Fast action also seemed scheduled on proposals to remove discriminatory sections of the Displaced Persons law passed last session. Rep. Celler (D. N. Y.) head of the Judiciary Committee and sponsor of improved DP legislation in the House, said it "might" be passed within a fortnight.

House Labor Committee Has Liberal Majority

A NEW HOUSE Labor Committee was named last week, and it bore little resemblance to its 80th Congress predecessor.

Comprising 16 Democrats and nine Republicans, the committee has nine new members of Congress on the Democratic side and two newcomers among the GOP bloc.

The committee is headed by John Lesinski (D., Mich.), who built a strong pro-labor voting record in past sessions of Congress. The remaining six Democratic Congressional veterans on the committee are evenly split between pro-Taft-Hartley and anti-Taft-Hartley.

Reps. Kelley (Pa.), Powell (N. Y.) and Kennedy (Mass.) were against the anti-labor law, while Barden (N. C.), Wood (Ga.) and Lucas (Tex.) supported T-H.

One of them, Rep. Tom Burke (Ohio) is a former Toledo CIO council secretary, while Rep. Leonard Irving (Mo.) is an AFL union official from Pres. Truman's home district. Most of the other Democrats were elected with labor endorsement and support.

THE TOP-RANKING Republican on the committee becomes Samuel K. McConnell (Pa.), who cast only three "rights" votes on the 16 issues listed in the CIO News Voting Record of the 80th Congress.

All seven of the Republicans on the committee who were re-elected to Congress in 1948 voted for Taft-Hartley.

But a lot of the old, familiar—and for workers, unpopular—faces from the GOP-controlled Labor Committee of last year were gone, victims of the '48 elections.

Rep. Fred Hartley (N. J.), last year's chairman, decided not to run for re-election. Reps. Landis, McCowen anrd Schwabe, all headline-makers in their actions and speeches against labor, were defeated.

And Rep. Clare Hoffman (Mich.), a consistent foe of unionism, was off the committee. He had to choose between the Labor Committee and the Committee on executive expenditures—and he chose the latter.

Another feature distinguishing the new Labor Committee from its predecessor is the much higher proportion of Congressmen from industrial states. The old committee had heavy representation from agricultural areas—though the House Agriculture Committee had little if any representation from city districts.

The Banking & Currency Committee, dealing with vital economic matters, also shows the "Fair Deal Look." The half-dozen freshmen Congressmen on its roster represent a generally liberal outlook.

NO WIRE TAPPING

Eventually your conversation turns to ideological subjects and you make a couple of "radical" statements.

At this point an FBI agent pops out of the closet, flashes his credentials and says, "I just heard what was said. You sound like a subversive and I think I'll run you in."

That's why we're appalled by Atty. Gen. Tom Clark's proposal that wire tapping be legalized. His excuse for such a proposal is that the nation needs new machinery with which to handle spies.

Undoubtedly new machinery is needed—but wire tapping shouldn't be made a part of it.

Nobody should be so naive as to believe that wire tapping would not be used to abridge civil rights—to invade the privacy of the home—to listen in on private conversations that had no connection with subversive activities.

Wire tapping is a bad form of spying. It has no place in the operation of our law enforcement agencies.

In this type of discussion we'll gladly give way to the late Justice Holmes, who said that wire tapping was "dirty business."

AN IMPROVEMENT? CERTAINLY, BUT--

What has happened to the House Un-American Activities Committee reminds us of the fellow who needed a new roof on his house but contented himself with patching up the old one.

The committee has given off an extremely bad odor since the days Martin Dies was its chairman. It reached the high point of bad behavior during the chairmanship of J. Parnell Thomas, now under indictment.

The 81st Congress, obviously giving recognition to widespread criticism, took certain steps which should make the new committee a great improvement over the old one.

The Democrats named five attorneys to the committee on the theory that they would make its investigative procedure conform to judicial practices that do not abridge civil rights.

That sounds good—and we hope it is good.

We hope the new House group will set a pattern for committee hearings that will make the public forget the bad name it has had for so many years.

House members probably would have been much wiser had they abolished the committee. They didn't, however.

So, now, it seems to us, the best we can do is to hope that the "patch-up" job will work reasonably well until we finally get that new "roof."

WHY NOT CIVIL RIGHTS PROBE?

It also seems to us that it's time for Congress to give public recognition to the fact that there are many individuals and groups in this country who violate civil rights with almost complete impunity.

There are many outfits which make a profitable business of exploiting race and religious prejudices. There are many individuals who do likewise.

A Wonderful Inauguration, But --

Parade Began Near Bad Slum Area In City Which Has Voteless Residents

By ALLAN L. SWIM

WASHINGTON was a bit like a mad-house last week as it celebrated the inauguration of President Truman.

Thousands jammed the Capital for the festivities. There were parties and dances—and a giant parade.

The parade, on which much money had been spent, started rolling about a half mile from one of the worst slums in the country!

Along the parade route were many residents of Washington who had nothing to do with Truman's election victory because they live in the voteless Capital.

WASHINGTON, for the most part, is a beautiful city and it is the citadel of democracy.

The great buildings which house our governmental agencies are symbols of our ability to put brick, stone, concrete and steel together in the right proportions.

The slums are symbols of our failure to carry our building plans far enough.

The inaugural parade was a demonstration of our desire to do things in a big way—to celebrate when there is an occasion for celebration.

Those who have no vote and those who were discriminated against because of their color were the victims of our pettiness—of our failure to treat all citizens alike.

Not As Planned

Funds for the big inauguration program were appropriated by the GOP-controlled 80th Congress when the "experts" said Dewey would be elected.

THE MAN who led the parade—the President—won a victory in November on a program calling for elimination of the slums and for the extension of civil rights.

Participating in the inaugural festivities were our lawmakers—men and women who can put the Truman program into effect or keep it from becoming operative.

Many of these rode to victory on the same political platform that Truman occupied.

But not all of them.

Many of those who didn't will fight with all their strength to keep the slums and to maintain discrimination.

AS TIME PASSES and Congress gets its teeth into specific measures which the public indorsed at the polls you'll hear Congressmen say, "That may be a good idea but we can't afford it."

They'll cling to the mistaken idea that the maintenance of slums is cheaper than slum clearance.

They'll go along with the mistaken idea that the U. S. can afford second-class citizens.

Some of them, no doubt, will make fiery speeches about the evils of Communism.

And they will give no recognition to the fact that the seeds of Communism grow most rapidly in the slums and are fertilized by discrimination.

WORLD attention is focused on Washington every week—not just during Inauguration Week. And it's focused on the rest of our nation, too.

We're expected to stem the totalitarian forces of the world. We're expected to give economic aid to those who need it and to provide a model for the rebuilding of many war-torn nations.

Maybe we can do it. Maybe we can't.

But we can't do it with money alone. We can't do it with our wonderful production system. Ideological battles are not won with cash and products alone.

To many there is little difference between the former German cartels and the big monopolies in our country.

In many lands there are millions of men and women who regard our treatment of minority groups as being disgraceful.

WE IN THIS country—all of us—should make an honest effort to wipe out the slums, wherever they be, and eliminate slum-type thinking.

We should try to make our political system completely democratic, and there cannot be true democracy in a land which has second class citizens.

We should use every instrument at our command to stamp out those conditions and those practices which keep us from having the kind of society which the remainder of the world would like to copy.

Sure we're good—but we could be a lot better.

'Loyalty' Dangers Worry Yale Profs

INVESTIGATIONS conducted under the U. S. Government's loyalty program resemble those used in Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy, says an article in the Jan. 16 issue of the Yale Law Journal.

The federal government's program violated the basic American traditions of "freedom for speech and belief, freedom for political expression, freedom for experimentation," Prof. Thomas I. Emerson of the Yale Law School and his associate, David M. Helfend, charge in the article.

The writers deny, in their 143-page analysis, that there is any need for an investigation of all federal employes.

"No concrete showing of immediate and widespread danger, adequate to outweigh the price that must be paid in the loss of democratic values," they state, "has thus far been presented to the country."

The loyalty program was aimed, the authors say, to remove from government service individuals whose ideas, associations and legal activities indicate they may in the future engage in conduct injurious to the government.

They hold that this concept particularly violates basic American freedoms and requires "a large staff of secret police, the maintenance of a master file of derogatory information, investigations and hearings that probe into every corner of a man's life for information on opinions, associations and personal habits."

WHILE ADMITTING that "any government must always be able to protect itself against a dangerous activity within its own ranks," the writers declare that existing criminal statutes and the normal disciplinary powers of government are enough to afford adequate protection against "actions" of federal workers.

The FBI is singled out for showing signs of "moving dangerously" in the direction of developing into "a grave and ruthless menace to democratic processes." The writers urge that it and "other professional investigating agencies" should be subject to a greater degree of civilian control.

A different view of the loyalty program will be given in an article by William J. Donovan, former head of the Office of Strategic Services, which will appear in a later issue of the Law Journal.

CONGRESSMAN DRIPP — BY YOMEN

"I Lost My Committee Job."

He Tried Twice And He Failed Two Times

AS ANY gambler who has held a poor hand knows, you can't win every time—no matter how hard you try.

The same is true of organizing trade unions. Sometimes the "cards" fall right and sometimes they don't.

This is the story of a smart, young organizer who drew bad "cards" twice in the same "game" and lost though displaying considerable skill.

After it was all over, he used a bit of profanity, then shrugged his shoulders and went on to another membership campaign.

THE STATE director asked an organizer we'll call Joe to spend a few days in a Southern textile town and "find out if there's any chance of setting up a union at the ———— Co. plant."

Joe reported a short time later that "things look good down here. A lot of the guys at the plant say they want a union."

He said conditions were "right" for a fast organizing job. Wages at the plant were low and the work load was unusually heavy. Furthermore, the textile plant wasn't particularly popular with the community.

"OK, you stay down there and get the job done as soon as you can," the state director said.

JOE BEGAN his job with considerable enthusiasm and was much encouraged by the progress he made.

Workers who said they wanted a union paid their initiation fees and helped sign up others in the plant.

Within a few weeks about 65% of those eligible for union membership had signed up, and then a petition for a NLRB election was filed.

About three weeks before the date set for the election the plant increased wages of its employes—brought them up to the union scale. At the same time the work load was cut sharply.

And, although about 75% of the workers had signed CIO cards, a majority of them voted "no union" when the balloting was held.

A FEW MONTHS later a group of workers from the plant called on the state director at his office.

"We sure made a big mistake when we lost that election," their spokesman said. "Some of our boys just figured the company had learned its lesson and was going to treat us right—and, well, they didn't see why they ought to pay dues if they were going to get union conditions anyway.

"But soon after the election the company put in the darndest speed-up you ever saw. They changed the pay scale around so we're not making any more than we did before we got that 'raise.'"

The director told the group his staff was busy and that if they wanted a union they'd have to organize one largely by themselves.

WITHIN A short time 65% of the workers had signed new application cards, so Joe was sent back to the textile village.

Under his direction the drive picked up new steam and soon nearly 90% of the eligibles had signed up.

Despite months of delay before a new election was set, the membership apparently held firm in its desire for a union.

On the night before the balloting was to start, every official of the plant went into the textile village, carrying pictures of Negro and white unionists working and meeting together.

"Do you wnat to work under a 'Nigger' foreman?" each worker was asked. "Well, you will if you vote for the CIO!"

The next day they voted overwhelmingly against the CIO.

After Joe's anger cooled he said, "Maybe I'm wrong, but it seems to me that such people don't deserve to have a union."

U. S. Writer Says Britain's Health Plan There To Stay

As Britain's National Health Service passed its half-year mark, Americans looked overseas for guidance in their own health plan deliberations.

What they found is expected to lend impetus to Pres. Truman's efforts to get a national health insurance bill through Congress, for from all accounts, the British experiment is not only working, but is extremely popular. Following are excerpts from the comprehensive report written by the N. Y. Times London Bureau Chief, Herbert L. Matthews, which appeared in the Times magazine Jan. 9:

"THE GREATEST experiment in social service ever attempted by a democratic Government — Britain's "cradle-to-grave" National Health Service—has been in operation for six months. That is too short a time to pronounce it a success or a failure, but not too short to describe and assess its early life.

"It is yowling with aches and pains, but all things considered, one must account it a lusty infant . . .

"This old country has frequently shown a genius for new ideas, and it was natural that a Socialist Government should decide that a scheme which was designed to benefit 95% of the people ought to be good.

"Now everybody gets everything, so to speak. Doctors and dentists, specialists and hospitals, maternity and child welfare, home nursing, spectacles, dentures, wigs, deaf aids, artificial legs and other necessary appliances as well as all drugs and medicines are yours for the asking. You can have a baby, break a leg, get a toothache and go insane, and it won't cost you a penny of direct outlay . . .

"Most Britons today belong to the "national insurance" plan and every such insured person pays 4 shillings 11 pence (slightly under $1) per week by buying proper stamps at any postoffice. Of that amount 8½ pence (less than 15 cents) goes to the National Health Service; the rest is for old-age and widows' pensions, and unemployment, sickness and disablement benefits . . .

"Employers make a small contribution to the health scheme, but five-sixths of the total cost comes from the national budget. Higher income taxes take up part of the slack.

"NOW "Nye" Bevan (Britain's Minister of Health) is feeling moderately well pleased with himself and his National Health Service. It is creaking and groaning, but it is under way and gathering steam. In fact, some of the difficulties arise because it is almost too successful.

"Out of an estimated total of 21,000 general practitioners in England and Wales, more than 18,000 agreed voluntarily to join the scheme. There are about 10,000 dentists here, and 8,700 of them have joined up. Of the 14,000 chemists, as druggists are called here, virtually all are in the health service.

"Most impressive of all are the figures for patients. The population of England and Wales is about 43 million. Well over 40 million have registered with doctors, the remainder being mainly well-to-do and elderly who carry on with their old family physicians on a paying basis . . .

"As the figures suggest, the British public in general likes the new scheme. Demands of all kinds have been so great that Mr. Bevan had to make a public plea recently for everybody to go easy . . .

"Typical of the general reaction to the scheme is the attitude of young Mistress Doris Collier whose husband, a clerk, pays his "4 and 11" weekly. She says she likes it much better now.

"Not being insured, Mistress Collier used to have to go to a district nurse and to pay for pre-natal care. Now she is getting better care for her coming child and getting it free along with a weekly grant for thirteen weeks and a lump sum of £4 when the baby is born . . .

"There can be no question that medical attention, medical appliances and medicines are more widely distributed than ever before . . .

"ON THE average, it is conceded that remuneration to doctors is fair, and it was, indeed, fixed by a committee composed half of doctors and half of laymen . . .

"It will be years before there are enough dentists, enough nurses and health visitors, enough hospitals and beds, and above all, before the 'health centers' that will form the real basis for service in the future are built. Success of the whole health act really depends on these centers, where doctors, specialists, nurses and clerical staffs will all work together, sharing expensive equipment and laboratories and handling their patients with maximum speed and efficiency.

"Meanwhile, if the National Health Service is working smoothly in 10 years, it will have been a great accomplishment. and there will be no turning back even if the Conservatives win the next general election, partly because eggs that are scrambled can't be unscrambled, and partly because everyone applauds the ideal behind the new service. Critics have no valid alternative to offer, which was why the British Medical Association finally agreed to cooperate with the scheme."

N. J.—PAC Plans T

LIGHT MOMENT: While the tone of the Jersey PAC conference was serious, there was an occasional chuckle, as this picture of a small group of delegates shows. But, there were few such occasions as a broad program was adopted.

NAME, PLEASE: The task of registering the record number of delegates and visitors fell to these three members of the State CIO office staff. They are Harold Ackerman, Beatrice Bloch and Alice Freidman. They sure had a busy day.

GREETINGS: N. J. Pres. Carl Holderman gives a hearty "hello" to Rep. Cleveland Bailey (D., W. Va.,), who was one of the feature speakers at the rally. Rep. Bailey, who came back to the 81st Congress after being defeated for reelection in 1946, had a perfect liberal voting record in the 79th Congress.

Here Is How PAC

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

WHEN PAC Dir. Jack Kroll said he wanted the CIO's political action work to extend down to the smallest block in the nation, he didn't mean just for national elections, with all their fanfare and glamor.

He meant that PAC should strive just as hard to get decent government in the state capitols, in the county offices, in the mayor's seat, in city, town and village administration. In fact, everywhere that public officials are elected by vote of the people.

Kroll and top CIO officials know that the job doesn't end when and if we get repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law and re-enactment of the Wagner Act. They know that there are on the books of many states laws that make T-H sound like the manifesto of the Fourth International.

They know that, because of the States' Rights fetish, the job isn't finished when and if Congress enacts strong civil rights legislation, adequate housing authorization, a meritorious health program, improved social security, etc. These all must be augmented and strengthened at the state level, too.

So, last week, the New Jersey State PAC held a conference which was a preview of what PAC bodies in other states will be doing—and doing earnestly—in the next few months. For, there probably is no area in which some office or other—large or small—isn't at stake this year.

The Jersey conference, held at Moose Hall, Trenton, was highly successful. More than 500 delegates, a record throng, attended.

It was significant that the conferences should be held in Trenton, the State capital. Because, under the new state constitution, which PAC and CIO cooperated in to win, the entire state house and one-third of the senate will be chosen this year.

A governor also will be elected. In addition, there will be a number of municipal elections, includ-

THE DELEGATES: A total of 529 delegates, representing every CIO union in New Jersey, attended the PAC conference. The camera here catches them in a serious mood as speakers emphasize the need for a State and local campaign equivalent to the Presidential drive so that the victory can be made complete.

"That would mean long delays before we get any decent labor laws.

"If we repeal T-H and reenact the Wagner Act and then sit down to consider any possible amendments to the NLRA, careful and serious consideration could be given and hasty action avoided. Labor's interests would be protected by the National Labor Relations Act and so would the public's.

"If unfair amendments were adopted, Truman would veto them and we would still have the Wagner Act on the books."

Pfft!

The New Jersey CIO officers' report noted that "although they had talked in terms of rolling up several hundred thousand votes in New Jersey, the Wallace party ended up with about 2% of the total vote."

• U. S. Rep. Charles Howell (D., N. J.): "It is a privilege to be here among you—you who did so much to help me achieve my victory."

• State CIO Pres. Carl Holderman: "All of us must share the financial burden of PAC this year. We should not let some willing locals carry all the freight."

• Harry Kranz, State CIO educational director: "The 1948 Legislature didn't adopt a single major recommendation from CIO."

The session, to implement its wide range program, adopted these resolutions:

Governor's cabinet: Gov. Driscoll was urged to name persons who would administer their jobs liberally and in the public interest to replace: Harry C. Harper, labor commissioner; Harold G. Hoffman, unemployment compensation head; Charles G. Erdman, Jr., economic development commissioner; Arthur F. Foran, milk control director.

Federal Legislative program: Unanimously approved CIO's platform.

State Legislation: A broad program covering unemployment compensation, sickness insurance, civil rights, workmen's compensation, taxation, housing, labor relations, education, veterans' bonus, welfare and time off to vote.

CIO appointments: Called on Driscoll to give CIO proper representation on state bodies.

American Bowling Congress: This athletic group, which will have a national competition in Atlantic City soon, was sharply criticized for limiting its competitors to males of the Caucasian race.

Point of issue was a section which called for a "voluntary contribution from local unions, amounting to 20 cents per member per year, to be allocated to a special fund for political education." This could be from local treasuries or collected in some other manner.

It would be in addition to funds collected by the dollar drive.

Opponents said they feared the 20 cents might discourage dollar contributions. Proponents pointed to the need for political education funds.

Holderman brought the dispute to an end by proposing that the 20 cents be applicable only to locals which had failed to collect 50% of their dollar quotas by July 1.

His substitute proposal passed overwhelmingly.

No candidates were indorsed. Local PAC bodies will handle indorsements for their own areas.

Last fall, PAC helped to elect Howell; Peter Rudino, in the 10th Congressional District, Rep. Fred Hartley's former bailiwick, and Hugh Addonizio, in the 11th.

The possible indorsement of a candidate for the governorship must also be considered by the Jersey PAC.

* * *

The deliberations of the New Jersey PAC will soon be duplicated in other states, as we have said.

As Kroll has pointed out, there is a lot of work to be done and it must of necessity be done mostly at the local level.

National PAC will provide advice and material of a general nature, but the people in the blocks, the precincts, the wards, the counties and the states will decide the final outcome.

It's YOUR PAC—

Victory

The Central New Jersey CIO Council (Trenton area) held a victory dinner after the State conference.

There was plenty of reason for the celebration. There was the victory of Rep. Howell and there was the startling reversal for the Republicans in Burlington county.

Stateside

In Burlington county, James F. Davis, Jr. (D) won by 1500 votes; in Passaic, Vincent E. Hull (D.), came in by 3500 votes—both of those major upsets—and in Middlesex Bernard W. Vogel (D.) has a margin of 20,000.

In Some States

Take Any Job Offered or Get No Compensation

MANY of you who have done collective bargaining for your union with your ever-loving boss have heard his line: "If my employes don't like conditions here, why don't they take a job somewhere else where they foolishly pay better?"

Let's see what some states do when you change jobs.

In Delaware, as late as last September, a sheet metal worker (union man) had last received $2.25 an hour for his type of work. The Employment office offered him work at $1.50 an hour. Realizing that this would harm his future chances of work at the regular union rate, he refused to take it.

He was denied unemployment compensation on the grounds that he had refused work for which he was "reasonably fitted."

In another Delaware decision, a worker, who also had made $2.25 an hour, refused referral to work at $1.65 an hour. Result: No compensation.

Luckily for him, he was able, after three weeks' unemployment, to get a job at his former ($2.25) rate of pay.

YOU MAY RECALL the Louisiana case which the CIO News reported some weeks back. The unemployment compensation decision in that case is so unfair that it is worth repeating.

A seamstress had averaged $22 a week in her past employment. Last June, she refused work at 31c an hour, stating that there would be nothing left of her daily pay of $2.48 after paying car fare, lunch, etc.

She said she could take work a $20 a week (incidentally, she has five children).

The big-hearted appeals referee removed the maximum disqualification which had been assessed for this job refusal, but disqualified her for two weeks, declaring she should have contacted the employer to ascertain possibilities of advancement.

In Alabama, a father, who also had five children, quit his last employment because he was unable to support that large family in $25 a week.

His previous job had paid $30—he had made $25 a week for 10 years before that. He was disqualified for "voluntarily" leaving without good cause "inasmuch as the records show that he made approximately the same wages with the exception of seven months that he had made for the past 10 years."

In Maryland, a machine operator who was being paid 60c an hour quit after five days because of the low pay. She also had prospects of a better job, which she took a short time later for $1 an hour.

She was refused compensation for the interim period—it would have been at the rate of $20 a week—because, the referee said, "the position (the 60c an hour job) paid above the claimant's weekly benefit allowance. The work was within her qualifications and her reason for leaving does not constitute good cause."

Another example of "chaining" a person to a job and hinder chances for betterment.

In Mississippi, a girl worked as a sewing machine operator and instructor for a company which had a wage range of 40 to 78c an hour. She was in the higher wage range.

The company wanted to demote her to a 40c scales job, which she refused because of the low wage.

The Mississippi unemployment set-up denied her compensation on the grounds that the 40c pay was not substandard.

This is another in the CIO News' series of social security articles, designed to prove that the unemployment and employment features should be operated by the National Government to put an end to the chaos and unfairness of the 48 state systems.

Court Rules State Can't Act For NLRB

UNIONS seeking representation elections which think they can get a better deal by going to their state labor instead of the regional NLRB office will have to think twice as a result of the Supreme Court's decision last week.

The Court ruled unanimously that the individual states cannot assume jurisdiction in interstate labor relations where the NLRB has power but has not formally applied that power. It was the first time that the Court has been asked to rule on the theory of "concurrent control" in the field of labor.

The case involved AFL Electrical Workers local B-953 and Division 23 of the independent Communications Workers of America, both of LaCrosse, Wis. In 1941 the IBEW was "approved" as bargaining agent of the LaCrosse Telephone Corp., by the NLRB regional director for an election to challenge the IBEW, and then withdrew its petition to go instead to the Wisconsin State Employment Relations Board. The state board held an election and the CWA emerged the winner.

Joined subsequently by the NLRB, the AFL union appealed the decision through the Circuit Court and the Court of Appeals to the Supreme Court on the grounds that the NLRB had not specifically waived jurisdiction, as it may in some instances under Taft-Hartley, and hence still held authority.

The high court agreed with this contention, and Justice Douglas said in the decision that the presence of a state labor board operating under a different theory of representation "can be readily disruptive if the orders of the boards made a head-on collision."

Vegetable Seed

A CARE vegetable seed package containing potential vast harvests of food for needy European families is now being offered by CARE for guaranteed delivery to 11 European countries. Orders may be sent to CARE, 50 Broad St., New York 4, as well as to all other CARE offices throughout the country.

500 Wagner Cases Still Unsettled

THE NLRB IS moving fast to clear up back Taft-Hartley business but it still has more than 500 cases arising under the old Wagner Act still on its books as evidence of the power of employers to stall and delay, a monthly NLRB report showed last week.

Thanks to a slowdown in the flood of union shop authorization elections made necessary by the Taft-Hartley law, the NLRB cut its backlog of pending cases down to 6,110 during December. Of these, 483 are Wagner act cases involving unfair labor practices by employers, and 66 involve petition for representation elections.

The December NLRB record was typical of the Taft-Hartley period. The number of representation elections held was below Wagner Act standards, and the percentage of union victories was likewise lower.

UNIONS WON only 67% of the polls held, compared with a consistent 75% record in Wagner Act days. And nearly a quarter of the union victories were scored by unions termed "unaffiliated," many of which have a distinct company aroma

Decertification elections, a new feature under the Taft-Hartley law, brought eight union-killings out of 13 such polls, although only 50% of the workers involved voted against the union. The NLRB has 98 more

Unfair labor practices by labor unions, a concept invented by the Taft-Hartley law, made up 21% of all unfair charges.

The Ohio State Council Convention was held in Cleveland, January 13-16, and it exceeded in attendance any previous convention of the council. Delegates enthusiastically and overwhelmingly endorsed CIO policy. I had the pleasure of addressing the gathering and renewing many old acquaintances, reminiscent of the early CIO.

Inaugural festivities are now getting under way here in Washington. President Truman looks every bit the champion he proved himself to be on November 2, 1948. At the recent banquet of the Truman-Barkley Club, the President renewed his pledge to carry out his campaign promise.

Wage Plea of 30,000 Rejected

A NEW METHOD of determining validity of a union's case for wage increases —arbitration by crystal-gazing—has killed the hopes of 30,000 New England CIO cotton and rayon textile employes for wage boosts this year.

In addition, some 60,000 textile workers in the Middle Atlantic area may suffer the same fate as a result of this unexpected development.

The union's demand for a 10c hourly increase was flatly refused by Arbitrator Douglas V. Brown, Massachusetts Institute of Technology professor.

Ignoring the union's brief quoting the industry's high profits, Prof. Brown based his decision on what he considered to be the "outlook for industry." If textile workers were granted higher wage, he reasoned, the result might be unemployment in the industry.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve said the decision "is a deep disappointment to us. It not only denies these 30,000 employes any raise at all, but it has the effect of denying a raise to 60,000 others in the Middle Atlantic area. We will have to withdraw from similar arbitration cases involving other cotton and rayon mills."

Another TWUA official said that Brown had chosen to go along with management's views instead of heeding the union's repeated assertions that the current textile market slump is the result of high prices. "Nothing," he said, "but lower prices will stimulate a bigger volume of business and hence more profits. But again our ideas have been disregarded."

Union Hall Raid Costs City $11,500

Damage suits filed against Kansas City, Kans., by the CIO United Packinghouse Workers after a raid last April on the union's Cudahy strike headquarters have been settled.

The city settled the 54 suits for a total of $11,300. Settlements averaged $260, ranging from $100 to $1,500.

PACT COVERS 11,500: More job security is one of the features of the agreement being signed by representatives of the CIO Telephone Traffic Employes Organization of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. and the Bell Telephone Co. of Nevada. Signing the contract which covers 11,500 employes in the traffic department in North California and Nevada are, l. to r., seated: Gertrude Venitz, negotiating committee member; Marie A. DeMartini, union president; W. H. Nunn, general traffic manager, PT&T; Mabel Henrietta, negotiating committee member, and Irene Aiken, negotiating committee member. Standing, l. to r.: Rosemary Fisher, negotiating committee member; Harold Ash, CIO National Representative; Alex Blackman, TWOC Field Representative; Iva Briglia, negotiating committee member, and M. M. Smith and M. J. Ahnstedt, Assistant General Traffic Managers, PT&T.

AT&T Accused of Anti-Trust Violations

THE MAMMOTH American Telephone & Telegraph Co. is in the soup with Uncle Sam.

Just as it was riding high on a new record-breaking wave of profits, the world's largest corporation found itself being accused by the government of extensive violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

Specifically, the government's aim is to break up the AT&T-Western Electric combination in order to introduce competition into the 'phone manufacturing industry. Western Electric, an AT&T subsidiary, has been the exclusive supplier of telephone equipment for the parent organization since 1900.

The Justice Department suit charges that this situation "permits these two concerns to control both plant investments and operating expenses, factors upon which the federal and state regulatory authorities must fix rates to be charged subscribers. . ."

Thus, it is possible—and it has been frequently charged—for Western Electric to hike its prices; AT&T "buys" for bookkeeping purposes, at those prices, then AT&T appeals to the rate-fixing commissions for phone rate increases, based on increased "costs."

THE GOVERNMENT hopes to force AT&T to sell its entire stock ownership of Western to persons who have no relations with AT&T. Western would then be divided into three companies. In addition, the court is asked to compel AT&T to buy equipment only after competitive bidding and to license its patents to all applicants on a royalty basis.

Another monopoly charge leveled against AT&T in the brief accused the company of controlling all basic patents in the field of wire telephony, with the result that AT&T allegedly has been able to suppress improvements in telegraphy by refusing to make available certain patents "essential to enable telegraphy to compete efficiently with telephony."

The suit was filed in the federal district court at Newark, N. J.

Meanwhile, in the midst of Bell System pleadings for rate increases throughout the country—and notably in New York state—the company's 1948 profit statement appeared.

Said AT&T Pres. Leroy A. Wilson: "We are confident that regulatory bodies will approve the increases in rates necessary to keep the telephone companies in a position to continue their long-term progress in increasing the scope and value of the service."

Few Jobs in Chicago

Chicago, the nation's second largest city, is showing signs of a tightening labor market, according to summaries of 1948 job conditions. Employment fell from a 1947 peak of 2,107,000 to 2,070,800 before the old year ended.

CIO Phone Pact Covers 11,500

The CIO Telephone Traffic Employes Organization of Northern California and Nevada has been recognized as bargaining agent for 11,500 traffic employes by the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. and the Bell Telephone Co. of Nevada.

Recognition of the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee affiliate was extended after the union presented dues reduction cards signed by a majority of the employes.

A new contract became effective Jan. 16 and will run 18 months. This was considered a major accomplishment by union spokesmen, who noted that most of the agreements signed by the telephone companies this year are of three years' duration.

In addition to including the wage increase won by the union last October, the new agreement provides for the first time seniority as the basis for promotions, union participation in all grievances, liberalized leave of absence and excused absence clauses and paid carfare home for those working split tours.

IN REAL LIFE, TOO: In the movies the newspaperman usually gets the suspect, but this picture shows that it sometimes happens in real life. William Ahlstrom, Chester (Pa.) Times reporter and News Guild delegate to the County CIO Council, is standing back of Harry Rumford, captured by the newspaperman after he got away from Chester detectives, two of whom are posing in the picture. Rumford allegedly confessed to burglary.

Stop Draft Of Seamen —Murray

CIO PRES. Murray has called upon Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, head of the Selective Service System, to halt induction into the armed services of "active skilled merchant seamen."

Murray declared that continued induction of these men "will seriously jeopardize the maintenance of a merchant marine adequate to serve as an auxiliary to the armed forces."

A recent Coast Guard survey has indicated that over 20% of licensed officers and merchant seamen are within the draft age.

"Since a large portion of these skilled merchant seamen are in the upper age brackets subject to the draft, and since inductions are proceeding from the upper ages downward, continued induction of skilled merchant seamen will result in serious delay of vessels, thereby hampering the delivery of military supplies to our overseas forces, the delivery of ECA commodities and the normal commerce of the United States," the CIO president declared in the letter to General Hershey.

Many local draft boards, on their own initiative, are deferring skilled merchant seamen, Murray pointed out, but a national directive designating skilled maritime occupations as "essential to the national interest" is necessary to cope with the situation.

CIO Council Protests Maryland Loyalty Bill

THE Maryland-D. C. CIO Council will seek the defeat of a proposed Free State law—presumably aimed at the Communist party.

Council Pres. Frank Bender last week said that the bill could be used to hamper union organizational activities and has named a committee to make the council's stand known to Governor Lane and the state legislature.

The bill, which would provide a fine of $20,000 or 20 years imprisonment for both for joining an organization seeking to overthrow the government, is contained in a 115-page report submitted to Governor Lane by a committee headed by Frank B. Ober, Baltimore attorney.

The Ober committee also proposes a $5,000 fine or five years or both for continuing to belong to any subversive organization after Sept. 1; barring any convicted persons from public office and the right to vote, and loyalty checks for all state, city and county employes.

His committee would also create a special assistant to the attorney general whose job it would be to provide the district attorney of any county with information about communism, to be collected by the state and the local police.

Bender said that while he is anti-Communist, zealous but misunderstanding police are likely to smear unions falsely, particularly when they are engaged in organizational activities.

He also pointed out that the measure might be used to imprison union organizers by labeling them Communists.

BENDER SAID that the Ober committee is the outgrowth of a meeting at Baltimore last fall, sponsored by the Baltimore Kiwanis Club with Sen. William C. Carter as its principal speaker.

The meeting was held to set up an organization to campaign for a proposed amendment to the Maryland constitution—subsequently approved by the voters—which bars from public office anyone believing in the overthrow of the government.

(Carter was sponsor of the resolution setting up the committee, which included two other state senators, three members of the Maryland House, and former Mayor Howard W. Jackson of Baltimore.)

WFTU Unit Split, Carey Walks Out

THE EXECUTIVE bureau of the World Federation of Trade Unions split wide open in Paris last week.

Turned down by a 4-3 vote on a proposal to place the WFTU "on ice" for a year, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and representatives of British and Dutch unions walked out of the bureau meeting.

The break marked a climax in a two-year struggle between Communist and non-Communist national labor organizations represented in the WFTU. The struggle focussed in large part over the question of the WFTU's attitude toward the Marshall Plan.

In the vote on the British proposal to suspend the WFTU's activities for a year, according to news dispatches from Paris, Communist-led unions from the Soviet Union, France, Italy and China comprised the four-vote majority. The CIO, the British Trades Union Congress and the Dutch unions voted for the 12-month suspension in the hope that east-west political difficulties might clear up in the interim.

FINAL ACTION on CIO's relationship with the WFTU will probably be taken at a CIO board meeting in Washington on March 2. The last CIO convention authorized the CIO board and the executive officers "to take whatever action in relation to the WFTU and the international labor movement as will best accomplish CIO policies and objectives."

A CIO delegation consisting of Carey, Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers, Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers and Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the Auto Workers traveled to London earlier this month to confer with British union leaders about future developments in the international labor scene. CIO Vice-Pres. Frank Rosenblum, a WFTU bureau member, was unable to make the trip.

The group then headed for Berne, Switzerland, for a meeting of the ERP Trade Union Advisory Council. The council comprises pro-ERP unions in the Marshall Plan nations together with CIO and AFL.

After the WFTU vote, Carey told a New York Herald Tribune reporter that "we now have a better chance of coming to an understanding with the Russians. There was no chance as long we were inside."

Vassily Kuznetsov, secretary of the Soviet unions and a WFTU vice-president, told reporters after the bureau meeting broke up that the WFTU would be continued by those unions still adhering to it. But Paris observers expected non-Communist unions throughout the world would disaffiliate.

AT ITS PEAK the WFTU represented about 70 million workers and comprised every important labor body in the world with the exception of the AFL. It was formed at a world trade union congress in Paris in October 1945.

After development of the Marshall Plan, CIO took the lead in seeking a WFTU endorsement of ERP as consistent with the world labor's groups original resolution calling for post-war economic rehabilitation of Europe. But the Communist anti-ERP unions prevented adoption of such a stand.

The CIO and the British unions, however, were able to prevent use of the WFTU as anti-Marshall Plan sounding board. Other issues, reflecting the growing split between east and west, made it constantly more difficult for the two groups within WFTU to map out a constructive program of action on major problems facing labor throughout the world.

The WFTU executive bureau, where last week's split occurred, is a nine-man body on which the largest and most important labor unions have been represented.

President of the federation until last week's dispute was Arthur Deakin, secretary of the British Transport & General Workers Union and a leading figure in British labor.

'LABOR AND NATION' BANQUET: CIO Pres. Murray received Labor and Nation Magazine's leadership citation at a banquet in New York's Hotel Commodore. Shown at speakers' table are Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Clothing Workers; Editor J. B. S. Hardman of the magazine; New York CIO Council Pres. Louis Hollander; and Steelworkers Vice-Pres. James Thimmes. Thimmes read the speech for Pres. Murray, who was prevented by a cold from attending.

9 Companies Convicted in Lamp Corner'

NINE industrial giants in the electrical field have been found guilty of conspiracy in restraint of trade and one—General Electric—was found guilty of participation in an international cartel.

Federal District Court Judge Philip Forman, in a 313-page opinion, held that eight firms combined to help GE maintain its monopoly in the incandescent lamp (light bulb) industry.

Others named were Intl. General Electric Co.; Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co.; Corning Glass Works, N. V. Phillips' Gloeilampensfabriken; Consolidated Electric Lamp Co.; Hygrade Sylvania Corp.; Chicago Miniature Lamp Works and Tung-Sol Lamp Works.

But the violations probably won't cost the offenders a cent. No monetary penalties were imposed. The Government has simply been asked to file requests for the specific relief it wants. This usually involves a request for injunctions against continuance of the illegal acts and abrogation of illegal contracts.

Co-op Drive Begins

The largest co-op membership drive ever staged in the U. S. has been launched by the Consumers Cooperative Assn., over 27 radio stations in eight midwestern states.

NAM May Try To Lull Us With Sweet Radio Music

THE NATL. Association of Manufacturers is thinking of dipping into its well-filled coffers to pay for a $1,500,000 radio show in an effort to "sell" its ideas to the American people.

NAM's ad agency—Benton & Bowles—is blueprinting a half-hour weekly show featuring Andre Kostelanetz and Gladys Swarthout, as well as guest singers from colleges throughout the country.

The program would keep its "commercial" down to 200 words, plus a one-minute interview with business men around the country.

If plans for the show are adopted by the NAM's board meeting Jan. 26, it will mark a sharp breakaway with previous NAM's previous radio experiments.

NAM currently is producing a weekly 15-minute interview with Earl Bunting, NAM's managing director. Bunting, who talks at length on "why profits are really low" or why we should return to the gold standard, does not turn in one of radio's most brilliant performances.

This year the NAM applied for time on NBC's America United Sunday afternoon program. That show—a round table forum—is sponsored jointly by the CIO, the AFL, the Chamber of Commerce and two farm organizations, with each group getting control of the program for a certain number of weeks a year.

NAM's invitation was accepted but later rejected when it developed that the business organization had a policy of not appearing in debates, at least with spokesmen for labor.

NBC officials, it is believed, dropped NAM from the schedule when they saw no way of placing an organization with a "no debate" policy on a round-table discussion program.

Hollywood Regaining Its Nerve?

THE NOVEMBER 2 elections had lots of after-effects—not the least important of them in Hollywood.

Variety, entertainment trade paper, reports that Hollywood movie barons are beginning to recover from the wave of fear induced by the House Un-American Activities Committee probe and last spring's political atmosphere.

As a result, movie production schedules heavily loaded down with "pure entertainment" are beginning again to find space for movies of "social significance."

One such project is a story about the problems of a Negro doctor in a "white medical world." Variety quotes the movie firm's editor as "declaring flatly that the yarn would not have been purchased by the company six months ago."

"Even more important," continues Variety, "is the willingness of other studios to consider submissions of stories treating of serious social, economic or racial problem.

"Whereas three months ago most producers didn't even want to look at a yarn that smelled of anything beyond straight entertainment, they've clearly changed their mood since last Nov. 2."

THE SHOW BUSINESS paper said that "all last year, with the hot breath of the House Un-American Activities Committee upon them, the studios meticulously avoided stories which tinge of anything in which Rep. Thomas and his cohorts might remotely find reason for further finger-pointing.

"The committee had whipped the anti-red hysteria to such a frenzy that plain liberalism had become a brightening thing and producers weren't sure how much the public temper was reflected in the Un-American committee. . .

"Election of Mr. Truman and the general swing to a more liberal view—as well as the defeat of several members of the Un-American committee itself—is obviously being taken as proof that there is room for occasional pix with a bit more in them than pure entertainment."

Gov. Kerr Says He'll Assist the Negroes

North Carolina's newly-inaugurated Gov. W. Kerr Scott, elected with labor support, has served notice that he will champion the rights of Negroes.

Addressing the N. C. Dairy Products Association, Scott said it was time the state stopped dodging the race question.

"I am going to follow through to see that the minority race has a fair opportunity and gets the training" to fit it into the state's growth, he said.

"I am firmly convinced that we have got to go ahead and meet the issue of the minority race. They came here against their will, brought in chains."

Scott is also committed to fighting for repeal of state anti-labor legislation.

With 1108 Delegates Present

Ohio CIO Backs Farmers; Denounces Taft

WHEN they talk about farm-labor unity in Ohio, they mean business.

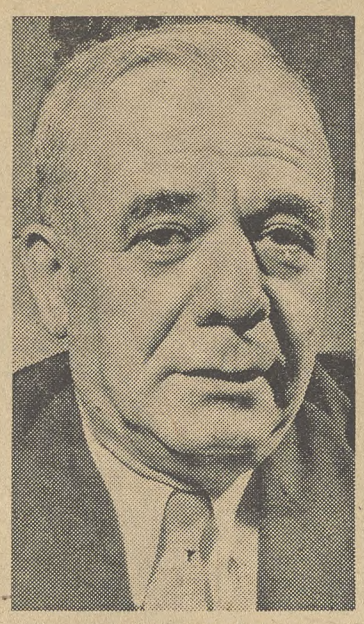
It was a labor convention, but three of the main speakers were top state farm leaders. The labor speakers devoted a good part of their talks to farm needs and the common objectives of rural and city dwellers. Among the resolutions and in the group's statement of policy, friendliness toward the farmer occupied a conspicuous place.

Together in 1948, the two groups had been able to put Ohio in the Democratic column. This four-day meeting in Cleveland sounded the warning to Ohio Republican Robert Taft that they intended to do it again, come 1950.

Delegates minced no words in expressing their opinion of the T-H law's co-author. The closing lines of the council's statement of policy state flatly: "To the defeat of Sen. Taft in 1950 we hereby solemnly pledge ourselves."

That was the principal focal point at the Ohio State CIO convention last week. It was in line with the group's emphasis on political action which befits a council headed by the Natl. CIO-PAC Dir., Jack Kroll.

Many other things also occupied the 1,108 delegates' attention. There was, for instance, the almost stereotyped left-right conflict, in which the administration foes were routed by a 5-to-1 margin.



JACK KROLL

Heads Ohio CIO for eighth successive term; continues to direct PAC.

There was much criticism of the inadequacy of present old-age pensions, unemployment, and workmen's compensation.

There was considerable discussion of the CIO and the Democratic party program. And there was a resolution specifically reminding the Democrats that the people back home were expecting "an early translation of their commitments into legislation and practice."

THE THREE farm leaders who addressed the laborites made it clear they considered any threat to unions a threat to their own well-being.

Said Joseph W. Fichter, master of the Ohio State Grange: "Our position is that any law placing obstacles in the way of such organizations as ours is un-American. If this curb (Taft-Hartley) on labor is successful, next will come the farmer and other groups, and we will all go out of business."

Murray D. Lincoln, president of the Ohio Farm Bureau Insurance Companies, commended the CIO for attaching the same importance to the welfare of all people as to the well-being of its own members.

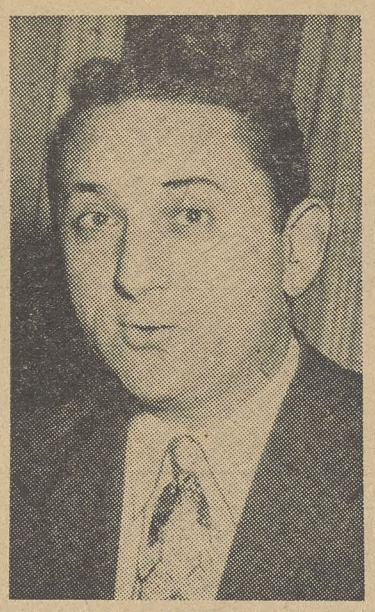
Glenn Howard, president of the Ohio branch of the Natl. Farmers Union, noted that CIO's objectives were the same as those of his organization. President as well of CIO Steelworkers local 3059, Howard said he hoped that the farm-labor unity exhibited last November will continue.

In his opening statement, Council Pres. Kroll emphasized the CIO's belief in the farm parity program. "Our friends want a stable price program. That's their minimum wage. They're going to get it and we're going to help them get it," he pledged. The same sentiments were later expressed by the convention in a resolution.

The resolution on PAC, modeled after the National CIO's, brought about the only major battle of the convention waged by the Wallaceites.

Opponents said they objected to "the theory that anyone not going down the line with Natl. CIO policy was doing a disservice to organized labor."

It was a left-wing mimeographed pamphlet, attacking both state and national CIO leadership, which finally aroused the anger of Kroll.



JACOB CLAYMAN

Assistant Secretary-Treasurer becomes secretary-treasurer of Ohio CIO.

Customarily calm and patient, the PAC leader lashed into those responsible for the pamphlet, terming the act a "sneak trick."

"They want unity," he snapped, "but only on their own terms.

"I've been overly fair and tolerant in respecting the viewpoints of others," he continued. "In discussions here you daren't mention the word 'communism' or you'll be accused of being a red-baiter."

The temperature rose further when CIO Vice Pres. and Organizational Dir. Allan S. Haywood vehemently chastised the left-wingers, terming them "the drifting souls of the trade union movement."

JOHN BROPHY, CIO council's director, stressed the program of the CIO councils, which he said is to "carry forward the democratic ideals of trade unionism."

The reading of each proposed resolution on state or national legislation was followed by Kroll's reading of the pertinent plank in the Democratic party platform.

One unscheduled development followed passage of the resolution on old age benefits. Two men, ages 70 and 72, both retired citizens attempting to live on Ohio's maximum pension of $55 a month, visited the Ohio CIO chiefs at the convention. Appointing themselves a committee of two, they wanted to thank the CIO for its continuing battle in behalf of the old people.

Neither had ever delivered a public address before, but they were squeezed into the agenda to address the convention. In faltering, but moving language, one told how he lives on his monthly stipend. Every stitch of clothes he had on, he said, was bought from rag pickers at a total cost of $2.50.

Delegates' esteem for their president was demonstrated when they by acclamation returned Kroll to his eighth successive term as Council head. Jacob Clayman, formerly assistant secretary-treasurer and the state CIO's attorney, was named secretary-treasurer. He succeeds William Lavelle, who has been appointed assistant legislative director of the national CIO.

Make Congressmen Live Up To Pledges, Conn. CIO Told

THE successful PAC campaign, considered a major factor in the election of former Price Administrator Chester Bowles as governor of Connecticut, was praised by Bowles as a fight for "principles and not for a man."

Addressing the 11th annual convention of the Connecticut CIO Council last week in Hartford, Bowles said it was up to the "liberal Congress in Washington to go down the line for the things they were elected on."

He said the CIO had also done well in recognizing that labor was not alone in the fight to get ahead. "Your organization has done a great deal to bring greater understanding between labor, the farmer and business. No one group can progress at the expense of another. Labor knows that."

The new governor praised the appointment of Dean Acheson as Secretary of State, describing him as a "great liberal" who would help America "beat communism."

Re-election of all officers and the unanimous adoption of a 13-point legislative program highlighted the convention, which was described by Connecticut CIO leaders as "the most successful in the Council's history."

THE 310 delegates re-named Mitchell Sviridoff to his second term as president, John J. Driscoll to his 11th consecutive term as secretary-treasurer. All other nominees for office were elected without opposition.

Textile Workers Pres. Emil Rieve, the other chief speaker, called for a New England governors' conference to initiate a river power development program for Connecticut.

"Power costs are higher in New England than they are in most other parts of the country. They are higher for industry and higher for individuals," Rieve said.

He said 15,000 kilowatt hours of electricity cost $361 in Hartford, Conn., compared with $205 in Chattanooga, where the Tennessee Valley Authority operates.

CONNECTICUT is faced with a serious recession, according to Commissioner John J. Egan of the Connecticut Labor Department, another convention speaker.

Egan promised there would be no state anti-labor legislation, voiced the need for a state-supported sickness insurance program and called for 77 additional employes in the state unemployment division to speed up action on benefits.

The present officers of the Council gained an overwhelming victory in resisting the attack on the administrative structure of the Council, defeating by more than eight to one the proposal to make the secretary-treasurer post a full-time job.

House Unit Aided Smear ---Havenner

REP. FRANCK HAVENNER (D., Calif.) has accused a subcommittee of the House Labor Committee of conspiring with his Republican opponent to smear him in the November election.

"It failed of its purpose at the polls," Havenner told the House last week.

1. The subcommittee, composed of Rep. Charles Kersten (R., Wis.)—he was defeated for re-election—and Rep. O. L. Fisher (D., Tex.) held a hearing in San Francisco, at which a witness said that communist front funds had been spent on Havenner's political campaigns. The subcommittee did not call Havenner for his side of the story, even though the hearing was held in his district.

2. A representative of the Hearst press, Howard Rushmore, attended a meeting as Kersten conferred with the witness, William Patrick Brandhove. (The San Francisco Examiner, a Hearst paper, had led the editorial attack on Havenner, declaring "a vote for Havenner is a vote for Bridges and the Kremlin.")

(Though the Examiner carried a retraction—after the election!—Havenner has filed a libel suit and will press it.)

3. Brandhove, in sworn statements, revealed the above and also the fact that William Mailliard, Havenner's Republican opponent, had propositioned him to run for Congress against Havenner in the primary, so that he could use the Communist smear on Havenner.

←They Meet . . .

One of the major objectives of the CIO is social security benefits by legislation and by collective bargaining. These pictures (and the article on Pages 6 and 7) illustrate one phase of this.

To the left are top labor and management trustees of the social fund of the CIO Auto Workers and the Kaiser-Frazer Corp. They are Frank Cotter (right), president of UAW local 142 and chairman of the trustees, and Joaquin F. Reis, secretary - treasurer of the fund. Filibuster Curb Faces Hard Fight

EFFORTS TO end Senate filibusters by a simple majority vote are meeting rough weather on Capitol Hill.

Sen. Wayne Morse (R. Ore.) and Sen. Francis Myers (D. Pa.) have both advocated the majority vote method as the only practicable way of stopping the talk-fests which southern conservatives have often used to stop action in the Senate.

But the southern polltax bloc is up in arms against even the mildest proposal to change Senate rules, which now require a two-thirds vote to cut off debate. Loopholes make this procedure of little value.

Many northern Republicans, while talking strongly about the need for ending filibusters, have indicated they favor the two-thirds rule—though they would close a few of the loopholes.

As a practical matter, however, the two-thirds rule in any form gives the Southern conservative bloc a powerful and almost unbeatable veto over legislation. That veto power is almost certain to be used on any civil rights bills coming into the Senate.

SEN. MORSE—a longtime advocate of the change in Senate procedure—told the Senate Rules Committee last week:

"If a simple majority of the Congress can declare war, or pass other vital legislation, certainly a majority of the Senate should be able to decide when it wants to shut off debate."

Morse reminded the Committee that the two-thirds rule against filibusters has been successful only four times in 32 years, though it has been often tried.

Sen. Carl Hayden (D. Ariz.), chairman of the Rules Committee, indicated his sympathy lay with those who would keep the two-thirds requirement. He would extend its use to cover two items of business which have often been used by filibusterers —amendments to the journal of the Senate, and motions to consider new business.

Many Washington observers believe that the southern polltaxers will go along with the proposals of Hayden and Sen. Wherry (R. Nebr.) to allow limited debate on those two matters—if a two-thirds majority so votes.

The southerners, it is believed, would take this as much the lesser of two evils, and would hope to round up the necessary 33 votes to keep debate open as long as they desire.

Sen. Stennis (D. Miss.) offered a "concession" support of a plan to prevent filibusters on matters affecting national security and foreign affairs, if such a plan can be worked out. Sen. Taft (R. O.), after attending a GOP policy group meeting, said he would go for that idea.

Will Press for $1 Minimum Pay; Some Increase Almost Certain

CIO spokesmen will tell Congress this week of the need for sharp increases in the minimum wage, with the objective of winning $1-an-hour base levels.

A bill under consideration by the House Labor Committee provides for raising the general minimum from the present 40c an hour to 75c. It also permits the establishment of industry committees which can recommend minimum rates of as high as $1-an-hour for workers in those industries.

Representatives of at least three CIO unions will testify before the House Labor Committee on Tuesday as that group considers proposals for immediate strengthening of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

The present minimum wage of 40c an hour came into effect in 1940, and has been made obsolete by the sharp increases in living standards since that time. But every effort to increase the minimum and to expand the wage-hour law's coverage has ended in failure.

With Pres. Truman and Congressional Democrats committed by platform and campaign speeches to the increase, improvements are almost certain at this session of Congress. The question will be not whether the minimum should be increased, but by how much.

CIO'S convention resolution called for $1 an hour, in order to protect fair-wage employers from sweatshop competition in case of future depression.

The union witnesses Tuesday will be Irving Levy, counsel of the Auto Workers; a spokesman for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers; and Sol Barkin of the Textile Workers Union.

Since these and other unions presented lengthy economic and legal arguments at wage-hour hearings called by ex-Sen. Ball (R. Minn.) last year, it is anticipated that the testimony will be fairly brief, and will carry the 1948 arguments forward to the present time.

IT'S LEGAL: The boy in this picture is legally employed as a cotton picker because he's too young for school and therefore does not come under the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act which prohibits children from working during school hours. The wage-hour inspectors found 89 children, aged 6 to 15, illegally employed on farms during the 1948 harvest season.

The Administration is understood to want the hearings finished and legislation recommended by the Committee by mid-February.

Sec. of Labor Maurice Tobin, opening witness at the hearings last Thursday, supported the "Administration bill." He acknowledged the justice of the $1-an-hour minimum as a goal, but recommended that Congress at this time lift the general base pay to 75c an hour.

GIVING STRONG approval to suggestions for establishing industry committees, Tobin said: "The objective here is a universal minimum rate of $1 an hour."

The bill also contains provisions for widening Wage-Hour law coverage, insuring federal protection for millions of workers not now affected. Tobin strongly underscored the need for considerable improvement in the law's child labor section, power for the Wage-Hour administration to supervise payment of back wages due under the law, and power to sue employers in behalf of workers for recovery of back pay.

Rep. John Lesinski (D. Mich.), head of the Labor Committee, said that the proposed bill was drawn up principally "as a basis for conducting hearings."

The bill would narrow the number of seasonal workers now exempted from the Wage-Hour law and increase its coverage among department store employes.

CIO Help Pledged in Store Drive

THE FULL support of the CIO behind the drive of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers to organize employes in the department stores and retail clothing chains of America was promised by Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president in charge of organization.

Haywood addressed a session of the Amalgamated General Executive Board in Washington, D. C., attended by 100 key Amalgamated organizers called together from all parts of the country to consider plans for the department store campaign.

Haywood assured the Amalgamated delegation that all the CIO resources would be put behind the campaign and said that the Amalgamated, as far as CIO is concerned, is the only organization in the field to which it will confine itself.

ACW Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, reiterated his union's determination to organize the unorganized in the department store field and to protect the CIO interest in this field "to the fullest extent of its ability."

He announced that regional offices have been set up in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Rochester and Chicago and that they would be extended to other cities. Potofsky reported that 3,000 department store and retail clothing employes in Detroit have joined the Amalgamated and that organization is growing in other centers.

Both Potofsky and Frank Rosenblum, Amalgamated secretary-treasurer, reported a substantial increase in membership and resources during the past year. The union is making progress in the South and elsewhere, they reported.

Hyman Blumberg, Amalgamated vice president, reported $50,000,000 in Amalgamated social insurance reserves and that the coverage has been extended to include retail clothing salesmen and men's neckwear workers who are establishing funds of their own.

Potofsky announced that the Amalgamated would proceed at once with its union label promotion campaign by means of daily newspaper, national magazine, trade paper and radio advertising.

Threat To All Democracies

SHORTAGE of newsprint is having serious effects throughout the world by "curtailing seriously the flow of information in many countries," the CIO Newspaper Guild has pointed out after a long and thorough study of newsprint problems.

The study, released in the form of a 120-page report and a pamphlet summary, charged that "feasible solutions" to the solution do exist—but "no unified measures are being taken to solve the newsprint problem."

"New sources of supply could be developed, principally in Alaska, which would relax American dependence on Canadian newsprint and contribute to easing the critical world shortage of newsprint," the survey said.

"Concerted action by American publishers could effectively counter those newsprint pricing and production policies which have deleterious effects on the U. S. press."

Price and production behavior in the newsprint industry have been marked by price-fixing and monopolistic efforts to restrict output, the Guild charged. While the newsprint producers cooperate closely in these policies, U. S. newspaper publishers have not subordinated their own needs to their common interest in obtaining abundant supplies at reasonable prices, the union added.

AS A RESULT, the newsprint industry is exacting "burdensome tolls" on the publishers and reaping "enormous profits." But the public suffers, the Guild contended.

"Truth is a weapon against totalitarian ideologies, but truth is being silenced because newsprint supplies abroad are insufficient to keep the people of democratic nations informed," the Guild study pointed out.

"In this country, the stringency of newsprint supplies is steadily reducing the small independent press and furthering the drift away from a free competitive press."

43 Re-instated After Strike Threat

Threat of a possible strike was enough to convince the Studebaker Corp. to reinstate 43 men it had discharged earlier.

Just before some 10,000 CIO Auto workers at the plant gathered for a mass meeting to take a strike vote, the company suddenly agreed to take back the men it had discharged for refusing to do certain work. The strike vote was called off; instead the meeting authorized union officials to conduct a strike vote "whenever necessary."

A negotiating committee of four representatives of the union and four from the company will meet this week to revise piece-work standards, center of the dispute involving the 43 workers.

OPENING of PAC's 1949 Campaign for voluntary contributions on Feb. 15 has been announced by CIO-PAC director Jack Kroll.

Kroll set the opening date of the drive, during which each of the CIO's six million members will be given an opportunity to contribute to the Political Action Committee, following staff conferences and a survey of the work ahead.

The 1949 collection was authorized by the CIO Convention in Portland, Ore.

As in previous years the CIO's campaign for funds to carry on its political activity will be conducted by the international and national unions affiliated to the CIO.

Receipt books have been printed and forwarded to the affiliated unions and all collections are strictly accounted for by the unions and by the PAC, Kroll noted.

The collection of the voluntary funds will take place at times most convenient to the international unions involved, Kroll added.

"This year there are over 535 city elections to be held in addition to the two governors and five state legislatures to be elected," Kroll said.

Short Hearings Planned on T-H Repeal

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

IT'S D-DAY in the 18-month campaign to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act.

This week committees of both Senate and House move into short hearings on the repeal bill.

CIO and other labor groups, government spokesmen and industry representatives will testify.

The CIO will call for immediate repeal of T-H and re-enactment of the Wagner Act—the so-called "two package" proposal which it has been advocating since November. CIO officials feel that after that step has been taken, suggestions for constructive amendments to the Wagner Act can best be discussed.

1. The Senate Labor Committee was scheduled to open hearings on Friday, Jan. 8, and the group is committed by a resolution to wind up the hearings by Feb. 10.

The Senate group, headed by Elbert Thomas (D., Utah), passed by an 8-5 vote a resolution to repeal T-H; restore the Wagner Act; and limit the hearings to suggestions for possible amendments to the Wagner Act—presumably covering such situations as secondary boycotts, jurisdictional strikes and national emergency problems.

CIO representatives — probably headed by General Counsel Arthur Goldberg—were slated to testify before the Committee about Feb. 1. Scheduled for the first day of hearings were Sec. of Labor Maurice Tobin, Federal Conciliator Cyrus Ching, and Paul Herzog, head of the Natl. Labor Relations Board.

2. House Labor Committee hearings on T-H start Feb. 1 before a subcommittee headed by Augustine Kelley (D., Pa.), a pro-labor liberal. Kelley will name a group of five Democrats and three Republicans to hear testimony, which he estimated would be cleared away in a week.

3. Representatives of all branches of labor and 11 liberal Democratic Senators met for a "planning dinner" last week at the invitation of Sen. Myers (D., Pa.). Myers, who was head of the Democratic platform committee at Philadelphia, said it had helped develop a policy of united working action among the various union organizations.

4. Labor agencies meanwhile put the finishing touches on what may become known as the "Administration bill." Press reports indicated that top officials of the Labor Dept., the NLRB, the Federal Mediation Board and the White House had helped in preparation of the bill.

The same press dispatches indicated the bill would not contain a comma, preposition or a definite article that now appears in the Taft-Hartley law.

Sec. of Labor Maurice Tobin, who was scheduled to testify Jan. 28 before the Senate Labor Committee, postponed his appearance pending completion of last details of the Administration's proposals.

5. Republican Senators — both from the party's "liberal" and "conservative" wings seem bent on an effort to prolong the committee hearings and to offer a host of amendments when the T-H repealer reaches the floor for debate and vote.

Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.) has introduced 16 amendments, through which he hopes to salvage major portions of the T-H law and include them in the new legislation. Taft voiced anger at the Labor Committee's decision to restrict the length of the hearings.

Earlier Taft had said he would be willing to work with Sen. Irving Ives (R., N. Y.) on labor legislation.

Ives and Sen. Wayne Morse (R., Ore.) are reported to be drafting a bill of their own for use during the legislative debate on Taft-Hartley repeal. Morse, one of the GOP's liberal wing, chided organized labor in a Senate speech last week for wanting to rush through repeal of Taft-Hartley and re-enactment of the Wagner Act.

Morse predicted that "any attempt" to bring this about without changing the Wagner Act "will only result in a host of amendments."

LIBERAL Democrats predominate on the Senate Labor Committee.

Only one of the Democrats—Sen. Ellender (La.) voted for Taft-Hartley. The other hold-over members were all opposed: Sens. Thomas (Utah), Murray (Mont.), Pepper (Fla.), and Hill (Ala.)

The "freshmen" Democrats — Neely (W. Va.), Douglas (Ill.), and Humphrey (Minn.) — all have proven liberal records and campaigned vigorously against T-H.

CIO Stands Firmly For Two-Package Deal

CIO IS LOOKING to Congress—and its Democratic majority—to insure fast, down-the-line action to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act and to reenact the Wagner Act.

Labor's views were put on the record last week by Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel, at a press conference in which he underscored the mandate of the Nov. 2 elections.

"The CIO is firmly committed to the view that the election mandate is the immediate and expeditious repeal of Taft-Hartley," Goldberg told reporters. "In our opinion, repeal of Taft-Hartley is necessary before there can be consideration of points raised by the President in his State of the Union message and in his 1947 message."

(These points concern legislation on secondary boycotts, jurisdictional disputes and national emergency situations. CIO Pres. Murray has indicated willingness to offer "constructive" suggestions on such legislation at the proper time.)

The CIO attorney voiced belief that the "two-package" legislative method, advocated by labor, was entirely feasible. Under that procedure, one bill would repeal T-H and restore the Wagner Act; a second, later bill would contain amendments to the Wagner Act as deemed necessary.

"I'm not inclined to the belief that there aren't enough votes to swing the two-package procedure in Congress," Goldberg said. He voiced belief that many Congressmen favor the two-package method but have been buffaloed by newspaper stories into doubt that it can be achieved.

HE VOICED flat opposition to any legislation proposing use of injunctions in labor disputes.

"Labor's experience has indicated that government-by-injunction has not contributed to good relations, but arrays the government on the side of employers," he asserted.

"In addition, the Taft-Hartley experience has demonstrated that injunctions and so-called cooling-off periods just don't work."

Goldberg predicted that the CIO would also oppose any continuation of the non-Communist affidavit requirements contained in Taft-Hartley.

He charged that the affidavits have served only to "make civil rights martyrs out of Communists, without achieving the results presumably intended by Congress. The CIO has done more, internally, in the last 18 months to deal with Communist infiltration than all the statutes."

THE CIO attorney reminded the press that while the Wagner Act was "not perfect, sound labor relations were substantially forwarded by it.

"I would like to remind Congress that the Wagner Act was one of the prime achievements of the New Deal," he said. "The Taft-Hartley Act was one of the achievements of the 80th Congress, of which the American people were apparently ashamed.

"We don't feel that it's up to us to dictate to Congress, but we feel we do have the right to make known our strong convictions on this subject.

"And we don't feel that Sen. Taft's point of view ought to prevail in this Congress. The Taft-Hartley debate was carried on in every little hamlet during the campaign, and the Taft viewpoint was defeated.

"The Taft-Hartley Act is a political statute, and a political decision concerning it was made on Nov. 2."

T-H Bout Round One

Here's the text of the Senate Labor Committee's resolution—adopted by an 8-5 vote—on labor legislation.

"It is hereby resolved by this committee that the Taft-Hartley law be repealed and that the National Labor Relations Act, known as the Wagner Act, be restored as it existed at the time of the enactment of the Taft-Hartley bill with the single amendment as it stands in the Thomas bill (S. 249), which continues the National Labor Relations Board as a five-man body as it now exists; that hearings begin forthwith on amendments to the Wagner Act consistent with the proposals made by the President; that said hearings be closed not later than February 10, 1949; and that the bill for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley law be then reported to the Senate with such amendment or amendments to the Wagner Act as the committee may deem wise."

Georgia House Kills Bill To Unmask KKK

A bill that would have forced Ku Klux Klan members to come out from behind their sheets has been killed by the Georgia House of Representatives.

The proposed legislation, which did not specifically mention the KKK, was voted down, 89 to 65, after three hourse of turbulent debate.

Introduced by Rep. John Greer, the bill would have banned members of secret organizations or other citizens from wearing masks in public or at public demonstrations for the purpose of hiding their identity.

Opponents of the bill were frankly outspoken in their KKK sympathies. One held the Klan up as "a shining symbol of the Southern way of life." Rep. Julian Bennett charged that the bill was aimed at doing away with "an organization that saved this country during reconstruction days."

Swim Goes Abroad As ECA Consultant

Three labor press representatives left last week-end for Paris to begin a month's tour of Europe as ECA consultants.

The three—Editor Allan L. Swim of the CIO News, Neal Miller of the AFL and William C. Gausman of Labor Press Associates—will visit France, Italy, Great Britain, Belgium and Germany.

Their work abroad will be largely in connection with the ECA labor information service, headed by Pres. Harry Martin of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

(The first of a series of articles on the operation of the Marshall Plan and labor participation in the ECA program, written by Swim while in Europe, will appear in an early issue of the CIO News.)

School Indorsed

Pres. Joseph A. Fisher of the CIO Utility Workers has indorsed a labor school being sponsored by the Human Relations Commission of The Protestant Council of the City of New York. Classes will be held every Monday at 8 p. m. at the Presbyterian Labor Temple. The school opened last Monday.

NOT WHAT IT SEEMS: These are not prisoners who have staged a jail break but are members of the CIO Transport Workers protesting the failure of George Spargo, general manager of the Triborough Bridge and Tunnel Authority, N. Y. City, to grant them union recognition and decent wages. TWU Pres. Michael Quill joined the pickets.

TAFT AND SPEED

Although we have no sympathy for him, we really can't blame Senator Taft for squawking about plans for tossing his pet measure—the Taft-Hartley Act—into the ashcan as soon as possible.

Despite the fact that he got into the Senate by the skin of his teeth, Taft had a real hankerin' to become President of these United States.

He didn't even get to first base, however, because the GOP decided that a fellow from up Albany way—name Dewey—would do the running for the Republicans.

So, if we can add things up correctly (and we think we can), Senator Taft has been soundly repudiated. But he's still in there fighting for T-H.

Today, however, his punches lack power, and about all he can logically hope for is to delay repeal of his pet measure.

Yet speed is desirable—from the standpoint of both management and labor. Both deserve to know as soon as possible the rules under which they will operate in the future.

NO NEED FOR LONG HEARINGS

Republicans, including Taft, let out roars of protest when the Senate Labor Committee voted to cut off hearings by Feb. 10 on a bill to repeal T-H and enact an amended Wagner Act.

Such a deadline, they shouted, wouldn't provide sufficient time for discussion of one of the most-discussed topics of the day.

Actually only a few hours committee work would be required to take the first step necessary to carry out the T-H pledge made in the Democratic Party platform and by the President.

The Taft-Hartley amendments should be repealed—outright. The old Wagner Act should be re-enacted. Then hearings could be held to determine whether the Wagner Act needs to be amended.

This is the procedure suggested by organized labor. We believe it is sound procedure.

Taft and his anti-labor cohorts, we're convinced, would object to any procedure designed to do away with T-H. Let them object.

They got their labor-strangling statute on the books. The public had on opportunity to see it in operation. Then the voters went to the polls and repudiated the T-Hers.

IT SHOULD POSE NO BIG PROBLEM

The current minimum wage of 40 cents an hour fits into today's economic pattern in about the same way that a fringed-top surrey would fit into the traffic pattern on a high-speed highway.

It seems to us that the job of establishing a realistic minimum should be tackled promptly by Congress and disposed of in short order.

The CIO recommends $1 an hour on the simple theory that anybody earning less can't make ends meet.

PAC Merely Shifted Its Gears

City, County and State Elections To Occupy Its Attention During 1949

By ALLAN L. SWIM

PAC DIDN'T go out of business after Nov. 2. It merely shifted gears in preparation for this year's elections.

In 1948 the "big push" was designed to keep Truman in the White House and elect a liberal Congress.

In 1949 PAC will concern itself with some 535 city and county elections, two gubernatorial races and the election of five state legislatures.

IT HAS BECOME obvious that CIO's political action program must operate 12 months a year, year in and year out—without let-up— if it is to be successful.

The "Little Taft-Hartley" laws enacted by the states as well as the "Big One" passed by Congress must be removed from the statute books.

The election of city, county and state administrations which will not interfere with labor's legitimate aims is a "must."

Solution of civil rights problems should be sought on the local and state as well as on the national level.

And every union member has a direct stake in the selection of those who determine how such things as education and workmen's compensation are handled.

THE MAN WHO now occupies the White House was a county judge in Missouri only 26 years ago—and he was a Senator before becoming President.

Many members of the House and Senate were city, county and state officials before being elected to Congress.

It was in the local political arena that many national leaders got their first training. Few of them jumped into the national spotlight without first basking in the local limelight.

That's one reason CIO-PAC intends to devote considerable time —and money, too—in the future on political campaigns that are not national in scope.

The lives of Americans are affected about as much by city ordinances and state laws as by acts of Congress.

THE CIO WANTS every U. S. citizen to become as familiar with the work of the Ward 3 alderman as with the job of the man in the White House.

It wants the men and women who work in factories—as well as those who own and operate them —to have a full voice in such matters as floating bond issues to build sewers, pave streets and improve educational facilities.

It wants a majority of the people—not a minority—to make decisions on the political and legislative issues confronting them.

And it wants organized labor to wield an influence proportionate to its size and importance.

Our critics, of course, will disagree, but we see the PAC program as an important part of the CIO campaign to make democracy work better.

CCL Presses For Security In Contracts

THE CANADIAN Congress of Labour—to which Canadian CIO unions belong—is urging that its affiliated unions press strongly in negotiations for social security provisions, elimination of differentials in rates paid men and women workers, and establishment of the 40-hour week and a guaranteed annual wage.

The CCL stand was decided at a wage conference. Increased wages, of course, were not overlooked, but the CCL recommended that individual unions determine what increases they will seek in the light of conditions in their industries.

CCL stated in a release issued after the conference: "Official figures show that even by the subsistence budget of the Toronto Welfare Council hundreds of thousands of families are receiving insufficient income to provide essential family requirements. Roughly half of the 806,604 workers in manufacturing are engaged in durable goods industries where the average wage is $3.27 below the $47.70 estimated as a minimum by Toronto Welfare Council standards, on the basis of October 1 figure. The other employes in manufacturing—in the non-durable goods industries—have an average wage that is $10.76 below the Welfare Council minimum."

THE DIFFICULTY being experienced in meeting essential living requirements adds to the necessity for increased social security measures. In this regard Congress unions are being urged to make provisions in new contracts for such protection as is afforded by pensions; sickness and accident insurance; medical, surgical and hospitalization plans and life insurance.

"Recently compiled figures show that wages paid women in Canadian plants lag far behind those received by men engaged in similar work. In most industries the maximum weekly wages paid women are less than the minimum received by men. Present high prices have created an impossible situation for these underpaid women workers and new emphasis will be placed by Canadian Congress of Labour unions on the necessity for the equalization of rates for male and female workers.

"In a discussion of the 40-hour week representatives of C. C. L. unions reported lay-offs taking place in a number of industries and said that there was necessity for an agreement on hours which would provide a fair division of available work.

"Changing conditions also made it essential that increased efforts should be placed on obtaining a guaranteed annual wage which would provide Canadian workers with a larger measure of security."

Confusion

Some pretty confusing mail comes into CIO headquarters —but the Librarian of the School of Commerce Library at McGill Univ., Montreal, Canada, finally hit the jackpot. pot.

She sent a letter requesting materials on social security. The letter was addressed to "National Association of Manufacturers, Legal Bureau, CIO, Jackson Place, Washington, D. C. Re: American Federation of Labor."

In a follow-up letter, the McGill librarian noted an "unfortunate error" in the earlier correspondence and explained it had been the intention to write to all three organizations!

It Certainly Was Not Planned That Way

SOME OF the darndest things occur down in Texas, where almost anything can happen, or so it seems.

It's the biggest in the Nation, and they can prove it. It has the world's best looking women, and you'd better not try to disprove it!

Its men are the fightin'est in time of war, the most hospitable in time of peace. Etc., etc.

And Texas even has a big industrial plant which made a CIO organization drive a big success!

A LARGE eastern company established a plant a number of years ago in one of the "poor-pay" areas of Texas.

A CIO union organized the plant and brought about improvements in wages and working conditions, and later sought additional improvements.

Company officials said "no!" They said it again and again.

The union insisted. The company stuck to its position. The union still insisted. The company wouldn't budge.

Finally workers in the plant held a meeting and voted to strike. Then they walked out.

DURING THIS period the CIO was engaged in a membership campaign in the area in which the organized plant was located.

As had been expected, progress was being made, but it was slow.

It was hard to convince some of the workers that the CIO had really brought about good wage increases for its members.

Then, too, the strike disturbed them.

Something obviously was needed to give a new spark to the campaign—something dramatic and convincing.

IT LOOKED for a short time as if both the strike and the membership campaign would drag along.

Then somebody connected with the company dreamed up an idea designed to crush the strike by swinging public opinion against the union.

An "expert" was brought in to put the big idea across. He knew his stuff—but he obviously didn't know the people of the region.

The objective of his scheme was to convince Texans that the CIO was no good and that unions affiliated with it were greedy, unreasonable people.

It had exactly the opposite effect!

It's theme was that the union had no business striking because its members already received pay that was extremely high for the area.

To bolster this argument the company reproduced the paychecks of several of the highest-paid union members in the plant. These were referred to as "typical" paychecks.

Workers throughout the region read the ad carefully, then said to themselves, "If that's the kind of pay the CIO gets for its members we need a CIO union."

Soon the membership cards were rolling in—and before long the organizing drive and the strike came to successful conclusions.

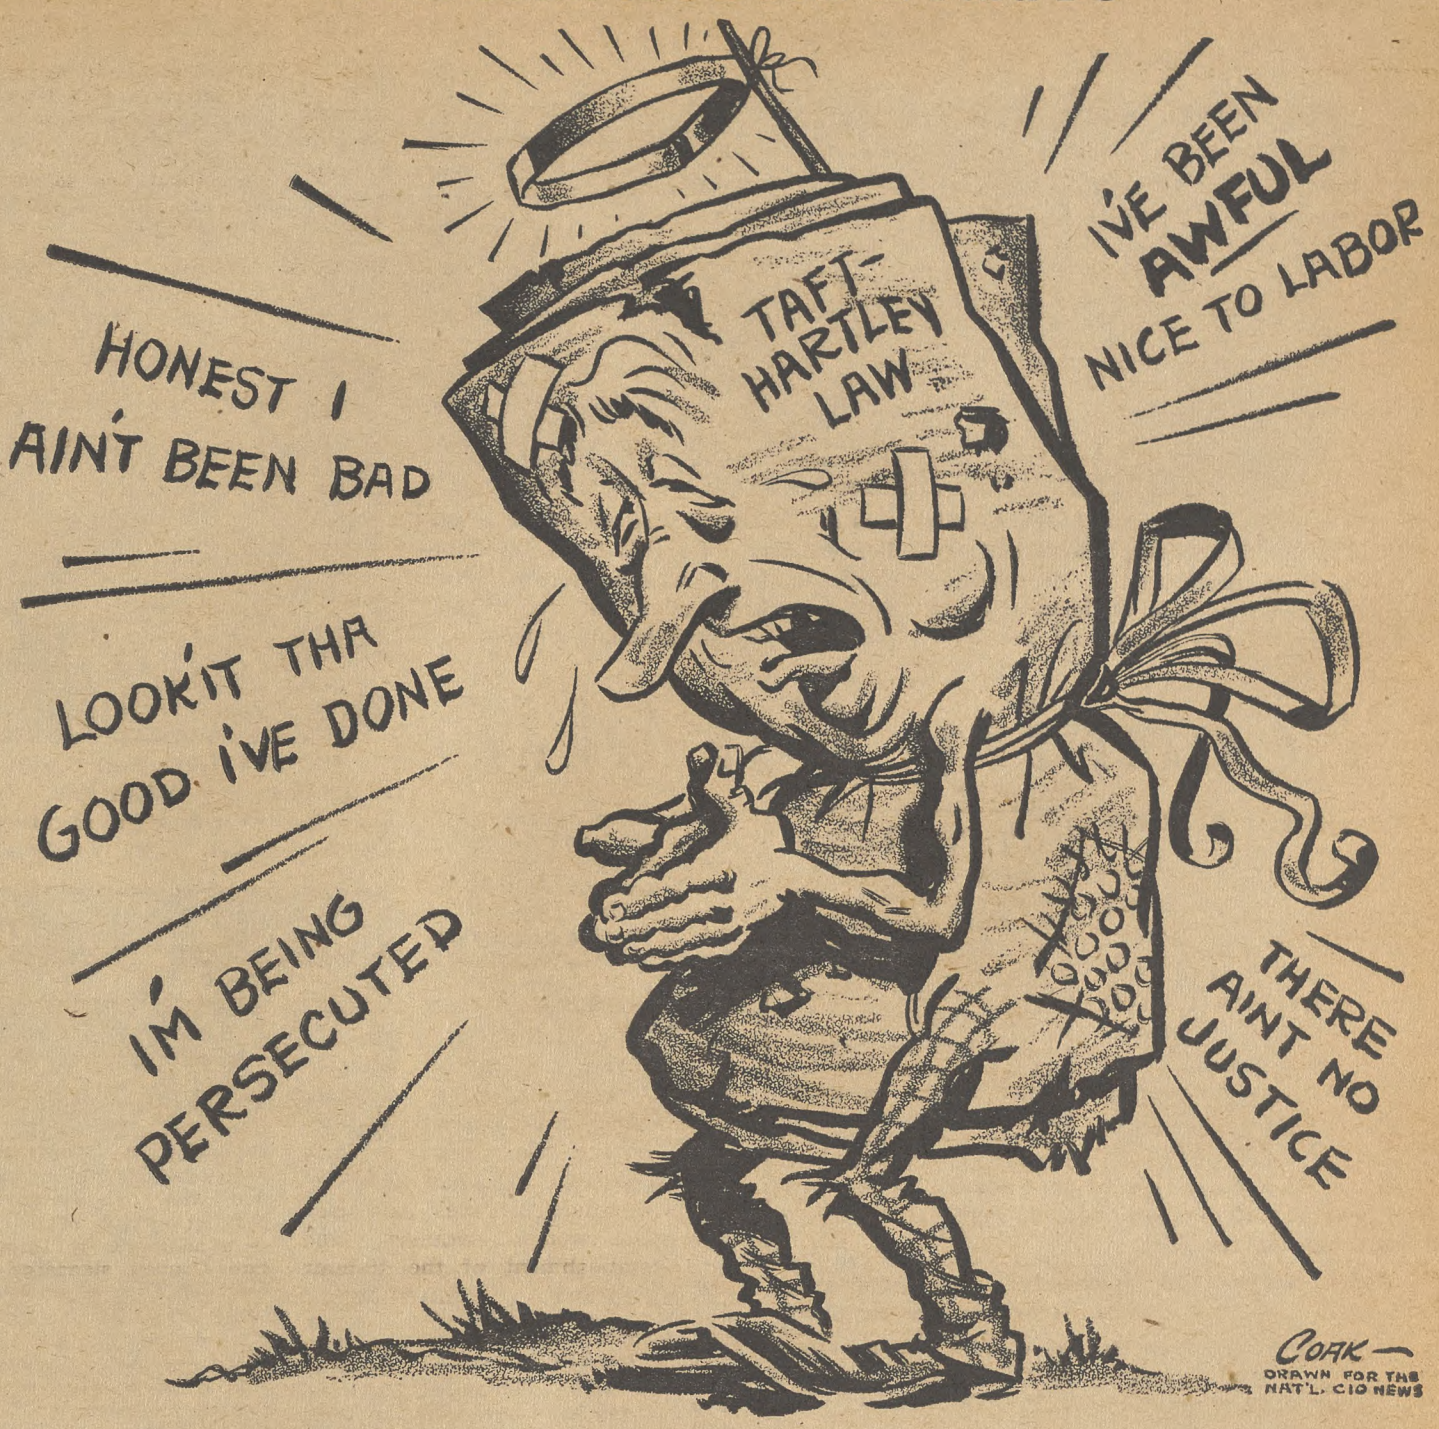
'... A Saint the Devil Would Be'



'CIO is as Big as Needs Demand' Says Editorial

"CIO is as big as needs demand," declared the Cincinnati Sun in an editorial which might well have been called "The Spirit of the CIO." The Sun is the newspaper of the Greater Cincinnati CIO Council. The editorial follows:

"IN THE spirit of CIO—this is the story of the 10th Annual Convention of the Ohio CIO Council.

"CIO is as big as needs demand . . . its job of organizing is not finished. The fields as yet unorganized will be organized because in the spirit of CIO there is room for everyone to enjoy the benefits of trade unionism. The convention passed two resolutions to this effect.

"CIO is human. It exists because of the men and women who are members and it is zealous in seeking a better life not only for its own but for all people. The convention resolved to support giving aid to shattered Europe. It resolved to establish a community services program to give aid to all people on the basis of need, whether the aid be hospital or medical care, family counseling, child guidance or legal aid.

"The convention resolved to support federal aid to housing, so that all families might enjoy the security which home life offers.

"CIO is just. The convention passed a resolution calling for employment of all people, regardless of race, color or creed, for abolition of poll tax, for enactment of a federal anti-lynching bill.

"The convention called for government protection for small business men against monopoly. There are no small business men in CIO. There is just the principle that "free enterprise" be made both free and enterprising.

"TRADE UNIONISM is a way of life to America. The presence of three representatives of agriculture at a CIO convention was an innovation.

"They told the story of farmers, and the workers listened. Murray D. Lincoln, chairman of the Cooperative League of the United States, urged farmer and laborer, using the tools at hand, to fashion their destiny together so that their world will be a better place to live.

"Glen A. Howard, president of the (Ohio) Farmer's Union, and Joseph Fichter, president of the Ohio Grange, also expressed hope for the future because of the spirit of cooperation shown recently between farmer and Labor.

"The convention passed a resolution urging Congress to support farm prices at reasonable levels, and called for hearty cooperation on the part of CIO with Ohio farm groups. The convention also resolved to support the cooperative movement, which tends to achieve an economic cooperation among all races and between farmers and workers.

"CIO is charitable. One local in Massillon has given support to Ohio's Boys Village, a small Boys Town in Smithville, Ohio. The Rev. Clarence E. Kerr, director of this worthy experiment, spoke at the convention and called for the aid of CIO in the expansion program. The aid was pledged.

"CIO is idealistic. It is, in fact, an ideal—the welfare and security of every individual is the goal of CIO. But CIO does not just dream—it is made up, after all, of working men and women. The CIO will work, and will fight, because this is the spirit of CIO. This is the spirit of its members and its leaders. This is the spirit which inspires men and women to make great sacrifices to keep their ideals, and which prevents them from resting so long as one individual suffers unjustly."

Atlantic City Mayor Flayed By N. J. CIO

A suggestion from Atlantic City's Mayor Joseph Altman that a meeting be held between officials of the American Bowling Congress and the New Jersey members of the Citizens' Committee for Fair Play in Bowling "some time in March," has aroused the ire of the New Jersey CIO Council. A segregated tourney is scheduled to open February 12 in Atlantic City.

In a letter to Mayor Altman, Arthur Chapin, State CIO civil rights director, stated that such a meeting would be "senseless" unless it were held before the opening of the tournament, as originally promised.

"The people of New Jersey have expressed their disapproval of all manifestations of discrimination," Chapin charged. "Our State Constitution specifically prohibits discrimination based upon race, color, creed or national origin.

"I feel that the American Bowling Congress is neither bigger than the people of New Jersey, or Atlantic City. The bigoted views of a minority should not be inflicted upon the democratic majority."

Security For All

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

"CIO support of improved laws does not mean that our unions will relax their efforts to secure through collective bargaining employer-financed plans which provide protection against economic hazards of old age, premature death, sickness, and unemployment.

"The CIO has always maintained that such plans supplement laws and that our collective bargaining and legislative efforts support each other." — CIO Economic Outlook.

Those words sum up the CIO's determination to leave no stone unturned in securing the best possible guarantees that America will never again see a return of the Depression Days of 1929 to 1934.

We know that most of our members cannot yet afford the best in medical care, cannot afford to buy annuities, cannot carry heavy life insurance, cannot save enough to tide them over in cases of unemployment.

- So, to provide for their old age, the CIO seeks pension plans to supplement federal social security payments —in fact, the CIO has installed a pension plan for its Washington office staff.

In a previous issue, the CIO carried a story on the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' contractual plan.

- To reduce the potentialities of unemployment, we seek a guaranteed annual wage and other safeguards.

Another issue of the CIO News carried a detailed account of the annual wage plan agreed to by the CIO Packinghouse Workers and the Hormel Company.

- To cushion expenses incurred after death, we seek life insurance payments to survivors to bolster the inadequate social security paid by the government.

The Newspaper Guild has for many years secured such payment in the form of severance pay to the survivor.

- To treat illnesses and disability, we seek social security plans with employers and heartily back the Murray-Wagner-Dingell Bill.

An example of what social security does is the plan which has been agreed to between the CIO Auto Workers and the Kaiser-Frazer Corp.

This plan, which is entirely employer-financed, provides:

- 120 days of hospitalization —also 120 for each disability.
- Disability benefits.
- Payment of $2000 in case of death.
- Surgical benefits.
- "Spouses"—that is wife or husband, as the case may be —and children are covered by hospitalization and surgical provisions.
- Coverage during a portion of a layoff.

The fund—which is created by K-F's payment of 5c for every hour worked by the employes—is administered by a joint trustee committee. Experts say the agreement's provisions allowing flexibility to the trustees is one of its best features.

Present trustees are:

K-F—Joaquin Reis, secretary-treasurer of the trustees, who is vice president of K-F; J. O. Murray, labor relations manager, Clifford Keene, plant doctor, and W. A. MacDonald.

Though the UAW has five K-F locals, the program is corporation-wide. It covers both production and office workers at Willow Run, Detroit, Adrian and Dowagiac, Mich. Also covered are a number of supervisors, members of the AFL International Typographical Union—they work in K-F's Graphic Arts division—plant guards and others.

The plan, agreed to last June, has been in operation since October 1. Flexibility has allowed for improvements, such as doubling the sum payable and the time period of disability payments.

Between Oct. 1 and Dec. 31—the plan's first yearly quarter—223 disability claims were paid, for a total outlay of $10,854.45. In that period, also, there were 13 deaths, for a payment of $26,000.

I met with both union and company trustees. Both told me that there so far had not been a single grievance under the plan. (Arbitration is provided in case the trustees disagree on a grievance.) Both said their primary aim is to improve the plan as often as possible, guided by experience and the needs of the times.

Group insurance and Blue Cross are used to implement the plan.

In contrast to the UAW-K-F plan, the big 3 of autodom look bad.

Ford has Blue Cross — all paid by the employe—and an insurance plan — unspecified sum paid by Ford, rest by employe—on checkoff.

Chrysler has a company plan.

Note the sharp differences here. At K-F, all employes are covered by the social security plan. At the Big 3, since the policy is "voluntary," only part of the employes are covered.

Here is how UAW shows its objections to "company plans":

"Company plans are wrong as a matter of principle. Like company unions, they are controlled by the employer. They are planned and operated with his interest in view rather than the interest of the workers—the group for whom the plan is supposedly established.

"Company plans are paternalistic: the employer, supposedly acting in the interest of his employes, decides what benefits shall be included or excluded, decides what type and amount of benefits, decides the eligibility requirements, decides how much the employes will have to pay for the package he has chosen for them.

"The contention of the employers that making such decisions for their employes is a prerogative of management and that the employer knows best is a hangover from the old days before establishme of collective bargaining.

"The paternalistic chara ter of company plans is fu ther evidenced when emplo ers refuse to reveal the fac about the actual cost of i surance, and about operati

To The Ladies

There are nearly 1000 women workers at K-F. For them, there is a special provision for maternity leave. They are paid $30 a week for six weeks after taking leave.

Also, they get the benefit of hospital service — full payment of everything the hospital charges during the delivery and the period in which the mother-to-be — and the mother-that-is — stays in the hospital.

Better

The UAW-K-F plan differs from many insurance health coverage plans in that there is no flat fee stated for the various services rendered by the hospital during hospitalization. Everything the hospital charges is paid.

The UAW Social Security Dept., of which Harry Becker is director, was retained as consultant to trustees. Howard Bost is Becker's assistant.

Murray Latimer, well-known social security and pension expert, has been retained by K-F.

Why should the employer finance this program?

Says UAW: "Workers cannot finance adequate social security programs from their current earnings. Unions' long experience with benefit plans paid for by individual workers through payroll checkoffs or dues clearly demonstrates that such plans are incapable of meeting workers' social security needs. Employer payments obtained through collective bargaining can be used to protect all workers.

"Payroll checkoff plans," on the other hand, "are generally offered on a take it or leave it basis. And the very workers most in need of protection are the ones who, because of other demands for money, are most likely to take a chance and go without even the meager protection offered."

UAW Hits 'Double Standard'

PRES WALTER REUTHER of the CIO Auto Workers last week flayed the double standard the auto industry follows in providing big pensions for top executives who do not need them and denying them to wage-earners and low-salaried workers who need them badly.

Speaking at the union's nation-wide education conference in Milwaukee, Reuther disclosed the UAW's demand for pensions of at least $100 a month which the union will seek in its 1949 bargaining conferences with Ford, General Motors and other big auto companies.

Reuther cited two cases to show the industry's "double standard" in regard to pensions. He said GM Pres. Charles E. Wilson, who received in 1947 a combined salary and bonus totaling some $446,000, will get a pension of $25,000 a year when he retires.

Pres. K. T. Keller of the Chrysler Corp., who was paid $250,000 in 1947, is assured of a pension of $25,200 annually when he retires, he said.

WHAT happens to a worker who gives the best years of his life to industry and reaches the age when he is "too old to work and too young to die?" Reuther asked. He gets a Federal Social Security pension which averages $25 a month.

More than 2,500 persons from all parts of the country attended the four-day conference.

Former Sec. of the Interior Harold Ickes advanced the idea of creating an educational trust fund similar to the Rockefeller Foundation to be financed with money received from the sale of tideland oil.

MURRAY LATIMER, consultant on pensions, group insurance and the annual wage, told the conference that the notion that there was no room for collective bargaining in the field of social security "just isn't so."

George Baldanzi, executive vice-president of the Textile Workers Union, in urging organized labor to take the lead in backing the European Recovery Program, warned that "the democratic aspirations of the European people can be realized, but we can't expect their confidence and support if we use our funds to prop up reactionary governments in Greece, China and Indonesia."

PAC DIR. Jack Kroll said that the CIO-PAC would maintain an independent course politically, and would not try to capture the Democratic or any other party.

The UAW's extensive plans for working through the cooperative movement were outlined by Victor Reuther, the union's education director.

Volunteers Will Spark Georgia Drive

THE CIO in Georgia last week launched plans for intensifying the Southern Membership Drive by forming voluntary organizing crews in every local union in the state.

These crews will fan out to the unorganized plants, carrying the message of unionism to fellow workers who are without benefit of union contracts.

The Georgia meeting, called by CIO State Dir. Charles Gillman, was a follow-up of the South-wide conference earlier in the month when more than 600 CIO staffers jam-packed Redman's lodge hall at Atlanta in what was hailed as the most enthusiastic union meeting ever held in the South.

The rank and file organizing teams will be formed under the guidance of the international representatives of CIO-affiliated unions.

Van A. Bittner, director of the CIO Organizing Committee, told the Georgia staffers that the success of the Southern organizing campaign holds the fate of every CIO local in the state.

"Your continued well-being rests in the rapid spread of the CIO within your state," Bittner declared. "The rank and file members must rally to the cause, and they must form organizing committees in every community where a CIO local union exists. I pledge the Southern organizing campaign staff to spend 100% of its time organizing. That is our policy."

Other State meetings to follow up the South-wide conference and to form similar rank and file committees are:

North Carolina, High Point, Feb. 12; Tennessee, Nashville, Feb. 5; Texas, Galveston, Feb. 12; and South Carolina, Rock Hill Feb. 20. Yet to be scheduled are Mississippi and Louisiana.

Meetings were held last weekend for Alabama, Arkansas, Florida and Virginia.

Annual Wage Bill Offered

A bill to give guaranteed annual wage protection to workers employed by firms doing government contract jobs has been filed in the Senate by two New England Senators.

The bill, affecting employers holding contracts of more than $10,000, would require the contract to guarantee 30 hours of wages each week for each of 40 calendar weeks in the course of a year.

As proposed, such a guarantee could be modified if there were a 10-point fluctuation in the cost-of-living index or if the President found the provisions "seriously impair" the conduct of government business or fail to serve the public interest.

The bill was introduced by Sens. Lodge (R., Mass.) and MacMahon (D., Conn.).

Lodge explained that the bill would be in the form of an amendment to the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act, which sets standards for government contractors on wages, hours, working conditions, child and convict labor.

Father Kelly Finds T-H Immoral

By ARTHUR J. GOLDBERG
(CIO General Counsel)

AN UNUSUAL and interesting analysis of the Taft-Hartley Act, by the Rev. George A. Kelly, has just been published. (Christopher Press, Rochester, N. Y., 1948).

Father Kelly's book, or pamphlet—it is somewhere in between—has as its subtitle "A Moral Analysis". True to this description, Father Kelly's discussion of the Taft-Hartley Act differs from the numerous others which have appeared, and makes a most valuable contribution, by emphasizing the moral and ethical judgments which underlie various of the statutory provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act.

All legislation rests upon moral and ethical judgments, ultimately reflecting some conception of the good society and of man's duty to his fellows. Too often, however, these judgments are not made consciously. Rather legislators act simply upon the basis of, at best, their own prejudices, or at worst, their self-interest or of that of the class to which they give allegiance.

As Father Kelly makes clear, conscious reflection upon basic moral or ethical principles, would have, or should have, prevented the adoption of many of the most objectionable provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Thus, Father Kelly demonstrates, beyond cavil, that workers have a moral right to strike for higher wages and better working conditions. From this it follows that it is wholly immoral for Taft-Hartley to penalize them for striking by denying them, if they have been replaced, the right to reinstatement or to vote in an election.

Certain of the prohibitions against sympathy strikes and secondary boycotts are likewise demonstrated by Father Kelly to be in contravention of the moral rights of workers.

In addition to its novel approach, Father Kelly's study contains unusually clear and penetrating analyses of each of the provisions of the Act. Unusual facility is shown in appraising, in clear and simple language, the issues raised by a very complicated statute. The question and answer method is used.

One regret which this writer is moved to express is that the book, which was completed by Sept. 1, was not published sooner —say, before the election. Due to this printing delay, one or two points which Father Kelly makes no longer possess the importance which they had when he wrote.

For instance, he demonstrates in unanswerable fashion the utter injustice of the requirement that a majority of the eligible voters in a bargaining unit must vote in favor of a union shop, rather than merely a majority of those actually voting. Happily, however, the 80th Congress seems to have underestimated the strength of labor, for the unions have won so large a percentage of these elections that the 80th Congress' Joint Committee has proposed that they be abandoned. (Thanks for nothing).

Father Kelly's "primer," as it is too modestly called, is strongly recommended for use by union leaders, and by groups studying labor law and labor relations.

Truman Steel Proposals Set Off Debate

EXCITEMENT over President Truman's inauguration in Washington, and throughout the country, didn't slow down the battle raging within the government, and in business circles over future steel prices and production levels.

A cold war inside the President Truman's Council of Economic Advisors was brought out into the open when one of its members, Leon Keyserling, aligned himself with Truman's proposals for expanding basic steel-making capacities. Keyserling spoke out after Council Chairman Edwin G. Nourse told reporters he didn't agree with all of the President's plans.

Nourse said that it's all right for the government to take "facilitative action," but it must not engage in "operative activities." In other words he goes along with the President's proposal to make expansion loans available to the steel industry, but disapproves of Truman's statement that if this doesn't produce the steel America needs the government might go into the steel business itself.

Another Truman adviser, Commerce Secy. Charles Sawyer, also took the lid off the debate between himself and Assistant Interior Secy. C. Girard Davidson. Sawyer said that the steel shortage "this year will be substantially less than some estimates have forecast." Davidson has been a leading spokesman inside the government for the view that an additional 10,000,000 tons of steel should be produced each year.

Sawyer added, however, that he thinks Congress will approve Truman's request for a study of steel-making facilities and will okay the President's expansion program "if found necessary." He also cautioned that present supplies of iron and steel scrap are inadequate.

The steel industry itself declared that it is now producing at 99.5% of ingot capacity—the highest rate in history. Bethlehem Steel Corp. announced that it will invest $90,000,000 in capital equipment this year. Much of this fund will go for purposes other than increasing basic steel-making capacity, however.

While a 3c per lb. increase in steel prices in New York was being announced, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce was preparing to line up its affiliates for an attack on the FTC's powers to outlaw discriminatory basing point pricing.

The Chamber has started a poll among its members asking them to approve amendments to the anti-trust laws legalizing "delivered prices." Although the Chamber's pamphlet accompanying the poll states the case for the FTC, and its amendments are allegedly designed to preserve FTC's power to outlaw the worst tricks of the "delivered prices" industries, the poll is timed to coincide with Senate committee hearings late this month on anti-trust amendments favored by the steel industry.

Irving S. Olds, chairman of the board of giant U. S. Steel, said that "some of the industry's critics" want to follow Britain's course and "eventually nationalize the steel industry." Although he didn't identify these critics he made it clear that he is strongly opposed to President Truman's threat of limited government entry into the steel business.

Bills Aim To Aid Merchant Marine

Chairman Schuyler O. Bland (D. Va.) of the House merchant marine committee said last week that speedy action by the committee would be taken to insure that 50% of Marshall plan goods be carried in American ships.

He also said the committee would report out soon an additional requirement, forcing any country receiving economic aid from the U. S. to transport 50% of its cargoes in American vessels when the cargoes consist of American-financed goods.

Detroit Cops Ask Newsmen, 'Are You Red?'

THE DETROIT Local of the CIO Newspaper Guild has unanimously denounced a ruling by Detroit Police Commissioner Harry S. Toy that all newspapermen must sign non-Communist affidavits before they could receive police cards.

Police cards for reporters and photographers are designed to allow newsmen to cross firelines, enter courts and other public buildings, etc.

Toy is the same Harry S. Toy who, as Wayne County prosecutor, fought successfully against any indictments when several hunger marchers were slain in 1932 in Dearborn, Ford-controlled town.

(Keith Sward, author of "The Legend of Henry Ford," quoted Detroit newspapers as saying the shots were fired by both Dearborn police and plant police. Dearborn, Sward said, was controlled by Ford interests through Harry Bennett, personnel manager.)

Toy formerly was on the Ford legal staff.

The Guild, which declared that Toy's order was unconstitutional in that it violated the guaranties of a free press, urged its members not to sign the affidavits. "The Guild does not consider police press cards a prerequisite to reporting or news gathering," the resolution declared.

Toy's order brought attacks also from the city's newspapers, with city editors ordering their staffs not to sign the affidavits. The Free Press announced it would take the matter to the courts if any of its reporters, not having police cards, were barred from any city or county news events.

The State police commissioner, Donald S. Leonard, announced his office would not demand a loyalty oath before issuing press cards.

The American Civil Liberties Union also denounced Toy's move.

Union Official's Son Boosts Steel Record

So, the union slows down production, does it? Then Bill Crawford, Director of District 35, United Steelworkers of America-CIO, had better have a talk with his son, Junior.

For young Bill, helper, and C. L. Parker, operator, held Atlantic Steel's production record on the Vaughn Double Deck machines with an output of 42,000 pounds of wire in an eight hour shift.

That's nice going for two members of Local 2401, United Steelworkers of America-CIO, and it will help knock down management's old saw that unions try to slow up production.

6,000th Credit Union

Local 190, CIO Auto Workers has organized the 6,000th chartered federal credit union in 13 years of government sponsorship of such groups, the Federal Security Agency announced last week. The local plans to aid Detroit Packard workers with a savings and loan program, FSA said.

As Protest Against Rent Control Bill

Tulsa Landlords Plan to Evict 1000 Tenants

By GLORIA CAPLAN

THE FATE of thousands of tenants now hangs precariously on Housing Expediter Tighe Woods' defintion of two words—"good faith."

Is a band of landlords acting in "good faith" when they simultaneously evict close to 1000 tenants as a protest against proposed rent legislation?

If the Federal Housing Expediter or the courts determine the property owners are acting in "good faith," the present rent control law, passed by a Republican Congress, offers no protection to thousands of tenants faced with 60-day notices to get out.

It all started in Tulsa, Okla., on the eve of the House Banking & Currency Committee's scheduled hearings on a 1949 rent control measure. The current law expires March 31.

Pres. Truman immediately said he didn't think the landlords would get away with it. The CIO Natl. Housing Committee termed the Tulsa landlords' move "a conspiracy to violate the rent control laws." And the Housing Expediter wavered between cold and hot, first stating he doubted there was anything he could do about it, later modified by a warning that he would seek injunctions if the landlords were not found to be "acting in good faith," and still later advising the Oklahoma CIO he would petition for injunctions if the eviction notices are not withdrawn.

WHAT touched off the nationwide alarm was a batch of 600 to 1000 eviction notices sent Tulsa tenants by members of the Tulsa Property Owners' Association. The notices were said to be identical and to contain the suggestion that the victims write their Congressmen to oppose further rent controls.

The Association made no effort to hide the fact that the action constituted a "sit-down" strike against rent bills now under consideration in Washington.

Said the group's executive secretary, the Rev. Wallace J. Murphy: "Property owners will withdraw all rental property from the rental market. Tenants will receive 60-day notices to vacate. We refuse to operate so long as rental controls are on . . .

"We don't intend to serve under a slavery which would take away the right to control our property."

Immediately the firecracker set off a chain reaction of similar moves in other cities.

Murphy said the Property Owners' Association of America, of which he is honorary president, has asked its affiliates in 20 cities to resort to the same measure.

In Detroit, the director of the Michigan branch of the Landlords: "We refuse to operate so long as rental controls are on. . . ."

Property Owners warned darkly that 3000 rental units may be withdrawn from the rental market in the area.

LIKE MURPHY, the Michigan branch head, pointed to the two rent control bills in Congress, complaining they "discriminate against property owners and threatened freedom."

Woods Changes Mind

There's no telling which way the wind is blowing in the Federal Housing Expediter's office at this minute, but as the CIO News went to press, Tighe Woods had apparently decided to come to the defense of the tenant victims of the new disease "wholesale evictionitis."

In reply to an alarmed plea from Oklahoma State CIO Pres. A. W. Mitchell, Woods wired:

"I shall use every authority at my command to prevent mass eviction of tenants by landlords who seek to evict innocent people as a protest against rent control. Tenants who receive such notices are being urged to report to our area offices. If landlords refuse to withdraw notices, office of the Housing Expediter will seek to enjoin such eviction by action in the courts."

Earlier Woods had doubted whether he could do anything about it.

In Kansas City, Mo., the Property Owners' Association was considering whether to follow suit, as urged by Murphy.

Immediately after Woods' first statement, the CIO Natl. Housing Committee issued a vehement protest, urging Woods to "stop abdicating his responsibilities under the law and take immediate steps to protect" the Tulsa tenants.

"The law requires the expediter to seek injunctive relief from the courts to prevent violation of the law," the statement noted. "The announced plans of the Tulsa Property Owners' Association on their face are a conspiracy to violate the rent control laws."

The rent law, scheduled to expire March 31, permits evictions where "the landlord seeks in good faith to recover possession of such housing accommodations for the immediate purpose of withdrawing such housing accommodations from the rental market." These units, however, cannot "thereafter be offered for rent as such."

Section 206 (b) of the law empowers the Housing Expediter to apply to any Federal or State court for an injunction whenever in his judgment the law is being violated.

THE EVENING after Woods voiced his original statement, he took to the air to clarify his position. "If it is determined," he explained, "that landlords who take this action are not acting in good faith, the office of the Housing Expediter will petition the courts to restrain any such wholesale evictions."

CIO leaders, meanwhile, were noting that the eviction crisis might have the good effect of pointing up the need for stronger protection against evictions and might also speed passage of the new rent bill.

Hearings in the Housing Banking Committee are scheduled to open early this week. Before it for consideration will be bills introduced by California Democratic Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas and another by Committee Chairman Brent Spence (D. Ky.)

CIO housing spokesmen favor the Douglas measure as being the closest to the CIO convention proposals. It provides a roll-back of all 15% "voluntary" increases imposed by landlord-tenant agreement under the 1947 and 1948 rent laws. The companion measure in the Senate is sponsored by Pennsylvania Democrat Francis J. Myers.

Both these bills would extend rent controls for 27 months, expiring in June 30, 1951.

Unlike the GOP rent act now in effect, often termed the "decontrol act," the Myers bill has as its purpose to "stabilize rents and . . . to prevent unwarranted evictions."

HIGH PRICES BIG FACTOR IN REGIONAL LAYOFFS

- In New York, in New Jersey, in New England and in parts of the mid-west unemployment is on the way up.
- Wholesale food prices, meanwhile, are on the way down—just where they were when OPA controls were tossed out 2½ years ago.
- But—in contrast with these trends—the price of steel, and employment in steel-making centers—was up, 'way up.

What has been happening, as the CIO has predicted since the war, and as the New York Times discovered last week, is that prices of most consumer items have reached the point where consumers can't afford them any more. So to get back their market and to get those goods off the shelves, producers are marking prices down again. Producers, that is, of almost everything except basic production materials.

New York Times reporter A. H. Raskin, surveying the national unemployment picture, noted that "seasonal factors, heavy inventories and consumer resistance to high prices has caused increases of 10 to 100% in the number of workers drawing idleness insurance in many areas."

But both industrialists and labor spokesmen were confident, he reported, that no real recession is in sight so long as orders for the European Recovery Program keep rolling in.

Some unemployment figures cited by Raskin:

New Jersey: 120,000 applicants for unemployment compensation, compared with 65,000 three months earlier.

Connecticut: 25,000 more jobless than a year ago.

New Hampshire: 15,000 unemployed, highest since the war.

Rhode Island: 15,055 fewer employed than in 1947.

Southern States: ". . . a general dip in employment."

But in the steel industry there were no dips—either in employment, profits, prices, or demand.

In fact, U. S. Steel was riding mighty high.

To get some of those oversized profits off its hands at a time when Congress is talking about excess profits taxes, U. S. Steel shocked the stock market by proposing an extra dividend of $1 per share and splitting its common stock three-for-one.

But U. S. Steel wasn't worrying about its consumers' ability to pay its prices. Board Chairman Irving S. Olds estimated a four months' backlog of orders and noted "almost no let-up in demand . . ."

What does have the industry worried is the possibility of the government's setting up its own steel mills to supplement the short supply currently being produced by the industry. As a result, the American Iron & Steel Institute is getting ready to wage an intensive publicity campaign. For this purpose the Institute's board of director's raised by 20% the organization's already-bulging budget for public relations.

Seek Open Shop Law Repeal In Tennessee

In at least one "no union security" state there will be a bitter fight for the unions this year.

With the state's new labor-endorsed Gov. Gordon L. Browning and State Rep. Paul A. Phillips of Nashville leading the way, the legislature is tooling up for a battle to toss out the open-shop law, adopted in 1947.

Phillips, sponsor of the repeal measure, says he already has 45 commitments in the lower house. A majority of the 99 members is required for passage.

Professor Says Profits Justify Better Pay

THE THREE top incumbent officers of the Oklahoma CIO Council were reelected without opposition and a full legislative program, along the lines of the Natl. CIO program, was adopted at the council's seventh annual convention recently in Oklahoma City.

Some 100 delegates and a like number of visitors attending the two-day meeting were welcomed to the state capital by Mayor Street, who noted that the State CIO had played an important role in the Nov. 2 election victory.

Labor's claim to a 1949 wage increase was given a further boost by Dr. Phillip Howell, economics professor at Tulsa Univ. On the basis of industry's unusually high profits, he said, labor is entitled to a wage increase.

The need for immediate repeal of Taft-Hartley and restoration of the Wagner Act, for a $1 hourly minimum wage and other legislative advances was emphasized by CIO Oil Workers' General Counsel Lindsay Walden. Repeal of the hated labor act, CIO Reg. Dir. Robert McVay told delegates, would enable the CIO to explore many fields in the state.

OKLAHOMA Commissioner of Labor Jim Hughes and Director Clarence Scott of the U. S. Apprentice Service also addressed the gathering.

Unanimously returned to council offices were A. W. Mitchell, president; J. W. Burton, vice president, and Arthur L. Cross, secretary-treasurer.

Resolutions ranged from a call for repeal of the state's prohibition law to vigorous support of PAC. One catch-all resolution hailed progress made at the natl. CIO convention in Portland, Ore., and gave blanket endorsement to the program adopted by the parent body.

In urging repeal of Taft-Hartley and re-enactment of the Wagner Act, the convention said the anti-labor bill was passed "in a spirit of deliberate anti-labor venom, with particular malice toward the CIO . . . designed . . . with the specific purpose of crippling and defeating the gains made by labor . . ."

(Editor's note: Motto of the state of Oklahoma is "Labor omnia vincit—labor conquers all things.")

Carey On WFTU:

'There is Nothing Left for Us to Split'

THE CIO withdrew from the executive bureau of the World Federation of Trade Unions because it saw no possibility of "agreement . . . on any important issue."

That explanation was offered by CIO Secy-Treas. James B. Carey in a formal statement issued in Paris Jan. 17 when he—together with representatives of the British and Dutch unions—left the bureau meeting.

Final action on CIO's relationship with the WFTU probably will be taken at the next CIO Executive Board meeting, scheduled for March 2. It appears likely that the Board will support the action taken by Carey at Paris.

The CIO official's statement declared in part:

"The CIO sees no point in remaining in an organization so paralyzed by disagreement that it, in effect, no longer performs any useful function.

"The purpose of a world organization of labor is to serve workers. It is not to serve governments, or politburos, or political parties, or any other group.

"A world organization of labor must be free and independent of these influences. It must be free to criticize any or all of these other bodies, where they violate the interests of labor."

CAREY'S statement made clear that in the past two years the WFTU has not functioned along these lines. He recalled that in its first few months it had operated with "a large measure of internal agreement," but that agreement "became more and more difficult."

He recalled that CIO had made broad concessions in order to find a middle way for WFTU operations and policy, but that agreements made in both 1947 and 1948 had never been fully carried out.

"Communist publications were launching attack after attack against the CIO leaders for carrying out the policies and principles of the WFTU, as originally formulated and agreed upon," Carey said, in reference to earlier CIO efforts to secure discussion of the Marshall Plan.

"These publications demanded that the 'Reformists' be driven out of the leadership of the WFTU. Thus the all-inconclusiveness which had been the cornerstone of the WFTU was undermined and destroyed."

At Rome, in the spring of 1948, the WFTU's top committee reaffirmed the principles on which the organization was founded, Carey said, and promised to re-establish "the balance between trade unionist and Communist elements at all levels in the structure of the WFTU. . . .

"Rather than carry out these agreements, a deliberate attempt was made to sabotage those decisions by inaction."

CAREY SAID nothing "could be more ridiculous" than allegations that the CIO had sought to split the WFTU.

"When the Communists abandoned the fundamental principles on which this organization was founded, when the Communists sought to pervert this organization to serve their ends, they irrevocably split this body in two," he charged. "The WFTU became inactive and ceased to exist.

Carey returned to Washington last week after attending a meeting of the ERP Trade Union Advisory Council in Berne, Switzerland. The Council comprises pro-ERP union groups in the Marshall Plan countries, as well as the CIO and AFL.

The WFTU meeting at Paris followed discussions between a CIO delegation named by Pres. Murray and leaders of British unions. In the group were Carey, Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers; Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the United Steelworkers; and Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the Auto Workers.

WALK OUT OF WFTU: Representatives of the CIO and of British and Dutch unions walked out of a meeting of the executive bureau of the World Federation of Trade Unions after a British proposal to suspend the activities of the WFTU for a year was defeated by a four to three vote. L. to R., CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, Arthur Deakin, president of the WFTU and of the British Transport and General Workers Union, and E. Kupers, Dutch delegate. Carey has since returned to his office at Washington, D. C.

Abolition Of WFTU Is Urged By CCL

The World Federation of Trade Unions, as now constituted, "should be abolished," the Canadian Congress of Labor declared last week in a policy statment issued by its executive council at Ottawa.

The CCL—to which CIO unions in the Dominion are affiliated—declared itself "ready to support a world trade union body wherein the chief and principal qualification should be that the unions of all nations shall be free institutions, devoting themselves to the day-to-day welfare of the workers and people of all lands."

The CCL statement charged that trade unions of Russia and the satellite nations have "state company union status" and are "virtual prisoners of their government."

ERP Advisory Unit Meets

Walter Schevenels, veteran European labor official, was elected secretary of the ERP Trade Union Advisory Committee at a meeting in Berne, Switzerland, last week.

Schevenels was the only candidate for the office, and he received the votes of all the labor groups present—with the exception of the AFL and the French Christian Trade Union group, which abstained from voting.

The new ERP union advisory group official was secretary of the pre-war Intl. Federation of Trade Unions and served as an assistant secretary of the World Federation of Trade Unions. Schevenels was the only nominee suggested by a committee composed of Leon Jouhaux of the French Workers; Vincent Tewson of the British Trades Union Congress; and E. Kupers of the Dutch unions.

Attending the meeting for the CIO were Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey; Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers; Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the Auto Workers; Elmer Cope, CIO's representative at the WFTU; and Jay Crane, assistant to Cope.

It was the feeling of the CIO and of most of the other organizations represented at the Berne parley that the ERP trade union advisory committee should continue to function as a "one-purpose" agency concentrating on Marshall Plan problems.

Organizationally Speaking

CIO Reg. Dir. Ewald Sandner announces that an election conducted by the New Jersey Mediation Board was won by Local 262 of the Whole & Retail Union by a vote of 39 to 1. George Braverman, the local's business agent, was in charge.

Local 262 won a contract with Gretchen Kitchen, Jersey City, N. J., after a prolonged and militant strike. Braverman also was in charge of the strike.

The Screen Office & Professional Employes Guild, Local 109, UOPWA, announces that the employes of National Screen Service voted 167 for a union shop; 13 against, with one void ballot.

CIO Reg. Dir. George Craig reports in an election held at the Barrett Division, Chemical & Dye Corp., Philadelphia, the workers voted 26 to 4 in favor of CIO Oil Workers. The CIO Playthings, Novelty & Jewelry Workers won recognition at the Maid-Rite Lamp and Shade Co., Philadelphia, and a union contract, covering union shop, wage increases and other benefits as a result of a strike at the plant. The Regional Office assisted throughout the strike and negotiations which have been completed. Ben Stahl, CIO Field Representatives, and John Bianco, PJNW representative, were in charge.

George Brown, Director of Organization IWA-CIO announces that the workers of the Ironwood Flooring Co., Ironwood, Mich., voted 13 to 6 in favor of IWA-CIO.

Fred Pieper was the first CIO regional director in Louisiana. He later became director for the Southern Organizing Drive in Louisiana. Effective February 1, Brother Pieper will be functioning as Southern Representative for the National CIO on general matters. Robert W. Starnes, director of Southern Drive in Mississippi, and director in the state of Louisiana when Brother Pieper was in the Marines, will also take over in Louisiana for the CIO in both the Southern Drive and general CIO matters.

William Lavelle who was Secretary of the Ohio State CIO Council is now functioning as Assistant Legislative Representative for the CIO in Washington, D. C. Bill did a great job as Secretary-Treasurer for the Council. In his place Jacob Clayman will be a worthy successor to Brother Lavelle.

The NLRB has ruled that the UQPWA local officer must sign Taft-Hartley affidavit in order to get on the union ballot for the Prudential Insurance Co. election. The AFL and independents will be on that ballot. The National CIO is rendering every support it can to assist in winning this election for UOPWA. These agents need a strong union and I am calling all to render every support they can to win this election.

Philadelphia Traction Workers Vote On Strike February 3

Some 11,000 CIO Transport Workers in Philadelphia may strike on Feb. 11 unless a contract has been signed by that date.

Irritated by the Philadelphia Traction Company's refusal to budge from its 2c an hour wage offer, the local's executive board and section officers voted a "no-contract, no work" policy. The recommendation will be acted upon by the membership at a meeting scheduled for Feb. 3.

No other issues in the union's 16-point program have been considered by the company, union spokesmen said. The TWU struck PTC in 1946.

Shows Negroes Don't Hurt Biz

Does the fact of having Negro sales personnel in large department stores lead to a loss of business and resistance on the part of the buying public?

Definitely "no" two professors who've made a careful study of this problem declare.

In a recent study of New York department stores by Dr. Gerhart Saenger of New York Univ. and Miss Emily Gilbert of Columbia Univ. it was found that among 128 persons who were interviewed, many of them prejudiced, that the presence of Negro sales clerks did not affect customer's buying habits.

"In the average American," the study revealed, "prejudiced attitudes co-exist with his belief in the fundamental right of equal opportunity for all. The prejudiced person, if confronted with the presence of Negro sales persons, believes that others must have accepted the fact of these Negro clerks."

Of the customers who were interviewed in the study, 40 per cent "failed to show any prejudice," a similar number "approved of Negro sales clerks except for 'more intimate' departments such as clothing, lingerie, or food," and the remainder—19 per cent—"opposed the hiring of Negro sales personnel generally."

Ruttenberg Says:

Intl. Pacts Aid Others And U. S.

CIO MADE its first formal appearance before the 81st Congress last week—to urge three-year extension of Uncle Sam's power to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements.

Stanley H. Ruttenberg, CIO director of education and research, told members of the House Ways & Means Committee that such a move would benefit the world economy, world peace and American prosperity.

The 80th Congress last year turned down Pres. Truman's request for three-year extension of the trade pact power, and limited the government to only a one-year authorization. The President has strongly urged the longer period in order that foreign nations may be assured an opportunity to develop their commercial recovery programs.

Ruttenberg, in his appearance before the House group, pointed out that the United States must buy, as well as sell, in the world markets—both to keep its own industrial machine going and to help spur international trade and recovery.

"IT IS ESSENTIAL that we reduce the barriers to trade which exist between ourselves and foreign countries so that these countries may export to us, and by so doing, acquire the necessary means of exchange which is so vital for rehabilitation and continuous international trade," Ruttenberg declared.

"Reciprocal trade agreements play an important part in enabling us to carry out our tremendous responsibilities and commitments under the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948 'to reduce trade barriers . . . ' "

Labor has a "direct stake in international trade," the CIO economist told the Congressional group, because the U. S. is a large exporter of products made by American workers and "because our standard of living is, in part, dependent upon importing many commodities from countries abroad."

Goldberg To Talk In T-H Repeal

A brief, up-to-the minute review of CIO's position on T-H repeal will be presented Tuesday, Feb. 1, over the ABC network by Arthur Goldberg, CIO general counsel.

He will be interviewed on CIO's attitudes during the "It's In the Family" show—broadcast on ABC at 10:30 p.m., EST.

Joe O'Brien, quiz master on the CIO question and answer program, will toss the questions at Goldberg.

CVA Plans Given Top Preference

PLANS FOR a Columbia Valley Authority — modeled along the lines of the successful TVA—will be given a top priority in the Administration's program for public power.

Pres. Truman last week notified government agencies to get to work on legislation to create a CVA. And the electric power lobby in Washington immediately reacted with cries of "super-state" as it had criticized TVA back in the '30s.

But Rep. Hugh Mitchell (D. Wash.), long an advocate of federal development in the Northwest, told The CIO News that there is broad support for the program in the area. Mitchell is president of the League for CVA, with headquarters in Seattle, and has introduced bills in previous years for such a project.

The President's letter said it is "most important" that legislative plans be developed on a "sound basis." He sent the letter to the Secretaries of Interior, Agriculture and Commerce, the Director of the Budget and the head of the Council of Economic Advisers, and called for joint action among these agencies to rush the plans along.

The action is regarded as giving the Columbia River project headway over similar plans for the Missouri River, where conflicting interests — including the Army—have hindered action in the past.

A SPOKESMAN for the League for CVA in Seattle said it appeared that chances for a CVA are "brighter than ever, with the Columbia floods of last June fresh in people's minds and a crippling power shortage causing severe trouble in the area."

ACW and Hickey-Freeman:

Employer Demands Strong Union As Business Aid

By GLORIA CAPLAN

THIS IS a story that Sen. Taft and ex-Sen. Ball and ex-Rep. Hartley and the rest of the Taft-Hartley framers won't like to hear.

It's about a manufacturer who insists on a strong union—and on a closed shop—as an aid to his business.

It's the story of 29 years of friendly collective bargaining without a single strike.

Not many workers own a suit with the Hickey-Freeman label in it. The Hickey-Freeman label has come to mean top-notch quality at prices few workers can afford.

With a clientele consisting almost entirely of upper bracket tax payers, Hickey-Freeman could be expected to assume the same nose-in-the-air attitude toward workers and unions that its product's price suggests.

But that's far from true at the busy Rochester, N. Y., plant, in which the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union chairman even has his own office.

Story Told In Report

The factors behind this unusual relationship—unusual for industry as a whole, but characteristic of the men's clothing industry—are related in a detailed report released last week by the Natl. Planning Association. The study of the ACWA at Hickey-Freeman is the fourth in a series of case studies into the causes of industrial peace published by the NPA.

It took a bitter struggle in the men's clothing industry, reversal of management's early antagonism and a strong, responsible union to forge the happy relationship existing today at Hickey-Freeman. And therein hangs a tale, as NPA discovered:

Back in 1915 the Almalgamated Clothing Workers, then a year old, was desperately attempting to bring the Rochester clothing manufacturers within the union fold. Opposition from the Rochester Clothiers' Exchange, the manufacturers' association, was so bitter that by 1918 there were still no union contracts and the situation seemed ripe for a general shut-down.

But 1918 was a boom year, and employers were anxious to keep production going full speed ahead. Thus, when Sidney Hillman-ACW's first president and many years later the first chairman of the CIO Political Action Committee—persuaded a Harvard professor and a Boston businessman to act as mediators, the Clothiers' Exchange was quick to seize on this peaceful solution.

Two Sides Meet

Not long afterwards Rochester manufacturers, who previously were "above" sitting in the same room with a labor leader, were persuaded by the mediators to meet with Hillman.

The two sides agreed to let the mediators arbitrate the dispute—and out of that decision grew the union's first Rochester contract on an industry-wide basis. In addition to a 10 to 20% wage boost, it recognized the union as bargaining agent and provided for the use of an impartial chairman to settle any disputes.

"Fits Perfectly"

Hickey-Freeman was one of the Association members affected by the settlement. With collective bargaining now inevitable, Jacob L. Freeman, the firm's founder, decided to hire an economist full-time to handle labor relations.

"We want to hire a man who is 51% pro-labor," he told Dr. N. I. Stone, who got the job, "because we are anti-labor enough ourselves to keep the balance."

But that attitude quickly changed to one of friendship. Under the new H-F setup, the new labor department handled grievances directly and the old dictatorial power of the foremen was removed. No longer were foremen permitted to hire and fire—thus eliminating kickbacks and favoritism—or to use "loud and picturesque language when addressing the young women" or to promote those who played their game. Together with the union the firm's labor department ironed out those difficulties.

And despite the contract's provision for arbitration, not a single case has had to go to the arbiter for the past 18 years.

As for the contract itself—the H-F labor director proudly admits he hasn't read it in his 18 years with the company. Why? Because, through their personal day-to-day relationship, each side is secure in the knowledge of the other's good faith.

Mutual Respect

The union knows management isn't looking through a magnifying glass for loopholes, and management knows the union's word is its bond.

Harold Rauber, head of the company's cost and production division told the CIO News some of the reasons his company hasn't been giving the arbiter any business.

"In the beginning," he explains, "arbitration served a useful purpose in laying down basic principles. But as each side's suspicions and antagonism began to die down, neither of us found arbitration satisfactory.

"After all, when you go to arbitration, it gets to be a game. You want to win, whether you're right or not—and either side can present figures to substantiate his argument. Confronted with these conflicting figures, the third party can only be more confused. On the other hand, when we sit down directly with the union, both of us know the situation, and neither of us can juggle figures and get away with it."

The H-F policy of cooperating with the union extends into every problem affecting workers. The union is a partner in all such decisions. As for the closed shop, management considers it "essential to the maintenance of its constructive labor-management relationship."

Another important stabilizing factor is the use of industry-wide bargaining, which eliminated the old sore spot of employer competition at labor's expense. As the first impartial chairman in Rochester, William Leiserson, pointed out in 1920, "Competition among employers should be in efficiency of management, salesmanship, and service to consumers, not in getting cheap labor."

Good Conditions

What has all this meant for the employes?

- Today they earn an average hourly pay of $1.50.
- They enjoy an employer-financed insurance and pension plan, including sickness, hospitalization, death and unemployment benefits.
- They have job security and a share-the-work system, which prevents some from being laid off while others get the available work in slack times.
- It has provided a healthy, happy work atmosphere.

For the employer it has meant:

- A cooperative work force and union, helping to increase production and save unnecessary costs.
- Production uninterrupted by strikes, slowdowns, constant bickering.
- No competition based on cheaper labor.

For the union it has meant:

- Complete security, which permits it to devote full attention to improvement of conditions instead of battling the boss to retain its position.
- No worry over unilateral layoffs or employer subterfuge.
- A share in all policy decisions affecting workers.

Comments the NPA report: "The habit of mutual respect and compatibility has become so much a part of their daily life that plant executives and union leaders have stopped thinking in the more common idioms of current labor strife."

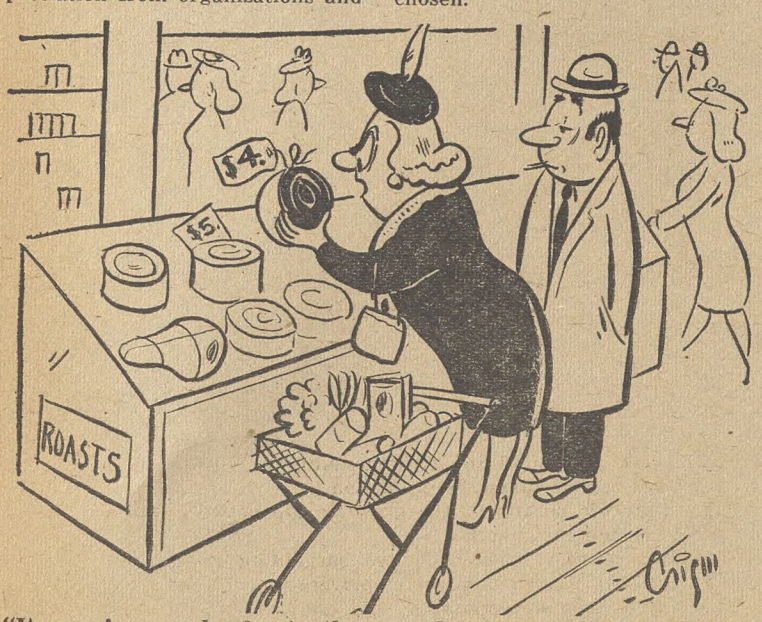
CSC Helps British Workers

Food parcels from the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee have "proved of great help" to British workers, according to a letter from Vincent Tewson, general secretary of the British Trades Union Congress, to CIO-CSC Director Leo Perlis.

". . . I thought I would let you know," Tewson wrote, "that we have received many letters of appreciation from organizations and individuals who have received one of your gifts.

"I feel sure that the individual recipients will write to the donors to thank them for their kindness and generosity in sending the parcels, but I did want you to know that the parcels have given great pleasure to all who have received them and proved of great help.

"They were excellently packed and the contents very well chosen."



"It sure is a work of art—the way they cover up all that bone and gristle with so little meat."

Designed For U. S. Congress

THE CIO has sent to all members of Congress a new pamphlet—"For All the People"—designed to give members of that body a clear, summarized picture of the CIO legislative program and the structure of the CIO legislative organization in Washington.

In an accompanying letter to members of Congress, Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director, wrote:

"'For All the People' has been designed specifically for members of the 81st Congress and for the non-labor public to acquaint them briefly but authoritatively with the general outlines of CIO policy, as defined by our 1948 convention at Portland, Oregon."

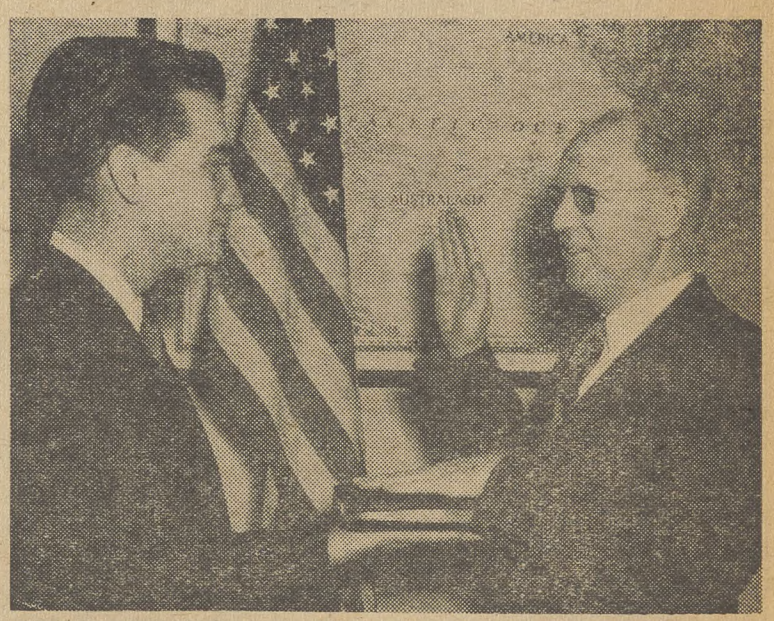
In a preface to the pamphlet, CIO Pres. Philip Murray expresses the belief, on behalf of the organization's six million members, "that our American democracy can—and must—be strengthened in the interests of all the people. The people want action on their social, political and economic problems."

Copies of the pamphlet are available at the CIO Publications Dept., 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C., at the rate of 15c each, 50 for $6.75, 100 for $12, 500 for $50.

Credit Union Reports 7.2% Profit

A credit union formed in May 1948 by Local 33, CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, Baltimore, Md., reports a net profit of 7.2%. Treas. Howard D. Jones said the credit union, the first set up by shipyard unions in Baltimore, had done $7,290 worth of business in small loans ranging from $25 to $200.

The board of directors recommended that a 4% dividend be paid, and that the remaining 3.2% profit be held in the reserve fund for the current year.



OFF FOR EUROPE: Allan L. Swim, CIO News editor and publicity director, takes oath as ECA consultant before leaving for a tour of European Marshall Plan countries. He and two other labor editors—Cornelius Miller, AFL, and William Gausmann, Labor Press Associates—will talk with trade unionists and labor editors to get reactions to the European Recovery Program.

CIO To Senate Committee:

'Thomas Bill Lies Within Framework Of State of Union Message'

Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel, said this in his testimony before the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee hearing on the Thomas Bill, to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act and to re-enact the Wagner Act with certain amendments:

"The Committee is to be congratulated on its decision to repeal T-H and re-enact the Wagner Act. In our opinion no other course of action would be possible in view of the recent election. Certainly, it cannot be denied that there have been few issues in all of our history which have so dominated a Presidential campaign as repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

"The CIO prefers as the best approach to new labor legislation the so-called two-package procedure under which, first, the Wagner Act would be immediately re-enacted as a substitute for the repealed Taft-Hartley Act; and second, appropriate amendments could receive separate and deliberate consideration.

"We came to this conclusion because of the imperative and immediate necessity which amendments in keeping with the President's various State of the Union messages are to be added to the Wagner Act.

"We are convinced that T-H should not remain on the books one day longer than is absolutely necessary. The effect which this law has had on free collective bargaining has been so disastrous as to make it imperative that the law be immediately erased from the statute books and the Wagner Act be immediately substituted as the law of the land.

"Instead of approaching this problem in two steps, the Senate Committee has adopted a one-step approach, under which amendments in keeping with the President's various State of the Union messages are to be added to the Wagner Act.

"We would have preferred that the proposed amendments under consideration be deferred until repeal of T-H and re-enactment of the Wagner Act, because we believe that such an approach is in the public's interest.

"However, the Committee is proceeding under its resolution and we have been requested to state our views with respect to the amendments to the Wagner Act now under consideration.

"The position of the CIO is that we do not oppose in principle the amendments to the Wagner Act contained in the Thomas Bill.

"The CIO has heretofore expressed its willingness to endorse legislation within the spirit of the President's State of the Union message of January 5, 1949. The Thomas Bill lies within the framework of that message.

"Further it appears that the Thomas Bill offers the only practicable method of obtaining speedy Taft-Hartly repeal and re-enactment of the substantive provisions of the Wagner Act.

"Our indorsement of this bill does not mean that we approve the Committee Print as written. In our testimony we shall offer to the Committee constructive suggestions to clarify various of the provisions and to define more precisely its terminology.

"With the prompt enactment of this bill, the country will return to a course of sound labor relations based on mutual trust and free collective bargaining."

Are Republican Senators Filibustering On T-H?

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

WITH the Senate Labor Committee hearings on the repeal of Taft-Hartley and renactment of a modified Wagner Act now in their second week, one thing is obvious to even the most uninformed observer:

- Most Republican members of the committee are staging a filibuster to avoid carrying the mandate expressed in the November election.

They are doing this by two methods:

1. Long speeches disguised as questions to witnesses.

2. Attempts to disrupt committee procedure by moving to end night sessions, etc.

The Republican members and their approaches:

Robert A. Taft (O.): He is a fast and furious prosecutor, determined to protect the T-H bill, which he co-fathered. He talks perhaps most of any of the Senators, but loses some effectiveness by numerous nervous giggles.

Senator Aiken (Vt.): Only Republican who did not join in the filibustering tactics last week. He is kind and gentle, even when critical of a witness' stand.

H. Alexander Smith (N. J.): He worries—or says he does—at great length about the poor worker who, Smith states, has been pushed around by a storybook type of labor "boss." The phrase, "right to work," occurs often in his speeches.

Wayne Morse (Ore.): Though he says he disagrees with his GOP colleagues on many points, he has joined with them in voting for the end of night sessions and for hearings over a longer period of days. He also expounds at great length on every point in the Administration Bill.

Forrest C. Donnell (Mo.): He's proof that Missouri can produce almost the political opposite of Harry S. Truman. With the zeal of a city attorney trying his first case, he puts himself forth as a great constitutional lawyer. He is a master of the obvious, and, as one reporter said, can drive a point farther into the ground than anyone ever seen on the Washington scene.

Plot!

Sen. Donnell wasted a lot of the committee's time trying to prove that by some hidden language, Secy. Tobin was trying to "gain control" over the Conciliation Service.

P. S. That's just what Tobin has told the committee he wanted to do.

While There's Life

When a Republican expressed surprise at the lack of injunction provisions in the bill, someone remarked he changed his mind.

Quipped Sen. Murray: "If the President has learned, maybe there is hope for the Republicans learning, too."

WHILE the Democrats seemed unruffled by the GOP filibustering attack, there is one innovation on the majority side. Sens. Paul Douglas (Ill.) and Hubert Humphrey (Minn.) have shown themselves to be no respectors of the tradition that freshmen Congressmen should sit quietly and let their "elders" do all the talking. The two have made many brief, telling blows for the cause of labor.

The House Labor sub-committee which will begin hearings soon has adopted a resolution calling for repeal of T-H and re-enactment of the Wagner Act.

The sub-committee's Democratic majority is strongly anti-Taft-Hartley. It consists of Reps. Kelley (Pa.), chairman; Powell (N. Y.), Bailey (W. V.), Irving (Mo.), Perkins (Ky.), Jacobs (Ind.), Burke (Ohio) and Weir (Minn.). The GOP minority is made up of McConnell (Pa.), Smith (Kans.), Nixon (Calif.), Werdell (Calif.), and Velde (Ill.).

The first week of the Senate hearings—which were scheduled to close Feb. 10—were indicative of the GOP stalling tactics. By week's end in nearly 200 hours of hearings, only four witnesses had been heard.

They were:

Arthur Goldberg, general counsel of the CIO: "The CIO has heretofore expressed its willingness to indorse legislation within the spirit of the President's State of the Union message. The Thomas Bill lies within the framework of that message."

(The gist of Goldberg's formal testimony appears above. Highlights of his oral testimony appear later in this story.)

Cyrus S. Ching, director of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Board: He disagreed with the President, asked that his agency be kept separate from the Labor Dept.

Paul Herzog, chairman of the Natl. Labor Relations Board: He backed the provisions of the bill which applied directly to his department, said he could not properly comment on some other sections and took an "it-doesn't-matter-either-way attitude on still others.

The hearings—which will this week overlap those of the larger House Labor Committee—were first held in the medium-sized Senate Labor Committee room. Later they were moved to the large Caucus Room when it became obvious that the crowds of spectators neded more space.

THE hearings opened amid a Hollywood-type fanfare of floodlights, movie cameramen, still photographers, television men and dozens of reporters, correspondents, columnists and radio commentators.

Every session was crowded, with standees crowding the back of the two rooms.

Tobin made it manifestly clear that this was also President Truman's bill, that it was designed to carry out the President's State of the Union recommendations.

It was also clear that the father of Labor's Magna Carta also wholeheartedly was for the bill. A letter was read from Sen. Robert F. Wagner (D., N. Y.), ailing at his home, which stated that the Thomas Bill was in the Wagner Act (NLRA) spirit.

The filibuster was really operating when it came time for Goldberg to testify. He was due at 9:30 A. M. Thursday. At 5:17 P. M., he was called to the stand. A wrangle over some technicality began after he identified himself.

It then became 5:24 and the Senators recessed until 7:30 P. M. At 7:41, Goldberg began his testimony.

Goldberg denied a charge by Taft that the constitution of the Steelworkers' Union was un-Democratic. On the contrary, he said, it sets up vastly democratic processes.

"Not this one!" Goldberg asserted.

Taft tried to maneuver Goldberg into admitting he didn't care about the public interest; Goldberg replied that unions are far more concerned with public interest than is industry.

Taft insisted that injunctions could be used to aid labor. Goldberg pointed out the Chicago Decoration Day massacre of Steelworker members. "Under T-H, an injunction could have been obtained," Taft said. Goldberg asked; "Does the Senator seriously think that an injunction could do anything for the massacred men after they were killed?"

Goldberg said he disagreed with a statement by Atty. Gen. Clark that the President already has power to seek injunctions in cases of extreme national emergency.

Taft said he agreed with Goldberg's opinion and then shot the question:

"Do you then agree with me that there should be some injunction power in this law?"

"Emphatically, no," Goldberg replied. "Injunctions against labor are unfair, morally and legally. They are strikebreakers, they deprive labor of just and needed gains."

In his brief, Goldberg assailed the section requiring affidavits relating to political beliefs of union members as unconstitutional. And, he said, it has led to widespread discriminatory practices by the employers and the NLRB.

TOBIN didn't wilt a bit under the heavy fire of Taft, Smith, Morse and Donnell. He didn't even change expression when Atty. Gen. Clark sent Chairman Thomas his "opinion

'T-H Is Guilty'

CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg listed these four indictments of the Taft-Hartley Act—on the basis of a survey among unions—in his appearance before the Senate Labor Committee:

1. "The law has hampered and obstructed organization of the unorganized. For every 100 elections held in the year before T-H enactment only 60 were held in the first year of T-H existence."

2. "The act has forced unnecessary strikes . . . is a stimulus upon organizational strikes . . . caused by law itself . . . encourages disputes over economic issues which could have been adjusted had employers not found the strikebreaking provisions of the law so inviting . . . government by injunction."

3. "Prevents closing of the growing gap between workers' living costs and earnings."

4. "Where established collective bargaining relationships existed the law has encouraged employers to cut contract standards and to become uncooperative and adamant in the settlement of grievances."

GOODBYE, TAFT-HARTLEY

The Thomas Bill, now being studied in the Senate Labor Committee, should sound the death knell for the Taft-Hartley Act.

It's what the papers have been calling a "one-package" bill. T-H repeal, enactment of the Wagner Act, and Wagner Act amendments covering jurisdictional disputes, secondary boycotts and national emergency disputes are all wrapped up in the package.

CIO argued for a "two-package" approach; we wanted the amendments to come after T-H was out of the way and the Wagner Act back on the books.

But the most important thing is to get T-H quickly off the law books; and as the CIO told the Senate, the Thomas bill now offers "the only practicable method" of repealing T-H.

But labor must be on guard. Amendments will be offered to the one-package bill—just as they would have been offered to the two-package bill.

The job now for labor is to get the Thomas bill speedily enacted—without Trojan horse amendments. ★ ★ ★

UNION SECURITY PROVES ITS VALUE

We hope that plenty of Congressmen, plenty of radio commentators, plenty of industrial relations men will read the story about 30 years of good labor relations at the Hickey-Freeman Co. in Rochester, N. Y.

The Amalgamated Clothing Workers organized Hickey-Freeman in 1918. It's been a happy relationship ever since. The union and the company both deserve a lot of praise; and we're glad to see that the National Planning Association has issued a fine study on union-management relations at the company.

We like the mutual respect, the improvements for workers and management, the attitude of cooperation that the NPA study so clearly reveals.

A lot of people owe it to themselves to read the Hickey-Freeman story. In particular, we hope that those politicians who are so prone to blame all the ills of the world on the closed shop—or on any other form of union security—will read it with particular attention. ★ ★ ★

For it shows that union security is the strong foundation of good relations at Hickey-Freeman. And that's what unions have been saying for a long time.

ONE STEP FORWARD

The Democrats in Congress met the problem of the House Un-American Activities Committee with a half-measure—the qualification that the Democratic majority of the Committee would be filled with lawyers.

That, of course, is no guarantee of perfect behavior. There are lawyers and lawyers; passing a bar examination doesn't make a man a liberal.

It seems to us, however, that the Committee has acted wisely in deciding to bar radio microphones, newsreel cameras, television apparatus and bright spotlights from its future hearings. They all contributed to the overheated atmosphere of previous hearings, and they played into the plans of publicity hounds like Rep. J. Parnell Thomas.

Under the new procedure the public will be fully informed of the course of the hearings (newspapermen will be present)—but the circus features will be missing.

That's a forward step. But we still feel that the best thing Congress could do with the Committee is to abolish it—and prevent any possible repetition of the cynical attack on civil rights which marked the Committee's conduct during the 80th Congress.

T-H, Board Distort 'Free Speech'

Employers Are Allowed to Interfere in Representative Elections

By ARTHUR J. GOLDBERG
CIO General Counsel

UNDER THE Wagner Act the Board and the courts protected the employer's right of freedom of speech but at the same time prevented him from using his economic power over employes to destroy their right to organize and bargain collectively.

Both the Board and the courts recognized, however, that it was a relatively simple matter for an employer to intimidate his employes. As the Supreme Court put it, "slight suggestions as to the employer's choice between unions may have telling effect among men who know the consequences of incurring the employer's strong displeasure."

Employers, however, were not satisfied with the right to free speech under the Wagner Act. What they wanted was the right to coerce and intimidate employes.

They repeatedly complained that they did not have free speech under the Wagner Act with the result that the Taft-Hartley Act was so drafted as to give employers a greater opportunity to use speech for coercive purposes.

The generous provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act were in addition so interpreted by the Labor Board as to give the employer virtually a free rein. Employers speedily, relying upon the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act and the acquiescence of the Labor Board, made it clear that they wanted free speech for purposes of union-busting.

Even in the Wagner Act days employers stretched their free speech protections to interfere to some degree in representation elections. After the Taft-Hartley Act employer interference in elections became a stock technique.

So, in one case (Fontaine Conversion Works), the employer not only supported the company union and discharged union members, but made a number of statements such as the following:

1. A supervisor told union men that they "would be sorry" for bringing the union into the plant.

2. The same employer made a speech, on company time, to which employes were obliged to come. This speech contained the now customary protestations of "no coercive intent" but was plainly designed to influence the employes' choice.

3. After the discharge of five employes for union activity, the employer sent out a letter citing this incident and again claiming no discriminatory intent.

The Board found that these statements were protected by free speech even in the light of the employer's unfair labor practices.

In another case (Hinde and Dauch Paper Co.), the employer assembled his employes and made a speech which contained such statements as the following:

"Your job and your relationship with us is involved."

"Our relations with this union are bad."

Supervisors in the plant made the following statements:

"Join the AF of L or a company union."

In a third case (Wrought Iron Range Co.), the employer organized a company union and against this background of illegality made the following statements:

"The company wants to win this election."

"On Tuesday afternoon you are going to vote about your job."

"You may gather we don't like the idea of a labor union: we don't."

"It (the election) will directly affect your future well-being."

The Board found that even though the employer organized a company union this illegal act could not be considered in determining whether the statements were coercive.

There are other cases in which the Board has permitted employers to dictate to employes how they shall vote in elections.

I have always wondered what right employers have to insist on participating in their employes' election of a bargaining agent. Certainly employers would be outraged if it were suggested that the union or its members participate in the election of management representatives. Yet there is no question that under the Taft-Hartley Act employers have not only been encouraged to participate in representation elections but in a shocking number of instances have completely destroyed the opportunity of freedom of choice which is essential to any election.

The Wagner Act and its rules with respect to employer participation in elections must be restored and employers must be made to realize that they have no right either under the law or the Constitution to decide for the employes whether they should have a bargaining agent and who such a bargaining agent should be.

Advertising Held Less Than 99% Pure

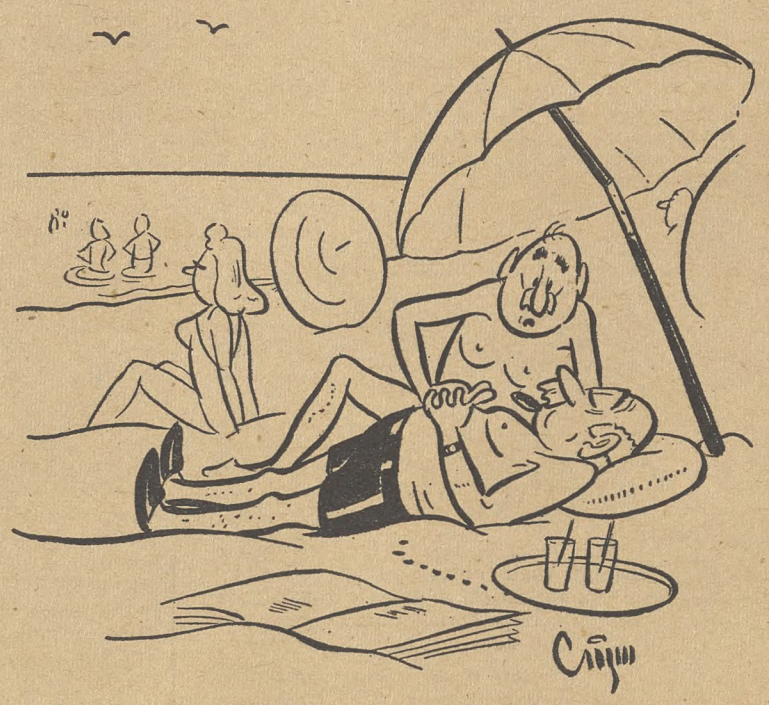
You should have had a photographer at Grand Rapids, Mich., to take a picture of the audience during the speech of Colston E. Warne, president of Consumers Union and professor of economics at Amherst College, delivered to the local advertising club. Well, here's the speech, some of it paraphrased.)

"Those who have superior products and honestly tell the truth about them, can scarcely be heard in the flow of competitive chatter, exaggerating the mediocre," Warne said.

"Give-away prizes, choruses singing of trade names, and falsified box-top endorsements scarcely build confidence.

"When such appeals are coupled with the distortion of the news through the sponsorship of biased commentators who quite informally plead for a return to reaction against the public will, additional discredit attaches the profession. The last election has a moral for advertisers as well as for the pollsters."



"I tell you, it doesn't look good—Jones wrote me that he actually had to go out and sell a car last week."

Warne said advertising stands indicted because it:

"1. Stressed inconsequential values.

"2. Brought a false perspective as to merit of products, often bewildering rather than informing.

"3. Lowered our ethical standards by the all too frequent insincerity of its appeals.

"4. Corrupted and distorted the news.

"5. Wasted much good timber and chemicals and spoiled much of our landscape and our radio enjoyment.

"6. Blocked the speedy use of correct medication.

"7. Created many parental problems by abominable radio programs for children (I speak with feeling about this).

"8. Turned our society into one dominated by style, fashion, and 'keeping up with the Joneses.'

"9. Retarded the growth of thrift by emphasizing immediate expenditures.

"10. Fostered monopoly through its large scale use by only a few financially favored companies.

"These opinions are not alone mine. They represent the attitude felt by millions of Americans who resent being pestered to death by advertising twaddle."

They Disagreed On Their Own Pet Proposal

THIS IS a story about two publishers' representatives who fought long and bitterly for a contract proposal which at least one of them didn't understand.

The first chapter was written by Congress when it passed the Selective Service law prior to U. S. entry into the war.

Chapter 2 came shortly thereafter when a CIO Newspaper Guild unit notified the publisher's representatives it wanted a special contract clause protecting members who went into the armed services.

The final chapter was the real pay-off.

REPRESENTATIVES of the Guild and management faced each other across a big table as negotiations opened.

There was the usual agreement on most of the clauses that had been in effect for several years. Then the Guild's chief negotiator began enumerating new contract demands.

"We think it is absolutely necessary to have a new clause in the contract to protect employes who are drafted into the armed services or volunteer for military and allied services," he said.

"We agree with you," said one of the company representatives. "Our attorney has drafted a contract clause which we believe to be a very good one that will cover this problem completely."

Then he passed out copies of the clause, which was about a third as long as the entire contract for the preceding year.

GUILD negotiators studied the "service men's" clause after the session ended and decided it was unacceptable.

It was long. It was complicated. It was loaded with legal terminology. The negotiators couldn't reach agreement on the meaning of certain phrases.

"Hell's bells!" declared the chief negotiator. "It would take the Supreme Court to interpret this clause. What we need is a short, simple clause covering the situation. We'll turn this down flat."

His colleagues agreed wholeheartedly. Together they restudied the proposal they had submitted, and decided to fight for its adoption.

AT THE next negotiating session it became obvious that management, too, had decided to fight for its proposal.

"Our liability in this matter may become very heavy—and it may be years before some of our present employes return to their jobs," said the management spokesman.

"We've just got to have a clause that will cover all possible contingencies."

"We sure do," said the Guild negotiator. "We agree on that—but the trouble is that we don't know exactly what portions of your proposal means."

"It's a good clause," said the publisher's man. "We've got one of the best attorneys in the country and he says it's a good clause."

WEEKS LATER the same argument was continuing, and by then tempers flared easily and talk was sharp.

"OK, so it's a good clause," shouted the Guild negotiator. "We're just too dumb to understand it and we won't agree to anything we can't understand."

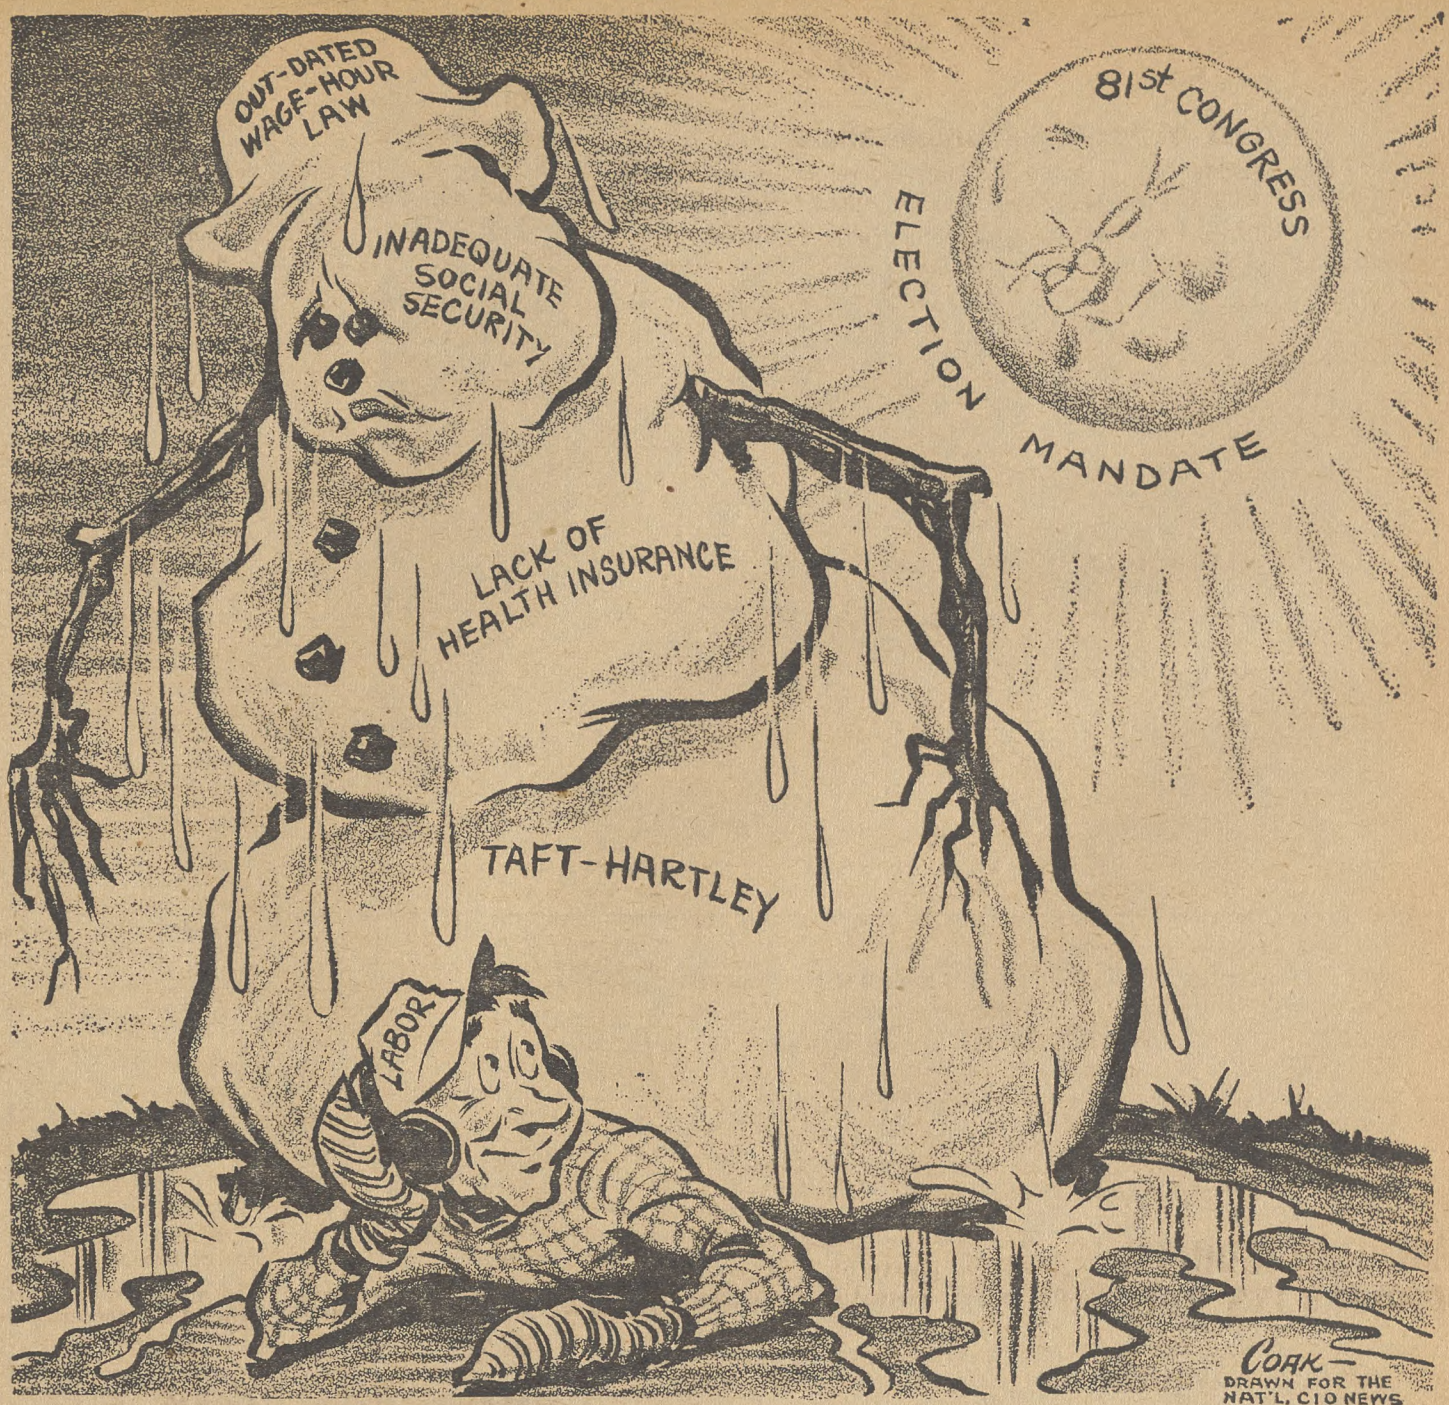
"Well, I'll explain the whole clause to you, point by point," said the publisher's representative—and he began explaining.

A few minutes later the other publisher's representative cut in: "Say, that's not what that section means. It means . . ."

The two argued heatedly until the Guild negotiator declared, "You guys have just proved our point! Even YOU can't agree on what the clause means."

The Guild's proposal was approved a few minutes later. A.L.S.

MELTING AWAY



Just When Do the Press and the People Lose Freedom?

MORRIS L. ERNST and David Loth, the authors of "The People Know Best" tell in a sprightly style why it is important to make a study of the "expert" forecasting of the November, 1948, election.

The authors analyze the press, the columnists, the radio and particularly the polls.

"The People's" conclusions are interesting, and provocative.

The book gives many remarkable quotations from the "experts." But why beat a "dead horse?" In the first place, the horse is a lively corpse.

Many of the wrong-guessers among the writers are as pontifical as ever. Some of them are saying that the people really don't want the Taft-Hartley law repealed and that labor had really very little to do with the election of Truman.

The real danger is what will happen to the papers, radios and polls if they prove wrong again on such a stupendous scale, the book contends.

"The laughter and the jeers will be wasted," Ernst and Loth say, "if they lead only to a cynical belief that the press and the radio are not to be trusted at all.

"If we preserve these great institutions only for their entertainment value, for their comic strips, and their tips on etiquette, their air-borne dramas and comedies, we will have lost our First Freedom.

"It is our loss if we dismiss our experts with a shrug of disbelief. It is their gain and our gain if we read them and listen to them with rather searching questions—'Who told them that?' 'How many people did he interview to reach that conclusion?' 'What kind of people were they?' 'What was the basis of the interview?' 'Is he presenting an argument, a wish or a fact?' . . .

"We cannot afford to lose them; we can improve them. If we do not, we will be defeated by our own cynicism.

"Out of that, and out of the resentment over the special lag between the attitudes of the owners of the press and the public, we will find comfort being given to the proponents of the idea that the United States Government should take over one of the press services or purchase one of the radio networks and operate what is incorrectly spoken of as a TVA of the air . . .

"If the government ever gets control over the content of newspapers and radio, its greed for power will grow and it will become so sensitive to criticism that it will suppress the critics."

IT IS DIFFICULT to quarrel with the conclusion that we should know more about the basis of the polls. But this reviewer does not think that it is necessarily true that if the government gets into the business of publishing and broadcasting we shall lose our freedom.

The government is already in these fields in a limited way. Those who have attacked the State Dept. "Voice of America" broadcasts and the publications and the informational services of the various government agencies have usually only advanced partisan or economy arguments.

The question is how far the government can go in these fields without the loss of our freedom. To get down to cases, there was little freedom under Hitler and there is no area for disagreement in Russia with Stalin. But in England the government controls the British Broadcasting Co. and the dominant Labor Party speaks through its own paper, the London Daily Herald.

Who is hardy enough to prove that the English have lost their freedom? F.R.

Receipt Tax Proposal Flayed By N. J. CIO

Opposition to the proposed gross receipts tax on business and support for a graduated tax on corporate profits exceeding $25,000 a year, as a means of paying off veterans bonus bonds, has been announced by the State CIO.

In a letter to all members of the Legislature, Harry Kranz, state CIO legislative director, said the CIO opposed the gross receipts tax proposal last year and "our position has not changed."

Kranz said the CIO "wholeheartedly supports" a referendum on a $165,000,000 bonus issue for bonuses up to $300 for domestic service, and from $300 to $800 for overseas service "for New Jersey's inflation — victimized veterans," but opposed either a lottery of the gross receipts tax to pay off the bonds.

Kranz attacked the gross receipts tax plan as "nothing more nor less than an indirect sales tax."

SECY. TOBIN AND CHAIRMAN THOMAS

Early Comparisons In Strikes Offered By Secy. Tobin

The number of work stoppages occurring in the three post-war years (1946-48) has, with a single exception (1937) remained consistently higher than during the 1930's.

This trend is even more pronounced when the lost-time factor is considered. Idleness of approximately 34,000,000 man-days for 1948 was greater than for any pre-war year on record.

In the 18 months since the passage of the Taft-Hartley Law (July, 1947, through December, 1948), 259 strikes began, on the average, each month.

This level is below the abnormal war and immediate post-war period but is above the 1935-39 average of 239 strikes per month. In other words, the number of stoppages occurring each month since June, 19467, has been 8% higher than during the 5-year pre-war period under the National Labor Relations Act.

On the basis of number of workers involved, the T-H period since June, 1947, has witnessed, each month, an average of 46,000 more workers on strike than during the more peaceful 1935-39 period, or an increase of 50%.

Idleness occasioned by labor-management disputes in the 18 months ending with December, 1948, was 80% greater than during 1935-39. In round figures, approximately 2,530,000 days of strike idleness were recorded each month since June, 1947, as against a pre-war monthly average of but 1,410,000 man-days.

Thus, compared with the pre-war Wagner Act era, the T-H period has witnessed 8% more strikes, 50% more workers involved, and 80% more idleness.

and report" without, for reasons not explained, sending a copy or advance notice to Tobin.

Tobin stoutly stuck to his contention that injunctions were unnecessary and unfair in labor relations.

He roundly blasted T-H, which he said has "dealt with collective bargaining as if it were inimical to the public interest instead of of the foundation of our national labor policy."

Donnell apparently scented a deep plot in the fact that one of Tobin's assistants is a CIO member (John Gibson) and the other an AFL member (Ralph Wright.)

But, you would have thought that someone had announced that the Republican party had been abolished when a look of horror crossed Donnell's face on Tobin's statement that he had once — for five years — been a member of a union.

Donnell was trying to prove that transfer back to the Labor Dept. of the Conciliation Service would destroy its impartiality.

"I don't think," Tobin replied, "that Director Ching is less impartial as head of a service which works both with management and labor just because he comes from the ranks of management."

Tobin pointed out that the service had been 35 years in the Labor Dept.

He also mentioned that the Bureau of Labor Statistics, a section of the Labor Dept., services labor, management and the public with vital economic data. (Labor has a partial criticism of BLS: it is too conservative in its economics.)

On the Communist affidavit issue, Tobin said many members of unions had been penalized because they had officers who were Communist party members. He advocated handling of the Communist issue—with possible resultant restrictions of activities of Communists in industry, the professions, Government and labor and not just penalties on one segment, labor.

Taft asked: "Could that mean that it could be a crime for a Communist to be a union officer?"

"It could," Tobin replied.

Annoyed with the tenacious hanging on to most T-H provisions by its advocates, Douglas said: "You men want a Duo-Decimo edition of Emily Post to rule labor relations. You want an industrial one thousand and ten commandments."

Duo-decimo means a book having 12 leaves to a sheet—therefore, rather long.

When it was all over, Tobin had not been shaken from his support of every section of the bill. It was apparent that he was out for justice for labor; it was apparent that the Taftites wanted restrictions—and plenty of them—on labor.

Democrats: Chairman Elbert Thomas (Utah); James E. Murray (Mont.), Claude Pepper (Fla.), Grant Withers (Ky.), Lister Hill (Ala.), Matthew Neeley (W. Va.), Paul Douglas (Ill.) and Hubert Humphrey (Minn.).

FILIBUSTER KEEPS GOLDBE

HERZOG prefaced his prepared statement with a remark that "Congress now has a greater opportunity to adopt a decent labor relations system than it ever has had before."

He highly lauded the sections of the Thomas Bill which affected his department. He said he thought the provision for a five-man board—rather than the three-man system of NLRA, allowed for more efficiency in the use of three-man panels. He disputed a theory of Sen. Morse's that a seven-man board would be better.

On secondary boycotts, Herzog approved the stressing of final objectives as a determinant of the boycott's validity. The procedure in jurisdictional disputes also met his favor, particularly the advantages of the arbitration step.

Herzog was highly critical of the powers given the NLRB general counsel (incumbent: one Robert M. Denham) by the T-Hers. He said that particularly a field letter by Denham, telling regional directors to ignore

What The New Labor Legislation Proposes

Following are the principal provisions of the Truman administration's labor bill:

The T-H Repeal Bill Would Abolish:

Taft-Hartley law ban on the closed shop and regulation of the union shop; non-Communist affidavits for union officers; restrictions on union welfare and retirement funds; limitation on union political activities; ban on unionization of foremen, and ban on strikes by government workers.

T-H ban on mass picketing; refusal to bargain; union "featherbedding;" "excessive" union initiation fees; insistence on a union or closed shop, and the use of injunctions to prevent such practices.

T-H provision guaranteeing employers freedom of speech to oppose unions; rights of employers or others to sue unions; elections to decertify unions; requirement that unions register financial reports and constitutions with the Secretary of Labor.

The office of general counsel independent of the NLRB.

The Bill Would Continue:

The existing ban on unfair labor practices by employers, such as refusal to bargain, discharges for union activity and company domination of unions; and the use of injunctions to prevent such actions.

Ban on some secondary boycotts, jurisdictional and recognition strikes and the power of the NLRB to obtain injunctions against such conduct.

The Federal Mediation Service, but in the Labor Department instead of independently, with director's salary raised from $12,000 to $15,000 a year.

President's authority to intervene in national emergency strikes but with modified powers.

The Bill Would Add:

A provision that all state laws regulating union and closed shop are superseded in interstate commerce.

A provision that contracts shall contain arbitration set-ups for disputes arising thereunder.

A provision making it an unfair labor practice for employers or unions to fail to give the mediation service thirty days' notice of contract termination.

The CIO's Stand on 'National Emergency' Situations

Sections 301 and 302 of the statute deal specifically with the steps which may be taken in the event of a so-called national emergency work stoppage. These sections provide that the President may issue a proclamation that such an emergency exists because a stoppage of work resulted or threatens to result from a labor dispute "in a vital industry which affects the public interest." It authorizes the President to issue a proclamation to that effect, and to call upon the parties to refrain from stopping work or to return to work if the stoppage has occurred.

After the issuance of the proclamation, the President is authorized promptly to appoint an emergency board to investigate the dispute. The Board thus appointed is given power (a) to seek to induce the parties to reach a settlement, and (b) in any event within a time period to be determined by the President but no more than 25 days after the issuance of the proclamation to make a report which shall include findings and recommendations.

The parties to the dispute are required to continue or to return to work after a proclamation has been issued and until five days have elapsed after the report has been made by the appointed Board. During this period of time the parties are required to maintain the terms and conditions of employment which were in effect immediately prior to the beginning of the dispute unless there is voluntary agreement on a change.

However, I think that this statute was intended not to provide for injunctions and that any argument to the contrary must yield to the fact that the drafters, in Section 401, contemporaneously expressly stated that the Norris-LaGuardia Act and the Clayton Act are continued in full force and effect with an exception in the case of Section 10 of the National Labor Relations Act.

IF THIS statute provided otherwise and contained a provision for an injunctive sanction, the CIO would oppose it and oppose it vigorously. Our reasons for opposing injunctions are well known.

(a) An injunction imposes involuntary servitude upon the workers. It crushes the right to strike.

(b) An injunction places the government on the side of the employer without giving labor an opportunity to present its position.

(c) The labor injunction, as Justice Brandeis said long ago, seeks "to endow property with active militant power which would make it dominant over men."

(d) Although our judicial system is supposed to dispose of individual cases and punish individuals for particular wrongs committed, the injunctive device permits a federal judge to pass judgment against large groups of men involved in a complicated economic struggle and enmesh them in dragnet restraints.

(e) The effect of an injunction is not lightened, it is increased when the government is empowered to obtain injunctions rather than private individuals.

(f) The use of compulsion always seems to be an easy way to settle a troublesome problem. Injunctions do not settle labor disputes. On the contrary, they inflame labor disputes as our experience under the Taft-Hartley Act shows.

zog "thought out loud" that "I have a general dislike of injunctions. The ideal thing is to have the government out of collective bargaining as much as possible."

Asked about so-called featherbedding, Herzog said he had no comment. Humphrey wanted to know about "gold-braiding" by corporations which set up as high as 75 vice-presidents. He got a general laugh but no direct reply from the GOP side.

Herzog, on some issues, said it didn't seem to matter whether they were in the law or not, but warned the committee that a cluttered-up law is hard to enforce and interpret.

DIR. CHING—"speaking only for Cyrus S. Ching"—told the Committee he opposed the Administration's proposal that his department be restored to the Labor Dept.

Ching, though he said, "I want to make it clear that nothing I say here should be understood to reflect on the Labor Dept. or its officers and personnel," nevertheless indicated he thought the department was too close to labor and that industry had come to be more confident of the service's impartiality since the department had been made independent under T-H.

He made much of an alleged statement by Tobin: "I want a department that will be what Sam Gompers wanted it to be—'Labor's voice in the President's Councils'."

However, Tobin later told the committee that he had never made the remark about Gompers. It had appeared in a prepared speech, written for him by his public relations department and released for the time he appeared before the November State Labor Legislation conference.

Tobin said he read the first few pages—not as far as the Gompers reference, did not like the speech, so ad libbed. In any event, he said, he would have deleted the Gompers reference.

Humphrey said he thought Gompers' goal a just one.

'The Law Is Loaded'

Here are some of the ways T-H is loaded against unions, the CIO told the Senators:

An employer charge of unlawful sympathetic strike must be given priority treatment, regardless of the number of union unfair labor practice charges on the docket.

But a union charge, no matter how urgent, or important, must await its turn in the tedious processes of the Taft-Hartley Board.

If union members strike during the term of the contract or before the expiration of a 60-day notice, in order to change the conditions of the contract, they may be fired summarily without right to reinstatement.

But if the employer locks out the union members for the same purpose, or unilaterally breaches the contract, he may only be charged with an unfair labor practice—and much, much later be told not to do it again.

If the NLRB entertains a charge by an employer of unlawful sympathetic strike, the Board must seek an injunction.

But in no kind of unfair labor practice charge by a union is the NLRB required to seek an injunction.

If the union participates in sympathetic strikes or boycotts which are unfair labor practices, the employer also may sue the union for damages.

But there is no unfair labor practice on the part of the employer which also entitles the union to sue for damages.

If, during a strike for a new contract, the employer hires scabs and petitions for an NLRB certification election, strikers are not allowed to vote.

But all the scabs can vote.

In every grievance, the employer has the right to press his interpretation of the contract.

But in grievances that may be taken up by individuals, the union has no say as to what the contract means.

Unions must file full financial data in order to utilize the NLRB.

But employers need file no financial data in order to utilize the Board.

Union officers must reveal political beliefs and swear to political affidavits before their unions can utilize the Board.

But employers may keep their political affiliations and opinions secret and still retain full access to the NLRB.

Union cases are subject to periodic and continued delay while registration and affidavits are brought up to date annually when new financial reports are due.

Employers, however, are subject to no such delays.

The law prevents union members from combating sweat-shop labor within their own industry by refusing to handle non-union goods.

But the law does not prevent the employer from breaking down union standards in his union contracts by utilization of sweat-shop goods; dealing with sweat-shop employers.

N. Y. Daily News Lowers Iron Curtain in Guild Talks

By TOM MOORE McBRIDE

YOU'VE HEARD a lot about the Patterson-McCormick Axis.

That Axis consisted of Col. Bertie McCormick's Chicago Tribune; Cissie Patterson's Washington Times-Herald and Capt. Joe Patterson's New York Daily News.

Of the trio, only Bertie is now alive, but the papers still continue to scream shrilly and editorially against the whole New Deal, rant in favor of isolationism, and deride labor's just demands.

The New York News, largest paper (in circulation, that is) in America, used to be blatantly New Deal. Roosevelt just couldn't do a thing wrong. Then, suddenly, in 1940, Joe Patterson became an isolationist.

The entire editorial policy changed so that now there is little difference among the Trib, the T-H (Times-Herald, that is) and the News—except that maybe the News has more finesse than the Trib.

Newspapers don't necessarily follow their editorial approaches when it comes to dealing with unions. Many that are rabid labor-baiters editorially have gotten along reasonably well with the unions that represent their employes.

Job Policy Changes, Too

But with the Daily News editorial policy is job policy, too.

While its writers in the editorial sanctum turn out screeds on the advantages of keeping the Taft-Hartley Law on the books, its labor relations men are busy applying to News employes, members of the CIO Newspaper Guild, every section of the law they can lay their hands on.

It wasn't always thus at the News. Patterson used to pursue a reasonably equitable policy in his dealings with the Guild and other unions. He was paternalistic as all get-out where his employes were concerned.

Meanwhile, he continued to make friendly noises whenever he spoke of unions. On more than one occasion he said that he didn't see why newspapermen should be deprived of the rights enjoyed by other union members—merely because they were newspapermen.

These were heartening words back in the mid-30's when the Guild was a struggling youngster, and newspapermen across the nation were debating whether it was really "sound" for a "craft" (a few referred to it as a profession) to affiliate with an industrial union.

The first real break came in 1945 when the Newspaper & Mail Deliverers Union of New York (Ind.) went after an increase and was forced to strike. The News spearheaded the strike-breaking drive of the New York publishers and bragged editorially and in its news columns of its scab distribution system.

During the AFL Typographical Union crisis in New York during the winter of 1947-48 the News was the most militant publisher in the area. (The ITU was then and still is on strike at the Tribune and other Chicago papers, which are being printed by the scab vari-type process.) The News came to terms with the ITU only after the New York Times and Post had broken the solid wall of publisher resistance it was trying to maintain and stiffen.

Follow Taft, Hartley

In the course of all this, the News had become a most ardent supporter of the policies proclaimed by Messrs, Hartley and Taft.

Editorials sing the praises of the T-H law and its benefits to workers. Its top columnist, one John O'Donnell (who once was presented with an ironic Iron Cross by President Roosevelt) cites chapter and verse to show how the workers are thriving in the new era of sweetness and light engendered by T-H.

Meanwhile, the Guild was having its troubles with the News. First there was the union shop "escape clause," in T-H, which allows periods to disaffiliate from the union. The News went after that one hammer and tongs early in 1948. Department heads used all kinds of pressure to urge employes to quit the Guild during the month-long escape period.

Only a few Guildsmen "escaped," but the News had tasted blood.

Next item was the armed guards, who had voted in an NLRB election to affiliate with the Guild. Under T-H management was not forced to recognize the same union for Armed guards that represents other employes. So the News said it was terminating the Guild contract for them.

Artful Dodge?

New York's Picture Newspaper had opened a television station in the meantime. Thought The News: just switch employes over to the new operation, taking them out of the Guild. The Guild, however, moved into the television department—which the News has set up as a separate entity—and established jurisdiction over a large group by agreement with other interested unions.

But management still refuses to recognize the Guild as bargaining agency, and insists that the men transferred have no protection under the Guild contract with the News, despite the fact that television station WPIX is a wholly-owned News subsidiary.

The News, of course, refused to recognize editorially that the labor vote had anything to do with the course of the Presidential election. It got on the record right away with an essay on Truman—"Old Horse-meat Harry"—and how he had courageously surmounted tremendous odds by a crafty campaign to win by himself. Truman, the News hosannahed, doesn't owe anybody anything.

The Breaking Point

Evidently the News negotiators were following the editorial oracle in their thinking. They refused to continue preferential hiring—which had been in the contract nearly 10 years. This could eventually mean firing of all old union hands and replacing them with unorganized personnel.

They also refused to permit the checkoff.

As the chief negotiator for the Guild contract at the Daily News—Tom Murphy, executive vice president of the New York Guild—pointed out: The News seems to be still living back in the days when the Republicans were riding high and continuation of Taft-Hartley seemed assured.

Guildsmen at the News decided they didn't want any more such contract talks with management. They weren't getting anywhere. They broke off negotiations on January 14, received full support by the New York Guild Executive Committee and Representative Assembly and scheduled a series of meetings to mobilize every man-jack in the unit.

Set Strike Deadline

The New York Daily News Guild unit set March 1 as deadline for the taking of strike action.

The unit has voted to ask permission to take a strike vote if management fails to bargain "realistically." Permission was asked of the local's executive committee and representative assembly and of the unit council.

Film Center Established

"THE PRODUCTION and use of films is a new and vital technique which has not been available to most farmers and working people in the South," said Dr. George Mitchell, executive director of the Southern Regional Council. The Executive Council of the Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn., approved establishment of a Film Center, to be located at the School.

Among the visitors who attended the recent annual meeting of the Highlander Executive Council were Lee Fryer, Administrative Assistant to the president of the National Farmers Union, William Vincent, Editor of the National Union Farmer, and Phillip Clowes, assistant director of the CIO Organizing Committee.

The Film Center is equipped to produce documentary films and other visual education aids. The center is setting up distribution circuits in cooperation with Southern groups and will train leaders in the use of visual education materials. A library of movies, photographs and displays will be established and maintained for distribution in the South.

Bringing to the Film Center valuable experience from the Canadian Government's "million dollar experiment" in visual education, Fred Lasse and Gordon Weisenborn will work with Emil Willimetz, who has developed use of dramatic photographs among Southern farm and labor organizations.

End Jim Crow in Conn. Nat'l Guard, Bowles Urges

High on the list of Gov. Chester Bowles' proposals of his new legislature is a bill to abolish "Jim Crowism" in the Connecticut National Guard—an innovation that will affect not only Connecticut but may open the way for action by many other states.

At present Negroes cannot be accepted for service in the Conn. National Guard regardless of their qualifications. This is not because of action—or prejudice, says Bowles—on the part of National Guard officers, but because it is US Army policy not to allow enlistments of Negroes except for segregated units. Segregated units have not been provided for in Connecticut.

Bowles believed that if the legislature passed a bill ending Jim Crow in the Guard, the Army would be forced to turn its back on its policy and would allow Negro enlistments.

Organizationally Speaking

CIO. Reg. Dir. Loren Houser announces the following elections: Reed Kennody Wholesale Warehouse, Muncie, Ind.; RWDSU-17, no union 1; Chevrolet Cafeteria, Muncie, Ind.; RWDSU-8, no union 0; New Indiana Chair Co., Jasper, Ind.; CIO Paperworkers-68 AFL-23, no union 3.

Pres. Harry Sayre of the CIO Paperworkers, announces the following victories: Representation election at Gardner-Richardson Co., Lockland, Ohio, the workers voted 479 for UPA; 208 for the Brotherhood of Back-to-Work Employes; and 28 for neither; union security election at the Mengel Co., Fulton, N. Y., 52 for union security to 12 opposed out of 73 eligible to vote. Rep. Harry Buckeye was in charge.

The management of the Standard Box Co., Mich., has agreed to recognize the Paperworkers as the bargaining agent for all its employes after a card check showed that the majority had joined the union. Rep. George McGrew was in charge of the organizing drive.

CIO Reg. Dir. William Copeland reports that in an election at the Coleman Mfg Co., Jackson, Tenn., the workers voted 50 to 5 in favor of TWUA. TWUA Reps. John Neal and Lowell Simmons handled the campaign.

A. T. Stephens, Director of Organization, CIO Packinghouse Workers, reports the following elections: Wilson and Co., Omaha, Neb., UPWA 771; AFL 160; neither 132; challenged 30; void 13 of 1189 eligible; Southern Cotton Oil, Valdosta, Ga., eligible 42; UPWA 28; no union 2.

Rep. Dave Wilson of the United Shoe Workers reports that in an NLRB election held at the Brown Shoe Co., Festus, Mo., the workers voted 159 for USWA; 37 for AFL Boot & Shoe union, which has held contract for past eight years.

CIO Dir. Robert Oliver reports that the workers of the Phillips Chemical Co., Dumas, Texas, have voted for the CIO Oil Workers as their collective bargaining agent. The CIO won the vote with a total of 224 ballots, to three cast for the AFL's Operating Engineers, and 18 who voted for neither.

The Administration came through, recommending the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, and the reenactment of the Wagner Act, minus all injunctive processes. Taft and his group are trying to retain the T-H Act. Contact your Congressmen and Senators now! Call upon them to support the President's bill, S. 249. Let's get rid of the Taft-Hartley Act fast! This law is no longer and never was necessary; the people made their decision on Nov. 2, 1948.

Rieve Blasts Woolen Award

That new fad in the textile industry—arbitration by crystal-gazing—has hit the 23,000 CIO textile employes of the American Woolen employes and is expected to set a precedent for an additional 67,000 workers in the woolen industry.

In denying the CIO Textile Workers' request for a 10c hourly increase, the arbitrator ruled that "it is no longer possible for this company to grant an increase with the assurance that the customer will pay for it."

The union argued that the wage increase could easily be provided out of the company's record profits of the past year.

Arbitrator Raymond F. O'Connel's decision followed a similar ruling two weeks earlier by Arbitrator Douglas V. Brown, who turned down a request for increases for 30,000 New England cotton and rayon textile workers.

Commenting on the O'Connell ruling, TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve said. "Apparently arbitration is becoming a matter of prophecy rather than fact. It is now the fashion to rule our past profits as a basis for higher wages. The arbitrator therefore, becomes a fortune-teller; and he sees in the future, it seems, only what the employer wants him to see."

Guernsey Elected

George Guernsey, National CIO associate education director, has just been elected a member of the Public Affairs Committee, nonprofit organization.

UNEQUAL BURDEN: This chart illustrates most graphically how federal tax burdens have been shifted to low income groups. This is retrogressive taxation. CIO wants a progressive tax program where ability to pay is the determining factor.

Bittner Says Answer To Call For Volunteers is 'Terrific'

VOLUNTEER organizing committees composed of rank and file members of the CIO are already at work in the Southern States affected by the CIO's Southern Organizing Campaign, according to Director Van A. Bittner.

"It is evident that every CIO man and woman in the South wants to get into this fight," Bittner declared. "These fine union people are giving unstintingly of their time and their effort so that all men, women, and children may gain the benefits of organized labor."

In less than a month since the volunteer organizing committee plan was announced at a meeting of Campaign and International Union officials and the rank and file in this city, state follow-up meetings have already been held in Georgia, Virginia, Arkansas, and Alabama. Meetings of CIO staffs and rank and file in other states affected by the drive will follow in rapid succession.

JUST returned from the Virginia meeting, presided over by State Director Ernest Pugh in Richmond, Bittner said:

"The response to the call for volunteer committees is terrific. The plan will throw thousands of men and women into our Organizing Campaign on a voluntary basis. This means that our staff will be saved many hours of house-to-house campaigning, and will now be able to spend 100% of its time in organizing.

"Every CIO man and woman has a friend or relative in nearby unorganized plants. The volunteers will contact these people and do the spadework. Our staff will then be free to produce the finished local union, ready to win the National Labor Relations Board election."

Pizer Grateful For Strike Support

The company's refusal to consider any improvement in wages and conditions of its employes—90% of whom are Negro—led to the walkout, according to UFWA Pres. Morris Pizer.

In a letter to CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Pizer expressed appreciation for aid given the strikers by CIO officials and locals in the area, including the Steelworkers.

Pizer said UFWA members are collecting "every dollar they can raise" for the Memphis strikers. "Through our own efforts and the cooperation we have received from CIO," he wrote Murray, "we are confident of victory."

Fishermen, ILWU Plan To Merge

DELEGATES to the CIO Fishermen and Allied Workers 10th annual convention at Bellingham, Wash., have voted 78 to 1 to recommend affiliation with the CIO Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union.

The merger proposal dominated the entire convention, two of four days' sessions being devoted to the discussion.

The next step, Pres. J. F. Jurich said, would be thorough discussion among the membership, and after that a referendum vote.

The proposal to affiliate with the ILWU followed full discussions between officials of the two unions and was presented to the convention in a detailed special memorandum drawn up by the IFAWA executive board and officers.

(The merger would have to be approved by the CIO executive board, CIO officials indicated in Washington.)

Demands for a fourth - round wage increase headed the union's program for the coming year. A wage policy resolution placed the union "squarely behind a fourth round . . . in our industry and for all workers throughout the country."

The union resolved to seek immediate repeal of Taft-Hartley and full restoration of the Wagner act. Also asked was enactment of anti-polltax and anti-lynch laws, and outright abolition of the House unAmerican activities committee.

The convention attacked the Marshall plan. The delegates voted unanimously to condemn the recent firings of three University of Washington professors for their political beliefs.

Mo., Iowa Labor Map Campaigns

LABOR organizations of Missouri and Iowa have decided to seek the repeal of anti-union measures in their respective states.

In Iowa, the state-wide CIO and AFL groups have united with such independents as the machinists, telephone workers, miners and railroad unions in calling for the repeal of the 1947 closed shop ban and of the act forbidding boycotts and jurisdictional strikes.

The Iowa groups are also demanding an increase in unemployment compensation payments from $20 for 20 weeks to $25 for 26 weeks, and of workmen's compensation maximum payments from $20 a week with the maximum time extended from 300 to 600 weeks.

Also requested is a law requiring the employer pay a worker's attorney fees in a workmen's compensation case if found liable.

In Missouri, representatives of AFL, CIO and independent unions have agreed to work together for repeal of the Madison anti-labor act and the King-Thompson law barring strikes by utility workers.

Union Man Tells 'Hazards' Of Radio Prize Winning

EVER WIN a radio contest? You win thousands of dollars in prizes, but it's not simply a matter of accepting them and saying 'thank you' to the donors.

Ask Oscar Keith, Munster, Ind., a steward at Local 120, CIO Chemical Workers. Keith and his wife won the Papa and Mama Hush contest by writing a letter telling why the Mental Health Association should be supported.

The letter was picked as the number one for that particular evening and Keith received the first call. He answered "Volez and Yolanda" when asked to identify Papa and Mama. (Keith credits his wife with giving the right answer.)

The list of prizes included a $2500 Savings Bond, a 1949 Nash, a $2000 electric kitchen, a $2000 trip to Sun Valley, an oil painting of Keith or a member of his family, and would require at least three paragraphs to enumerate.

KEITH SAID that all his winnings are taxable under the Federal income tax law. For example, he would have to pay about $600 taxes on the Sun Valley trip, and he would also be taxed about $300 on the oil painting.

Keith estimated that the total taxes would be between $8000 and $9000.

The Keiths have other problems besides taxes. They have two boys, age three and four, and two girls, six and eight.

"We're thinking of the future and we must consider the children," said Mrs. Keith. Her husband is continuing his job at Harbison - Walker Refractories Co., East Chicago, Ind., and the couple indicate they would give serious consideration to their plans for the future before taking any action.

TWU Wins Wage Increase From American Airlines

JUST ONE hour prior to a midnight strike deadline, Transport Workers American Airlines Locals voted Feb. 1 to accept a company offer of an eight-cent across-the-board increase for 4,500 maintenance, stores, and fleet service personnel as well as several improvements in working conditions.

The company offer, which boosts the average wage level of its workers beyond any offer in the industry, was made after an eleven-hour session of Union and management representatives with Federal Mediator Foran in New York City.

TWU and American Airlines have been in continuous mediation with Ross Foran since Jan. 17, when a vote of AA Locals in New York, Tulsa, Chicago, Boston, Dallas, Fort Worth, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, Washington and other cities had empowered the negotiating committee to call a strike at is discretion. Until last night's capitulation, the company had sat tight on its offer of 5 cents an hour increase.

In the face of the management's obstinacy, the Union negotiators broke-off discussions Jan. 31, and fixed the strike deadline.

TWU Vice Pres. Willam Grogan stated that the new average wage rate of $1.72 per hour will peg American Airlines two cents higher than Pan American; 7 cents above Pan Central Airways and 16 cents over Eastern Airlines.

Plan To Discuss Record With Voters

Two Oakland, Calif., councilmen elected by labor's votes in 1947 have called a meeting of their constituents to discuss their accomplishments and failures. Oakland's Mayor Joseph E. Smith, who also had labor backing, has announced he will join them in answering questions and complaints regarding the record.

Newark Council Re-organized To Conform To CIO

REORGANIZED from top to bottom, the Greater Newark CIO Council has put itself in line with CIO policy.

The face-lifting job occurred last week at a reorganization meeting of New Jersey's largest CIO council. Irving Abramson, national CIO representative initiated the move when he called the special parley with the consent of the council's officers.

MORAN

This is the second CIO body in the state to have undergone such a reorganization. The first was the Hudson County Council. Both were identified as opponents of National CIO policy.

The 500 delegates to the Newark meeting moved swiftly—through selection of new officers, constitutional revisions and adoption of resolutions—to conform to the program of the parent organization.

One test came when a minority resolution opposing PAC suffered an overwhelming defeat. The council's support of PAC is expected to lend additional strength to the candidacy of State CIO Council Exec. Secy.-Treas. Stephen J. Moran for Newark commissioner. A resolution endorsing Moran for the post was adopted at the meeting.

All seven newly elected officers were described as aggressive proponents of the National CIO program. Heading the council as president is Harper Winship of the Steelworkers. Other officers are: Joseph DiNodica, Auto, 1st vice-president; Paul Eaton, Playthings, 2nd vice-president; Al Lowenthal, Electrical, 3rd vice-president; Louis Pratola, Office & Professional, secretary; Raymond Santora, Retail, treasurer, and Pat Tansey, sergeant-at-arms.

Among the resolutions adopted was one strongly urging the reinstatement of James Kutcher to his job with the Veterans Administration. Legless veteran of World War II, Kutcher was discharged from his government post because of alleged membership in the Socialist Workers Party. Appearing before the group, he won immediate support for his cause, as well as a $100 contribution.

Another resolution urged support of the Office & Professional Workers in a forthcoming election at the Prudential Life Insurance Co.

Prices Fall, But Hardly Enough

Your paycheck dollar bought a little bit more in December than in November, 1948, but hardly enough to count.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics retail price index went down another half of one per cent between mid-November and mid-December, when it stood at a point 29% higher than when strong OPA controls were abandoned, BLS announced last week.

The retail prices of goods and services were still 2.6% higher than a year ago, despite three consecutive months of falling prices, especially for eggs, meats, and fats and oils.

Rents, however, rose 0.6% in the one month. BLS found rents rose 3.4% in Chicago, 2.5% in Minneapolis, and 1.2% in Memphis in 30 days' time.

10,000th Baby Born Under Benefit Plan

The 10,000th baby was born Jan. 27, under the maternity benefit provisions of collective agreements in the clothing and allied industries, when Mrs. Marie B. Koval, of Brooklyn, a member of Local 162, CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, became the mother of a boy.

Mrs. Koval receives a $50 maternity benefit, bringing up to $500,000 such benefits paid out to date to Amalgamated members since the inception of the industry's insurance fund in 1943.

N. H. Council Gives Medal in Honor of Hero Every Year

EVERY YEAR since 1946, the New Hampshire CIO Council has awarded a bronze medal in honor of Lt. Benjamin Rush Toland of Concord, N. H., to a CIO member in the state deemed to have "done the most to promote a better understanding between labor, management and public."

A strange and sad story lies behind these awards. Lt. Toland, a 24-year-old Marine, was killed Feb. 21, 1945, on the barren, bloody slopes of Iwo Jima, as he led the charge on a ridge "where every ten yards cost a life."

After his death, a will scribbled on a piece of paper was found leaving his modest estate to promote causes in which he believed. One of these was peace between labor and management.

Lt. Toland asked that 40% of what he left be given to advance this cause—10% to the CIO, 10% to the AFL, and 20% to the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers.

The CIO's share—$600—was given to the CIO Council of New Hampshire, the state where he was born.

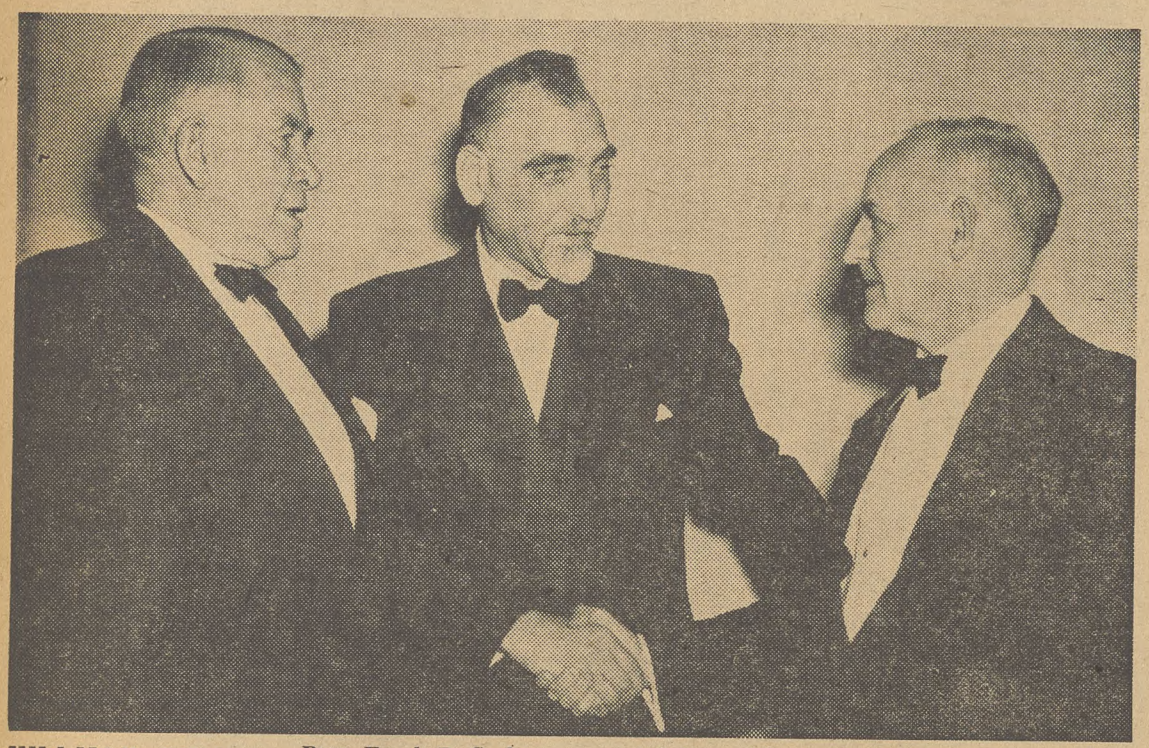
Dr. Frank Graham Honored With First Hillman Award

A CHAMPION of civil rights in a Jim Crow state has been honored with the first Sidney Hillman Memorial Foundation award.

What CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky described as a "little check," and a scroll, were presented to Dr. Frank P. Graham, University of North Carolina president, at a dinner in Washington.

Signifying the close alliance between the three branches of government, education and labor was the presence at the banquet of such persons as Vice-Pres. Alben W. Barkley, Supreme Court Justice Rutledge and North Carolina's freshman Sen. J. Melville Broughton. Also on the dais—in addition to Potofsky—were ACW officials, including the union's "first lady," Mrs. Bessie Hillman, widow of the union's first president—and CIO leaders, among them Vice-Pres. Haywood, Secy.-Treas. Carey, and Organizing Committee Director Van A. Bittner.

The scroll praised the North Carolina educator for his championship of the fight "for civil liberties, for minority rights, against the polltax, against lynch law, against discrimination in every shape and form."



HILLMAN AWARD: Pres. Frank P. Graham of the Univ. of North Carolina is being congratulated by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers, who presented him with the first Sidney Hillman Memorial Foundation award. U. S. Vice Pres. Alben W. Barkley appears to be voicing his approval. The award was for his fight for civil rights.

OF GRAHAM, whose crusading activities have made him anathema to the Dixiecrats and other conservative elements, Potofsky said:

"He has never asked, 'Is it safe?' His only concern has been, 'Is it right?'"

"Dr. Frank Graham," the union head went on, "has a special place in the hearts of labor."

Graham, in accepting the award, paid tribute to Sidney Hillman, whom he knew personally. He then traced the evolution of modern society and its concept of democracy, and quoted Hillman's explanation of American labor's aspirations:

"We want a better America, an America that will give its citizens, first of all, a higher and higher standard of living so that no child will cry for food in the midst of plenty . . . An America that will have no sense of insecurity and which will make it possible for all groups, regardless of race, creed or color, to live in friendship to be real neighbors; an America that will carry its great mission of helping other countries to help themselves."

Recently returned from a mission to Indonesia, Graham urged that the Indonesians be permitted to choose their own form of government and that the Dutch withdraw immediately.

Graham received a strong tribute from Vice-Pres. Barkley, who noted that the struggles for economic, social and political justice are inseparable. Graham has distinguished himself in all three fights, he pointed out.

The Case for the 75c Floor

40c Minimum Wage Is Outdated, Congress Told

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

CIO SPOKESMEN went to bat last week for a million and a half underpaid workers in wealthy America who are getting a raw deal under the inadequate and out-of-date 40c minimum pay rate of the Federal Wage-Hour law.

Testifying before the House Committee on Education & Labor, the CIO representatives asked that the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (Wage-Hour Law) be modernized by:

1. Increasing the minimum to 75c with a provision to raise it as high as $1 on recommendation of industry committees.

2. Extending coverage to groups now excluded.

The House Committee members peered down intently from a raised platform as the three CIOers, grouped on one side of a table at floor level, gave their testimony. The Congressmen seemed to be listening with a new interest and respect, as though remembering the voice of the people heard in the last election.

Sol Barkin, the big, earnest research director of the Textile Workers Union, led off with the CIO's main economic statement. He called for revisions in the Wage-Hour law needed to realize its basic purpose of setting "minimum standards of living necessary for health, efficiency and general well-being of workers."

IRVING J. Levy, young-faced, gray-haired general counsel for the United Auto Workers, explained the legal aspects of the proposed amendments to the Act, and patiently and pleasantly answered Committee members' questions.

From where she sat between Barkin and Levy, Dr. Vera Miller, red-haired research associate of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, looked very young and small for her title. She gave facts and figures to show what it costs an American family to live today, and urged extension of the minimum wage provision to cover retail and service workers.

"Even an emergency relief level of living now requires an hourly wage of 98c," she said, in pointing out that a 75c minimum was only a first step which should be taken immediately "to prevent a further deterioration of the standards set in 1938."

Urging extension of coverage to workers employed in retail trade and in the laundry, cleaning and dyeing business, Miss Miller stated that only 26 states and the District of Columbia now have minimum wage laws covering these workers. These range from 65c in California, to 20c in Kentucky, she said.

IN NEW YORK, where laundry workers are now practically 100% organized, Miss Miller said that average hourly earnings have increased from 36c in 1937 to 92c at present, but in other parts of the country where they are largely unorganized, they "need the protection of the law to correct their substandard wages."

Barkin told the House Committee that the CIO urges "the universal 75c minimum, not because it will eliminate all forms of substandard wages, but as a step forward to the eradication of the bargaining weaknesses of American workers."

Those employers who are exploiting the helplessness of workers "by paying them intolerable wages," Barkin said, "should not be allowed to create unfair competition by paying less than 75c."

He emphasized that the CIO's proposal for a 75c minimum was extremely moderate, and that wage increases since July 1947 would justify raising the minimum closer to 95c, "if the present bill is to have the same impact as the 1938 Act."

Many workers in unorganized industries, particularly those whose earnings are below 75c, are being cheated of the benefits arising from the increase in national income, productivity and technological advance, enjoyed by other groups, and need legislation "to correct this inequity," Barkin said.

He estimated the total actual cost of increasing the minimum to 75c an hour as being under $550 million, or less than one-quarter of one percent of the cost of production.

DISCUSSING extension of coverage, Barkin said the CIO advocated inclusion of several groups of workers now exempt, particularly those employed by:

- Large industrialized agricultural and processing operations.
- Retail and service concerns with four or more establishments and an annual volume of business of more than $500,000.
- Fish processing, as distinct from fishermen. The provision for overtime pay, he said, should be extended to seamen.

Testifying on the legal aspects of the proposed amendments, Levy also urged that exemptions from the Act be curtailed.

He argued that the extension of coverage to employers who are engaged in activities "affecting commerce," as defined in a proposed amendment, "would present no unusual problems of interpretation or application."

About half of the agricultural employes would be brought under the protection of the minimum wage provisions by the amendment to extend coverage to hired workers on large farms, Levy stated.

He argued that "there is no justification for retaining the 14-week exemption from the overtime provision for seasonal or food processing industries.

"The benefits of a 40-hour week and the deterrent which time and a half places upon unnecessarily long work weeks should be extended in these industries as well as in others. We should have no second class laborers."

ACW, Retail Reach Pact

AN AGREEMENT under which the organizing drives of the two CIO unions in the department store and men's retail clothing field will be co-ordinated for the best interests of both, has been reached and will go into effect at once, CIO Vice-Pres. and Organization Director Allan S. Haywood, announced last week in Washington.

Terms of the agreement were worked out at a conference in New York between Haywood and officials of the unions concerned —the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Employes.

Both unions have agreed to cooperate with each other on this basis:

- The Amalgamated will have exclusive jurisdiction to organize workers in the department store and men's clothing field, except in cases where contracts have already been signed. Existing contracts will not be disturbed.
- The Retail Union will have "sole jurisdiction over the entire field exclusive of the above exceptions," and has pledged "to exert every effort to organize the unorganized within its field of jurisdiction."
- Both unions have agreed to meet at frequent intervals to discuss and co-ordinate their organizing campaigns.

In announcing the agreement, Haywood praised the officers of both organizations "for the fine co-operative spirit which they exhibited throughout the discussions."

Thomas Is Prober Again

Two GOP Congressmen who played a big role in the headline-hunting activities of the House Committee on Un-American Activities have been kept on the group by House Republicans.

Rep. J. Parnell Thomas (R., N. J.), former committee chairman who is under federal indictment on a salary kick-back charge, will again be on the committee. So, too, will be Rep. Richard Nixon (R., Calif.).

Rep. John Wood (D., Ga.) heads the committee. The remaining four Democrats are all lawyers: Walter (Pa.), Harrison (Va.), Moulder (Mo.), and McSweeney (Ohio).

Figures filed by ex-Chairman Thomas on Dec. 31 showed that the Committee spent $250,494 during 1948—about $50,000 under its budget.

Vol. XII WASHINGTON, D. C., FEBRUARY 14, 1949 82 No. 7

HITS INJUNCTIONS: William H. Davis, former chairman of the Natl. War Labor Board, tells the Senate Labor Committee in no uncertain terms of his opposition to use of injunctions in Labor disputes. Behind him, to the left, Robert M. Denham, general counsel of the Natl. Labor Relations Board, scowls at Davis. Denham and Davis, who has had a long career in labor mediation, hold different views on almost all of T-H. Davis called one T-H provision "the rottenest ever enacted." For other pictures and news of Taft-Hartley, see pages 3, 6 and 7.

Where Things Stand On T-H Repeal

TAFT-HARTLEY repeal hearings in the Senate Labor Committee continue until February 23. Hearings may be ordered by the House Labor Committee this week.

During the month of March, Taft-Hartley repeal will probably be a prime issue in both the Senate and the House.

In the Senate, the CIO has endorsed the Thomas Bill (S. 249). That bill provides for repeal of T-H; re-enactment of the Wagner Act; restoration of the Norris-La Guardia anti-injunction act; and provisions—in line with the President's State of the Union message—dealing with jurisdictional strikes, secondary boycotts and national emergency disputes.

CIO—and all the rest of organized labor—is prepared to press vigorously for passage by the Senate of the Thomas Bill, without weakening amendments of the T-H type, as favored by Sen. Taft.

IN the House Labor Committee, friends of labor urging committee adoption of a streamlined bill to repeal T-H and re-enact the Wagner Act. CIO supports and appreciates their loyal efforts in behalf of the rights of organized labor.

If the 25-member House Labor Committee votes against this simple bill, labor's friends on that committee will then call for committee approval of a bill identical to the Thomas Bill. In such a case, the CIO will, of course, support their action —and seek to prevent any weakening amendments, either in committee or in the House itself.

Organized labor in America will keep close watch on these legislative developments—until Taft-Hartley is in limbo and the Wagner Act is restored as this country's basic labor law.

Evictions Stress Need of Strong Rent Controls

By GLORIA CAPLAN

"IN THE CITY of Providence, in celebration of the Christmas season, six small children will be separated from their parents because there is no room for them in the houses of the town.

"At 9:30 on Saturday morning, the six O'Brien children will become wards of the state . . .

"The family was evicted three months ago when the landlord asked for the tenement for his own use . . .

"For three months, since the morning of Sept. 8, when their furniture was piled on the street, Mr. and Mrs. William O'Brien have knocked on tenement doors, but no landlord will take them in . . ."

That was just one of the tragedies reported to the House Banking & Currency Committee last week as it investigated the need for continued rent controls.

The facts of housing distress were called to the 27 committee members' attention by John Edelman, CIO Textile Workers legislative representative. The story of Mr. & Mrs. O'Brien, a textile worker family, was placed into the hearings record as it appeared in the Providence Evening Bulletin last December.

Many Sad Stories

It was placed in the record—along with similar stories from every state in the union—to indicate the intense need for continued and strengthened rent control.

With present rent controls due to end March 31, Edelman and Leo Goodman, director of the CIO Housing Committee, cited scores of representative cases of tenant hardship under acute housing shortages throughout the country The situation is made worse by a weak Republican rent control law passed in 1947 and 1948 and by what Goodman termed "administrative bungling" at the hands of the National Rent Control Director.

The CIO representatives urged committee support for the Douglas rent control bill (HR 2291), which would continue controls for 27 months, eliminate any further 15% voluntary rent boosts and strengthen tenant protection against evictions. (The companion bill in the Senate is S. 888, sponsored by Francis Myers (D. Pa.).

But it is not enough to have a strong law, they insisted. Equally important is firm administration of the law. Goodman charged the present administrator, Tighe E. Woods, with making the situation worse by a "weak and inefficient administration."

He charged Woods with contributing to the existence of a "widespread black market in rents, wholesale violation of the eviction provisions of the Act and the economic crisis for millions of little people who cannot sustain themselves in the highly inflationary situation which exists today."

Only One Concerned

Goodman's blast followed by a few hours Woods' 3½-day appearance before the committee. Woods told the committee that he has granted 73% of the petitions for area rent increases, resulting in an average rent increase of over 19%. The U. S. Commerce Department's Bureau of Census lists the Nationwide increase as at least 36%.

Of the eight committee members who questioned Woods on the fourth day of the hearings, only one indicated any concern for the tenant—Rep. George D O'Brien (D. Mich.).

Rep. Paul Brown (D. Ga.) was worried about "these poor women (landlords)" who he charged have had so many hardships thrust on them by rent control.

"Instead of asking more power to put more (hardships) on them," he admonished Woods, "you ought to ask more power to get rid of them."

(The Congressman showed no reaction later to the CIO reference to the thousands of old people on meager fixed incomes who cannot pay rent increases).

Rep. Donald Nicholson (R. Mass.), voiced the woes of landlords. What about real estate taxes? he asked Woods. Haven't they doubled in the past 10 years?

No, replied Woods. Besides, such cost increases are taken into account by his office in determining whether to grant rent increases.

Rep. Brooks Hays (D. Ark.), was very concerned about those tenants who—he claimed—just naturally want to give the landlord more money. The proposed rent bills would eliminate such increases. "It causes a lot of trouble when people really are worried that their rent is out of line and want to pay more," he mused.

Rep. Henry O. Talle (R. Iowa.), was a special pleader for landlords in one county in his state who are seeking decontrol.

Wolcott Challenged

Rep. Jesse Wolcott (R. Mich), the committee's former chairman, cited newspaper ads in Detroit to prove the sufficiency of housing there. He was challenged by O'Brien, who noted that many for-rent ads are placed in newspapers because the rental is so exorbitant the owner has difficulty finding takers.

THE QUESTIONING took on the character of an inquisition for a short period after the Goodman-Edelman testimony.

"I can't remember your name (addressing Edelman)—Are you a lawyer?"

Chairman Brent Spence (D. Ky.), remarked it is immaterial whether a witness is a lawyer or not.

Then, Nicholson wanted to know: Is he being paid for testifying here?

Edelman replied that his title and salary are on file with the Clerk of the House, and they have appeared in the Congressional Record

(All CIO legislative representatives are registered as "lobbyists.") "Oh!" Nicholson discovered, "so you're a paid lobbyist! I thought you said you were a representative of the CIO!"

Nicholson then concerned himself with Edelman's reference to tenants' difficulties in Massachusetts, where the CIO official said rents went up sharply after properties were decontrolled.

The GOP Congressman wanted to know what areas in the state have been decontrolled.

Nicholson Again

Both Edelman and Rep. Mike Monroney (D. Okla.), explained that the testimony referred to housing units, not to areas.

Obviously reacting to the treatment dealt out by the Massachusetts Republican, three Democratic committee members wound up the day's hearing with a tribute to the two witnesses.

Hugh Mitchell (D. Wash.): "In the 79th Congress they were considered as experts in the housing field. I want to commend them . . ."

Barratt O'Hara (D. Ill.): "I wish to compliment Mr. Edelman and Mr. Goodman for an intelligent and well-balanced study . . ."

Frank Buchanan (D. Pa.): "I'm only sorry their testimony didn't include Philadelphia."

Write Congressman To Keep Rent Controls

The present rent control law expires March 31.

In their furious battle against continued rent control, landlords have showered Congress with a flood of mail demanding the end of rent restrictions.

To counteract the one-sided picture some Congressmen are receiving, CIO members are urged to write their representative, House Banking & Currency Committee Chairman Brent Spence and members of the committee. Tell them you want controls continued—and strengthened. The House bill that best meets the CIO recommendations is that sponsored by Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas, HR 2291.

Rent Control Features Requested By CIO

All the following provisions are embodied in the Douglas-Myers bill, HR 2291, S 888:

- 27 months extension.
- Effective eviction control, including power for the administrator to institute suit against wilful landlord violators.
- Adequate criminal and civil enforcement penalties.
- Re-control of new construction, conversions, permanent residences in hotels, motor courts, trailer camps and tourist homes.
- Authority to control areas not now regulated, but in need of rent curbs.
- Local advisory boards to act solely in an advisory capacity.
- Judicial safeguards to tenants and landlords against "administrative caprice and arbitrariness'—by review of administrator's regulations and orders in U. S. courts.

Kazimier Miller, Organizer, Dies

Kazimier Miller, veteran labor organizer, died suddenly in Shamokin, Pa., last week. He was 44. Miller had been stationed in Shamokin as an organizer for the Textile Workers. Previously he had been an organizer for Steel, Ship, and Hosiery.

Miller, born in Poland, came to this country as a child, and became a knitter in a Philadelphia mill. He did considerable organizing work for the Hosiery Workers and joined the staff of the Steelworkers in 1939. He was active in organizing Bethlehem Steel.

Miller also helped in organizing Lukens Steel. For a year he did organizing work for the Shipyard workers at Sun Ship, Chester, Pa.

He is survived by his wife, Elsie; a daughter, Beatrice; his mother, a sister, and a brother.

New York City Unions Takes Step To Set Up New CIO Council

STEPS TO set up a council to replace the defunct Greater New York CIO Council have been taken at a meeting of 245 delegates from 220 locals. Twenty-nine international unions were represented.

Pres. Louis Hollander of the New York State CIO Council presided. He was named last November by CIO Pres. Murray and the CIO Executive Board to administer the affairs of the old city council. The executive board lifted that council's charter because of its failure to adhere to CIO policy.

A three-point program for setting up the new council was contained in a resolution adopted unanimously:

1. Unions are to affiliate by April 1 on the basis of a monthly per capita of one cent.
2. Hollander will appoint a committee to draw up a constitution and by-laws. (Hollander said that he would name the committee within a few days.)
3. Upon completion of affiliation of the locals a constitutional convention will be called and officers elected.

HOLLANDER reported that the state CIO has paid $10,000 in debts and rejected $4600 on "political expenditures" of the old council. He said that the money for political expenditures did not appear on the books and therefore would not be recognized.

Pres. Joseph Curran of the Natl. Maritime Union and Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers were present. Other international unions represented included Clothing Workers (not affiliated with the old council), Transport Workers, Utility Workers, Electrical Workers, Furniture, Fur & Leather, Playthings, Novelty & Jewelry and American Communication Association.

NEW PAC RECEIPT: The CIO-PAC continues full steam ahead, getting ready for this year's many city, county and state elections. Receipts, like the one above are being distributed through the international union offices for this year's collection of PAC contributions.

Democrats Give Taft A Tough Time

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

IT'S TOO BAD all of you weren't there last week to see Sen. Robert A. Taft (R., O.), cornered and trying to defend his law.

The little man who wasn't there—Fred Allan Hartley, Jr., was no doubt happy that he didn't have to take what Taft had to in the hearings on the Taft-Hartley Law before the Senate Labor Committee.

Hartley wasn't there because he had beaten a strategic retreat last fall and did not run for reelection. His seat—New Jersey's 10th Congressional—is now occupied by an out-and-out anti-T.-Her, Peter W. Rodino, Jr.

Taft—at sessions of the Committee—heard his law raked by the heavy broadsides of a famous impartial mediator, William H. Davis.

Taft even had to admit, very reluctantly, that the law might be unfair in some instances, such as the union shop provisions. But, he was obviously trying with all his skill and might to preserve as much as possible of T-H, in which he had a T-stake.

These had the top billing in the second week of T-Hearings:

1. The Democratic members of the committee were doing a magnificent job of tearing T-H to bits, logically and devastatingly.

Democrats on the committee are, in addition to Chairman Elbert Thomas (Utah), who because of his post takes little or no part in debate, James Murray (Mont.), Claude Pepper (Fla.), Lister Hill (Ala.)), Matthew Neely (W. Va.), Paul Douglas (Ill.), Hubert Humphrey (Minn.) and Grant Withers (Ky.).

2. The Democratic majority took the ground from under a Republican charge of steamrollering by agreeing to a nine-day extension of hearings—to Feb. 23.

The agreement was reached a day before the previous deadline when it became apparent that the more than 30 remaining witnesses —including such diverse organizations as the AFL and the NAM—could not be heard under the earlier rule adopted by the committee.

3. Neely branded Robert N. Denham, general counsel of the Natl. Labor Relations Board, who spent several days on the committee witness stand, as unfit to hold public office dealing with labor matters.

4. Humphrey and others brought out the fact that injunctions against the AFL Typographical Union had been sought by the NLRB on the basis of proposals for union security made by the union—the ITU—before it even started negotiations.

It was also brought out that the ITU had been enjoined on grounds of "probability of violation of T-H."

5. Davis accused the advocates of Taft-Hartleyism of "misleading" the American people into a belief that the law's injunction processes would prevent national emergency strikes. He said flatly that injunctions don't solve disputes or protect the public.

One section of the law—the power to sue unions for damages in federal courts—he scathingly branded as the "rottenest provision ever put into an American statute." He called it "un-American."

6. Sen. Wayne Morse (R., Ore.) declared he was "aghast" at a statement from Denham that T-H has not a single provision that harms labor in any way.

7. Woodruff Randolph, president of the ITU, declared his union's strikes "were put upon us as a result of the law."

8. James B. Carey, secretary-treasurer of the CIO, denounced the "effrontery" of the Communist Party for injecting itself into the hearings under the guise of being a "friend of labor." He charged that unions of workers of Russia are "today being operated under a Communist version of the T-H Law."

Neely's denunciation of Denham was a high point of the proceedings. It evoked an anguished protest from Taft. But, Taft, for the second time in the proceedings, met a tartar in Neely.

Of Denham, Neely declared: "His conduct as a witness before this committee is such that it would justify any union in this country to demand his removal from office.

"He has no business operating in any government agency which deals with labor relations.

"His testimony was the most biased and prejudiced I've ever heard from a public official in my 26 years in Congress."

Neely previously had been a member of the House of Representatives.

Just a few days before, Neely denounced a charge by Taft that the Democrats had "blackguarded" witnesses who favored T-H. Neely demanded that Taft apologize.

When Taft tried to interrupt, Neely told him to "shut up."

Exasperated by the constant attempts by Taft, Sen. H. Alexander Smith (R., N. J.) and Forrest Donnell (R., Mo.) to prove that only labor is to blame in strikes, Humphrey broke in:

"I am sick and tired of all this talk of 'Big Labor.'

"When the roll is called up yonder in heaven on the question of abuses, I'll predict that unions will have a place on the right hand of St. Peter.

"For every abuse by labor, millions of Americans have been steamed, reamed and dry-cleaned by bank failures, foreclosures and bankruptcies."

Carey, in addition to his letter on the "intrusion" of the Communist Party into the hearings, also sent Thomas a statement of his opposition to the non-Communist affidavit of T-H (Denham had indicated that perhaps Carey favored the affidavits). Carey's opposition to the affidavits was based on:

1. "It places in the hands of Communists the power to veto the desires of workers to organize . . . 2. No statutory requirement of the kind can possibly be effective in its avowed aid to drive Communists out of union leadership. Only the members of the union can accomplish that objective . . . 3. I am in entire agreement with Pres. Philip Murray in opposition to the affidavit."

THOUGH THE majority members of the Senate committee are doing a splendid job of massacreing T-H and justifying the proposed substitution of the Thomas Bill, few of the public are getting a chance to hear the proceedings.

Last week, the daytime hearings were held in Room P-26, a telephone booth-type of room in the Capital. When the press and witnesses have all been seated, hardly more than a dozen spectators can find room.

Simultaneously, the Foreign Relations Committee is stubbornly holding onto the large Senate Caucus Room, which seats several hundred. The Foreign Relations group draws an audience of perhaps 25 daily.

Highlights of witness' testimony:

T-H EXPEDITERS: The three top men in the office of general counsel of the NLRB listen with obvious discomfort as Sen. Wayne Morse (R., Ore.) criticizes their work. Left to right are Robert M. Denham, general counsel, and his assistants, Winthrop A. Johns and David Findling. The latter, like Denham, came under the fire of the committee.

Dictator

Robert N. Denham was accused by Senate Labor Committee members of having "autocratic powers."

He leaned back in his chair and said: "Of course I can't be overruled."

This was after charges by Republicans that some labor leaders have dictatorial powers over their members.

Denham

Robert N. Denham probably wished he could have stood in bed.

All the things he has been accused of by labor were hurled at him, and he frequently had to call on his assistants to answer in his behalf. (They didn't do very well, either.)

Before he got into the touchy field of his authority and the subject of injunctions, Denham was asked if he favored the non-Communist affidavit.

He replied: "If it were abolished, people like Jim Carey would be discouraged in their attempts to rid unions of Communist leadership."

Morse looked startled and asked: "Does Carey favor the affidavit? Has he signed one? Has Phil Murray signed one?"

"Murray, Carey and Allan Haywood have not signed as a matter of principle," Denham said, "but I have never heard Carey say whether or not he favored the affidavit."

Morse: "Doesn't the action of Carey, Murray and Haywood indicate to you that they oppose it?"

HUMPHREY asked Denham why similar provisions were not adopted for other voluntary associations. He said doctors are kicked out of the American Medical Association, to which they must belong or sacrifice privileges at most hospitals. "Do you favor that?" Humphrey asked.

"I can't see the resemblance," Denham replied.

Sen. Pepper recalled that Denham last year had said:

"I was very much gratified (after the law was passed) to find the major portion of those

Taftism

Sen. Taft has had rough going in the hearings.

During a discussion of a T-H provision that says injunctions cannot be sought where there is an abnormal danger to life and limb, he broke in to sneer that the Wagner act had no such provision.

Sen. Douglas snapped: "Even the Senator should know that the provision was not needed in the Wagner Act—because there was no injunction of any kind permitted there."

Reuther Plan

We can have "Houses for People, Planes for Peace, Jobs for Security."

In a new unique plan of giant scope UAW Pres. Walter Reuther has blueprinted a course for American government which would satisfy these three major needs.

A complete description of the "Reuther Plan" will appear next week. The plan was received last week just as the CIO News went to press.

TWUA Announces Arbitration Policy

The CIO Textile Workers will recommend to local unions that they drop arbitration proceedings seeking a wage increase in woolen and worsted mills, except where present rates are below the industry standard, according to John Chupka, TWUA woolen and worsted director.

The decision was made at a meeting of the union's policy committee for the woolen and worsted industry, elected by delegates from local unions, Chupka said.

TWUA has asked a 10c an hour increase from the woolen and worsted industry, under a wage reopening clause in present contracts. Last week an arbitrator ruled against the union in the case of the American Woolen Co., largest firm in the industry, with 23,000 workers in 24 mills.

Today's decision will affect more than 65,000 other woolen and worsted workers, Chupka said.

He estimated that less than two per cent of the 90,000 woolen and worsted workers under union contract are employed in mills where rates are below standard, and thus may be taken to arbitration.

Murray, Other Intl. Officers Re-elected By Steel Union

PHILIP MURRAY, the other three international officers and all the incumbent district directors of the CIO Steelworkers were re-elected by the membership Feb. 8.

On the eve of the election Murray underwent an emergency operation for appendicitis. He was reported in a good condition late last week at the Mercy Hospital, Pittsburgh, Pa., where he had been a patient two weeks. He went there for a rest and physical check-up after suffering a stomach disorder.

Secy-Treas. David J. McDonald and Vice Presidents Van A. Bittner and James G. Thimmes were re-elected. They were unopposed. There were contests for seven of the 32 district directorships.

The election was the first under the revised constitution and those elected will hold office for four years, rather than two, as at present.

Anti-Labor 5 Days A Week

They tell the anecdote about a New York newspaperman with a "liberal" reputation, who—several years ago—started to grind out a stream of anti-union stories.

A friend, meeting the reporter in a bar one evening, chided him about the hostile stories.

"Well," said the newspaperman, sheepishly, "you know, I only write anti-union pieces three times a week."

That reporter would be a piker at the hearings on Taft-Hartley repeal now going on before the Senate Labor Committee. The witnesses who like Taft-Hartley are obviously anti-labor five days a week—and double on Saturdays and Sundays.

Those spokesmen for the big business viewpoint haven't changed a bit since 1947. They're speaking the same piece now as when they argued for adoption of Taft-Hartley and for emasculation of the Wagner Act.

But now, even more than before, you can hear the hollow rattle in their testimony against the "horrors" of free unionism and of fair-minded labor legislation.

Early in the hearings, the New Dealers—or rather, the Fair Dealers—were caught off guard by the hostile witnesses and by Sen. Taft's persistent line of questioning.

We're glad to see that the liberal Democratic majority on the Senate Labor Committee has snapped back fast. They've used facts and figures with the same assuredness you'll find in a Marine sergeant knocking over ducks at a shooting gallery. A lot of witnesses have looked surprised when their propaganda blew up in their faces.

When the Senate hearings end on Feb. 23, corporation lobbyists and executives are going to have first-hand knowledge of the difference between the 81st Congress and its Republican predecessor.

CIO STATES ITS POSITION

We hope that every CIO member has a good supply of pencils, pens, ink, writing paper, envelopes and three-cent stamps. You're going to need them—in order to let the men and women who represent you in Congress know how union people feel about Taft-Hartley repeal.

Many Senators have reported sizeable mail from people who would like to keep Taft-Hartley, but repeal the November elections. It's about time for a few letters to come in from the folks who elected Harry Truman and the 81st Congress.

The CIO's position has been made very clear on this complicated legislative matter of changing labor laws.

- We support the Thomas Bill (S. 249) in the Senate. It would repeal T-H, re-enact the Wagner Act, and deal with three subjects mentioned in the President's State-of-the-Union Message: jurisdictional disputes, secondary boycotts and national emergency disputes.
- We're opposed to amendments to the Thomas bill. (Sen. Taft and his friends would like to load it up with a flock of T-H amendments.)
- We hope that Rep. Kelley (D. Pa.) can persuade the House Labor Committee to accept a "two-package bill"—in other words, simple repeal of T-H and re-enactment of the Wagner Act. If the Labor Committee turns him down, the CIO looks to that body to approve a bill identical with the Thomas Bill in the Senate.

Support of this position will lead to prompt enactment of a decent labor relations law and—as CIO told the Senate—"to a course of sound labor relations based on mutual trust and free collective bargaining."

There's Heat In The Cold War

More Than American Dollars Needed To Turn Back Commies In Europe

By ALLAN L. SWIM

YOU BEGIN to realize after you've been in Europe only a short time that the "cold war" gets pretty warm at times.

You realize, too, that it wouldn't be too difficult for some European countries—with financial aid from the U. S.—to win the "battle for production" and still lose the fight on the "ism" front.

France provides a good example of the type of struggle that is going on—a struggle that is of about equal importance to Joe Doaks, American, and to Pierre Durand, Frenchman.

If Pierre, who loves his freedom, loses the fight next month, then Joe, who also loves his liberty, might easily lose next year.

IF YOU LOOK at the statistics, you see that France is making some real progress toward overall economic recovery.

But if you talk with workers who live in cramped quarters, earn low wages and dress poorly, you find that the benefits of recovery are being badly distributed.

This, of course, is not the fault of the U. S., which refrains from meddling in the internal affairs of nations which it is aiding through the European Recovery Program.

It would be difficult to place the blame on anybody's doorsteps, but that doesn't alter the fact that the situation exists.

The Communists today are the dominant force in the French labor movement—and they're doing everything they can to discredit the Marshall plan and the American unions which support it.

They're taking full advantage of the disruption caused by the last war and the hardships resulting from current inflation.

And they're not missing an opportunity to profit from every mistake made by the French politicians.

They go in for real rough stuff when they think it's needed.

Now In Europe

Editor Allan L. Swim of the CIO News is now making a European tour that will take him into six countries.

Physical violence, threats and coercion are among their principal weapons.

French workers are told frequently that they'd better join the Communist Party so they won't be shot, hung or imprisoned when the Russians "liberate" their country and do away with "decadent capitalism."

NON-Communist union groups are putting up a real fight, but they have poor equipment with which to wage the battle.

Their principal weapon is a burning desire to make France into a nation with a high standard of living and a high degree of human freedom.

They have very little money—and without money they cannot employ organizers and publish the newspapers and pamphlets necessary to combat Communist propaganda.

They feel that they must not accept money from any source which would enable the Commies to tag them as "stooges" of the French government or the governrment of the U. S.

But they believe they can win out in the end if the French standard of living improves sufficiently and if the democratic trade unions of the world put up a real, concerted fight against Communism.

WHAT IS going on in France and the rest of Europe today may seem relatively unimportant to American trade unionists, who have their own economic and political problems. But it isn't.

The workers of Europe may easily determine whether there's to be peace or war in the future.

The manner in which they turn the key of events will have much to do with the amount of taxes American workers pay, the amount of money Congress appropriates for armament, the number of men who wear military uniforms.

The struggle for power in Europe cannot be confined to Europe. It cannot be ignored by trade unionists at home. It cannot be brushed aside lightly.

American unions should determine what role they can play in the struggle and begin playing it without delay.

Murray, Kroll Laud Israeli Democracy

IN SEPARATE communications to two Labor Zionist groups, CIO Pres. Philip Murray and CIO Political Action Committee Director Jack Kroll have praised the new state of Israel as an example of democracy.

Murray, who last week underwent an appendicitis operation following a bronchial illness wired Louis Segal of the Jewish Natl. Workers Alliance his regrets at being unable to attend the organization's Feb. 13 celebration in New York City honoring the first democratically-elected Israel parliament.

"This event," Murray wired, "is clearly a landmark not only for the Jewish people but for all men and women who treasure democratic freedom and the independence of small nations.

"We in the Congress of Industrial Organizations are proud of our firm support for the cause of Israel, and look forward to its taking an important seat in the family of nations."

The Labor Zionist movement has been "a source of inspiration and pride," Kroll has written Pres. Baruch Zuckerman of the Labor Zionist Organization of America.

Offering his assistance and asking to be actively enrolled in the organization, the PAC head said it is "doubtful that the state of Israel would have been realized in our day" were it not for the social vision and self-sacrifice of the labor forces.

"Today," Kroll asserted, "the forces of organized labor in Israel constitute a bulwark of democracy against the tides of totalitarianism of all descriptions which seek to engulf the entire Middle East."

"You say you can't get by on $6.95 a week? Haven't you heard the cost of living is dropping?"

Murray Urges Support Of Heart Campaign

Every minute at least one American dies of heart disease.

Every hour heart disease claims 68 lives.

Every day the fatal toll is over 1600.

Every year heart disease contributes to the death of nearly 600,000 Americans, CIO Pres. Philip Murray wrote international unions, regional directors and state and city CIO councils in a letter appealing for co-operation in the American Heart Association campaign for $5 million.

The campaign is on and will continue the remainder of this month.

"The American Heart Association, on the basis of contributions made to its treasury during the month of February, will be enabled to carry on its program of scientific research, education, and community service," Murray wrote.

Don't Be Fooled—Living Costs Still In Stratosphere!

By STANLEY RUTTENBERG
CIO Director of Education & Research

"DO YOU HEAR that thud, Son? That's the cost of living crashing through the roof. Before you know it you'll need a wagon to bring home all the stuff the good old paycheck will buy."

The words may be different but the tune is the same. The latest NAM-inspired headlines and hoopla would have us believe that the cost of living is chasing itself into the ground. Propaganda objective? General acceptance of the proposition that the need for higher minimum wages and general increases is over!

What Are the Facts? Since last August, when consumers' prices hit a postwar peak, the cost of living has gone down only 1.8%. And this is almost entirely due, says the Bureau of Labor Statistics in its latest report, to lower food prices.

Clothing, home furnishings, fuel and electricity, and the miscellaneous items that make up the cost of living are still above August levels. And rent continues upward.

Over-all living costs are still 2.9% above a year ago. And they are 29% over June 1946, when OPA controls were scrapped to allow an open track for the gravy train to the happy-happy land of unlimited price boosts and business profits.

BUT NOW THE train is slowing down, as CIO warned it would; it seems that the passengers, you and I, can't foot the high cost of the ride any longer.

In the language of the economists, the consumers' market is getting "soft." For too long, high prices have been draining off wartime savings and cutting real earnings. Textiles, shoes, electrical appliances, furniture, and many other goods that your family and mine need and want, are beginning to pile up on the shelves because too many families don't have the money to meet the asking price.

For three years, CIO has warned that unlimited price and profit gouging, unrestrained by controls, would hurt us all. But business preferred to overwork the cow and now it's going dry.

Do you remember way back in 1946 when NAM said, "Get rid of price controls—and the happy days of increased production, competition, and lower prices will come quickly?"

But the postwar sellers' market, based on the scarcity of goods, was played for all the traffic would bear. Prices went up, not down.

NOW, BUSINESS finds it has skimmed the cream off the market; and it looks like competition for sales and lower prices are really in order. But is business happy? Oh, no!! Industry prefers to try to keep prices high—to "stabilize" them—by the simple device of cutting production.

Textile mills have been curtailing operations to reduce their "excess inventories." Automobile manufacturers have eliminated assembly lines, electrical equipment makers are laying off second and third shifts, and lumber mills go idle—all for the same reason.

Just as it seems that goods can flow in abundance at last, business puts on the brake and says no.

They say we are approaching a "buyers'" market. But who is going to do all this buying when thousands of workers get thinner paychecks or none at all?

CONSUMER purchasing power is already too low to buy off the production of a full employment economy. Just as every effort now should be made to build up mass buying power, business begins to cut production and scrap full employment, thereby reducing consumer incomes still further.

Unemployed workers don't ring many cash registers, and the situation can easily drift into a depression. Even when prices really begin to drop, it is scant comfort to people who have no money to spend; for them the horse is already out of the barn. We learned that lesson in 1932.

For years CIO has hoped that American business would understand that a stable and expanding economy must be geared to a large output and small unit profits—to the highest possible wages and salaries and the lowest possible prices.

As production is becoming "soft" in consumers' goods industries, and pools of part-time and unemployed workers appear, the ill-advised business policies of the last three years must be quickly reversed.

ALL BUSINESS—but particularly our great durable goods industries that are still in the midst of capacity production—must immediately restore the lagging flow of purchasing power by increasing wages out of their record profits, by increasing productivity and by not increasing prices.

Such action would narrow the widening spread between prices and purchasing power and bring production and the people's ability to buy more closely into line.

But it is hard for business to concentrate on this economic lesson when it is busy digesting 1948 profits of 21 billions.

"And that's an all-time record, Son!"

Bill Seen Aimed At Negro Voters

The Georgia Senate late last week passed an amended version of a voters' qualification and registration bill which Gov. Herman Talmadge demanded to bar "block voting of Negroes."

The measure would wipe from the registration books all of the present 1,200,000 names—whites as well as Negroes.

Top proposal of the governor to the legislature, the measure would require prospective, illiterate voters to answer 10 of 30 complicated questions.

The bill was an amended substitute for the measure passed by the House and must go back to the House for agreement.

The measure was opposed at a Senate committee hearing by Negro and labor representatives, and by members of the Atlanta League for Women Voters.

The author of the House bill, speaker Pro-tem George Smith 2d himself missed some of the proposed questions when quizzed on them.

State Sens. W. R. McCoy, W. B. Cochran, Jr., and Lee Purdon, when quizzed together, missed 11 of the questions asked them at random by the reporter.

In the senate debate on the measure, Sen. Walter Harrison, the anti-Administration leader, said that if Gov. Talmadge signed the measure "it would mean his undoing in his efforts to return as Governor of Georgia.

"You can't trample on the people and have their respect. With one full swoop of the Governor's pen we will disenfranchise 1,200,000 people who are now on the voters lists.

"We will have to tell 1,200,000 people . . . that the Constitution means nothing. We white folks have always predominated at the polls, but I tell you there will be a great upsurge among the colored seeking to vote if this bill is passed.

"The colored people are citizens of the United States and they have certain rights. The Constitution allows them to vote."

Five Bills To Aid Handicapped Urged

Passage of five bills to aid the physically handicapped has been urged by the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped.

The bills, which have the backing of CIO, would establish

- A Federal Commission on services to the physically handicapped.
- A national cerebral palsy act.
- A national leprosy act.
- A national epilepsy act.
- A national census of handicapped.

The AFPH estimates that some 28 million handicapped persons would be aided by the measures. Beginning this week, the Federation will conduct a four-months campaign to acquaint the public with the legislative needs of the handicapped.

Sales Tax Opposed

More money should be spent for educational purposes, but a sales tax is not the way to get it, Pres. Charles C. Webber of the Virginia CIO Council told a radio audience last week. A sales tax has been proposed in Virginia.

The solution to the problem of equalizing of educational opportunities in states where the per capita income is low, Webber maintained, is passage of Federal legislation that would appropriate $300,000,000 to aid States.

Taft And Denham Wilt Under Den

Donnell hastily said:

"Of course, Mr. Denham's suggestions arrived too late to be incorporated. But Mr. Shroyer [former counsel to the Senate Committee, now assistant to its minority members] tells me they all were in, either in full, or in substance."

Humphrey asked Denham about a transcript of a meeting Denham had held with the NLRB Union (independent), in which he reportedly refused to deal with the union. Humphrey and Morse insisted it should be put into the record after Denham admitted it was correct in substance.

(Donnell, trying to keep his old pal out of hot water, moved that the transcript not be inserted into the record. He withdrew his objection fast after Taft told him to.)

Donnell then expanded the record by many, many pages. He inserted an analysis, by Denham's office, of the labor laws of all 48 states.

(Neeley asked that Denham read West Virginia's. When it showed there was no restrictive legislation there, the Senator from that State exclaimed: "West Virginia is still the land of the brave and the home of the free.")

Asked about the dates of his information, Denham said: "T-H has been on the books a relatively short time. Not many states have had time to get into line."

Note that: "Get into line!"

Donnell asked him if the AFL Typographical Union was not the only major AFL union "in defiance" of the law.

Humphrey objected strenuously to the word "defiance," and Taft suggested "public manifestation of opposition" to the law.

(Donnell again gave way to Taft.)

THEN came the subject of injunctions.

Taft made much of the fact that T-H bars injunctions in a case where the work stoppage is caused by abnormally bad working conditions which might peril the worker's life—such as in a mine.

Morse slowly and deliberately said: "When you leave discretion to men who don't wear overalls, you are wrong.

"I'd rather have the men who do the work decide whether or not the mine is safe. The other way will never be done with my vote."

Donnell then asked Denham about the use of the term "slave labor law" by some unions to describe T-H.

"There is not a single provision of the law which harms labor in a single way!" cried Denham.

Neely interposed:

"Sen. Morse, did you make several speeches since T-H in which you spoke of T-H placing shackles on labor? I quoted effectively from those speeches during my campaign last fall."

Morse answered, again deliberately: "I am sure I must have said T-H places shackles on labor—because it does."

(The audience applauded.)

At that time, Donnell left for his trip to Missouri and Taft turned to Denham as a volunteer adviser. When Pepper asked Denham whether he had not said that an injunction could force strikers to work, Taft broke in hastily:

"If he did say that, he didn't mean it." Pepper made a crack about Denham acting under "advice of counsel."

Denham then made his statement that the T-H had no power to force a worker back to his job, that its only power was to order the union to tell the men to do so. If the union refused to issue the order, the government could seek a contempt citation.

Denham became uncomfortable under the questioning of Pepper on this subject and finally said:

"All this is outside my bailiwick. As general counsel, I am concerned only with Title 1 (of the T-H Act). Injunctions come under other titles."

Pepper said: "I thought you were general counsel of NLRB. Surely you didn't examine only one portion of the bill!"

Denham muttered that the name of his job would better have been "general administrator."

Pepper accused Denham and the T-H law's framers of deceiving the public into a false belief that T-H injunctions actually forced people to work.

Pepper declared that no other man in government has such a concentration of power as Denham has. "It's an autocratic power," he asserted.

Denham: "I admit it. There is no appeal from my decisions."

When it was all over, Denham looked tired and most un-autocratic in appearance.

Price of T-H

Sen. Humphrey declared that not a single new local union had been organized in his home city of Minneapolis since enactment of T-H.

Davis

William Hammett Davis, though he described himself as an "elderly citizen," put many a younger man to shame by his endurance against the giggles of Taft and the "am I not right?" of Donnell.

From the time early in the day until he trudged onto a midnight train for New York, Davis was alert, vibrant and too smart to be led off the path by T-H smokescreens.

The former chairman of the War Labor Board—he was what is called an "independent" witness—was the first of several who hammered home the proof that there is actually no injunction power under T-H to stop a strike.

The American people have been misled, he declared, into believing the 80-day cool-off—better be named "warm-up," he said—injunction permanently ends a strike and that all is then hunky-dory.

But, Davis showed, comes the end of the 80 days—back again is the emergency. He also questioned whether some of the so-called emergencies actually were emergencies. To him, a national emergency would be one that really and actually threatened the health and safety of the American people.

He noted that in six injunction cases under T-H, not a single one solved the issue.

The coal strike, he reminded Taft & Co., went on for some days after the injunction was issued and was settled only when the union became satisfied by appointment of a new member of the welfare fund committee. Then, in the atomic case at Oak Ridge, Tenn., while there was no strike, it was the AFL national officers who won the settlement and nothing that was done under T-H made any difference.

Obviously enjoying himself, Davis turned to the two longshore strikes. He said "instead of T-H doing any good in the West Coast situation, the strike itself was beneficial to relations between the union and management."

Why is there no settlement during an injunction? he asked. "Men are not encouraged to reach a settlement under an order to work for a private employer — for the employer's profit."

He would have the President, under law, have the power to set a cooling-off period and then make a report to Congress. Then, if the strike—a strike which creates a real, not fancied emergency—went on after the period, the President should have power to seize and operate, with reimbursement both to labor and management for any losses sustained.

Asked if the President had such powers now, he referred to his oft-quoted phrase: "The President could act to save the Union whether he had the power or not—later, the Supreme Court, in declaring the President had acted illegally, could save the Constitution."

Then, he gave his advice to committee: "Don't act hast Adopt the provisions of Thomas Bill, make a study of situation for six months or then draw a procedure—with injunctions."

He returned to the subject injunctions. "You know, as patent attorney, I make my ing to a great extent out of junctions. That's okay, since injunctions are not against ployes, but against the false of a patent. I challenge Sen. Ball's contention that if injunction works in one case justified. It's never justified a labor dispute.

"The less law the better, I sa

Honest Abe

After one of his long, rambling questionings of a witness, Sen. Forrest Donnell (pronounced Donul) asked to be excused. He wanted to go back to his home state of Missouri to address his fellow Republicans at a Lincoln Day Dinner.

"You go with the blessings of the committee and of the press," remarked Chairman Elbert Thomas (D., Utah) drily.

Then Sen. Matthew Neely (D., W. Va.) brought down the house. "I urge you to tell the Republicans what Abraham Lincoln said about labor."

(Abraham Lincoln said many things in favor of Labor. Perhaps the most famous is: "All that harms Labor is treason to America. No line can be drawn between these two. If any man tells you he loves America, yet he hates Labor, he is a liar. If any man tells you he trusts America, yet fears Labor, he is a fool.

("There is no America without Labor.")

I I NOT RIGHT? Sen. Forrest Donnell (R., Mo.) shown in a characteristic pose during questioning a Senate Labor Committee witness, this time LRB General Counsel Robert M. Denham, an old college chum. Donnell probably takes up most of the pages in the committee hearing transcript with lengthy and involved questions which already have been asked by other Senators.

you don't put coal on the fire. That's about as sensible as the T-H injunction."

He paid a warm tribute to Sen. Robert Wagner (D., N. Y.), father of the Wagner Act. "I would go back to the Wagner Act in the same way Bob Wagner would. I'd accept any amendment which would advance collective bargaining."

Donnell then asked: "Of course you favor the provision which gives the right to sue a union for alleged violation of contract?"

Davis' voice rose as he answered: "That's the rottenest provision ever put into a statute in America. I think it's unconstitutional. In any event, it's un-American! It was put in the act in a vengeful spirit."

Donnell looked as if he felt sick; Davis paid no attention to a protest from Taft.

It had been a field day for "an elderly American citizen."

Randolph

Woodruff Randolph, who is a lawyer besides being president of the Intl. Typographical Union, denied that his union was on strike against the law.

He pointed to the fact that scores of locals and managements had come to agreements which in effect preserve the ITU's traditional closed shop.

The ITU, perhaps the oldest continuing union in America, is noted for its democratic methods of operation. It has dozens of referenda each year on many subjects. Despite this, "the strikes were put upon us," Randolph said.

(The ITU has been on strike against the major daily newspapers of Chicago since November, 1947).

He was particularly critical of the publishers' own "union," the American Newspaper Publishers' Association. "There is far less democracy in that organization than there is in ours," he declared.

Asked about the expense of carrying on the Chicago strike and the others which have occurred since T-H, Randolph said printers do not hesitate to spend money for just causes. For instance, in the fight for the eight-hour day, many years ago, the international spent $5,000,000 and the locals $8,000,000.

He forced an admission from Taft that the Ohioan did not approve of the type of investigation made by the Hartley sub-committee of the ITU situation. Randolph also noted for the record that the ITU, which previously had 1200 written contracts, now has less than 100.

(Union security and other conditions are continued by verbal agreements, exchange of letter, etc.)

In New York, Randolph reminded the committee, the printing industry helped the ITU come to an agreement that was mutually satisfactory.

Noting that there are now more ITU members on strike than ever before, he assailed the injunction system of T-H, which has been used against ITU and said "God knows when the NLRB will make its decision in our case."

Randolph told the committee he'd have to be careful of what he said because "I am under an injunction and what I say will go to the general counsel (Denham) and, of course, to the judge."

Pepper assured him that if that question comes up, "you will have a lot of fellows on your side. Congress has impeachment power over federal judges."

Of course, the "free" press of the nation generally concentrated mainly on printing attacks on ITU by Taft and other T-H lovers.

Carey

HERE IS part of Carey's letter on Communists:

"Your Committee might just as well realize that the stated position of the Communist Party too often reflects, not its real aim but quite the opposite. The truth happens to be that the Communist Party abroad—and I have been over there on a number of occasions recently—has found the Taft-Hartley Law its principal weapon in misleading the workers of Europe into the belief that American organized labor and the American government can afford them no help or protection against the onslaught of those who hate and fear labor."

NLRB's Denham Understands Cows

ROBERT M. DENHAM is an old cow hand from the Rio Grande.

He is a registered Democrat, he told the Senate Committee, but hastened to add that he always votes Republican. He said he registered as a Democrat in Maryland to vote for Sen. Millard Tydings during Pres. Roosevelt's "purge" days.

Denham must have voted Democratic at least one other time, for in 1908 he was elected county attorney of Gaines County, Tex. (Pop. 8139)—"it was the only ticket they had there," he says.

Denham is a long time chum of Sen. Forrest Donnell (R., Mo.). In fact, they boarded in the same house when they went to the Univ. of Missouri Law School.

According to his own testimony before the Senate Committee in July, 1947, when he was being questioned as to his qualifications for being general counsel, Denham revealed these facts about himself:

He went to Texas because of bad health, became a cowhand . . . then he hied to Yakima, Wash., and practiced law as Sweet, Denham and Sweet . . . next, he shuffled off to Seattle, to practice more law . . .

THERE FOLLOWED a hitch in the Army . . . First, he was in command of lumberjacks in the Northwest . . . second, when the war was over, he was designated legal adviser to the Director of Air Service . . . says he completely reorganized procedures . . .

After discharge, he did work in the field for the War Dept. . . . and next he joined the special loans division of the Irving Natl. Bank, New York . . . it was on the verge of what he called the "inventory depression" of '20 and '21 and the bank had many accounts which were in "distress" . . . he handled clean-up of loans . . .

Some of the things he ran under loans were "17,000 head of sheep in Montana, a sugar plantation in Puerto Rico, paper mills in Maine and cotton plantations in Mississippi . . ."

HE DID the same job for a Washington bank—since out of business . . . then, back to Irving and trusteeship of a bank in Miami . . . J. C. Penney, incidentally, was the controlling factor . . . development of Coral Gables was part of the work . . . back to Irving, was sent to the Pacific Coast . . . next he joined the municipal bond firm which Sen. Eldridge headed . . . in 1933, he popped up in Washington "to lend a hand" in reorganization of closed national banks.

"I had the rather pleasant task of putting together some 1200 odd national banks in the period of 13 months" . . . resigned and opened a law office in Washington . . . conducted investigation in connection with South American trade . . . went with McCubbin-Legge as head of their Washington stock exchange and investment branch . . . "the well-known recession, of 1937 knocked the bottom out of investment enthusiasm" . . .

WENT TO FLORIDA, where he owned some property, but "one of my good friends at that time, a litigation attorney for the NLRB, was a guest at our house and he said: 'you are going to be shanghaied into the board'" . . . started as an examiner for a few days at a per diem in March, 1938 . . . "I received a rapid education in the Wagner Act" . . . has been with board ever since. Headed Federal Trial Examiners Conference, an organization of examiners from all government agencies, but some 40 examiners didn't join up . . .

* * *

So that was the experience Robert M. Denham brought to the NLRB. A cowhand — a county attorney—a city lawyer—an Army officer handling lumberjacks — a bank loan executive — a reorganizer of banks—a brokerage manager.

Says William H. Davis:

"I don't suppose you'd call me an expert on the Taft-Hartley Law. I never have liked the law, I have another way of making a living—a fairly honest way—so, I've kept out of T-H."

Lithographers Local 1 Presents 1st Pensions

THE FIRST monthly checks from the pension fund of Local 1, CIO Lithographers, were distributed to retired workers at ceremonies Feb. 6 in Manhattan Center, New York City.

More than 250 retired workers, ranging in age from 65 to 85, are eligible to receive the pensions.

Between five and six thousand lithographers and members of their families witnessed the distribution of the pension checks by Local 1 President Edward Swayduck. Local 1 officials say that this is the first pension fund started by a union in the lithographic industry.

Nearly $3 million has already been accumulated by the Fund, which was set up Jan. 1, 1947.

The fund pays pensions to Local 1 members who retire after reaching the age of 65. The fund also pays death benefits averaging 26 weeks of the weekly pay of the members.

Local 1 has a history of more than 80 years of organization. It represents more than 7,000 lithographic workers in the Metropolitan New York area.

More than two years of preparatory work were required to establish the pension program in consultation with Murray Latimer, well-known trade union pension expert. The program was adopted by the membership on January 26.

Presentation of the checks to pensioners took place at the Local 1's annual ball.

Bug Is Spotted In Biz Bonnet

A labor editor in Cleveland, Ohio, has put his finger on the "bug" that balls up labor-management relations more than anything else.

After attending a meeting of some 200 Cleveland industrialists and insurance agents, A. I. Davey of the Cleveland Citizen remarks that he was amazed to learn from questions asked "how many people there are in management who seem to feel that working people are some sort of peculiar animals which thrive on turmoil and delight in creating disturbances."

"There are men in positions of authority in Cleveland industry," he continues, "who, off the record and in private conversations after the meeting, openly professed the belief that a union was only formed so as to serve as their particular cross to bear. . .

"When an employer works with people as people he has surprisingly little difficulty. When he gets it into his head that he is a little tin god and runs his business under some sort of a scheme based on the 'divine right of kings,' then he is only asking for trouble—and he invariably gets it."

6-Hr. Day Sought In Lumbering

SOME 300 lumber operators in five northwest states will receive CIO Woodworkers demands next month for a health and welfare program, a six-hour day, a wage increase and improved holiday and vacation provisions.

The union's program was formulated at a two-day Northwest Regional Conference, attended by 211 delegates from 105 locals. The demands apply to contracts in Washington, Oregon, California, Idaho and Montana. The agreements expire April 1.

The shortened work-day was placed at the top of the list in an effort to spread the work over a longer period during the year. Many loggers, the union emphasized, only worked from four to 7½ months of last year.

The conference paid much attention to health and welfare needs and sought a plan which would provide pre-paid hospital, medical, surgical care, sick leave with pay of $40 a week for 26 weeks, life insurance and death and dismemberment benefits.

No amount was specified for the wage increase, delegates preferring to see what turn prices take in the next month and what economic measures the new Congress adopts.

The conference emphasized the necessity for raising loggers' living standards, and noted that the lumber industry is "one of the most lucrative in the entire country."

Newest CIO Union Bars Reds As Officers

THE NEWEST CIO international union—the American Radio Association—put itself firmly in support of National CIO policy during its first constitutional convention in San Francisco last week. At the same time, it battened down the hatches by a constitutional provision barring Communists from office.

New officers of the ARA-CIO, elected at the San Francisco convention, are: William R. Steinberg, president; Philip O'Rourke, vice-president; Bernard Smith, secretary-treasurer. Elected national council members of the union were J. E. Croney, J. Y. Rubin, Ped Berman and William Schuman.

The convention went on record in support of National CIO policies, with full endorsement of the Marshall Plan and opposition to a third political party at this time. All-out backing of the National CIO-PAC was also voted.

The new constitution prohibits Communists from holding office or serving on official committees of the union.

ARA-CIO, which has contracts with approximately 150 of the major steamship lines of the U. S., was formerly the Marine Department of the American Communications Association.

The radio officers ended their affiliation with ACA in February, 1948, for which action they gave two reasons: (1) they wanted affiliation with a maritime union to strengthen their bargaining position; (2) they did not like the ACA's political attitudes.

LATER, THE radio officers received a provisional charter from CIO's Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, but MEBA decided against extending its jurisdiction and rescinded the charter.

The radio officers then applied for, and received, from National CIO a permanent charter as the American Radio Association.

The AFL's International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers during the last year sought to draw the radio officers into their jurisdiction. ARA President Steinberg and other leaders of the CIO union charged that Communists and fellow-travelers, operating on the West Coast, were aiding the IBEW's attempted coup.

The issue was settled when radio officers' groups in San Francisco, Seattle and Wilmington, Calif., voted themselves out of the IBEW and joined the ranks of ARA-CIO.

Hit Anti-Labor Law

Two proposals for repeal of anti-labor laws have been dropped into the hopper of the Missouri assembly at the capitol in Jefferson City.

Repeal of the Madison regulatory act is proposed in a bill signed by 29 representatives. Repeal of the King-Thompson act prohibiting strikes in public utilities is proposed in a bill sponsored by Thomas A. Walsh, St. Louis Democrat, who is chairman of the House labor committee.

At the Pittsburgh Metallurgical Co., Charleston, S. C. Plant, that manufactures Silica, the Mayor Morrison of Charleston conducted the election which was by consent between United Steel workers and the company. The results were 192 for USA-CIO to 47 for no union. Dir. William Crawford of District 35 states that this is the first victory for the steel workers in South Carolina. A great deal of credit goes to Nicholas Fayad who worked under the supervision of Frank Burke. Brother Fayad was ably assisted by Oscar Thomas, staff representative of District 35.

After two and a half years the Cleveland Council voluntarily agreed to an election with the following results. Pat O'Malley was elected president and James Quinn who has been administrator for the CIO was overwhelmingly elected secretary by a majority of some six thousand votes. The winners of the election are supporters of National CIO policy.

Powers Hapgood Dies; Friend of Workers and Oppressed

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

POWERS HAPGOOD, CIO leader and champion of workers' rights for a quarter of a century, is dead.

It happened the night of Feb. 4, on a road south of Indianapolis. A little girl saw a car leave the highway at slow speed, enter a yard and come to a stop against a bush.

Inside sat a man slumped over the wheel. He was alone. When she saw that he did not move, the child was afraid and ran for help. But it was too late for help.

When people came to see what was the matter, they found that Powers Hapgood's heart, like his car, had come slowly to a stop.

Forced by ill health to give up his CIO activities more than a year ago, Hapgood had just left the doctor's office and was on his way home to his father's 630-acre farm about 10 miles south of Indianapolis, when he was stricken with the fatal heart attack. He was 49 years old.

Hundreds of CIO members and officials, including a group of former miners who had worked with Hapgood years ago in the United Mine Workers, attended the simple funeral services held Feb. 10 at the Amalgamated Clothing Workers union hall in Indianapolis.

POWERS HAPGOOD: (L.) Hapgood when he worked in the coal mines, the better to understand the miners' problems. (Note the coal bucket; each miner was entitled to that much coal at the end of the day's work.) (R.) Hapgood was arrested when he attempted to speak on Boston Common in behalf of Sacco and Vanzetti, who were executed on false charges.

Miners' Funeral

John Brophy of the National CIO read the moving miners' burial service which begins with the words: "Fellow Workers: We are assembled here today to pay a sad tribute of love to our departed friend and brother."

Years ago when he was president of UMW Dist. 2 in central Pennsylvania, Brophy gave Powers Hapgood his first union assignment, helping launch him on a labor career that he was to follow steadfastly.

It was shortly after Hapgood's graduation from Harvard University in 1921. Already he had decided to devote himself to fighting for the rights of labor. He started out by going to work in a coal mine.

With the help and advice of Brophy, then head of UMW District, Hapgood joined the United Mine Workers and worked both in non-union and union mines in Pennsylvania and Colorado. During the Somerset miners strike in 1922, Brophy gave him an assignment as organizer.

Later Hapgood went abroad to continue his first-hand study of labor conditions. He worked for a short time in coal mines in South Wales and in the German Ruhr, and visited mines in France, Russia, Japan and China.

It was after his return to the United States that the stormiest part of Hapgood's career began. His quickness to resent injustice and to come to the defense of the oppressed plunged him into one battle after another. He was beaten up, thrown into jail, and fined so many times and in so many causes that he lost track of the number.

Helped Form CIO

Two of the battles in which he was engaged during the late twenties were outstanding landmarks in Hapgood's life. One was the bitter fight—back in the 1920's—in the miner's union to unseat Pres. John L. Lewis.

The effort failed, but some of the mine leaders who took part in the fight on one side or the other, including Lewis, himself, were to be associated with Hapgood a few years later when the CIO was formed.

The other was the long and desperate campaign to save the lives of Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti, the two Italian workers who were falsely accused of a payroll robbery and murder in Massachusetts.

When they were finally executed in Boston in 1927 in spite of protests heard around the world, and after every effort to bring them justice had failed, Hapgood took it hard.

He had driven himself to the limit in the campaign to save the men, working tirelessly day and night in their behalf. On one occasion he was arrested and fined for attempting to speak on the Boston Common.

The Sacco-Vanzetti case had a profound influence on Hapgood's personal life. He never forgot the bitter lessons he learned during the years he worked on the case.

It was fitting, therefore, that his wife, Mary Donovan Hapgood, whom he met during the Sacco-Vanzetti campaign, should request that part of her husband's ashes be sent to Boston.

"I think Powers would have liked to have part of his ashes near those of Sacco and Vanzetti," she said after the funeral in Indianapolis.

Led Shoe Strike

An account of the last 13 years of Powers Hapgood's life would read like a history of the CIO. From the time the new labor movement was started in 1935-36, Hapgood devoted his energy and ability to its advancement.

During the CIO's early years, he helped in the big organizing drives in the auto, steel, and rubber industries.

In 1937, as director of the Shoe Workers Organizing Committee, he was in the heat of the battle in Lewiston, Maine, where a strike for union recognition was called against 19 shoe factories employing some 6,500 workers.

Hapgood was tear-gassed when police tried to break up a picket-line. Later, along with six other union men, he was sentenced to 6 months in jail for contempt of court for violation of an injunction. After some weeks in jail, the seven men were released on bail, pending appeal, and the case was finally dropped.

Speaking at the first convention of the United Shoe Workers in St. Louis, Mo., in November 1937, Hapgood reported that the Maine strike had resulted in the stable organization of the shoe workers in that state for the first time in the history of the industry.

Long On CIO Staff

In 1941 Hapgood was appointed CIO regional director in Indiana and continued in this capacity until about a year and a half before ill health forced him to give up all CIO work.

CIO Organizing Director Allan S. Haywood, on whose staff Hapgood worked during a large part of his years with the CIO, was grief-stricken when he received the news of Hapgood's death.

"I've known Powers Hapgood all the years of his active life," Haywood said. "He was always modest, devoted and untiring in his efforts to improve the lot of workers everywhere.

"He will be missed and deeply mourned by all the members of the CIO who knew him personnally, or who knew about his outstanding achievements in the labor movement."

In addition to his widow, Hapgood is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Hapgood; a son, Donovan, a student at Harvard, and a daughter, Barta, a student at Purdue University, who was named in honor of Bartolomeo Vanzetti.

Philadelphia Transit Workers Strike

Eleven thousand CIO employes of the Philadelphia Transportation Co. went on strike shortly before the CIO News went to press. They operate the bus, trolley, subway and elevated line.

Rejecting a company offer of an additional penny—which raised the offer to 3c an hour—the Transport Workers reduced their demand from 25c to 20c in an effort to obtain a settlement.

In New York, meanwhile, the union was engaged in a walkout of change makers and maintenance men at the Hudson & Manhattan Railroad. The strike is in protest against the company's dismissal of 49 employes. H & M has refused to negotiate with the CIO union, to which a majority of the employes recently switched their affiliation from the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

Also launched last week in Philadelphia was a strike of 700 CIO Lithographers against 20 of the city's largest lithographing firms.

Scholle Hits Demo Meet Stories

A liberal slate of candidates for eight state officers was nominated by the Michigan Democratic Party at a meeting last week.

With a large number of CIO delegates participating, the meeting also approved Gov. G. Mennen Williams' proposals for a 4% tax on corporation taxes, a fair employment practices bill and measures to end stream polution.

Michigan CIO Council Pres. August Scholle hit newspaper accounts of the meeting which charged the CIO with "taking over" the Democratic Party.

"Such headlines have been appearing regularly since 1942 and do not hold more truth now than they did seven years ago," he said, "What has developed in the Democratic Party is a healthly alliance betwen delegates who are members of the CIO, AFL, telephone workers' unions, ADA and other liberal groups.

CIO Council Alone Averts 25% Bus Fare Increase

HOW CIO councils can play a leading role in community activities has been demonstrated in Montgomery county (Pa.) where the Montgomery and Chester Counties Council has succeeded in averting a 25% increase in bus fares. And the CIO Council did it alone.

The Pa. Public Utility Commission has just voted, 4-1, to grant a straight 8-cent fare. Present rate is two rides for 15 cents. The company wanted a 10-cent fare, or three for 25 cents.

The PUC ruled that of the $55,000 annual increase the company wanted, $40,000 was unjustified.

Even if the PUC had ruled for the company, it would have been a partial victory for the CIO, for by opposing the fare increase application, the CIO succeeded in having it delayed for six months, and then a second six months.

The CIO did it alone. No borough or township in the county lifted a finger, even after the CIO urged the officials; and pleaded with them, to join in the action. Nor would any community leaders lift a finger, in the service groups, the church groups, the fraternal groups, or the veterans' groups.

The CIO got into the fight for two reasons—to block an increase in the cost of living for its members, and to perform a service for the entire community. Council Pres. John Lynch went on the air three times in an effort to rally the community. (Two of his scripts were written by a Newspaper Guild member.)

He appeared before borough and township officials, before service clubs, asking them to join in the battle. He got no action although after his talks individual members would sidle up and tell him he was right, and to keep up the fight.

The CIO financed the fight, engaged M. H. Goldstein, labor attorney. The local district of the United Steelworkers Union helped pay the freight. Opposing the union was a high priced utility lawyer.

For the purpose of the rate hearing the company estimated that its legal expense to battle the CIO would be $50,000—and asked that the $50,000 be made part of the rate base. That is, the bus riders themselves were being asked to foot the bill for the company's fight for higher fares.

The success of the CIO in blocking the fare hike points the way to a field of public action in which the CIO can do something effective about price control without recourse to legislation.

The Pennsylvania CIO Council has now entered the field on a state-wide scale. It is opposing the application of the Bell Telephone Company for a rate increase. Goldstein is the CIO attorney.

Oil Workers Vote To Cancel 1949 Annual Convention

MEMBERSHIP of CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union has voted to cancel the union's 1949 annual convention and hold the next conclave in the summer of 1950.

In a secret ballot referendum, the membership approved a suggestion of the union's International Executive Council that the 1949 convention be eliminated to save money. It is estimated that a saving of $100,000 to the International and the various locals will be made.

The proposition was submitted to the membership after heavy expenses were encountered in last fall's bitter California strike in the oil industry. Fifteen thousand members were on strike for two months and 3,000 of this number were on the bricks for four months in this dispute.

A canvass of referendum votes by Pres. O. A. Knight and Secy.-Treas. T. M. McCormick showed 6,474 votes for cancellation of the convention, 5,447 against.

THE UNION'S headquarters will be moved from Fort Worth, Tex. to Denver, Colo., effective March 1, administrative officers have announced.

The oil union will occupy a two-story building at 1840 California Street in downtown Denver. Executive council of the union voted to purchase the building about a year ago. After the structure was vacated by its previous occupants, the entire building was remodelled and redecorated to suit OWIU needs.

The union decided to remove its offices from Fort Worth more than a year ago after Fort Worth landlords had showed an unwillingness to lease adequate office space to the labor organization.

First groups from the headquarters will leave Fort Worth Feb. 18, and all departments will be located in Denver by March 1.

Illinois Considers FEPC Legislation

An Illinois fair employment practices act was in the making as Gov. Adlai Stevenson (D) met with leaders of both major parties to clear the way for passage of such legislation.

Principal objections that led to defeat of FEPC in the last two legislative sessions have been removed.

These were a penal clause and an injunction provision. Five Negro legislators will join Walter V. Schaefer, former Northwestern University professor and now a Stevenson assistant, in drafting the measure.

Instead of a penal provision, the new bill will provide that cases of alleged discrimination in employment be taken to court for rulings, without jail or fine penalties except in contempt.

AVC To Seek Members In Labor Movement

The national planning committee of the American Veterans Committee has decided to conduct a membership campaign among union members who served in the armed forces.

This action was taken in a resolution which pointed out that "millions of veterans are found within the ranks of organized labor, whose aim and hopes for the general welfare coincide in great part with the program and platform of the AVC."

The resolution also noted that good relationship has been established with labor on the national level.

At the CIO convention at Boston in 1947 CIO Pres. Philip Murray urged all CIO organizations to take an interest in the AVC, which he said "is the most outstanding and certainly the most deserving veterans' organization in the U. S."

Steel Union Wins Election Outside T-H

The CIO Steelworkers have won their first election in South Carolina—despite obstacles placed in the way by Taft-Hartley.

The Steelworkers union is what the NLRB terms a "non-complying" union—one that has refused to file T-H non-communist affidavits. As such it cannot petition the Board for an election, appear on a ballot in an NLRB election or receive the backing of the U. S. government when an employer refuses to bargain.

At the Pittsburgh Metallurgical Co., Charleston, S. C., the company and the union solved the problem this way:

Both sides agreed to allow Charleston's Mayor William Morrison to name the chairman of a board to conduct the balloting. When the election resulted in a 192-to-47 victory for the Steelworkers, the management agreed to negotiate a contract in good faith.

The organizing campaign was headed by Nicholas Fayad, Southern Organizing Committee representative, assisted by Steelworkers District Rep. Oscar Thomas.

Good Labor Relations Pay, Hormel's Statement Shows

CALL IT POETIC justice, or just plain proof that union-busting doesn't pay.

Net profits of the big meat packing companies who forced a turbulent three-months strike by the CIO Packinghouse Workers last year took a deep plunge, while those of the Hormel Co. at Austin, Minn., whose friendly relations with the same union are often cited as exemplary—went up 17% in 1948.

How much good labor-management relations paid off at Hormel—both for the company and members of UPWA Local 9—is demonstrated by a report on wages and profits at the plant drawn up by Frank W. Schultz and published recently in the Unionist, the local's newspaper.

Unhampered by a strike, production at Hormel was going full-blast last March 16 through June 16, while the firm's competitors—Armour, Cudahy, Swift, Wilson, Rath and others—were closed by the union's nationwide walkout for wage increases and union security.

Armour's year-end net profit statement showed a 106% decline compared with the previous year. Cudahy was down 87%, Rath down 57% and Swift down 19%. Wilson and other packers also suffered.

BUT THE picture at Hormel—which has a guaranteed annual wage and profit sharing plan—was in sharp contrast.

Hormel's 1948 profit after taxes was $3,779,000, compared with $3,229,000 the previous year—a 17% increase.

Detailed figures on workers' earnings demonstrate that the profits were not earned at the employes' expense, for wages had gone up in the same period.

The average weekly pay at Hormel—including incentive and joint earnings pay— rose from $68.75 in 1947 to $75.95 in 1948. This reflects an 11c hourly increase in the base rate—from $1.17 in 1947 to $1.28 in 1948—as well as increases in incentive pay and joint earnings pay.

Hormel employes worked 35.2 hours a week last year, compared with 35 hours in 1947—which indicates that very little of the increased weekly pay was due to a longer work week.

Peru, Venezuela Cause of Concern

The CIO Latin American Affairs Committee has voiced "deep concern" about recent developments in Peru and Venezuela, where the governments have recently been overthrown by violence and replaced by military regimes.

The CIO group—headed by Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers—made its views known to the ambassadors of the two South American countries.

Dr. Ernst Schwartz, director of the committee, who made the calls at the embassies in Washington, pointed out that the two military revolutions have affected the freedom and civil rights of the people of the two countries, as well the freedom and independence of organized unions there.

The CIO Committee has voiced demands that free governments be restored in Peru and Venezuela, and that bona fide labor unions be granted all the rights they formerly enjoyed.

These rights, Dr. Schwartz pointed out, include the right to strike, collective bargaining, assembly and free election of union officers.

75c Floor Urged for Farm Work

Arguments for and against bringing workers on industrialized farms under the federal minimum wage law held the spotlight last week as hearings on amendments to the wage-hour law continued before the House Labor Committee.

The CIO has indorsed the bill (H.R. 2033) introduced by Rep. John Lesinski (D., Mich.), chairman of the committee, under which the present 40c minimum wage would be raised at least to 75c an hour. It could be further increased to $1 an hour in certain industries on recommendation of industry committees to the Secretary of Labor.

Farm laborers, excluded under the present law, would be covered under the Lesinski bill, which calls for the inclusion of agricultural workers who are employed 300 work days in any of the four preceding quarters.

A series of labor spokesmen, almost without exception, testified in favor of including farm labor, while representatives of big farm groups, and a few southern congressmen violently opposed it.

Rep. Graham A. Barden (D., N. C.) called it "meddling with the farmers and setting up a farm dictatorship."

Following testimony given by CIO witnesses earlier in the hearings, Elizabeth Sasuly of the Food & Tobacco Workers, last of the labor representatives to appear before the Committee, told the congressmen that the policy of excluding farm workers had been "a gift to the big farm operators," and had worked "directly against the interests of the family size or working farmer."

R. I. Labor Gains Point With Both Parties

Both political parties in Rhode Island have agreed to amend the unemployment compensation and the cash sickness laws to provide for the creation of State Advisory Councils, on which the CIO will be represented by two members.

Councils now function under a personal regulation issued by Chairman Thomas H. Bride, Jr., of the State Unemployment Compensation Board, but organized labor has insisted upon their establishment by law. The Councils, while advisory, have been successful in securing liberalization of both the unemployment compensation and the cash sickness laws.

Pres. Frank J. Benti, of the Rhode Island CIO Council, and Manager Victor J. Canzano of the Greater Providence Joint Board, TWUA, now represent the CIO on the Advisory Council.

Senate Gets Compromise Rule On Talkfest

A HALF-STEP proposal to end Senate talkfests has won 11-2 approval in the upper body's Rules Committee, but there's no indication when it will come up for final vote.

Approved in committee was a plan to extend the two-thirds rule on stopping debate to two types of motions where talk has previously been unlimited:

1. Motions to "consider" a bill —a method by which bills are taken up from the parliamentary table but not actually discussed.

2. Motions to amend the journal of the Senate's proceedings.

Both these types of parliamentary situations have been used in the past by minorities—usually southern Democrats—to hold off action on pending bills to which they are seriously opposed. (The civil rights program has been a prime target of the filibuster or threat of filibuster.)

Both Sen. Morse (R. Ore.) and Sen. Myers (D. Pa.) have argued that the Rules Committee plan doesn't go far enough, since a small minority can often win the 33 votes necessary to forestall the closing of debate.

Morse and Myers argued that if the country can declare war with a majority vote, it should also be able to say "hush" with 49 votes to a southern Democrat.

CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan—in a letter to members of the Rules Committee —argued in support of the majority vote proposal.

He said it would end "unjustifiable filibustering" and said the CIO is "increasingly disturbed by reports of legislative maneuvering" on the issue.

In an obvious reference to the Republicans who supported the two-thirds rule, Cowan asserted that if they had "displayed comparable zeal during the 80th Congress, the Senate rules would have long since been changed."

Sen. Hayden (D. Ariz.), Rules Committee chairman, said the new rule proposal would go to the Senate during the middle of this week. When it will come up for debate has not yet been determined.

$5.4 Billion Is Asked to Aid Europe

THE legislative drive to win quick appropriation of $5.4 billion dollars for ECA activities overseas until June 1950, was put in high gear last week at combined hearings of the Senate and House foreign affairs committees.

Sec. of State Dean Acheson and ECA Administrator Paul Hoffman were on hand to urge continued strong financing of the European Recovery Program as a "must activity."

Acheson recalled that ERP had been undertaken by the American government as a "calculated risk," and the results of its first year of operation prove "that the measure was sound."

Thanks to the effects of Marshall Plan spending, Acheson added, the European people are becoming stronger, their countries and their democracy are becoming stronger all the time.

Hoffman indicated that close cooperation among the European countries to spur recovery will be seriously needed in the coming year.

Europe, he said, has made much progress, but it will have to "tackle the more difficult problem of making major adjustments which break away from its traditional and inadequate ways of paying its way in the world."

Hearings on the appropriation bill are expected to continue during the next few weeks.

T-H Held No Bar To Ad

SIDESTEPPING the constitutionality of the Taft-Hartley ban on political expenditures by unions, a U. S. Court of Appeals in New York City reversed a lower court and ruled that a union's political advertisement in a local newspaper did not constitute a violation of the law.

The ruling by Federal Judge Augustus N. Hand was based on the Supreme Court's handling of a similar case last year involving the National CIO News and CIO Pres. Philip Murray. At that time the High Tribunal held that a plea by Murray published in the CIO News, urging election of Edward Garmatz as a Congressman from Maryland, did not fall within the scope of the law.

The more recent case concerned a Hartford, Conn., local of the AFL Painters. Both the local and its president were fined by a federal district court for using union funds in January 1948 for a political ad in the Hartford Times and a political radio broadcast in New Britain.

In reversing the lower court's conviction, Judge Hand drew a parallel between this and the CIO case, asserting that "in the case at bar this small union owned no newspaper and a publication in the daily press or by radio was as natural a way of communicating its views to its members as by a newspaper of its own."

Question of the constitutionality of the political expenditures ban still remains unresolved.

ANSWER TO HOUSING PROBLEM: UAW Pres. Walter Reuther told the Senate Banking and Currency Committee that he has the answer to the need for homes, which he called "America's No. 1 Peacetime Problem." The answer, he said, is the use of airplane factories for mass production of prefabricated homes. Special tools to make planes would be ready in case of war. This picture shows an assembly line of houses in a re-tooled English airplane factory. (See Page 6)

Phone Union Board Urges CIO Affiliation

THE executive board of the independent Communications Workers of America has taken its first big step toward unification of all telephone workers under the banner of CIO.

Climaxing a week-long meeting in Washington, D. C., the CWA board announced last week that it is recommending affiliation with the CIO to its membership.

Members of the TWOC executive board met last week in Chicago to determine how TWOC could be most helpful in working with CWA to encourage a membership vote favoring CIO affiliation.

The election has attracted wide attention among independent telephone organizations, several of which are now discussing the possibility of coming into CIO simultaneously.

The entire CIO field staff has been instructed by Organizational Director Haywood to render all possible assistance to CWA in the referendum.

The next step will be a referendum of CWA's 230,000 members, to be completed within the next sixty days. Following this, if the membership sustains the board's recommendation, the sequence of moves leading to affiliation will be:

- CIO will grant, upon CWA's request, a charter covering the independent union's present contractual area.
- A joint committee of CWA and the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee representatives will work out a mutually satisfactory arrangement for amalgamation of the two groups. (TWOC now numbers 80,000 members.)
- The CWA will hold its third annual convention in June in Chicago.
- Finally, there will be a joint CWA-TWOC constitutional convention, out of which will emerge a single autonomous international union in the telephone field.

JOSEPH BEIRNE
Announces CWA Move

Haywood Hails Move

The CWA announcement was immediately hailed with enthusiasm by CIO Vice President and Organizational Director Allan S. Haywood. In a letter to CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne, he wrote:

"The Congress of Industrial Organizations is gratified by the recommendation made by you and the other members of your executive board to the Communications Workers of America that the CWA affiliate with the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

"We strongly feel that members of the Communications Workers of America will be able to greatly enhance their bargaining position with the powerful American Telephone & Telegraph Co. when it has affiliated with the CIO and has earnest, devoted support of all CIO members and officials behind it.

"Please convey my thanks to the members of your Board for their decision. . . . And please let me know if I can be of any help to you in coming weeks."

Many Conferences

If the CWA membership approves affiliation, it will end a long series of moves among telephone workers which began in December 1945.

At that time, the Natl. Federation of Telephone Workers (which later became CWA) held a Presidents' Conference in Milwaukee, Wis., at which a committee was set up to explore the possibilities of affiliation with some parent body.

Throughout the early months of 1946, the four-man committee met several times — but separately — with the AFL's late organizing director, Frank Fenton, CIO's Pres. Murray and Haywood, and with the United Mine Workers' Pres. John L. Lewis.

Even at that early date, the CIO's offer of an industrial union with full autonomy within the CIO appealed to the committee. In contrast, the AFL offered Class B membership within the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD
Welcomes CWA Move

The committee reported in April. Although it did not directly recommend affiliation with CIO, the inference was clear that CIO was its choice.

The report ruled out the alternatives of remaining a "loosely-knit federated group as presently constituted" or of remaining independent, though reorganized.

There remained only the alternatives of affiliation to CIO or AFL. In the AFL, the phone union would have been transferred to the Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Of that union the report declared:

"The committee has reviewed the Constitution of the IBEW and has found that the voting procedure outlined therein is undemocratic and detrimental to the interest of the telephone workers."

On the other hand, said the report ". . . the CIO gave assurances that should the NFTW determine to affiliate with that organization, they would be accorded full international status immediately."

Strike In 1947

Little was done to implement the committee's findings in the year that followed. But a year after the report was issued—in April 1947—the telephone unions went on a seven-week strike. Disjointed as they were, the unions went back to work with little accomplished.

This served as a last straw to many NFTWers. Groups of telephone workers then petitioned the CIO—which had given considerable assistance to the strikers—to form an organizing committee for telephone workers—a step that was taken the month after the strike ended.

That was 20 months ago.

Today telephone workers, who have long envisioned one big, strong union to cope with the world's largest corporation, believe the achievement of that dream is very near.

"Telephone workers," as Haywood put it, "have learned that isolationism and unionism don't go together."

Steel Union Calls:

Basing Points, F.O.B. Both Toll on Consumer

THE CIO United Steelworkers has denounced the use by the steel industry of rigid "basing point" of pricing system as well as the strict f. o. b. system now in operation.

Instead, in testimony before the Fair Trade Practices Subcommittee of the Senate Interstate Commerce Commission, the union urged a moderate method under which individual companies could set up their own pricing systems, including such freight absorption as is necessary to meet competition.

The testimony, prepared for delivery for the Union by its Director of Research, Otis Brubaker, was given in opposition to a bill sponsored by Sen. Edwin Johnson (D., Colo.), chairman of both the Committee and Subcommittee. The Johnson Bill is intended to amend both the Federal Trade Commission Act and the Clayton Anti-Trust Act under which the Supreme Court ruled that basing points are illegal in the cement industry.

Brubaker said basing points are derived from the steel industry's old "Pittsburgh Plus" system which was declared illegal. "The substitute was a watered down multiple basing point system," he declared. "Both systems involved delivered prices based on Pittsburgh or on some other base point which did not necessarily coincide with the place of manufacture.

Analyzes Both Systems

"'Phantom freight' was involved in both systems. That type of freight occurred when producing plants were located closer to the steel consumer than was the nearest basing point or where there was an averaging of freight charges at switching points, or where other than all rail transportation was used.

"Both systems also used 'freight absorption' to enable companies to reach markets outside of the areas where they enjoyed a 'natural' freight advantage.

"Both systems resulted in varying 'mill net' returns to the seller which bore no necessary relationship to cost differences or to the distance of the buyer from the plant." ("Mill net" means "delivered" price less freight.)

Brubaker asserted the "existence of these delivered price systems depended on their common acceptance by all producers, on the use of freight tables prepared by the industry association, and on the threat of retaliation against companies who stepped out of line."

"After the Supreme Court ruling in the cement case, the steel industry switched over to a strict f. o. b. mill system," Brubaker said, "even though it was not under either a court or FTC decision to make such a change." (U. S. Steel Corporation is also a leading cement producer and that part of its activties was covered by the court ruling.)

Brubaker noted that when the switchover was made, the industry did not extract from its prices the amount which had been added to care for freight absorption.

The union representative urged the committee to "leave the FTC free to continue to try to find a middle ground betweeen the economic license so common to the use of basing point pricing and the straitjacket of f. o. b. mill pricing."

Brubaker declared "as a result of the industry's administered price system, the Government and the consuming public have consistently paid higher prices for steel than competitive pricing would have warranted.

Production Held Down

"Any system which permits artficial pegging of prices prevents, in part, at least, the development of industrial capacity and the achievement of the levels of production otherwise possible.

"It is for this reason that the union has urged on the Government that it break this vicious cycle by making loans or by Government steel plant construction, if necessary."

Brubaker said "it has been suggested by the Secretary of Commerce that the proper approach to this problem is to try to prohibit those forms of freight absorption which promote undesirable cross-hauling and undesirable uniformity of prices; and, at the same time, to permit freight absorption to the extent to encourage competition and avoid unnecessary differentials as between customers.

"We agree with these goals. We think, however, that they are the goals of both the FTC and Congress. We do not believe, moreover, that any such formula can be written into law. It must be worked out by an administrative agency."

Brubaker turned to the subject of competition. "A formalized system such as the basing point system, which is aimed at producing identical prices at all times, for all producers, at any given point," he said, "is price-fixing and not competition. It strains the credulity of the average literate citizen to call it anything else.

Competition Hampered

"We have not had effective price competition in recent years in many of our basic industries, as is indicated in the excessive profit figures and high rates of return on investment shown by many of these industries. These profits represent on indefensible toll levied against the consumer.

"We begrudge no company a fair return on its investment. No businessman, in our opinion, however, can reasonably defend a return on net worth which, for most industries, is now running between 15% and 25% annually."

What's all the shouting about? Brubaker said "it is our contention that the hullabaloo which has raged over basing point pricing is largely artificially created by those who would like to see a legal whitewash of their highly questionable pricing policies. Some segments of the steel industry may have really believed that the court's decision required a changeover to a strict f. o. b. mill basis without any freight absorption—though this is difficult to believe.

Man-Made Confusion

"It is quite apparent to us, however, that others in the industry were attempting to create enough 'confusion' and 'doubt' about the FTC and court decisions and enough opposition to their supposed requirements that Congress would 'clarify' the laws so as to make the industry's price system legal.

"If the industry, in its method of changing over to f. o. b. mill, had been willing to make a fair switch to f. o. b., it would have reduced its former base prices to exclude the average net freight absorption factor (about $1 a ton)."

The Steelworkers' recommendation:

"The Union strongly urges that the subcommittee table this legislation and let the FTC get on with the job of trying to combat cleverly disguised price-fixing schemes in order that we may achieve a greater degree of competition and build a price climate in the United States in which small business as well as large can survive.

"We are certain that with due diligence and latitude of action, the commission can find a desirable middle ground. This proposed legislation would neither establish such a middle ground nor would it leave the commission the needed authority to do so."

Murray: 'I Have Given Much Thought'

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

PHILIP MURRAY, speaking for the millions of Americans who voted for a Fair Deal in November, has called on Congress to stop dilly-dallying and pass the Thomas Bill.

In a sharply worded letter to Chm. Elbert Thomas (D., Utah) of the Senate Labor Committee, the CIO president assailed the press of America for continuing to carry out the long—disproven fiction that labor wants the Taft-Hartley Law.

Writing from the hospital bedroom in Pittsburgh where he is recuperating from an emergency appendectomy, Murray declared:

"If the Thomas Bill fails of passage, or is crippled by amendment, it will bring home to millions of Americans that the ghost of the 80th Congress still rules the 81st and that their votes for a better America were in vain."

He was particularly indignant over the tactics of Sen. Taft, co-author of T-H. He accused Taft and his followers of using the same specious tactics that they had used in gaining passage of T-H—taking a single, isolated instance of something labor had done wrong and blowing it up out of all proportion to make it look as if that were common practice.

BUT EVEN Taft himself, Murray declared, has had to admit that his law has been proven wrong in 18 instances. Murray enumerated Taft's admissions of guilt instances taken directly from the transcript of the Senate Committee's hearings, which entered their third week this week.

Murray noted that Congress has been in session some 50 days and that not one of the major social objectives of the Fair Deal has been passed. "S-249—the Thomas Bill—is not just another law," Murray asserted. Rather, he said, it is the keystone of the entire social legislative program.

He said that America is at a "momentous crossroad" as a result of Taft and his followers.

Murray reiterated that the carefully documented testimony, offered in the name of CIO by General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, is still what the CIO wants—repeal of Taft-Hartley, and enactment of the Thomas Bill, with a few small technical changes.

AS THE hearings droned on last week. It was apparent that Murray's deep concern was based on a firm foundation.

Taft continued to act as if this were a comedy drama and not a bill affecting the economic lives of millions of Americans.

Taft sneered at labor witnesses, giggled over his surface observations, kept pulling out the same isolated cases he had used in 1947, made inaudible wise cracks across the table to Sen. Donnell—who of course didn't get them.

In reading the press of America, you would have thought that Taft was the only member of the committee. He could do no wrong in the eyes of the press, which is grateful to him because his law has been used to attack the AFL Typographical Union.

Ignored were the many times opponents of Taftism scored major points against him. Ignored was the result of the November election.

Here are the outstanding T-H repeal events of last week:

1. AFL Pres. Green, irritated by an exhaustive, apparently meaningless, cross-examination by "I'm - from - Missouri-and-I-Want to-Know" Sen. Donnell, snapped back:

"We want T-H repealed, from beginning to end—period! There isn't a good section in it!"

That was so clear that even Donnell caught on without further questions. "I get your point," he said, meekly.

Green, who'll be 76 next month, was kept on the stand for nine hours.

2. An employer urged the committee to legalize the closed shop—outlawed by T-H—in order

Fred Hartley's a "union" man now.

Only he's in a "union" which is not a union.

The co-founder of the Taft-Hartley Law did not run for re-election to Congress, thereby saving himself from disastrous defeat. Last week, Hartley popped up in Washington again.

He's a lobbyist for the Tool Owners' Union.

In 1947, the New York State Labor Dept.'s Board of Standards and Appeals—which is appointed by none other than Gov. Thomas E. Dewey—turned down an appeal from the Tool Owners for incorporation, stating that the TOU was "Fascist in form."

Hartley is president of TOU.

Officers', Board Meets Delayed

The meeting of the CIO executive officers and vice presidents and that of the Executive Board have been postponed indefinitely.

The postponement has been set to allow Pres. Philip Murray more time to recuperate from his recent operation for appendicitis. Reports from Pittsburgh say Murray is in good condition, but his doctors wish him to recuperate fully.

Murray's Letter

Partial Text of Letter to Sen. Elbert Thomas (D., Utah):

During the past few days, while recuperating from an operation in a hospital here in Pittsburgh, I have given much thought to the hearings on S. 249, your bill to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act and to restore the Wagner Act with certain amendments.

I have read the transcript of the testimony and followed carefully the accounts in the press.

I should like at this time to convey to you, for inclusion in the record of the hearings, my views.

1. The Congress has been in session some 50 days. Not a single one of the sorely needed measures constituting the Fair Deal program has been enacted or even reached the floor.

In my view the Thomas bill is the keystone of the entire program of the Administration. Millions of Americans who voted made it clear they want a fair and equitable labor statute substituted for the oppressive Taft-Hartley Act. No amount of statistical juggling by columnists or pollsters can obscure the basic fact that both the Republican and Democratic parties made the T-H Act the principal issue. This Act is the most important single product of the 80th Congress. It is part of a program of reaction and privilege which extends to the entire social welfare field.

S-249 is not just another law. T-H was part of the process which resulted in wiping out price control, weakening rent control, and formulating a tax program which shifts the tax burden of America from its well-to-do to its working people.

The Thomas bill marks a momentous cross-road in our national life. If the bill fails of passage or is saddled with crippling amendments it will bring home to millions of Americans that the ghost of the 80th Congress still rules the 81st and that their votes for a better America were in vain.

2. Those who are determined to save the Taft-Hartley Act repeatedly claim that labor has no basic objection to the Act and that it cannot document its case against the Act. I have with some amazement read this same charge in numbers of newspaper editorials.

A charge of this kind is completely without foundation. The records of your committee abound with specific and highly detailed accounts by representatives of labor of the manner in which the operation of the Act has been disastrous to the functioning of free labor unions.

The CIO, through its general counsel, Arthur J. Goldberg, submitted to the committee a statement of some 112 pages, as well as a 56-page appendix, and oral testimony elaborating the specific ways in which the law has violated accepted standards of soundness and decency of labor relations. I wholeheartedly endorse and reaffirm the testimony of General Counsel Goldberg before your committee.

Most newspapers, however, prefer to ignore this uncontradicted evidence against the Act and maintain the fiction that objection to this law is somehow mystical and irrational.

Those who seek to justify the Act have no use for facts. They prefer instead the partisan theorizing of employer lobbyists masquerading as impartial "experts."

The apologists for T-H prefer most of all to justify legislation affecting millions and millions of Americans upon the basis of an isolated and unrepresentative "horrible" example carefully dressed up and repeatedly trotted out to confuse and frighten the unwary.

T-H was itself passed through the use of this clever technique; the same technique has been revived. The shocking boycott provisions of the Act are again justified by vague references to extreme situations which are not remotely typical of the boycotts in which workers normally engage.

I do not know of any field of legislation outside of the labor field, where Congress would dare abridge the rights of millions of Americans on the basis of isolated and unrepresentative abuses. Sen. Taft would be outraged if the same technique were used to justify legislation invading employers' rights.

3. I think it clear from even a casual reading of the hearing that both the charge that T-H cannot be demonstrated to be unfair and the technique of the horrible example have exploded in the faces of the defenders of T-H.

In the record of the hearings, Taft has made a long list of concessions and retreats with respect to the specific provisions of the T-H Act and their operation in practice. These are some of his own repudiations of important provisions of his own law:

(1) He has repeatedly conceded that the provision permitting strikebreakers to vote in elections but denying that right to strikers is one-sided and is a strikebreaking provision.

(2) He has conceded that even under his own theories some boycotts are justifiable and that T-H goes too far in this regard.

(3) He has conceded that the provisions of the law which make it mandatory to obtain injunctions against unions but not against employers are one-sided and should be eliminated. This would presumably mean the elimination also of the correlative provisions providing for damage suits where such injunctions lie.

(4) The closed shop prohibition apparently no longer seems to Taft to be a vital provision in the law. He appears willing to scrap it.

(5) Taft has admitted that the notice provisions of the law are poorly drafted and create difficulty and confusion in connection with wage reopening clauses.

(6) Likewise he has recognized that the penalties which may be imposed upon unions and their members for violations of the notice provision are excessive.

(7) He has expressed the view that the affidavit provisions are improperly drafted.

(8) Taft has indicated his disagreement with the formu-

To Congress

Industry, particularly General Electric through use of its questionnaire, is moving heaven and earth to lure Congress to its side in the fight over the Taft-Hartley Act. Considerable mail from these sources is pouring into Washington.

At the same time, it is anticipated that thousands of CIO members, through use of personal letters, shop resolutions, and other communications, will ask their Congressmen to adhere to the results of the November election and actively join the fight to repeal Taft-Hartley and enact the Thomas Bill.

Silly Questions Silly Answers

"Have you stopped beating your wife?" "Do you still believe the capital of the United States should be moved to Moscow?" "Is your sister still as homely as she used to be?"

Sensible people know you can't safely answer loaded questions like these. No matter how you answer 'em, you're stuck.

But the General Electric Co. apparently is underestimating the good sense of the members of the 81st Congress. The big firm distributed thousands of sheets filled with loaded questions about Taft-Hartley—and asked the public to send the replies to Congress.

A good many of these questionnaires have descended upon the offices of Congressmen. Rep. John McSweeney (D., Ohio) tabulated 46 replies (only a very few of them from workers). His figures show the loaded questions are producing the loaded answers that General Electric wants in defense of T-H.

But we don't think GE's "poll" shows the public's attitude on T-H any more than Mr. Roper, Mr. Gallup and Mr. Crossley show the public's sentiment in the November elections. In fact, we think the same people who confused the pollsters in November are getting ready to let Congress know they want T-H repealed—and quick.

GOOD NEWS FOR BELL EMPLOYES We don't think the Bell telephone system will like the decision of the Communications Workers of America—an independent union—to poll its members on affiliation with the CIO.

The Bell System's labor policy has always been based on the principle of "divide and rule." It established a series of company-dominated unions designed so far as human ingenuity could plan, to keep the workers divided.

The Communications Workers of America, and the CIO's own Telephone Workers Organization Committee, have made significant strides in breaking down that pattern imposed by the Bell System. The decision of the CWA board to recommend affiliation with the CIO shows that union has realized that isolationism in the labor movement simply does not pay.

Through affiliation with CIO, CWA will find new strength to win better conditions for the hundreds of thousands of telephone employes throughout the nation. We predict that CWA members will say "aye" to joining the CIO.

TOO LITTLE & TOO LATE The American Medical Association, frightened by the public reaction to its campaign against health insurance, has come forth with what Columnist Marquis Childs calls "an eleventh hour death-bed conversion."

We agree with Childs that "the sincerity and intention of the AMA will be questioned." This is particularly so in light of the fact that the AMA house of delegates indorsed the Natl. Physicians Committee, whose type of lobbying and pressure is far from American. The Committee has been sending letters to ministers addressed to "Dear Christian American."

The AMA proposal, sugar-coated as a quack's pill, omits the entire keystone of the plan which labor backs—health insurance to guarantee that no one in America shall suffer from lack of adequate medical care.

The public will not be satisfied with quickie-quackie substitutes for a real health-insurance program.

It Will Take More Than Dollars

Social and Economic Reforms Are Necessary If Reds Are To Be Beaten

By ALLAN L. SWIM

AMERICANS who believe that Communism can be beaten into obscurity with production machinery or with dollar bills should visit Europe.

There they would soon learn (as I did) that economic aid alone will not solve some of the perplexing problems confronting the Continent.

A good place to learn such a lesson quickly is in Italy, where the extremely rich live luxuriously in mansions and some of the extremely poor actually live in caves.

In Italy they would find a bad social-economical-political mess created largely by years of fascism followed by war.

A skilled worker in an auto plant is lucky if he can buy a good bicycle. Small radios are considered an extreme luxury by the workmen who make and assemble them.

There are idle, ill-fed, ill-clothed farm workers living near fertile land which has been set aside as hunting preserves by those who live to shoot.

The distance between the top and bottom of the Italian economic heap is tremendous.

And such a condition provides the Communists with the type of material with which they can work effectively.

THE U. S. probably could pour money, machinery and technical knowledge into Italy for years without making any real gain on the ideological front.

Money, machines and knowledge are necessary to keep Italy out of bankruptcy, but they alone will not do the job.

Responsible leaders of the European Recovery Program admit this quite frankly. So do other U. S. officials who are on the scene.

Doing something about it poses great difficulties, however. The U. S. is engaged in an economic relief and rehabilitation program. It can make suggestions. It can use its influence to get certain things done.

But the job of social and economic reform is one which the Italian government must tackle. It has done very little on this score to date.

IT is easy to understand how the Communists were able to obtain a great measure of influence over Italian workers.

There was no real freedom in Italy for many years—while Mussolini was in the saddle. Then came the devastation of war. This was followed by a large measure of poverty.

"You're no better off now than you were under Mussolini," the Commies tell the workers. "When we gain control we'll cut the big farms up into small ones and we'll redistribute the wealth."

That kind of talk goes over big with men and women who have shrunken bellies.

THE trade unions might easily determine the ideological future of Italy (and much of the remainder of Europe) and the Communists are the dominant force in the Italian labor movement.

The Commies are unified. They have a program. They never miss an opportunity to capitalize on the weaknesses of the Italian economic system. They are attempting to sabotage the ERP through their "non-collaboration" program.

The non-Communist union groups are not unified. They sometimes work at cross purposes. They have very little money. They, perhaps, have too many programs.

The right-wing groups apparently are gaining strength, but they—like the Italian government—have not come forth with dynamic proposals or acts which capture the imagination and support of a large segment of the population.

ONE of the most encouraging things about the U. S. program in Europe is the number of government representatives who state bluntly—and with increasing frequency—that the standard of living of poorly paid workers must be improved considerably and as quickly as possible if ERP is to be a success.

A man in a high diplomatic post put it this way:

"I think I'm a practical realist. The realities of the situation are that there must be considerable economic and social reform in Europe or the Communists will move in when we move out."

He now knows that dollars and production machinery alone will not do the job.

Even Kaltenborn Likes CIO Quiz Show!

YOU CAN count on your fingers the number of times in recent years that radio commentator H. V. Kaltenborn has given labor any sort of pat on the back.

But he did so—though reluctantly—on Feb. 2, in a discussion of the comparative merits of the CIO and NAM radio shows. The two programs are heard Tuesday nights at 10:30 P.M. and 10:45 EST over the ABC network.

Kaltenborn lamented that the NAM show was "so dull and stodgy that my wife made me turn it off," while the CIO's quiz program—"It's In the Family" was "lively and well presented."

HERE'S WHAT Kaltenborn had to say in his broadcast:

"Last night I listened to two radio programs. They were supposed to provide that balance of opinion which radio stations try to achieve, without always succeeding.

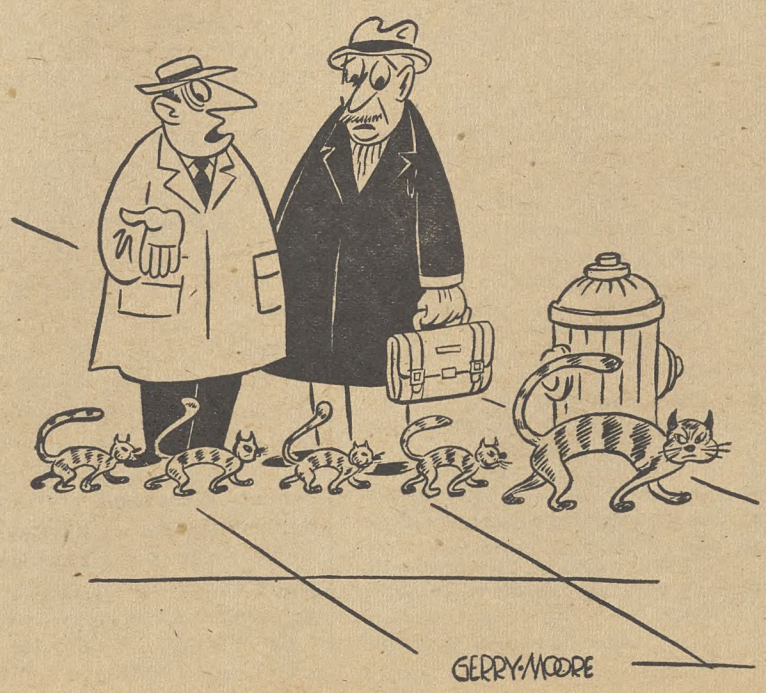
"The first was sponsored by the CIO. The second was sponsored by (Natl.) Manufacturers Association.

"The labor union program was a lively, well-presented, well-organized quiz show. Some of the questions were loaded in order to put over CIO ideas. (No they're not, Mr. K.) But it was an amusing fast-moving show with lots of human interest. And most people probably didn't catch what the union was trying to put over in the way it phrased its questions.

"THE 15 minutes that followed were intended to give management a chance to present its side of the labor relations story. It began with an attempt to define the meaning of the word 'capital.'

"But the presentation was so dull and stodgy that my wife made me turn it off, which showed me once more that American industry has a long way to go before it can equal labor unions—particularly the CIO—in telling its story to the public..."

Thank you, Mr. Kaltenborn!



"Even the animals are organized in this district."

Ghost Revived As Labor-Hater Laid Low

THIS IS a story of how a labor-hating, union-busting ghost was laid, and how a labor editor had a major role in the funeral arrangements.

The ghost was "Steve Hamlin," a revived ghost byline that now was being used to peddle anti-union and anti-labor propaganda through the Minnesota Editorial Association.

Hiding behind the fictitious byline were a group of Republican members of the Minnesota legislature, who squirmed when asked to reveal themselves, and then piously denied they had anything to do with the Steve Hamlin tirades.

BUT LOU PARLIN, political writer for St. Paul Dispatch and Pioneer Press, has named two as admitting to him they were involved. One, in addition to being a legislator, is a news commentator for WCCO, CBS outlet here.

The Steve Hamlin byline had been invented some years ago by Jay Vessels, former AP and newspaper writer who wrote legislative sidelights as a sideline. It was a chatty column to which no one raised serious objection. The column was dropped when Vessels left to be a war correspondent. On his return he did not revive the Hamlin byline.

BUT BEFORE the 1949 state legislature was convened, a group of Republican legislators (conservatives they're called in the nonpartisan legislature) called on the editorial association to ask distribution of a weekly column about the legislature.

Explained the GOP delegation: A fellow, Steve Hamlin, was to write the column and they wanted to have some fun with some harmless brickbats at labor, and that Steve Hamlin was a dead ghost.

The Minnesota Editorial Association has some 450 members—dailies and weeklies. Minneapolis Labor, state CIO paper, also is a member. MEA sends a weekly news package to members—mats, blurbs from press agents, state and university releases, and so on.

STEVE HAMLIN'S stuff started out harmlessly enough, but soon labor and unions were his targets. Emil J. Krieg, Minnesota Labor editor who succeeded Jerry Love, was irked by the Hamlin pieces, and went into action over an artful and snide piece that planted the idea that national treasuries of various unions amounting to "several hundred million dollars" were open to "the biggest, most active group of lobbyists" at the legislature.

Labor bosses, Hamlin wrote, were thus going to buy or coerce their legislative program down the throats of the legislators.

KRIEG, a former Twin Cities Guild president, called on the MEA to protest, and learned bills for servicing the Hamlin propaganda were sent to a St. Paul postoffice box. No one remembered who signed the checks.

Krieg checked some more and did some phoning. Meantime, other protests were rolling into the MEA office. The Hamlin material was read again, and the association announced the stuff no longer would be sent out by MEA.

So currently Steve Hamlin has been buried again. There were no flowers.

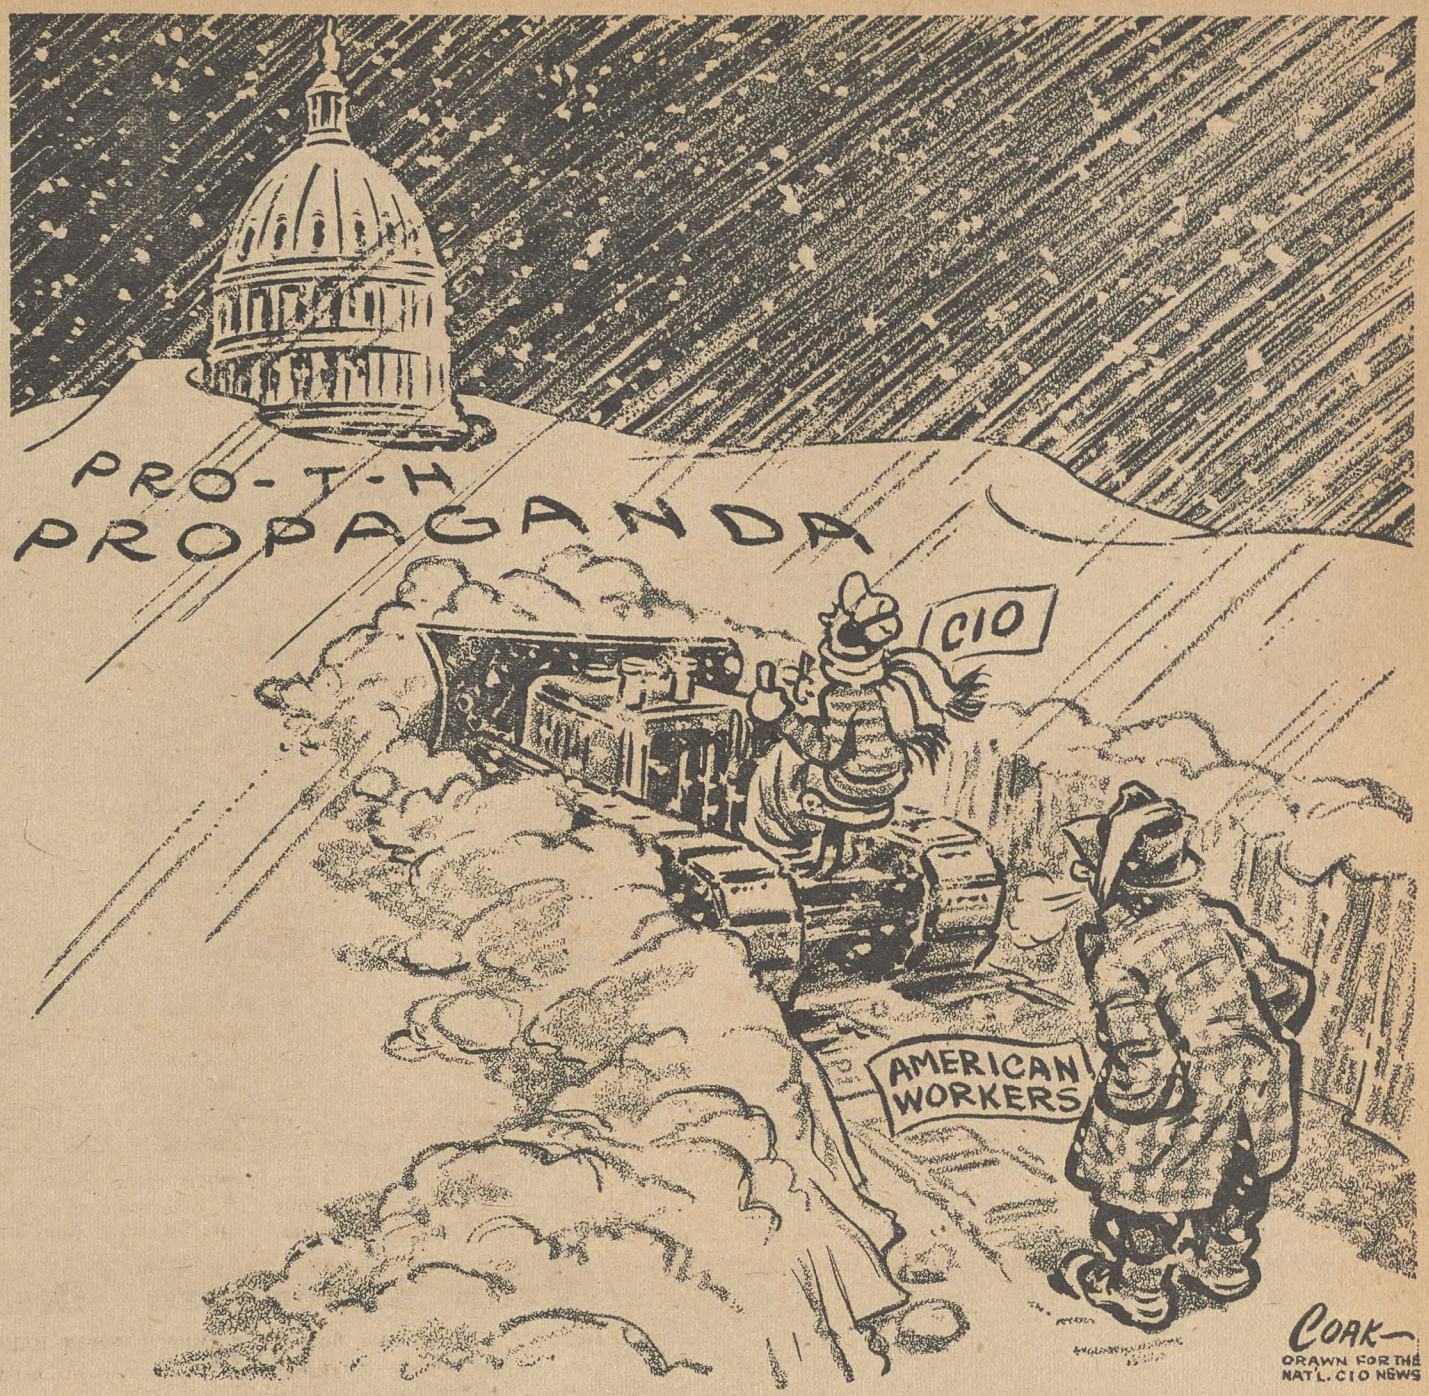
CLEARING AWAY THE SNOW



Impartial Committee Finds Smear Put on Dr. Condon

SUPPOSE you were to wake up tomorrow morning, get the morning paper, and read in screaming headlines that you are considered by a Congressional Committee as a menace to the security of these United States.

You'd be hopping mad. You'd call the the papers and deny the charges. You'd ask for proof.

You'd ask for a public hearing to hear the evidence against you—in order that you could answer the charges.

And chances are you wouldn't get such a hearing.

That's been the experience of Dr. Edward U. Condon, director of the U. S. Bureau of Standards (one of the government's top scientific research agencies). He's a man of high professional reputation, served the government in a variety of important posts during the war—and he's been subjected to a smear campaign that you'd say off-hand "can't happen here."

But it did happen here—and it's had many Congressmen, supporters of civil rights and many of the country's most prominent scientists hopping mad for months.

THE SCIENTISTS decided to do something about it—to measure impartially, almost scientifically, the harm done to Dr. Condon by the House Committee on un-American Activities' charge that Condon was "the weakest link in our atomic security chain."

Six leading scientists hired an impartial agency—Columbia University's Bureau of Applied Research—to study the handling of the Condon story by the New York metropolitan newspapers. What the survey found bears out the old adage that a lie in print can outrun and outlast a denial.

No Hearing Yet

The statement charging Dr. Edward U. Condon—director of the U. S. Bureau of Standards—with being the "weakest link in our national atomic security chain" was made by members of the House Un-American Activities Committee during the 80th Congress.

Condon immediately asked for a hearing to prove himself innocent of the charges; and voluntarily removed himself from every phase of atomic energy work until he was later cleared by the Atomic Energy Commission.

The Un-American Activities Committee kept stalling on Condon's demand for hearings during the 80th Congress. Last week Rep. John Wood (D., Ga.), new head of the group, said he wouldn't call a hearing for Condon unless the scientist filed a new request. To which Condon indicated he had already made all the requests he intends to.

Here's what the Columbia University bureau discovered:

• Statements by members of the House Committee on un-American Activities were "virtually the only source" of news stories criticizing Dr. Condon.

"These reckless assertions, carrying the weight of Congressional authority, received not only wide but repeated publication," the survey found. "No less than 57% of the derogatory material appearing in the news columns consisted in mere repetition of the Committee's baseless charges."

• The case for Dr. Condon was less well reported in the papers, though scores of "responsible individuals and agencies, including the Office of the President," came to his defense.

"THE SMEAR stuck, as is indicated by the continued high ratio of derogatory statements attached to Dr. Condon's name long after his clearance by the Atomic Energy Commission," the report noted.

The six scientists who sponsored the survey are leading members of the faculties of Massachusetts Tech, Columbia, University of Chicago, California Tech and Carnegie Institute.

In a letter to the President of the U. S. Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, they recall that many citizens have been subjected to "trial by newspaper."

The findings of the survey, they add, show the hazard to a man's reputation "when a Committee of Congress fails to observe the elementary rules of fair play which protect his rights in all other procedures under our common law system of justice."

The Condon case, they added, shows "the need for reform in the conduct of Congressional investigations in order to prevent, at least to some extent, the recurrence of such wrongs as this."

Reuther Gives The Nation Plan For 20 Million Homes

BY GLORIA CAPLAN

HISTORY books are full of those little epoch-making "he-who-laughs-last" episodes.

They laughed when Henry Ford talked about mass-produced automobiles, and at Robert Fulton when he talked about his steamboat.

They laughed in 1940 when Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers proposed a plan for conversion of the auto industry to war planes production.

And last week, Reuther, now UAW president and head of the CIO Housing Committee, warned that those same die-hard victims of "status quo-itis" would be laughing again—this time at the second big Reuther plan.

Walter Reuther was right. Within 24 hours after the newspapers had the story of his unorthodox proposals for mass production of low-cost homes in plane factories, the "apostles of business as usual" had got their sneers in print.

"Homes for People, Jobs for Prosperity and Planes for Peace" is the giant objective: 20 million high-quality homes costing $6,000 each in 10 years; 1 million new jobs; and, for immediate conversion to maximum production of planes in case of emergency — reserve production facilities and trained manpower all set to go.

Lobbyists At Work

LIKE A blockbuster dropped over Times Square on New Year's Eve, the Reuther blueprint for solving the housing crisis was released just when Washington was swarming with members of the American Association of Property Owners. They had come to testify and lobby against rent control and public housing bills.

Also filling Congressional hallways and offices at the time was another bunch of special pleaders—aircraft industry representatives intent on getting Congressional approval for a 70-group air force.

Reuther spoke of the "utter failure of the private building industry to make modern, decent, low-cost shelter available to the average family." He called the federally-subsidized aircraft industry a "public ward." So the Reuther proposals didn't appeal too much to the two groups mentioned above.

But for the 20 million moderate and low-income families to whom the plan could mean sorely-needed homes, it offered hope.

When you read the 26-page, simply-written pamphlet explaining the plan, you toss out of your mind the picture of antiquated building methods such as we use today—and have used for many scores of years.

The Reuther idea is to take the construction of houses out of the horse and buggy era, from which it has never progressed very far, bring it up to the Twentieth Century by applying our modern skills, research, new materials and abundant, ready production capacity.

The very magnitude of the plan offers a liberal education in some economic facts of life not generally known.

- Over the past quarter of a century, the construction industry has averaged no better than 500,000 non-farm homes a year.
- Balanced against this is a snowballing need: 500,000 new families are created each year; there are 7½ million slum dwellings "that ought to be torn down"; some 15 million non-farm homes are over 35 years old.

On the other hand, a great part of the aircraft industry's facilities is lying idle—21,200,000 square feet of plant space held in idle reserve. Valuable basic machinery, which can be used for home production as well as planes, is wasting away in War Assets Administration warehouses.

And only 20% of the workers engaged by the industry during the war are now employed by the industry.

Heart Of Plan

Making use of these idle plants, machines and workers, Reuther offers this plan:

1. "An operating airframe plant making pre-fabricated homes is only one engineering step away from mass production of transport planes, bombers, and fighters." Basic general-purpose machines, 65,000 of which are being purchased now by the government and are lying in storage awaiting an emergency, can be used for peacetime homes production.
2. By a "relatively simple" tooling-up process—such as the auto industry uses to turn out new models—this machinery can be used to turn out houses, and can be quickly converted when necessary for airplane production.
3. Mass production of war planes today is impractical, because "today's super-bombers are tomorrow's Model T's." The aircraft industry is lobbying for a Congressional handout in the form of a huge 70-group air force.

Reuther recommends that the money and floorspace now earmarked for finished plane production be cut back, and that money and facilities be used instead for design and engineering on new prototypes.

"Tomorrow's war, if it comes, will be won by today's effective capacity quickly mobilized, not yesterday's output," which in a year becomes obsolete.

4. The vast idle shipyards can also be used for homes-and-ships production.
5. It CAN be done. The basic engineering work for such a plan has already been completed by two big aircraft manufacturers—Douglas and Consolidated-Vultee. The projects were abandoned because of the expense. The Dravo shipbuilding corporation is today producing homes under such a plan in Wilmington, Del.

Plan's Operation

Visionary? Well, let's see how the plan would be put in operation:

The President would appoint a National Housing Committee, composed of representatives of the Armed Services, the Natl. Resources Planning Board, government housing agencies, WAA, the Congressional Banking Committees, the Air Policy Commission, organized labor and the construction industry.

This committee would lay the ground work. It would make an inventory of national housing needs and of surplus government-owned floor space and machinery available for homes production.

It would establish a research agency which would develop new housing materials, improved production methods and best ways of using existing materials.

It would use the most advanced architectural know-how to design low-cost, high-quality houses with a maximum variation in floor plans and appearance. (This would scotch one complaint that pre-fabricated houses would be all alike.)

Business Encouraged

At all times the government would stress the participation of private enterprise, which would be encouraged to operate both the manufacturing and distribution ends itself. This would be done through long-range, low-interest federal loans. Where private industry refuses to accept the responsibility, the government would operate the manufacuring facilities.

The new houses would be bought from or rented by private distributing agencies; co-operative housing groups; or federal, state and local housing authorities.

But the two questions that always crop up in housing discussions, will also crop up here: What of the shortage of materials and what of local building codes? Reuther offers an answer to that, too.

In the first place, competent research will produce new materials, just as substitutes for scarce materials were developed in wartime. Meanwhile, however, a system of priorities for materials will be instituted, placing housing needs second only to national defense requirements. Thus materials which might otherwise have gone into new bowling alleys or night clubs will instead go into homes.

In addition, the government would go into the production of such materials as steel or aluminum if industry continues its refusal to expand capacity.

The National Housing Authority would cooperate with local housing agencies and planning commissions to revise outmoded and restrictive building codes.

And then there will be that familiar, agonized cry: "Where's the money coming from?"

The answer is the federal government, because no other agency is big such an und government c limping aircra ing industries head, it can the country's time need—h

Newspaper Calls Proposal 'Contribution To Victory'

There were many who didn't laugh at the Reuther home-and-planes plan—and the crusading St. Louis Post-Dispatch was one of them. Here is that paper's Feb. 15 editorial on the plan:

Once again Walter Reuther of the United Automobile Workers deserves bouquets for contributing a brilliant idea to the national welfare. His plan for turning the automobile plants of the United States into the arsenals of democracy was discounted by those who do not like to give credit to labor sources, yet it was a contribution to victory, no matter what weakness of detail it may have embraced.

There may be similar "bugs" in his new proposal to use the airplane plants of America to turn out prefabricated housing, thus meeting an urgent national need while keeping the plants intact and their workers together for speedy change-over to the building of fighters and bombers should that again become necessary.

"We would stamp out whole bathrooms and kitchens just as we do auto bodies," says Reuther—and he talks as a man with know-how. He has also made a thoughtful suggestion for financing the process. This is more than a make-work cure for unemployment. It is the sort of dynamic thinking that keeps a free country going places.

Instead of sticking to an antiquated building industry, it is to be hoped that capital, labor and government take up the Reuther suggestion and make it work.

See in a Quick Glance How Reuther Plan Works

Here is how Reuther's one-package approach to homes, planes and jobs would work:

- Use the now-idle airplane plants and basic machinery for mass production of houses.
- Do this by the same method the auto industry converts from one model to another each year. The basic machinery for production of planes and houses is the same. Add to that machinery special tools for houses, and satisfy a peacetime need. Have on hand other special tools for planes, and you satisfy a wartime need.
- While part of the plant space is being used for houses, other parts will be used for research and experiments in new types of planes.
- The workers will take a refresher course periodically in order to keep their plane-making skills intact.

JOHN E. OWENS

Owens, who is president of the Natl. Apartment Owners Association, claimed at House hearings that "rent control is actually confiscation of property and a mockery of personal dignity."

Have You Given Your PAC Dollar?

Anti-Rent Story Bounces When Rep. Huber Probes

Anti-rent control propaganda took a shellacking from this story uncovered by Rep. Walter Huber (D., O.).

Huber had received a complaint from one of his constituents who described herself as a widow and victim of rent controls. For the past seven years, she said, she had received only $18 a month rent on her house which, because of increased costs, should have brought in $35. She claimed she had been repeatedly denied an increase by the area rent director.

On investigation, the area rent director learned that Mrs. Anna Ward was indeed a widow. But there the facts and the letter parted company.

There's no record of her ever having owned a piece of property in the county; there's no record of her ever having asked for a rent increase. And to top it off, the rent director learned, she is the domestic employe of Dr. C. F. Wharton, president of the Akron Apartment House Owners' Association. P. S. The day after Rep. Huber received the widow's letter, there arrived a letter from Wharton (in his own name) urging the end of rent control.

CIO Backs Douglas Bill

IN asking for strong, effective rent controls, the CIO has urged passage of the Douglas-Myers bill, rather than the Spence bill, which is based on Housing Expediter Tighe Woods' proposals.

Here are the major differences:

Duration: The Douglas bill extends controls for 27 months; the Spence bill only for 15 months.

Coverage: The Douglas bill would re-control new housing, so-called "conversions" (which have often been the excuse for decontrolling units), trailer camps and motor courts, permanent hotel residences. The Spence bill would leave these untouched, as they are under the present law.

Tenant appeal: The Douglas bill would permit tenants to appeal any general orders or regulations. Under the present law—and under the Spence bill—when the Administration issues an order the tenant has no right of appeal.

Landlords Boo, Cheer At Hearing

AS FAR as the Nation's Capital was concerned, last week was "Housing and Rent Week."

Rep. Brent Spence's House Banking & Currency committee heard testimony from a parade of landlords.

The landlords weren't quite agreed on whether rent controls should go altogether, or whether they should be kept for a year provided landlords are handed a 25% general rent increase.

On one thing the landlords agreed—they claim they're being "discriminated against."

On hand to lobby against any and all rent controls after the present law expires March 31, was a group of Property Owners Association members. It was the local chapter of this organization in Tulsa, Okla., that attempted to touch off a nationwide epidemic of anti-rent control evictions. The device boomeranged against the landlords.

Landlords' Field Day

The boys had a fine old time in Washington. They attended the rent hearings en masse, got their views into the record, booed and applauded at the right times.

They got their pictures in the newspapers, appeared in a body at an American Forum of the Air broadcast in which Senators Cain ("I'm opposed to rent controls") and Myers (who's sponsoring a strong bill for controls) debated the explosive subject.

Here again—with Sen. Cain actually directing the chorus—the boys punctuated what they didn't like (which was everything Myers said) with raucous boos and jeers. Commented Cain in their defense: "This is a lively subject to which people react as their emotions impel them."

Thereafter the boos increased.

The House Banking Committee—despite the landlord pressure—is expected to report out a rent control bill this week.

Meanwhile, the Senate Banking & Currency committee was listening to pleas for and against a large-scale housing program.

To this committee Walter Reuther, in his capacity as chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, urged approval of an immediate government program to "help those who live in houses, not those who live off houses."

The immediate legislation Reuther recommended was not to be confused with or replaced by his dramatic homes-and-planes plan, made public the day before. He urged the Senators to first put into a motion a program to build a million homes in the next four years. Then, he said, "The Plan" should be considered as a means of strengthening the program already begun.

The CIO is not making its fight on housing primarily for the people it represents — because most CIO members would not fall in the category of "low income" families who could qualify for public housing units, he said.

Furthermore, he emphasized, the CIO is interested not only in city housing, but in rural housing as well.

A comprehensive housing program should also encourage the building of homes for middle income groups, Reuther said. These are the people he described as "too rich to qualify for public housing and too poor to buy homes."

To aid this biggest group, Reuther asked that the bill:

- Amortize government loans for home-building over a 60-year period.
- Reduce the interest rate on federal loans to the "going government rate" — now around 2.5%.
- Encourage formation of genuine housing cooperatives.

53 Win $15,000 Back Pay, Old Jobs

Fifty-three employes of Swift and Co. in Greensboro, N. C., have their jobs back and will receive $15,000 in back pay as the result of an agreement reached between the Company and their union, the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union.

The workers were discharged in November 1947 but had been ordered reinstated following an NLRB hearing last September. The $15,000 payment is a compromise agreement covering wages lost while the men were unemployed.

The discharge occurred when the employes struck in protest at the discharge of Valrie Russell, chairman of the local union.

Truman Aide Says Halt Prices or Up Wages

IF ONE member of President Truman's Council of Economic Advisers was a labor leader—a labor leader who saw no serious moves on the part of Congress to combat high prices—he'd be fighting hard for a fourth round of pay increases for the men and women in his union.

That's what John D. Clark, a former Standard Oil of Indiana official who retired and became an economist, and is now on the three-man Council of Economic Advisers, told the Joint Congressional Committee on the Economic Report. He also contradicted a claim that no industrialist would welcome unemployment.

Here is the way the discussion went:

Rep. Christian Herter (R, Mass.)—"Would you record yourself as being against a fourth round wage increase at the present time?"

Clark—"I would say if I were a labor leader, seeing the profit situation, seeing that prices have been continuing to advance and no effective action has been taken to give assurance to labor that they will not again advance, and I considered that my strategic position was strong enough to permit me to win wage increases which would at least compensate for the increases in the cost of living which have taken place since the last wage payments, I would make a tremendous drive for those wage increases."

Herter—"In other words, you would try to get that out of the earning surplus of the manufacturer, that wage increase? It has to come from somewhere, doesn't it? You would not take it out of consumers' pockets. The only place it can come from is from the profits today being earned by the large corporations."

And later, Clark referred back to a comment Rep. Robert F. Rich (R, Pa.) had made earlier—that he's never heard of a businessman who wanted unemployment. Said Clark:

"I think it was you who asked if there was anybody who was in favor of unemployment. . . . We have had presented to us repeatedly in our conferences with representatives of business that very proposal that the best thing that could happen would be to have a larger degree of unemployment in order that there might be at the factory gate each morning a list of job hunters—what is happening in their kitchens I don't know—because that would make labor more eager and more productive."

Rich had no reply to that.

Give $1 To PAC And Go Scott-Free

In such a capacity, it would be reasonable to expect that he would be an authority on such Republican-fostered legislation as the Taft-Hartley Law.

But, no, you are wrong. Scott can't be bothered with little things like accuracy. In a Lincoln Day address at Bridgeport, Conn., Scott made this amazing statement:

"The Administration proposes to strike out the T-H ban on Communists as officeholders in labor unions."

Even the Republican Party must be shocked that its chairman should make such a childish boner. T-H does not ban Communists from holding office in unions. It bars a union from the facilities of the Natl. Labor Relations Board if the officers of the union fail to sign the non-Communist affidavit of T-H.

Boy, one more dunce cap for Mr. Scott.

Keep It Clean, Gen. Denham!

THIS IS a clean story about NLRB's General Counsel Robert N. Denham. He's the same Robert Denham who took a justifiable lacing in an appearance before the Senate Labor Committe, which is considering among other things a provision to take away Denham's autocratic powers as general counsel.

But, let's get back to the clean story about Robert N. Denham.

The NLRB is moving from its antiquated offices in Washington's Rochambeau Bldg. (right next door to the Chamber of Commerce of the U. S.) to quarters in the Federal Security Bldg., near the Capitol.

The main suite in the new offices has a de luxe private bath and shower.

As soon as Denham heard about it, he pontificated: "That is my office!" He thought that settled it, because he's used to having people obey when he decrees something.

But, Paul Herzog, NLRB chairman, who's demanding that Congress strip Denham of his crown and sceptre, insisted that the suite, bath and shower were his.

Herzog won out.

* * *

Of course, there's a P. S. to this.

Denham then went to the Public Bldg. Administration and proclaimed that, to save face, he'd have to have a bath and shower, exactly like Herzog's. This time he was obeyed, PBA agreed and the matter's cleaned up.

Note to the Congressional pro-T-H bloc: We know you dote on Bob Denham; but how do you justify an expense to the taxpayers of $1000 to build a bath and shower for one man?

to avoid unnecessary increases in building industry costs.

He was Paul Geary, of Natl. Electrical Contractors' Association. He said his group favors the Thomas Bill: "outlawing the closed shop impairs the employer's right of contract."

3. Rep. Andrew J. Biemiller (D., Wis.) told the House that supporters of T-H believe that "the only good union is a dead union." He said that when the NAM says it favors unions "it means just what Stalin means when he says he is in favor of democracy."

4. A. F. Whitney, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, wired Pres. Truman asking for the ouster of NLRB General Counsel Denham as "unfit to hold office."

5. The Common Council of the City of Milwaukee — together with an increasing number of public bodies and private citizens —"sent a resolution to Congress" calling for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

6. Sen. Taft, who is built up by America's "free press" as the Senate's smartest "statesman," was fumbling as a result of the Democrats' barrage of questions.

Once he offered an embarrassed "I'm sorry" after Sen. Paul Douglas (D., Ill.) reminded Taft that he was violating the committee's rules in breaking in to ask a question of Green.

Taft giggled to hide his embarrassment—but to no avail.

7. The Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People, noting that it had opposed T-H "before it became law," told the committee "we have found no reason to change our position."

8. Taft admitted to the St. Louis Post-Dispatch that preservation of the status quo in an industrial dispute for 30, 60 or 80 days is not "vital." It was an important stepdown from Taft's earlier position on injunctions.

As Post-Dispatch writer Joseph Hanlon noted: "Here, Taft was recognizing that after all a temporary injunction is temporary—there comes a time when it expires and men restrained from striking are free to strike once more unless the injunction is made permanent. Taft is opposed to permanent injunctions against striking."

There, Taft helped explode a myth that he and other T-Hers have built up: that T-H has weapons — use of injunction power—to forbid a strike permanently.

9. Business Week magazine, observing that business had been rather quiet after the election, noted new signs of corporation support for T-H. It pointed particularly to the loaded questionnaire sent to its employes and the public by General Electric and some Hearst newspapers.

10. C. E. Wilson, General Electric's president, did as expected in expressing what he called "genuine alarm" over the Thomas Bill.

Why, he cried, this threatens "our individual and collective freedoms through removals of safeguards now so wisely in force."

That's what he said.

Asked by Sen. Pepper what he would think of a law which regulated the internal affairs of corporations in the manner T-H regulates the internal affairs of unions, Wilson said that the hearings had brought out nothing that indicated T-H was one-sided toward management.

Pepper drily assured him that labor—and Pepper—thought and knew differently.

Wilson and his personnel chief. L. R. Boulware, certainly are impartial. They criticized both the CIO Electrical Workers and the AFL Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

TAFT, in his interview with the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and also in a radio debate with Sen. Douglas, admitted that temporary injunctions are not the real solution in labor disputes of the type commonly called "extreme national emergency."

Taft, in his remark that injunctions are not "vital," wobbled a bit—not much, though. As an alternative to the injunction process, he thought out loud on a different procedure.

Taft didn't seem to know exactly how this other plan might work. He spoke vaguely of a "special Act of Congress" to deal with a particular strike. "I don't know what that act would be. It might be government seizure. It might be calling out the troops. I just can't tell what it would be."

Hanlon remarks in an editorial aside that "it is interesting to note that, although six 'national emergency' strike injunctions have been issued in the year-and-a-half T-H has been on the books, Taft considers that only one of them dealt with a 'national emergency' in the sense that the authors of the law conceived that phrase.

"That single instance was the strike over the Mine Workers' welfare fund. The strike was not ended until 12 days after the injunction prohibiting it was issued."

(There are few observers in the labor scene who agree with Taft that the UMW's strike constituted a peril to the naional healh and safey.)

The Post-Dispatch's Hanlon touches on a sore spot among the Republican committee members. Sen. Smith, a former professor at Princeton University before he became a U. S. Senator, invited two personal friends to testify as minority witnesses, theoretically, against the Thomas bill.

One witness called by Sen. Smith was David A. McCabe, Princeton economics prof. McCabe was pretty orthodox in supporting most of T-H until he reached one point.

When a strike became, in a rare case—as both McCabe and Davis agreed—one in which the national health and safety are "really" imperiled, the result would be seizure of both management's property and the workers' productivity.

Under the McCabe plan, both management and workers would go into the national service. Now, this sounds something like the makeshift "government operation" of wartime days under which a railroad or plant was "seized," a colonel put in nominal charge, but the same old bosses retained to give the orders.

McCabe deeply embarrassed Sen. Smith by suggesting, as the Post-Dispatch put it, that after the seizure "the government would determine how much the workers would be paid, how much would be charged for products or service, and in the end how much the owner of the property could take in earnings for his business."

Heavenly

Sen. Humphrey, remarking that while he felt Denham of the NLRB had displayed bias, said "even the Angel Gabriel would be accused of being an autocrat under T-H."

"Is the Angel Gabriel a member of the closed shop?" asked Donnell.

"Yes, he is—the Upper Chamber," replied Humphrey. "He fell from grace only for a short time."

Pres. Murray's Letter

lation of the "featherbedding" provision of T-H.

(9) He has recognized that the present free speech provisions of the Act go too far.

(10) He has conceded that the provisions of T-H imposing limitations upon political expenditures by unions are ambiguous.

(11) He has conceded that the problem of welfare funds was not properly handled in T-H.

(12) He has admitted that the enormous concentration of unreviewable power in the general counsel may be legitimately criticized.

(13) He has admitted that the provisions for union authorization elections to obtain union security are unsound and should be deleted.

(14) He has conceded that the present injunctive provisions of T-H dealing with so-called national emergency strikes permit of too broad an application.

(15) He has accepted the provisions in the Thomas bill authorizing emergency boards to make recommendations for the purpose of settling disputes, a power which is withheld from emergency boards created under T-H.

(16) Not only has Senator Taft expressed doubts concerning the present powers of the general counsel but he has expressed a lack of confidence in the general counsel in a number of specific ways. For example, he has expressed disagreement with the general counsel as to whether small local business is covered by the T-H. He has repeatedly insisted that the act must be amended to limit its scope.

(17) Similarly, he has expressed lack of confidence in the general counsel with respect to the rulings of the general counsel that a member of a picket line is an agent of a union for purposes of T-H and that a failure of a union to comply with notice provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act is a refusal to bargain.

(18) He has conceded that the provision for polling the employees at the end of the 80-day no-strike period with respect to the empolyer's last offer should be eliminated.

I think it can fairly be said that the entire issue with respect to the President's inherent powers has been deliberately confused by opponents of the Thomas bill. The fact is the bill contains no injunctive provisions and it is not the purpose of the bill to employ the device of the injunction in strikes affecting the national health or welfare. Secretary Tobin made this plain in his sponsoring testimony.

It is an ironic circumstance that those who insist upon permanently introducing injunctions into our national life do so on the ground that the public must be protected. But it degrades the public interest to assume that we protect it by forcing workers to work against their will for the profit of private employers. The public interest demands above all that we have a free America. And this third devious attempt to restore government by injunction must be exposed because a free labor movement is a vital part of a free America.

I strongly urge that S. 249 be promptly reported out of committee and that, with the minor technical amendments sponsored by the CIO, it be passed as the first step in a vitally needed and long-overdue legislative program.

Maryland Laundry Worker Testifies:

'I Hope That Congress Helps Us Get a Living Wage!'

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

MRS. GERTRUDE Jones came to Washington last week in good faith as an American citizen and a voter to testify in favor of a bill to increase the out-of-date 40c minimum wage.

A laundry worker from Hagerstown, Md., Mrs. Jones felt she had a story to tell which was very pertinent to the subject. It was the story of the hardships of trying to bring up a family on low pay.

She told it with sincerity and conviction to the House Labor Committee at hearings on a bill to increase the minimum from 40c to 75c and $1 an hour, and to extend its coverage.

Mrs. Jones was startled at the reception given her story.

"My husband works in a shoe factory but does not earn enough to support the family," she told the Labor Committee, "so I help out by working in the laundry."

The Jones have two children, 14 and 15, and live in a 5-room house without bath, for which they pay $15 a month.

"I started to work for the Troy Laundry about 12 years ago," Mrs. Jones continued. "At that time we were getting 18c an hour. Then I left for about five years, and went back to work for the laundry about a year ago. By that time the union had come in, and our basic wage is now 53c an hour.

Sue Malone
Clothing worker from Mississippi

"Once in a great while I can make as much as $25 a week, before deductions, but usually it is much less. Last week my pay was $19. After taxes and insurance were taken out I only had about $15 left to take home."

Gertrude Jones, who had put this all down in black and white so she would not forget any of the main facts if she got rattled, read it earnestly to the Congressmen on the committee.

"I hope that Congress will do something to help us get a living wage. I think that if this bill (H. R. 2033) was passed, it would help us a great deal," she concluded.

Relaxing, Mrs. Jones sat back and looked up at the committee members with a pleasant smile, quite unprepared for what was to come.

Republican Rep. Ralph W. Gwinn of wealthy Westchester County in New York was looking down at her sourly from his elevated seat. He wanted to know why she didn't take in washing at home, if she wasn't satisfied with what the laundry paid her.

He said he didn't think it was the business of Congress to tell the Troy Laundry what it should pay its workers, and began talking at length about how Mrs. Jones might do better if she would work directly for hypothetical "Mrs. Smith."

For a minute Mrs. Jones looked at him perplexed. She thought he must be joking. She had been taking the hearings very seriously. She had come to Washington at the suggestion of her union, the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, because she really thought her testimony would help the law makers understand how much a higher minimum wage would mean to low paid workers.

But Rep. Gwinn's extensive remarks, delivered with unmistakeable hostility, made it quite clear that the committee member was not kidding her. Mrs. Jones finally answered him quietly:

"I don't have the equipment the laundry has," Mrs. Jones said quietly.

Arguing that passage of the minimum wage legislation under discussion would amount to action taken by a "compulsory state," he demanded, "Have we a Constitution left?"

The Republican Gwinn was not the only one who indulged in "philosophy." Several Democratic Congressmen added their share.

Fears "Police State"

Rep. John Wood of Georgia compared the minimum wage law to "the decree of a dictator," and said we weren't far away from a "police state," if the government can fix wages and prices.

Reps. Graham A. Barden of North Carolina and Wingate H. Lucas of Texas, also took part in the barrage of hostile questions and remarks.

The testimony of the group of CIO witnesses who were introduced by John Edelman, Washington representative for the Textile Workers Union, set the unfriendly Congressmen off on their diatribes.

Edelman told them later in the hearings that he was "shocked at such a legislative philosophy."

Like Gertrude Jones, other CIO witnesses told—from their own experiences—of the pressing need for a minimum higher than the out-of-date 40c included in the Wage-Hour law in 1938.

Mrs. Mary Darr, who works at the same laundry in Hagerstown, Md., as Mrs. Jones, and belongs to the same union, lives with her mother and her 15-year-old daughter.

She told the House Labor Committee that she works as a folder on a mangle and gets between 53 and 59c an hour—averaging $21 to $23 a week.

"My only income is what I get at the laundry, and the highest I ever get is $25 a week, before taxes and insurance are taken out."

Lesinski Nails False News Story

Chairman John Lesinski of the House Labor Committee last week denied he had said that administration leaders have given up hope of strengthening the federal wage-hour law.

He declared that a press report stating that he would drop the proposed amendments to the federal Fair Labor Standards Act was "absolutely without foundation in fact."

Borrowed $100

She said she'd had to borrow $100 from a finance company to buy some clothes for her daughter to wear to school. She mentioned that the state of Maryland does not have a minimum wage covering laundry workers.

"If I could earn 75c an hour," she told the committee, "I might be able to pay some of the bills I owe for doctors and other things, and maybe I would not have to borrow money to buy clothes."

A third witness, also a member of the ACW, had a somewhat brighter story to tell, thanks to a union contract.

Sue Malone, a lovely girl in her twenties, who worked as a machine operator at the Reliance Mfg. Co. in Hattiesburg, Miss., for seven years, said the minimum rate of pay specified in the union's contract was 65c. The firm makes work clothes.

All experienced workers, however, on both hourly and piece work make more than 75c an hour as provided in the contract.

Wants To Keep Gains

The point of Miss Malone's testimony was to tell the Labor Committee how important it was to protect the gains that had been made in the plant.

"I know how hard a time the people in my plant had trying to get along on low wages before the union came in," she said, "and I'm afraid that we may have to go back to that, if a higher minimum wage is not established by law.

"All of our members are worried about this, because they know that if wages are cut in one plant, that tends to pull down wages in other plants. The employer paying low wages undercuts the one paying better wages."

More first-hand information about low pay areas was also given to the House Labor Committee by several members of the CIO Textile Workers Union.

Gives Pay Data

Garland Brook of Rome, Ga., an organizer who was a textile worker for 14 years, presented the House Committee members with figures on the number of workers in low-pay industries in Georgia.

The pay rate for some 65,000 workers in the industries ranges from 45c to 60c, he said.

In the lumber and wood products industry, 45,000 workers in some 2,200 establishments have a going rate of pay ranging from 50c to 60c with a minimum of 45c in some plants.

In the chenille industry, with 10,000 workers, 60% are on piece rates with a 40c minimum, and 40% are on an hourly rate at 50 to 60c an hour.

Mrs. Gertrude Jones
Works in Hagerstown, Md., laundry.

In the stone and clay industry, 7,000 employes have a 60-65c rate of pay, with a minimum of 50c in some plants.

In the pecan and peanut industry, 3,500 workers in 130 establishments have a pay rate of 45-50c.

Low wage data from other states was also presented by David Gilbert, Lynchburg, Va., TWU field representative; Warren G. Hollenman, who worked for the Virginia and Carolina Southern Ry. Co., for 57c an hour, 11 hours a day; and Vinson Cox, New Bern, N. C., who had to take to driving a taxi because factory pay was too low to live on.

This was some of the wealth of testimony presented to the House Labor Committee to show the urgent need of increasing the minimum wage under the Fair Labor Standards Act from 40c to 75c and to $1 as soon as possible. There is more to come.

U. S. News Says:

Unionization Shaping Up Nightmare For Southern Politicians

"If white and Negro workers in the South manage to work together and get to the polls, they can send a new kind of Southerner to Washington.

"He would speak for the poorest people in the nation and might make the New York and Chicago New Dealers look like pikers.

"The Southerners want to use the filibuster to halt this trend."

Those words aren't from the CIO News or any other labor paper. They come from the U. S. News, a magazine which is circulated mostly among businessmen.

U. S. News made a survey of the present Congressional fight—a fight which has been occurring for some years, over the use of the filibuster in the Senate.

In the past, the Southerners—most of them—have resorted to the filibuster to talk civil rights measures to death. And they have succeeded far, far too often.

But, with the Truman victory of last fall, achieved without the electoral votes of several Dixiecrat states—the filibuster is in peril of being killed, or at least curtailed.

There are two factors which frighten professional Southern politicians:

1. The end of the poll tax and other restrictions on voting would widen the base of voters and hurt the Dixie machines, which have been able to make deals with like-minded Northern Republicans to block New Deal legislation

2. The rise of organized labor in the South, particularly since the CIO launched Operation Dixie.

U. S. News says this of the labor situation below the Mason-Dixon Line:

"A united labor force in the South is feared both by the politicians and by business interests. It is this fear, in part, that underlies some of the opposition to the bill to require industries to give Negroes an equal chance with whites at all kinds of jobs.

"For Negroes and whites have been played against each other by some Southern industries to keep down unionization.

"A politician's nightmare is shaping up in this picture of the South. If the white man and the Negro throw down racial prejudice and work together, unionization will grow. With stronger unions, the workers can do the same job on Southern conservatives they have on Northern conservatives.

"Indications of what can happen already have shown up. Estes Kefauver was elected to the Senate from Tennessee by the strong backing of labor.

"Southern politicians, therefore, are fighting hard to hold in check any effort by the Federal Government to bring the white worker and the Negro together. The Ku Klux Klan is marching again, and the preachers of race hatred are busy.

"But broad factors are at work in Southern schools and colleges to change the old pattern of thought."

Labor Dept., FSA Slashes 'BadEconomy'

THE CIO has urged Congress to end "the poor economy" of making inadequate appropriations for the Federal Security Agency and the Department of Labor.

Mrs. Katherine Pollock Ellickson, assistant director of the CIO's Dept. of Education and Research, told the House Appropriations Committee that "for the past year and longer, both Labor and parts of the FSA have been suffering from cuts in funds imposed by the 80th Congress."

She pointed out that "the proposed appropriations are very modest and in many respects far too modest. We respect the desire to hold down the total federal budget, but the amounts involved for labor make up only a minute fraction of the total of $42 billion. The columns for national defense, international purposes and veterans are longer than this pencil (holding up her pencil). But the column for labor is scarcely the thickness of a nickel."

Mrs. Ellickson pointed up the need for more funds:

"It is poor economy to permit children under 14 to work in factories endangering their development into good citizens.

"It is poor economy to relax our efforts to safeguard the health of working women, especially mothers.

"It is poor economy to deprive workers and employers of essential facts on wages, cost of living, working conditions, and other matters, without which peaceful settlement of labor disputes may prove impossible.

"It is poor economy to slash efforts by the federal government to promote industrial safety, to prevent the heavy toll of work accidents, and to assist workers in efforts to improve state laws on workmen's compensation and conditions of employment.

"It is poor economy to force unemployed workers to wait many weeks for the benefits to which they are entitled, and it is folly to deprive state employment security agencies of funds necessary for helping workers find jobs and for preventing fraudulent claims for benefits."

CONGRESS HEARS: A delegation from the United Railway Workers, merged with the CIO Shipbuilding Union, visits Rep. Robert Crosser (D., O.), chairman of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee to protest layoffs in the railroad industry. Congressman Crosser, who uses a wheel chair to get around, is known as "the little white father of the railway unions." Left to right in the delegation are J. O. Schupe, William Tucciarone, James Molinet, William K. Ewing, Robert C. Walkinshaw, chairman; W. D. Harner, S. J. Cholewinski and Paul Wagner.

CIO Rail Union Protests Layoffs To Congress

CIO members in the railroad industry, all non-operating workers, have protested to their Congress over the series of layoffs which have recently hit their industry.

A committee of 20 went to Washington, conferred with CIO officials, with Assistant Labor Secy. John W. Gibson, with Rep. Robert Crosser, chairman of the House Interstate Commerce Committee, and with officials of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The committee, which was headed by Robert C. Walkinshaw, Pitcairn, Pa., declared the layoffs were creating a peril to the safety of riders and freight.

The men were from the Pennsylvania, Santa Fe, Pittsburgh and Lake Erie, Aliquippa Southern, Donora Southern, New York Central, Erie, Youngstown Southern and Delaware, Lackawanna and Western.

"THE PRR has already laid off 2500, which may reach 4000. The New York Central has announced furloughing of 8100.

"It is all a national conspiracy by the American Association of Railroads," Walkinshaw says. He charged violation of ICC rulings and said that all lines, even after furloughing men, are still working double shifts and seven-day operations.

The visit to Washington came as a result of a meeting in Pittsburgh of CIO members from lines in all parts of the U. S. Their union is the United Railroad Workers of America; a division of the Marine and Shipbuilding Workers.

The conference noted that the lines always blame a business slump as a reason for layoffs.

BUT, says the union, this is what happens and this is what partially constitutes what it calls part of a conspiracy:

In most cases, a furloughed worker loses his vacation, even if he has complied with the 160-day limitation in the preceding year. This means a saving of thousands of dollars.

If the furloughed worker gets a job elsewhere, and is recalled, he must answer the recall within 10 days to protect his seniority. So, he tells his new employer he is resigning and goes back to the railroad. He might work 60 days and again be out of work. This imperils his chances of getting interim work.

Rank-and-File Get Training In Radio

Training in radio as a medium of information is being given AFL, CIO and independent rank-and-filers as Rutgers Institute of Labor Relations opened its Radio Workshop. Program planning, radio script, program promotion and production will be offered in the course.

Interested unionists will meet at the Sheraton Hotel, in Newark, N. J., on Wednesday evenings.

Tricks To Ban Overtime Pay Held Illegal

TRICKY bookkeeping and other devices sometimes used secretly by employers to evade paying workers the wages legally due them, will be harder to get away with in the future, under a decision handed down last week by the U. S. Supreme Court.

The case involved the Jacksonville Paper Co. of Florida, which had been deliberately disobeying an earlier court order to pay its workers in accordance with the minimum wage, overtime and other provisions of the Federal Wage-Hour Act, it was charged.

After the lower court had ruled that the law applied to the company's workers, the firm continued its violations through such deceptive devices as: (1) Misclassifying some 20 employes as "executives"; (2) applying a "false and fictitious method" of computing overtime; (3) employing piece workers in excess of 40 hours without paying them overtime; and other tricks difficult to detect specifically.

In a seven to two majority opinion, the Supreme Court upheld the administrator of the Wage-Hour Act in a civil contempt action to force the firm to comply with the court order.

The majority opinion delivered by Justice William O. Douglas, held that a court decree directing compliance with the terms of the Wage-Hour Act, need not be specific to permit the administrator to bring contempt action in case of continued violation of the law.

Justices Felix Frankfurter and Robert Jackson dissented.

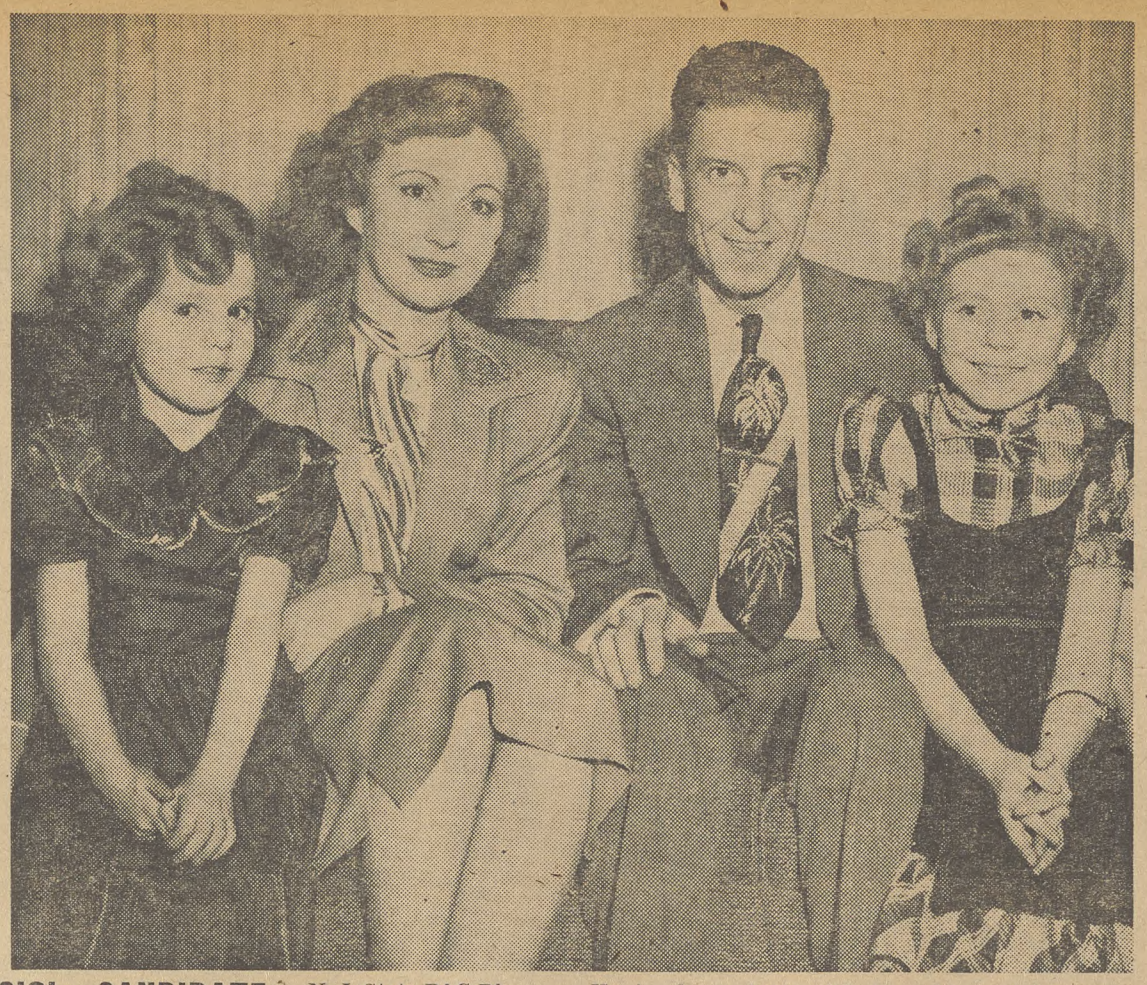
FTA Conclave Is Held In California

SOME 200 delegates to the 7th biennial convention of the CIO Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers, meeting in Santa Cruz, Calif., have voted full cooperation with CIO-PAC and "other liberal-progressive groups."

The resolution stated however, that the union would reserve the right to indorse or oppose candidates regardless of party.

The stand of FTA Pres. Donald Henderson and other delegates to the Natl. CIO convention in Portland, Oreg., last November was endorsed by the convention. At the CIO conclave the union's delegation had opposed the Marshall plan and some other aspects of CIO policy.

Concerning foreign policy, the officers' report said that "the burden of the 'cold war' with its constantly increasing billions for re-equipping and re-arming future allies for a new war falls most heavily on our membership in the low-income groups."



CIO's CANDIDATE: N. J. State PAC Director Stephen J. Moran is putting his PAC experience to work in his campaign for election to the Newark City Commission. He is shown here with his wife and daughters. Moran is indorsed by the State CIO Executive Board and the Essex and Hudson CIO-PAC. He is a member of the Steelworkers.

Murray Backs Bill To Boost Steel Output

THE administration's bill to implement one part of its economic program as outlined by Pres. Truman in his State-of-the-Union and economic messages last month was started on its way last week by Rep. Brent Spence (D., Ky.).

Called the "Economic Stability Act of 1949," the Spence bill would permit the government to encourage greater production of critical materials in short supply through loans to private enterprise, research, procurement of materials. When and if these measures fail to provide sufficient stimulus; the government may then "as a last resort" construct new plant facilities itself.

Critical shortages of steel and other basic materials have several times been noted by the President.

To channel vital materials into essential production, the bill would also permit the President to employ mandatory Priority and allocation powers.

ENDORSING the proposed measure, Pres. Murray of the Steelworkers wired Spence, who heads the House Banking & Currency committee, that his union "believes the very foundation of our economy may depend upon whether or not the steel-making capacity is expanded to meet current and future needs."

Murray expressed the hope that the Steelworkers would have an opportunity to detail this viewpoint when the committee begins hearings.

"Smaller processing and fabricating firms, many of whom are wholly dependent on reasonable supplies of steel, have been pleading for action," said Murray. "Many of them face the possibility of being squeezed out of business by the shortage.

"With vast rebuilding projects under way in this country, as well as in a number of war-torn countries, there is a cry for steel that grows persistently louder.

"Studies conducted by the Steel union show that there is not enough capacity to meet the country's needs if a high level of prosperity and employment is to be sustained.

"REFUSAL OF the industry to expand production is based on the theory that the boom-or-bust cycle will prevail. The United Steelworkers of America does not share this lack of confidence in the soundness of our economy.

"It has become increasingly clear that steel is the real bottleneck which is holding back needed production in a whole network of industries.

"The industry has turned a deaf ear to the plea for more steel capacity . . .

"We are prepared to show:

"1. Industry figures on capacity increases and expansion are greatly inflated. 2. There is still a shortage of steel which is holding back production in other industries. 3. Industrial spokesmen have been poor prophets regarding the length of the shortage.

"4. Several companies need loans for expansion purposes and would be happy to avail themselves of government loans. 5. Sufficient materials are available or can be made available for expanding. 6. Capacity expansion will not be nearly so expensive as has been estimated. 7. National defense potential needs make further delay a dangerous gamble."

TWU, Phila. Transit Nearer Agreement

Striking CIO Transport Workers and the Philadelphia Transportation Co. came within six cents of a settlement as the walkout ended its first week.

The company budged for the first time from its 3c "final offer" and moved up to 7c, while TWU scaled down its 17c demand to 13c. Originally the company had offered one penny.

Some 11,000 workers are involved in the transit dispute, which has idled all subways, trolleys and buses in the sprawling city.

The PTC's 7c offer was rejected by union Pres. Michael J. Quill with the statement: "There is no basis for settlement. I am sorry to have to announce that the strike will continue."

Discomfiture of Philadelphia Mayor Bernard Samuel was increased for a short time last week as Yellow Cab drivers, members of the AFL Teamsters, staged a three-day "wild-cat" strike.

Charge Filed On L. A. Council

Formal charges against the Los Angeles CIO Council have been filed with National CIO in a move that may set the pattern for restoring all CIO councils in California to control by the CIO majority in the state.

The council was accused of "acts contrary to the Constitution of the National CIO and in violation of the CIO rules for industrial union councils."

Twelve top officials and leaders of CIO affiliated unions, who signed the charges, asked CIO Pres. Philip Murray to move for revocation of the Los Angeles Council's charter.

Duluth Council Ousts Leftists

The 12-year control of left-wingers over the Duluth, Minn., CIO Council has been ended by the election of a right-wing slate of officers at a meeting called on the orders of CIO Director of Councils John Brophy.

The election of the new officers followed the failure of the left-wing faction to obtain a secret ballot. The meeting sustained a ruling by Earl T. Bester, temporary chairman and acting director of District 33 of the Steelworkers, that voting would be done by roll call.

Principal new officers are: Pres. Clifford Rohlf, PAC and grievance committee chairman of Coolerator local of the Steelworkers; Vice. Pres. Lester G. Nystrom, Textile Workers; Secy. Ben Young, Auto Workers; Treas. Ross Miller, Newspaper Guild.

Congressmen Aid Rent Control Foes

By GLORIA CAPLAN

WITHIN A DAY or two the U. S. mails will be flooded with an estimated 3 million pieces of propaganda against rent control, public housing and federal aid to education—all mailed at taxpayer expense under the franking privileges of two Republican Congressmen.

This little behind-the-scenes play involves Reps. Ralph W. Gwinn of the wealthy Westchester County in New York and Noah Mason of Illinois, both bitter foes of rent control.

In addition, the cast of characters includes Frank Gannett's notorious Committee for Constitutional Government, the Natl. Apartment House Owners Association and a certain Percy L. Greaves, Jr., who operates what he calls "a research organization for rightist groups."

At the end of last week, any casual passerby who might have entered the Old House Office Building in Washington from the rear, would have happened on two block-long corridors completely clogged with stacks of literature waiting to be folded and mailed out under Congressional franks.

'Jackets' Tell All

At least four—and possibly seven—speeches by Rep. Gwinn were reprinted by the Government Printing Office in lots of 450,000 each.

A subsequent check with Rep. Gwinn was made by the New York Post-Home News correspondent Oliver Pilat, who learned that the printing was being financed by the Committee for Constitutional Government and by the Apartment House Owners Association.

Although the printing order was issued by Gwinn, part of the batch is going out under Rep. Mason's frank, some of the mail sacks indicated. These were being sent to the Frank Gannett committee in bulk, from which they could be mailed without a cent of cost to the sponsors.

THE CAMPAIGN is being neatly timed to do a hatchet job on rent control and public housing just as these issues are approaching the floor of both houses. Asked by Pilat why he was "helped" by real-estate-minded groups, Gwinn replied "I've worked at it harder than any other Congressman, I guess."

But Gwinn's ties with the fanatically-conservative Committee are somewhat less casual than that, Pilat learned.

During his interview with the Congressman, he asked a question for which Gwinn called on Greaves to fetch a special folder containing his views.

Greaves is described by Gwinn as a research assistant to both himself and Rep. Phillips of California. In the past Greaves has "researched" for the Republican Natl. Committee, during which tenure he posed as a secretary to Rep. Taber (R., N. Y.), according to Pilat.

(Later he joined the staff of Rep. Fred Hartley while the T-H bill was in preparation.

(One of Greaves' recent interests has been the Displaced Persons bill, which he fought vehemently in a pamphlet called "Operation Immigration." Many of its arguments have been attacked as anti-alien and anti-semitic. Numbered among Greaves' friends are such characters as Merwin K. Hart, noted for his anti-semitic, pro-fascist crusades.)

Revealing Letter

All of which ties in neatly with a bit of information that fell out of the folder handed to Pilat. It was a letter from Dr. E. A. Rumely of the Committee for Constitutional Government to the Apartment House Owners Association. In it Rumely suggested that an additional $1000 from the Apartment House Owners would permit the printing of Rep. Gwinn's rent control speech along with the one on public housing.

Rumely is another person who bears description. John Roy Carlson, in his book "The Plotters" says Rumely, who is secretary of the CCG, "was convicted and had served 30 days in jaid in 1920-21 for his failure to report to the Alien Property Custodian funds he obtained with Germanic interests serving the Kaiser's cause. With the funds Rumely bought the New York Evening Mail and used it as an instrument for German propaganda."

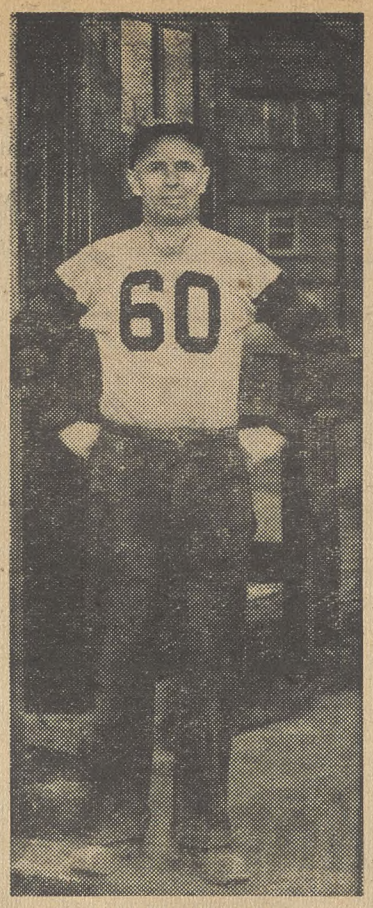
The piece Gwinn had printed on rent control betrays another bond between the Congressman and the CCG. On July 26, 1948, Gwinn had inserted in the Congressional Record an article attacking rent control written by John W. Scoville.

Scoville, formerly an economist for Chrysler Corp., and credited with a good part of the T-H Act, is now with the Gannett committee. 450,000 copies of this article are now going out under Congressional franks.

One sentence from the article is sufficient to indicate the attitude of Scoville—and of Gwinn—toward rent control: "This control of rents by the Federal Government is a tyrannical usurpation of power."

Gwinn, who testified before the House Banking & Currency committee last week, developed the same economic theory that Scoville uses in his article: There is no housing shortage. It just looks like a housing shortage, because the government forces rents down so low, single people take advantage of the situation and move into apartments by themselves, instead of doubling up with their in-laws. Remove controls, say both, and families faced with higher rents, will double up or move into more cramped quarters, and then the problem will have been "solved!"

That's the stuff Gwinn gave the 26 members of the committee; and that's the stuff Gwinn, (who, incidentally, recently told a CIO laundry worker testifying for a 75c minimum wage, to take in washing if she couldn't make a living in the laundry) is clogging up the mails with—at taxpayers' expense.



PROUD OF SON

Every steelworker at the Bethlehem Steel plant, Bethlehem, Pa., knows that "Chuck" Bednarik, University of Penna. lineman was named to the All-American football team, because Chuck's father (above), open hearth helper at the plant, wears his son's football jersey to work. Bednarik is standing at the plant gate.

Reuther Asks Probe Of 'Possible Abuse'

CIO Housing Committee Chairman Walter Reuther has called for a Congressional investigation of the "possible abuse of the Congressional frank by Frank Gannett through Rep. Gwinn.

"The tenants of this country," said Reuther, "must realize that millions are being spent by the organized real estate lobby. They must counter such propaganda, lest new Congressmen be fooled."

House Rent Hearings End

Senate Unit OK's Public Housing Bill

THE SENATE Banking and Currency Committee has approved a gigantic housing measure which, in at least one respect, exceeds even the goals set by the CIO at its Portland convention last year.

The measure has the backing of both Democratic and Republican members on the sub-committee, but it faced heavy bombardment from Republican Sens. Harry P. Cain (Wash.) and John W. Bricker (Ohio), both noted as stalwart friends of the real estate lobby.

In an effort to kill the bill's chances for passage, Bricker introduced an amendment banning segregation in the public housing units. This move was defeated, 10-to-2. Cain, Bricker and Sen. A. Willis Robertson (D. Va.) voted against the full measure.

Big Program

The program would provide for government-financed building of 810,000 public housing units within the next six years. If the situation permits, the President may step up the program to complete 150,000 units a year, which means that the goal could conceivably be completed before expiration of the six years.

This public housing section, around which a battle has raged furiously for the past several years, was a compromise between an administration measure and a Republican bill. The President had asked for 1,050,000 government-financed low-cost units over a 7-year period, while the GOP bill provided for 600,000 units in six years.

In addition to the public housing section, the bill sets up a $1½ billion slum clearance program in the form of loans and grants to states and municipalities.

A third major section provides $262,500,000 for a rural housing program.

Hearings End

On the other side of Capitol Hill, the House Banking & Currency Committee wound up its hearings on rent control and went into executive session to thrash out a bill. After reporting out a rent control measure, it will begin work on a housing bill.

Meanwhile, Democratic Reps. Helen Gahagan Douglas (Cal.) and Frank Buchanan (Pa.) announced joint sponsorship of a bill to speed up construction of homes for middle income groups. Such legislation would supplement the low-cost housing program already approved by the Senate committee.

In support of another bill she is sponsoring—a strong rent control measure—Rep. Douglas appeared before the House Banking Committee last week.

She told the committee that any further increases in the general rent level would not only work a severe hardship on tenants, but would hasten a depression by cutting down the amount of money consumers could spend on such items as clothing, electrical appliances, automobiles and doctor bills.

She charged the "inadequacies of the present law and its poor administration" with weakening the rent control program.

To back up her contention that the law had been administered poorly, she criticized Federal Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods on 11 counts.

Among other things, she criticized Woods for decontrolling permanent accommodations in trailer camps even before Congress took the step in its 1948 rent law.

Bill's Contents

Rep. Douglas told the 26-member committee—25 men, one woman, Rep. Chase Going Woodhouse (D. Conn.),—that an effective rent control bill should include the following provisions as a minimum:

1. Extension of the law through June 30, 1951, in order to permit tenants "to feel reasonably secure."
2. Authority to effectively control evictions.
3. Recontrol of new construction, conversions and permanent units in hotels, motor courts and trailer camps. (These are not now under control.)
4. Discontinuance of the 15% voluntary lease "device."
5. Restoration of adequate civil and criminal enforcement sanctions. (The present law does not permit prosecution of violators of the act.) "I cannot recall another regulatory law dealing with conflicting interests which does not contain a provision for the prosecution of persons who violated it," she commented.
6. Making local rent advisory boards "really advisory," placing full responsibility in hands of the rent administrator, so that he could not then "hide behind the boards."
7. Provisions for review of administrative regulative and orders by the Emergency Court of Appeals on complaint of either tenant or landlord.

All these proposals, strongly endorsed by the CIO, are embodied in the Douglas-Myers rent bill.

NLRB Order On Unfair Lists Seen Speeding T-H's Death

A RECENT interpretation of the Taft-Hartley Act by the NLRB "should hasten the efforts of your Committee and the Congress to eliminate this Act from the statute books," CIO General Council Arthur J. Goldberg has written Sen. Elbert Thomas, chairman of the Senate Labor Committee.

In a case involving peaceful picketing and circulation of a "we do not patronize" list by the Kansas District Council of the AFL Carpenters, the Board ruled the union could not picket or distribute "unfair" lists to combat non-union labor.

Board Members James J. Reynolds Jr., J. Copeland Gray and Chairman Paul Herzog stated that, even though a "free speech" section of the act protects such expression of views, the intent of Congress was to kill secondary boycotts and everything that goes with them. With the two clauses in conflict, the Board chose the more anti-union one.

Said Goldberg to Thomas: "This decision gives new life to all of those cases which constitute rejected symbols of an anti-labor era . . . It also invalidates basic decisions in connection with the right to picket which a more enlightened Supreme Court has in recent years enunciated."

In another ruling last week, the Board ordered General Motors to bargain with the union on any group insurance plan it proposes. This is in line with other NLRB rulings which defined pensions and insurance plans as a part both of wages and of working conditions and therefore mandatory subjects for collective bargaining.

The company, however, is expected to wait until the Supreme Court decides to issue before actually sitting down to discuss insurance with the CIO Auto Workers.

Liberals Score As T-H Hearings End

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE SENATE Labor Committee hearings came to an end last week—with telling blows for labor being scored by four leading citizens of this land.

The four were:

Harry S. Truman, President of these United States.

Dr. William Leiserson, former member of the Natl. Labor Relations Board and other industrial relations agencies.

Nathan Feinsinger, former member of the War Labor Board.

Gerhard F. Van Arkel, former general counsel of the NLRB.

This week, the committee, composed of eight Democrats and five Republicans, is scheduled to go into executive session and consider the Thomas Bill, (S249), sponsored by the Truman Administration.

The bill would repeal the Taft-Hartley Law and re-enact the Wagner Act with certain modifications. The CIO and other labor groups are backing the measure.

The committee will also consider other material submitted to it during its three weeks of hearings.

Here are the bases upon which the four pro-labor spokesmen made their stands:

The President: "I may even get on the train again and make another tour around the country to tell the people how their Government is getting on."

Dr. Leiserson: "I just think T-H is no good."

Feinsinger: "We may have more democracy when we have more strikes than when we have few."

Van Arkel: "T-H threw a federal protection about certain asserted employer 'rights,' the exercise of which could be used to destroy unions, and denied unions power to retaliate."

The House Labor Committee has yet to decide whether or not it will hold public hearings. A sub-committee voted to recommend repeal of T-H, reenactment of the Wagner Act in toto and then careful study to see if the Wagner Act needed revision.

HERE WERE the spotlighted events of the windup days for the Senate Committee:

1. Sen. Taft, sole Congressional surviving member of the pair who sponsored T-H, was slapped back hard when he attempted to intimidate Leiserson, Feinsinger and Van Arkel.

   Like Goldberg and others, they did not fall for the legend that Taft was invincible, that he was too smart for anyone, that it was risky to defy him.

T-H had the H knocked out of it last fall, when Rep. Fred A.Hartley (R.,N.J.) found he didn't have the courage to go before the people with his bill. His former seat is held by an anti-T-H Democrat.

2. A new party line was developing among T-Hers. They were talking like this: "Call the final bill anything you want—the Thomas-Lesinski Bill, the Jones-Brown Bill—but it'll still have the core of T-H."

New Dealers disagreed violently with them.

3. Sen. Donnell, who wasted more of the committee's time than any two other Senators—he often had to be rescued from ruin by Taft—had the audacity to propose that the hearings be extended over at least two more weeks.

Even his GOP colleagues looked the other way.

4. Will Davis took the New York Times sharply to task for what he termed misinterpretation of his testimony before the committee.

5. A succession of industry witnesses—all singing almost exactly in the same key—came before the committee, put their expensively-clad elbows on the table and read statements. Donnell beamed with joy, becoming almost delirious with delight when Ira Mosher, NAMogul, appeared.

One industry spokesman, smiling bravely through his tears, referred to last fall's election results as an "unfortunate" political situation.

6. A rash of highly paid lobbyists, all determined to save T-H, hit the Washington scene. Gerard Reilly added GM ($3000 a month retainer) to clients GE and the printing industry.

The GOP's Gerald Landis, defeated last fall, was back as assistant lobbyist to Master Lobbyist William Ingles, whose accounts include such reverse small-

Ballot Box V. Gallup Poll

Sen. Donnell, questioning Dr. Leiserson on the question of injunctions, pounced on the witness' reference to the strength of public opinion in labor disputes.

"Am I not right that public opinion was against John L. Lewis in the coal strike last year, but that he went right on anyway?" asked the Missourian.

"I don't agree that public opinion was against the miners and Lewis," replied Leiserson.

"How do you find out how the public feels—by the Gallup Poll?" giggled Sen. Taft.

"No, by how they vote at the ballot box," shot back Leiserson. The spectators—but not the Republican Senators—roared with laughter.

They laughed harder when Sen. Pepper asserted: "No one knows that better than those of us on this side (the Democratic) of the committee."

The biggest laugh came when Sen. Neely said: "No, Senator, no one knows better than those we replaced on this side of the committee."

The Labor Committee

This week, the Senate Labor Committee is scheduled to go behind closed doors. In executive session, these senators will consider the Thomas Bill and other material submitted to its hearings:

Democrats: Chm. Elbert Thomas (Utah); James E. Murray (Mont.); Claude Pepper (Fla.); Lister Hill (Ala.); Matthew Neely (W. Va.); Paul Douglas (Ill.); Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.), Garrett Withers (Ky.).

Republicans: Robert A. Taft (O.); Warren Aiken (Vt.); H. Alexander Smith (N. J.); Wayne L. Morse (Ore.), Forrest C. Donnell (M.).

All these Senators can be reached care of the Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.

Murray Hails HST

Letter From Pres. Murray to Pres. Truman:

My dear Mr. President:

Your Jefferson-Jackson Day address of last night is a forthright and heartwarming reaffirmation of the splendid platform which carried you and the American people to victory last fall.

I am particularly gratified by the timely and unequivocal words you devoted to the fight for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law. You have expressed the feelings of the American people when you state that special interests are plotting to deprive the people of what they voted for on November 2.

I repeat what I have told you before: The millions of members of the Congress of Industrial Organizations stand solidly behind you in your crusade for "the welfare and the advancement of the people of this nation." With determination such as you expressed in your address and the loyal cooperation of the Congress, the "fair deal" program can be promptly enacted into law.

UAW, UE, URW To Seek Pay Raises, Pensions

THREE BIG CIO unions have begun winding up for the pitch on wage negotiations this year.

The Electrical Workers at 30-odd General Electric plants, the Rubber Workers and the Auto Workers—all will seek wage increases as well as pensions when these unions begin bargaining in the next few months. The Natl. Maritime Union will concentrate on correcting existing inequities.

The Electrical Workers' GE contract expires next year, but permits wage reopening any time this year. Talks are expected to begin early in May. Before the CIO Electrical Workers even ask for a wage increase, General Electric's "answer" is "no!"

GE Acts Quickly

It was immediately after UE's General Electric Conference Board met in New York City recently to formulate contract proposals that GE loosed the blast.

GE's Lemuel R. Boulware, vice-president in charge of employe relations, said a wage rise would be "wrong for our employes and wrong for the country." He also ruled out any discussion of a reduced work week or pension and insurance plan improvements.

The UE Conference based its program on these claims:

1. GE's 3rd quarter 1948 profits, compared with the first quarter of 1945, soared 133%.
2. GE prices in that same period have gone up 36%.
3. But GE weekly wages since the beginning of 1945 have risen only 14%.
4. The current GE weekly pay in terms of purchasing power is $11.09 less than it was in 1945.
5. And GE workers are now suffering from severe layoffs.

Boulware disputed all these statistics by quoting 1940 figures, instead of those for 1945.

He said GE employes' take-home pay rose 92% in the past eight years, and cost of materials and services to the company rose 81%. No mention was made of profits during that 8-year period.

Profits Rise 97%

In 1940, GE's net profits were $56.2 million. By the end of last year they had hit $112 million—a 97% increase. Last year's net profits jumped from a yearly average of 12.41% on its investment to about 25%.

Citing such profit figures as these in arguing GE's ability to pay wage increases without boosting prices, the UE conference urged that wages be raised sufficiently to compensate for the $11.09 loss in purchasing power in the past three years.

Other major goals are a reduction in the work week with no reduction in pay to distribute the burden of current production curtailments more evenly, adequate pensions, health and sick benefits.

THE UAW's first bargaining target will be Ford, at which contract talks begin May 15. The General Motors contract, which extends to next year, is not subject to wage negotiations this year, but UAW Pres. Walter Reuther has pointed out that "GM cannot live divorced from the rest of the industry."

Under the present GM agreement, a 3c hourly increase automatically goes into effect May 29. In addition, wages rise or fall (but no more than 5c) in line with the cost-of-living index. The recent decline in the index is expected to bring a wage cut of 2 or 3c next month at GM.

If the union wins increases and pension and social security benefits from Ford and Chrysler, Reuther said, GM will be presented with the "whole package." The UAW, however, will abide by its agreement with GM, he said, in case the company refuses to talk wages.

At a bargaining conference attended by union officials and members last week, the UAW contract program for its 900,000 workers was mapped out.

The union will ask a monthly pension of at least $100 for workers aged 60 or over at Ford and Chrysler will receive the same demand when its 2-year contract opens for wages June 15.

The UAW will also seek to translate workers' buying power in terms of 1946 dollars before OPA was scrapped. This, according to Reuther, would require an 8 or 10c hourly wage hike.

Steel Union Asks Pay Hike On U. S. Work

The CIO Steelworkers last week urged the Government to raise the required minimum wage in plants working on government contracts to $1.23 everywhere except in 12 Southern states. For the South the union asked a $1.08½ minimum.

In another category the union is asking that the hourly rate be set at $1.18½ in the North and at $1.04 in the South. Only a comparatively few such as janitors, cleaners, watchmen and starting apprentices, are in this classification.

The present minimum rates in the industry, set by the Wage-Hour Administrator under provisions of the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act, were fixed 10 years ago at 45c in the South and 62½c elsewhere.

Rates requested by the union are the minimum now actually being paid in steel. The industry, nevertheless, is fighting the proposed boost.

Rubber Talks To Open

A 25c HOURLY boost and pensions will be asked of the "Big Four" rubber companies when the CIO Rubber Workers swing into action three months from now.

Goodrich will lead off for the industry on May 23, expiration date of the present contract. The other industry-wide agreements will reopen only for wages—Firestone on June 14, Goodyear on June 17, and U. S. Rubber on July 1.

Addressing the union's 164 delegates to an Intl. Policy Committee meeting in Cleveland, O., last week, URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster emphasized that "most of the companies we deal with are abundantly able to restore any losses which our people have suffered in their living standards to a new higher level."

He quoted "Big Four" profits in the rubber industry as netting $100 million last year — 120% greater than the 1940 level, which he described as a "peacetime high."

Other goals to be sought in bargaining by URW this year are health and welfare programs, the six-hour day, the union shop, elimination of area differentials and inclusion of Canadian locals in future bargaining with major companies.

The move toward a shorter work day, said Buckmaster, stems from the union's traditional six-hour day policy, plus recent widespread layoffs in the industry. The shorter hours, he said, would help put back on the job "many workers now unemployed."

Seek Adjustments

The Natl. Maritime Union, which last year narrowly averted a nationwide strike, will this year seek to adjust manning scales and existing salary inequities.

Present wage scales, said NMU Pres. Joseph Curran, do not take into consideration the varying talents of seagoing men.

In addition, the union will seek to streamline the present arbitration procedure, in order to cut red tape and bring speedier settlements, Curran announced.

GOOD WORDS, MR. PRESIDENT

President Truman talked in spades when he attacked the "one-sided barrage of propaganda" that big business has been promoting against the Fair Deal program as a whole and the Taft-Hartley repeal bill in particular.

He did it again when he pointed out that "the special interests are using every trick they can think of to defeat our labor policy."

And he spoke an all too evident truth when he noted that "there are no full page ads on our side . . . all we have on our side is the people."

We're glad to see that the President is determined to "enact the program to which we are committed."

What the President said, badly needed saying.

It should shake the cockiness of many Republicans in Washington who seem to have developed the idea that the GOP's do-nothing candidates won the election. It should also remind a good many Democrats—particularly from the southern wing of the party—that Dixiecrat do-nothing ideas did not win election endorsement.

With the words of the President ringing in their ears, the Democratic majority in Congress should act quickly and forthrightly to enact the Fair Deal program.

And we hope that the people—the people who can't buy those full page ads—will let the Senators and Congressmen hear their clamor for speedy action. ★ ★ ★

SHOE'S ON THE OTHER FOOT

Somehow, those newspaper editorial writers who talk so learnedly about "union irresponsibility" never seem to be much interested when a clear-cut case of corporation finagling comes to light.

When a union of 200 members goes on strike, any editorial writer worth his salt can talk knowingly about "loss to the entire community."

But when a corporation destroys 10,000 jobs, permanently, that always seems to be just "the normal workings of our free enterprise system."

Thus, we haven't seen very many angry editorials about the speculative activities of one Mr. Royal Little, who closed down his Textron, Inc., plant in Nashua, N. H., last September and left thousands of workers jobless. There hasn't been much criticism of a loophole-ridden tax law which allowed Mr. Little to keep his speculative profits in "charitable trusts," free from the inroads of normal corporation taxes.

A Senate committee headed by Sen. Tobey (R., N.H.) has investigated Textron's monkey business and put the blame squarely where it lies—on corporation irresponsibility and on weak-kneed tax laws.

Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers Union is justifiably angry at what Textron's irresponsible policies have done to the lives of thousands of Nashua textile families.

He's also correct when he says a "remedy must be found, not directed at one company alone, but the thousands of others which have adopted the same methods, or which might do so in the future."

Our Important Economic Tripod

Three-Way Program Needed To Help World Trade And Recovery

"ORDERLY and expanding international trade" can contribute to economic stability throughout the world and help "extend the frontiers of democracy," the CIO Economic Outlook has pointed out in a discussion of Labor's Stake in Economic Foreign Policy.

The Outlook — published by CIO's Dept. of Education & Research voiced support of the European Recovery Program, extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, and U. S. adoption of the Charter for an International Trade Organization.

These and other measures to stimulate international trade, the Outlook declared, will contribute to the "establishment of economic conditions that will enable democracy to survive."

At home, the Outlook pointed out, at least 2.5 million non-agricultural jobs were directly dependent on U. S. export trade during 1947—a three-fold increase from 1939.

"But American labor also benefits from imports," the Outlook pointed out. "Our huge American industrial machine could not operate at present levels without raw materials supplied by other countries."

REDUCED imports of many types of raw materials would reduce industrial production, create unemployment and raise prices.

The Outlook warned that "a sharp reduction in American foreign trade, both export and import, would reverberate throughout the entire domestic economy and would make it impossible to maintain full employment and high living standards in this country.

"The best way to maintain American export trade is to encourage economic recovery abroad.

"That is one reason why the CIO supports the European Recovery Program. Without European recovery, there can be no permanent world recovery — because Europe is the keystone in the world's economic arch."

But revived European economic systems will be unable to sell their products effectively on the world markets, unless ERP is "supplemented" by an extended reciprocal trade agreements program and the ITO Charter.

Both programs, the Outlook added, "are intended to establish trading conditions that make for good world markets for all nations. Together with ERP, "they represent the tripod of U. S. economic foreign policy. If one leg of the tripod weakens, the entire structure is shaken."

REDUCTION of tariff barriers will not permit this country to be flooded with cheap foreign goods, the Outlook said, "since our competitive strength is due to the efficiency of American labor and industry in relation to abundant natural resources and a larger domestic market."

It noted that the output of an American industrial worker in the prewar years was more than twice that of his British counterpart, and said "postwar comparisons would be even more striking."

American workers and consumers directly benefit by "import competition" to the degree it "helps to control monopolies, and helps to keep our economy healthy."

The Charter of the Intl. Trade Organization helps international commerce by establishing trade rules among nation and by establishing international machinery to settle trade disputes.

EQUALLY important, the Charter "recognizes another basic problem of profound implication for the future of mankind," the Outlook added. "This is the problem of economically under-developed countries . . .

"From the U. S. point of view, there is every reason to improve the lot of the under-developed countries. Developed countries mean better markets for our exports . . .

"As the under-developed countries improve their economic conditions, wage levels in these countries rise. An improvement in the lot of labor in such countries, accompanied by a strengthing of trade union movements, makes for fairer conditions of international trade competition among all countries."

"The struggle to maintain and extend the frontiers of domocracy is more than a political battle," the Outlook concluded. "Economic well being is a prerequisite of political stability and the extension of individual liberty.

"Only as we build toward world-wide economic recovery and permanent prosperity, to which orderly and expanding international trade makes a major contribution, can the battle against political repression be won."

"A little recession would be a good thing—it'd take a little fat off those guys down on the assembly line."

Offer $1,000 For Thesis

THE Sidney Hillman Foundation is offering a $1000 prize for a thesis on trade union development, race relations or world peace. The thesis should also include related educational, economic and political problems.

The CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers established the foundation in memory of Hillman who led the union for 32 years until his death in 1946.

The author must have written the thesis for a Ph. D., or must have obtained such a degree or must be employed by a recognized university in the United States or Canada in a teaching or research capacity requiring scholastic requirements worthy of a Ph. D.

The thesis must be forwarded to the Sidney Hillman Foundation, Inc., 15 Union Square, New York 3, N. Y. by the dean of a graduate school faculty. It must be in the hands of the foundation by July 1, 1949.

The foundation will publish the thesis.

TWUA Has Pension Plan

PRES. EMIL RIEVE of the CIO Textile Workers has announced that the union has adopted a pension program covering all its employes.

The program will be financed by joint contributions from the employes of the union. Back service credits for present employes will be met out of union funds.

The plan sets a retirement age of 65, at which time employes will receive an annual pension of 1.5% of their average yearly salary for each year of service. In other words, an employe retiring at 65 after 30 years' service will receive a pension amounting to 45% of his average salary. Retirement as early as age 55 is permitted, but at a lower benefit rate.

"I hope that ultimately the entire textile industry will follow the example TWUA has set in its own role of employer, and provide adequate retirement plans for all workers," Rieve said.

Democracy Abroad Can't Flourish On Base Of Corruption

By MICHAEL ROSS
CIO Director of International Affairs

AT the CIO convention in Portland last year, Justice William Douglas of the U. S. Supreme Court presented some vigorous ideas about the role of labor unions in developing the "human welfare" state.

Justice Douglas has pointed out more recently, in a speech in Los Angeles, that the real victory of democracy will be won not on military battlefields but "in the factories and the rice fields of the world . . . When we prop up governments that are self-seeking, corrupt or fascist, we lose ground in the world-wide struggle against Communism."

It is no secret that our government has been bewildered or bewitched into supporting many such anti-democratic regimes. A look around the world shows many danger lights blinking in our faces. If these situations are not cleared up, our troubles will be compounded as time moves on.

Editor "Pete" Swim of The CIO News has been reporting from Europe in these pages that Marshall Plan dollars alone cannot help the people of France or Italy. Fundamental social and economic reforms —affecting both the "ill-housed, ill-nourished" city workers and the poverty-stricken peasants—are needed at once.

IN Greece, where we have poured in several hundred million dollars, the well-informed London "Economist" complains of inefficiency and dishonesty—of corruption among the handful of Greek millionaires and bitter repression of Greek workers and farmers. Greece, the "Economist" points out, needs honest government officials "more interested in work than in speeches."

In Germany, numerous CIO observers have found the trade unions and the democratic political groups struggling against tremendous odds—not the least of which is the unwillingness or the inability of many American occupation officials to recognize the difference between an honest democrat and an ex-Nazi fawning on the occupation forces for favor and privilege.

In Germany, a focal point in the world-wide campaign for democratic supremacy, the cartels are rebuilding—and the cartels offer no decent alternative to Communism for the German people.

During the past year, military cliques have taken over a half-dozen Latin American countries. Do these groups, whose regimes rest on armed force and exploitation of people already living on sub-human standards, have the power to rally Latin Americans to the banner of our democracy? Obviously not.

IN the long run, if we keep tolerating this type of dictatorial nonsense, our influence will be lost. And the Communists will be around waiting to take over the leadership of the people.

This is no idle speculation. It is happening now in China. For years the Kuomintang leadership maintained dictatorial control. It fought the Communists and, with varying degrees of honesty and effectiveness, fought the Japanese invaders.

But Chiang Kai-Shek's government has never seriously tried to solve the economic and social problems of China's scores of millions of hungry men and women. In fact, the dictatorship cracked down on its own non-Communist liberal wing, whenever that "loyal opposition" suggested land reforms or toleration of independent democratic unions.

Thus the "non-Communist left" in China is almost non-existent. It has little strength, few ideas and no following. So the Chinese Communists, like the army of Joshua at Jericho, have blown their trumpets—and China's largest cities have fallen into their hands.

Today American policy in the Far East is at the end of a blind alley. The Communists are on the march, and the opposition—short-sighted, corrupt and disunited —cannot rally the people. American democrats can only hope that China's Communist regime will prove to be an improvement over its Moscow model.

But we in the CIO must insist, as Justice Douglas has urged, that American influence should be used to encourage democracy and progress. If it is not, the day will come as it has in China, when the people who should be our friends no longer listen to us.

THE growth and development of independent trade unions will guarantee a sure base for the spread of democracy and the checking of totalitarianism. This does not mean that we should lend support to any group of Communists or terrorists which disguises itself as a trade union. In Greece, the Middle East and in Asia, too many political adventurers are seeking the protective coloring afforded by the union card.

American influence can be used, before the peoples turn in despair to the totalitarians, for social reforms in Europe; for self-government in areas such as Indonesia and Indo China.

We cannot afford to allow great wealth to control corrupt officials in Greece, or a restored cartel system to rule Germany through a subservient government machinery.

Unless we move in the direction of inspiring fundamental reforms, our billions of ECA dollars will fail, we will lose the struggle to inspire the minds of people who want justice, dignity and a little economic security.

'DREAM' PICTURE

15 Leaders Tell: 'Why I'm In The Labor Movement'

"WHY I AM in the Labor Movement" is a stimulating symposium by 15 labor leaders.

Marion H. Hedges who wrote the preface and the conclusion points out:

"Quite frankly seven, nearly half of them, admit social and religious motivation . . . All of them have a consiousness of social usefulness, using the labor movement as a buttress against anti-social passions, or as an instrument of reform . . .

"It is now no longer enough merely to make a contribution to democracy by indirect or unconscious means. Labor must . . . become the principal bearer of the democratic tradition."

Hedges was an official of the AFL Electrical Workers before he held his present post with the Economic Recovery Administration.

EIGHT MEMBERS of the CIO family have contributed to the book—CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Research Director Solomon Barkin of the Textile Workers; Assistant CIO Director of Research Katherine P. Ellickson; Vice Pres. Sander Genis of the Clothing Workers; Clinton S. Golden, former assistant to the president of the Steelworkers and now adviser on labor policy, Economic Cooperation Administration; Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council; Ted F. Silvey, on leave from the CIO headquarters staff as executive assistant to the ECA labor advisers, and Pres. Willard S. Townsend of the Transport Service Employes.

Carey emphasizes the common good:

"While CIO members may appear to reap the benefits of collective bargaining activities, it will be found invariably that the common good has been made a basic premise of every specific program . . .

"Unemployment, limited seasonal employment, low wages and high prices are as disastrous to the common good as a nation-wide tornado, earthquake or fire, except that unemployment and the two other evils do not result from the working of natural forces."

PRESERVATION and enhancement of "freedom, liberty and democratic and human values" is a theme that runs through Golden's article. He also places emphasis on the spiritual side of the movement:

"I am in the labor movement because it offers a means of achieving human brotherhood. I agree with Philip Wylie that today 'Human brotherhood is not a dream but man's last passionate necessity'."

One of the best articles by AFL members is that of Nelson H. Cruikshank who concludes that "the implications of the movement lead inevitably to social change."

CRUIKSHANK goes a little further and says that the limited objectives of the movement lead "inevitably into consumer protection and political action."

Hedges looks upon the movement as the "principal bearer of the democratic tradition."

It seems then that this stimulating book poses other questions. How much social change and how much democracy? What kind of democracy? F.R.

Hearings End On T-H

fry as Republic Steel, Inland Steel, J. I. Case, Allis Chalmers, Freuhauf Trailers, etc.

Ingles is also chairman of the Committee for the Preservation of the Taft-Hartley Act—in fact, he's a one-man committee.

7. Sens. Morse and Irving Ives (R., N. Y.) were rushing in with a new labor bill reported to be somewhere between T-H and the Thomas Bill.

8. Morse, in a public statement assailed the NAM and other business groups as using "Judas-like" tactics in their desire to retain T-H and branded them "un-Christian."

However, Morse at the same time praised Sen. Taft for his "compromising" attitude during the hearings. (Such an attitude on Taft's part seemed to have escaped the sight of others at the hearings.)

So that was the situation as the Senate Committee hearings came to an end. Last word was put in by Chm. Thomas.

The word: "adjournment."

Now let's get back to witness:

Leiserson: 'I Just Think T-H No Good'

Dr. Leiserson, who came to Washington from Chicago, where he is serving on a mediation panel on the rail unions' 40-hour week plea, puffed on a pipe throughout his T-H testimony.

He was contemptuous of T-H.

"I just think T-H is no good," is how he summed up his stand.

Right at the start of the testimony (he was the last scheduled witness), he indorsed S-249, the Thomas Bill.

"S-249 is the kind of a bill we need at this time. T-H needs to be repealed.

The Wagner act established a Government policy of collective bargaining. T-H is on a bad track. It starts with the theory that you can define details of a particular situation."

He was critical of employers.

"Too many of them take the attitude that collective bargaining is a union policy only. If America is to remain free, collective bargaining must be a Government policy."

Leave it to the courts? No, said Leiserson, that doesn't work.

HE DIDN'T think the Government should do the collective bargaining. The Thomas Bill is sound in this respect, he went on. "Main trouble with the Wagner Act was it took the attitude that management and labor were going to 'live happily ever after.'"

Leiserson said he was happy that a mediation system is contained in S-249. Sen. Donnell interrupted to say that there was also a mediation system in T-H. Leiserson quickly shot back. "Yes, there is, and it's a good one until it comes to the emergency situation provisions. They are terrible. The Thomas Bill corrects that."

When Donnell asked him whether or not he thought the Mediation and Conciliation Board should be returned to the Labor Dept. (as S-249 proposes), this was Leiserson's reply:

"Yes, the proper place is the Labor Dept.—for two reasons:

1. Conciliation services have been traditionally in that department. I find it hard to believe that Cy Ching (head of Mediation) would be less partial if he were in the Labor Dept. Also, this would be in keeping with the Hoover Commission's theory that there are too many independent agencies. (T-H set up the mediatiion unit as an independent agency.)

2. "I think it is unwise for the President to have to appoint emergency boards. They should be appointed by the Secy of Labor."

Leiserson denounced the T-H provision calling for a vote on the management's last offer before striking. "Why didn't that also include a vote on the union's last offer?" he wanted to know.

Experience in all countries shows that mediation prevents more strikes than some forms of compulsion such as an injunction, Leiserson said.

He hit at the unfairness of the injunction provision of T-H. "In the atomic energy dispute, the union (AFL), offered to arbitrate the issues. Yet, an injunction was taken against the union—which was making an effort to reach a peaceful solution — and not against the company, which was not."

Asked what he thought of T-H's oblique references to feather-bedding, he said "feather-bedding is a term used by employers to define pay for work not done. But, how can one draw a sharp line? Some work not done must be paid for, such as being ordered to report at a certain time and then being sent home.

"After all, lawyers are paid for just sitting here at these hearings and listening.

"Why was nothing done about the stretch-out, a constant issue in industrial relations? Both are better settled by collective bargaining."

ASKED BY Sen. Neely if T-H has provoked labor peace or unrest, Leiserson said "it has worsened labor relations and caused confusion.

"Sometimes a strike promotes peace, you know, but this law doesn't."

There is too much tendency to consider a labor union wicked per se, he said. The Government has an Administrative Procedures Act which defines how departments, in general, should be run. Why does the department affecting labor relations have to have a different rule, governing the office of the general counsel?

Sen. Taft then blew his top. His face turned red, his voice rose as he screamed at the witness: "There is no prejudice against labor in T-H."

Leiserson took a pull on his pipe and replied calmly. "Yes, there is. I was considered impartial when I served on the Railway Mediation Board. Did I become impartial the moment I joined NLRB? This law glorifies individual bargaining."

Taft demanded examples of individual bargaining.

Leiserson: "You wouldn't have witnesses down here attempting raise the minimum wage to 75c hour if T-H hadn't harmed col tive bargaining."

Taft pounded the table shouted in a trembling voice: " witness is making an utter r representation of the intention the effect of the law!"

Taft left the room and did return until after Leiserson finish

Leiserson pointed out that U. S. Government has spent a of money to organize farmers i co-ops. "There is no objection that," he said. "But, suppose appropriated money to orga workers into unions? There'd tainly be a howl."

DONNELL by grace of time, tributed by Sen. Morse, the last to interrogate Leisers He didn't get anything to m him happy.

Though time was precious, just didn't know how to ask short question. At one point said. "I call your attention to t which of course you know of."

When Leiserson said that cert things concerning labor should be handled politically, Donn cocked his ears at the sound of word "political" and asked: "Th you oppose political expenditu by unions?"

"No, I don't, it's not the sa thing," replied Leiserson. "I thi it very proper for unions to enga in political action."

"But," said Donnell. "Suppo you have a union which contr utes to the Republicans and a of Democratic members object?"

"I think you'll find that on son thing like T-H, both Republic and Democratic members will

The subject was "Labor Legislation", with Carey naturally against T-H and Reilly naturally for it.

Gerard Reilly is now Washington lobbyist for General Motors, General Electric and the Printing trades. GM pays him a retainer of $3,000 a month. GE's fee is not yet specified. He gets several hundred a month from the printing trade.

No Southern Chivalry For Neely

HE IS A CHUNKY, well-barbered, well - clothed man.

And, with a straight face he says he is worried about a possibility of a totalitarian state. How would we get that totalitarian state? By repealing T-H, he says.

He is Frank A. Constangy, who testified before the Senate Labor Committee in the name of Southern cotton manufacturers.

He ran into stormy weather almost as soon as he sat down. Sen. Neely asked him if it is being panies he represented. He didn't know how many.

Neely: "Do you try to halt unionization?"

Costangy: "I represent people who do."

Neely: "Then you do yourself."

The West Virginia Senator asked him if he knew anything about the Trumpeter, a notorious anti-Negro, anti-Jew, anti-Catholic paper issued in the South by a "Parson Jack."

Costangy said he'd heard of it. Neely asked him if it is being used to fight organization. Costangy hemmed and hawed, then said he'd heard of the Trumpeter being used against unions.

Neely: "Can you cite me a single instance of a union issuing literature with anti-racial and religious bias?"

Taft tried to help Costangy, but the witness finally admitted he knew of none.

Neely then paid a glowing tribute to Van A. Bittner, director of the CIO's Operation Dixie.

glad to join in okaying the contribution to fight it," the witness replied.

Donnell wanted to know about strikes against the Government. "shouldn't they be abolished?" Leiserson reminded him that courts make a distinction between Government as government, and Government operating as an industry.

Suddenly, Donnel's 20 minutes were up and he still had a lot of questions written on paper. He looked sad.

Van Arkel:

T-H Partial To Bosses

Gerhard Van Arkel, now a mem- of the Washington law firm of Van Arkel and Kaiser, has represented the AFL Typographical Union (ITU) in its long fight against the publishers' attempt to wreck the union with Taft-Hartleyism.

He told the committee that if "T-H had merely repealed the Wagner Act, labor organizations might have maintained themselves through their economic strength, as they did before passage of the Wagner Act.

"But it went beyond this," Van Arkel said, "to throw a Federal protection about asserted employer 'rights,' the exercise of which could be used to destroy unions, and the law denied unions power to retaliate."

Three sections of the Act, Van Arkle said, "told employers that they had the right to replace union men with non-union men; . . . that they had a free hand in assigning their work to non-union men; and that employers have full discretion to require union men to work on struck goods or non-union made products.

"Unions were given no corresponding rights; on the contrary, they were effectively deprived of power to resist efforts to destroy them.

"The assurance of Federal support in union-busting activities is valuable to employers even where not exercised, for it enjoins unions to tread softly and speak meekly lest these powers be invoked."

Closed shop: "The question to be asked is: 'have union men the right to refuse to work with non-union men'? Clearly, they have the individual right to refuse. Whether they have the right to strike, as opposed to quitting, in concert is an open question.

"T-H purports to lay on employers a duty to hire without discrimination, i. e., compels them to hire non-union men. This poses a painful dilemma where compliance with the statute may entail loss of an experienced and satisfactory work force.

"The legal rights of all parties cannot, I suggest, be reconciled except by restoring the right of employers and unions to agree to the closed shop."

Injunctions under 10 (j): "The case against the use of the injunction in labor disputes was adequately, and one thought finally, established when the Norris-LaGuardia act was adopted. These facts warrant emphasis:

"1. The pre - Norris - LaGuardia evil of issuing injunctions only on a prima facie or "probable' case is not only restored, but made mandatory by statute.

"2. There is no practicable appeal from such injunctions; the fact they must be complied with pending appeal, coupled with the provision that the reaching of a decision by the NLRB will vacate the injunction and render the case 'moot' effectively precludes appeals.

"3. Since they normally dispose of the immediate issues in controversy they delay rather than accelerate NLRB action.

"4. A single individual, with unreviewable authority to issue complaints and petition for injunctions is empowered effectively to police most management and labor conduct.

"The threat of the exercise of that power is usually quite as effective as its actual exercise."

Union rules: He listed 30 union "laws" of the ITU which the NLRB general counsel has attacked as "illegal" under T-H.

The ITU "laws" hit by Denham included such long-established union practices as rules governing apprentice training, provision that contract proposals be approved by the president of the ITU, covering hiring of substitutes, establishing priority rights, requiring that vacations are not to be eliminated through arbitration, and the like.

Van Arkel quoted Justice Brandeis in the Stonecutters decision: "The national association had the duty to determine so far as its members were concerned, what policy should be."

"It is of utmost importance that 'fundamental matters' not be relinquished," Van Arkel said.

"First, for reasons of internal union policy; if members are to have a voice in these rules, they must be determined by a vote of the members and not be negotiating committees in unrelated bargaining sessions throughout the country.

ITU "laws" included in the union constitution can be changed only by referendum vote of the entire membership. Other "laws" can be changed by the annual convention, delegates to which are elected by referendum vote of local membership.

"Second, for reasons of practical trade unionism; the effect of compelling each local to negotiate separately is to restore the Ball 'industry-wide bargaining' amendment which was defeated in the Senate. The maintenance of uniform and stable conditions cannot be achieved under such a rule."

Separation of functions: These provisions have: (1) made of the NLRB a mere appendage of the office of the general counsel; (2) encouraged the taking of extreme and irrational positions by the office of the general counsel, and (3) over-emphasized the position of lawyers in the handling of labor matters, Van Arkel said.

Rules of agency: "The changes in rules of agency introduced by Section 2 (13) of T-H has had the predicted results.

"The NLRB has laid down the rule that a union may be held responsible even though it had 'specifically forbidden the act in question'; it has held an international union responsible for the acts of others because of the 'critical fact' that it had sponsored a strike; and the NLRB appears to have adopted the rule that a union calling a strike is responsible for acts committed in the course of picketing or of any related activity sponsored, supervised or incited by it.

"Thus, we return to that era before 1932 (year of the Norris-LaGuardia Act) when one judge was led to inquire: 'Is it the law that a presumption of guilt attaches to a labor union organization?'"

Van Arkel declared: "I cannot stress too strongly that the effect of T-H is not revealed by reported cases.

"Employer attorneys have exhausted their considerable ingenuity in claiming contract proposals, strikes, boycotts and all other forms of union activity to be illegal.

"These specious arguments have met with wide success, for most unions cannot afford legal representation and, even where they can, the provisions of the law are so vague, contradictory and confused that even lawyers cannot give sure answers.

"Agents of the NLRB, in an understandable desire to settle cases against unions, have, I am confident, induced unions, under threat of prosecution, to forego conduct which any fair observer would feel to be clearly lawful even under the act."

VAN ARKEL made a deep impression on the committee and on the spectators.

In his ad lib comments, he declared: "T-H can't be discussed piece by piece, line by line, in isolated parts; it has to be considered in its total impact."

This was a shot at Sen. Donnell and others, who tried time and time again to get witnesses to say some section of the law was okay, and then to cry: "See, they say the law is bad, yet they back this provision. Therefore, the whole law must be good!"

Referring to the NLRB ruling in the Hodgson case (barring union free speech in a secondary boycott), Van Arkel said:

"Under this, employers have the right of free speech to the point of harassing workers and unions, but free speech does not apply to workers.

Sen. Morse intervened: "This matter of free speech can't be dealt with lightly these days in America. When we as a people have lost our free speech, we have lost our freedom. American labor can't laugh this off.

"They'd better dig in now. If they can't have the law repealed, they'd better see to it that their freedom is restored through the ballot box."

Good Boy

When Sen. Donnell pressed him to say that some features of T-H are fair, Dr. Leiserson replied:

"I remember once that a youth was being tried for murder. The defense said he had been a regular Sunday school attendant. But, that didn't make him a good boy."

In A Nutshell

"The assurance of federal support in union-busting activities is valuable to employers, even where not exercised—for it enjoins unions to tread softly and speak meekly lest these powers be invoked."—Gerhard Van Arkle, former NLRB counsel, at Senate Labor Committee hearings.

The few people who were able to get into the midget hearing room of the Senate Labor Committee are hoping and praying that the House will do better.

Louisiana CIO Pledges Intensified PAC Work

DELEGATES to the second annual convention of the Louisiana CIO Council pledged themselves to work harder on political action in their state, which gave 10 presidential electoral votes to Dixiecrat J. Strom Thurmond. The convention was held at New Orleans.

Tilford Dudley, assistant CIO-PAC director, stressed the importance of block, precinct and ward work in building any kind of effective political organization.

He charged that the record of Rep. Felix Edward Hebert (D. La.) has been consistently against the best interests of Louisiana's working people.

In a fiery speech, which brought the delegates to their feet in a rising ovation, Dudley blasted W. H. "Little Eva" Talbot, local politico who is now a member of the Democratic National Committee, despite the fact that he is recognized as a Dixiecrat leader.

Dudley also warned against attempts to split CIO membership on questions of race or color.

"You can be sure," he declared, that the people who do this have no other purpose than to weaken your local union, to weaken your bargaining power, to weaken you as a political force—and to enrich themselves. Don't fall for it!"

JOHN BROPHY, director of CIO councils, told the delegates that when CIO unions work together, through their councils, to better community conditions, they are "making the job of organizing all workers" an easier one.

"In addition to carrying out national CIO policy on questions of national interest and working to better conditions in your community and your state," he declared, "you also bear the burden of doing a good public relations job in your city and your state."

John Gibson, assistant secretary of labor and a member of the CIO Auto Workers, received an enthusiastic response from the 250 delegates and their guests. He assailed the newspapers coverage of hearings before the Senate Labor Committee on the repeal of the Taft-Hartley law as "the most-biased—the most one-sided— in the nation's history."

Director Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee urged local unions to give more aid to the southern organizing campaign.

The convention adopted a number of resolutions designed to carry out national CIO policy with regard to housing, labor legislation education and other matters.

Spurred by the results of the two-day educational conference planned and carried out by the National CIO's department of education and research, held immediately preceding the convention, delegates approved a state program on labor education to be carried out by the council in cooperation with international unions.

OFFICERS ELECTED at the closing session and installed immediately are Antoine Songy, Packinghouse Workers, president; Fritz Flebbe, Brewery Workers, vice - president; and Atwood Theriot, Chemical Workers, secretary-treasurer.

Other speakers included Mayor Chep Morrison, New Orleans, who paid tribute to organized labor for its interest in the community affairs and for the industrial peace in Louisiania's biggest city during the past three years.

The delegates also heard Edwin I. Soule, state commissioner of labor, who outlined labor's gains on the legislative front; Lieutenant-Governor William J. Dodd, R. E. Farr, director, District 36, Steelworkers; W. W. Allen, director, District 4, Oil Workers; William J. Rogers, regional director, Wage and Hour and Public Contracts division; U. S. Department of Labor, Martin Wagner, president, Chemical Workers; John Green, president, Shipbuilding Workers; Fred C. Pieper, national CIO representative and former Louisiana state director.

Rieve Says

Textron Is Shown As Shirker

THE REAL issue in the Senate investigation of Textron, Inc., is corporate responsibility to the workers and the community, Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers said last week.

This issue, he said, should not be overlooked because of an argument over the motives and tactics of the inquiry.

Rieve referred to a recent report by Sen. Charles W. Tobey (R., N. H.) to the Senate Foreign and Interstate Commerce Committee. Tobey was chairman of a sub-committee which investigated the operations of Textron, a large textile firm.

Tobey's report was critical of the relationships between the company and a number of so-called charitable trusts established by Royal Little, Textron president. The senator assailed the tax exemption claimed by the trusts as unsound and unfair.

RIEVE SAID Tobey's report confirmed charges made by TWUA in requesting the inquiry last September, after Textron had announced the impending shutdown of its Nashua, N. H. mills. The tax avoidance issue stressed by Tobey is important, Rieves said.

"But taxes are only a part of the picture," he went on. "The real issue, as TWUA sees it, is corporate responsibility. A responsible corporation does not seek to avoid its obligations to government in the form of taxes. But what is more vital, neither does a responsible corporation utterly ignore its obligations to the communities where it operates and the workers who serve it. . .

"A remedy must be found, not directed at one company alone, but at the thousands of others which have adopted the same methods or which might do so in the future."

Election March 4 At Big Wilson Plant

Election date for determining the union representing some 3,000 employes of Wilson & Co. at Chicago has been set for March 4 the CIO Packinghouse Workers has announced. The election will be conducted by the NLRB.

During the nationwide meat strike called by the UPWA last year, the Wilson company rescinded its contract with the union and has refused to bargain for any new agreement.

The UPWA is seeking to reestablish its bargaining rights at the six Wilson plants in order to negotiate a master agreement for the production and maintenance employes. The UPWA won in NLRB elections at Los Angeles and Omaha. Elections are scheduled to be held at other Wilson plants within the next month.

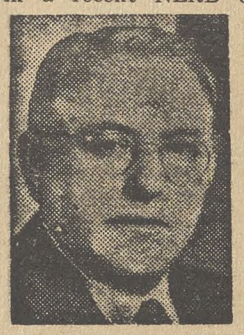
Sam B. Eubanks, Executive Vice President of the CIO Newspaper Guild, reports the following election results: An election covering all Guild eligibles on the North Platte, Nebr., Bulletin was won by a vote of 17 to 2. In the Wide World Photo Service department of the Associated Press an election was won by a vote of 13 to 1.

CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler announces that in a recent NLRB election among the station porters of the Los Angeles Union Passenger Terminal, the porters voted 76 for UTSE-CIO, 52 for BRSC-AFL, and 1 ballot was void. This victory is due to the fine work of James Grey and his committee. In an election at the U. S. Spring and Bumper Plant the workers voted 64 for UAW-CIO, to 1 for no union. Credit for this victory goes to Manuel Garriga, Business Agent of Local 509, UAW, and Donald Garriga of the regional staff.



CIO Reg. Dir. Frank J. Bender reports the following election results: In an election in the Baltimore plant of the National Gypsum Co., of 204 votes cast, 151 were for UGC&CWA, 45 for AFL. CIO Field Rep. Robert J. Brylke conducted the organizing and election campaigns, assisted by Joe Wright and Wesley Dunningan. In an election held among the power-house employes of three plants of the West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co., the workers voted 118 to 13 in favor of UPA-CIO. Harry Scott was in charge.

A. T. Stephens, Director of Organization, UPWA-CIO, announces the following elections: Ungerer and Co., New Jersey, UPWA 13; no union 2; eligible 16. Warner-Hudnut, New York, UPWA 225; no union 149.

CIO Reg. Dir. James J. Leary announces that in a union security election at the Central Packing Co., Kansas City, Kan., the workers voted 49 to 0 for a union security provision in the contract. UPWA Field Rep. Frank L. Brown was in charge.

Last week the Executive Board of the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, met in Chicago, where plans were laid concerning bringing about a favorable vote of CWA affiliation with the CIO. CIO Regional Directors of the Northwest area were in attendance at the meeting and they will aid in securing the fullest cooperation of the Northwest Telephone organizations to bring about a favorable vote for affiliation with the CIO. The writer also conferred with Anne Benscoter and other officers of the Illinois Telephone Traffic Union.

He went to St. Louis, Mo., where a meeting with ACEW and AUTW, affiliates of TWOC-CIO, and the regional directors of the Southwest area was held, and plans were laid to intensify the campaign in the vote among the telephone workers.

Later in Cleveland, a meeting was held with the officers of the Ohio Federation of Telephone Workers who have voted in convention to join such a merger of telephone unions within the CIO. This independent group is taking a membership vote to ratify participation in such a merger. The Southern Organizing Committee will render every support in this vote among the telephone workers, which of course, is nation-wide.

While in Cleveland, the writer had the honor of installing the newly elected officers of the Cleveland Industrial Union Council. Patrick J. O'Malley has been elected president and James C. Quinn has been elected secretary-treasurer. The autonomy of the council has been restored after being under the administration of the CIO for the past two and a half years. At the first meeting there was a large attendance which pledged to fully support CIO policy.

Plan Court Test Of 'Loyalty' Firing

A court test of the Federal Government's loyalty program which so far has not been challenged legally, was asked last week by attorneys for an employe ordered dismissed by a three-man panel of the loyalty review board.

In a letter to the full membership of the Board, the law firm of Arnold, Fortas & Porter requesting reversal of the panel decision to dismiss Miss Dorothy Bailey, asked:

"May a Federal loyalty board convict and publicly brand a Federal employe as unfit for further Federal service on account of her loyalty in a case where all the uncontradicted testimony in the records shows her reputation has been good, her service efficient and her activities inconsistent with Communist sympathies?"

The lawyers requested that Miss Bailey, who was fired Feb. 9, from her $8,000 a year job as instructor to State employment service officials, be permitted to appear before the board and be represented by counsel. They also asked that the hearing be public.

Miss Bailey, a member of the United Public Workers, was charged with being sympathetic to communism.

ECA Is Helping in Italy But Social Reform Is Needed

By ALLAN L. SWIM

Editor Visits Europe

What's happening to Italy under the European Recovery Program?

Editor Allan L. Swim of The CIO News has been touring Europe in recent weeks for a first-hand view of labor and national problems.

The Italian picture: considerable hardship—need for land reforms—need for economic reforms. And ECA helping where it can.

FOR YEARS there was fascism under a chubby little guy named Mussolini, who bragged to the world that he made the Italian trains run on time.

Then came war, with its bloodshed and suffering.

Out of the two came confusion and the creation of economic and political problems which are directly connected with the efforts of the U. S. to help Europe rehabilitate itself.

Italy is in bad shape. She might be in bankruptcy today—or on the verge of it—had she not been given aid through the Economic Recovery Administration.

About two million Italians are unemployed. There is much poverty. The Communists are strong and active. The non-Communists are not unified. The Italian government is moving slowly on promised social and economic reforms.

And Italy, an overpopulated country, cannot produce from her own land enough to support her people.

ECA OFFICIALS in historic Rome know that they—and the Italians—have a big problem on their hands.

They say, bluntly, that the installation of production machinery and the introduction of modern production techniques will not solve it.

There must be more production, they say, but there must be reforms that will narrow the enormous gap between the wealthy and the extremely poor. The wealthy live in considerable luxury. Some of the poor actually live in caves. Skilled workers can earn only 8 to 10% more than the unskilled.

The Commies are fighting ERP in Italy, as elsewhere in Europe. Their current program is called "non-collaboration." Workers in Red-dominated plants do only what they're specifically instructed to do—and nothing more. They turn on their machines when told to do so—then stand idle until told to begin work. When a specific operation is completed, they remain idle until told to do something else. This cuts sharply into production.

NON-COMMUNIST union groups—though disagreeing on various political issues—are throwing strong support behind the Marshall Plan.

They do this through the ERP Trade Union Advisory Committee, which meets at 5 p. m. each Tuesday to discuss with ECA officials problems confronting the Italian people.

On this committee are:

GIULIO PASTORE, director of the new, "free" General Confederation of Labor (LCGIL), a member of the Chamber of Deputies and a member of the National Council of the Christian Democrats.

ENRICO PARI, member of the the Chamber of Deputies, member of the National Executive Committee of the Republican Party and a vice-secretary of the General Confederation of Labor (CGIL).

GIOVANI CANINI, a vice-secretary of CGIL, member of the Executive Committee of the trade union section of the Saragat Socialists, a Rome city councilman and former secretary of the street car workers' union.

(Pari and Canini, though strongly anti-Communist, still retain their connection with the Communist - dominated CGIL. Pastore broke away from CGIL a comparatively short time ago and began a drive to organize LCGIL, which is designed to operate like American unions — with an economic base and not tied directly to any political party.)

The Trade Union Advisory Committee does not confine its work merely to problems directly affecting organized labor. (The day I sat in on their meeting committee members discussed whether Italian lignite could best be used as a source of fuel or as a commercial fertilizer.)

About 47% of the Italian population is directly dependent upon agriculture, and farm workers—like factory workers—are unionized.

Various political groups say that the big farms, some of which contain as many as 2500 acres, should be chopped up into smaller farms. There is considerable disagreement on just how this should be done.

The Italian government already has adopted a program which ECA representatives refer to as "shoot or give up the musket." Under this reclamation plan owners must improve their land or it will be taken over by the government. Farm experts believe that many owners will have to sell part of their land to finance the improvements required on what they retain.

Italy, as a direct result of ECA funds, intends to reclaim about 3.5 million acres of land that is now idle or is producing poorly. About 1.5 million of these acres will be reclaimed through irrigation.

ECA is attempting to introduce new techniques, such as the planting of hybrid corn (which has a much higher production than Italian corn), crop rotation, the use of tractors instead of oxen, and increased use of fertilizer.

There undoubtedly will be much opposition to the farm modernization program unless it can be demonstrated there will be jobs for farm workers who are replaced by machines.

ECA's official position is that such things as division of large farms into small ones, poses a political problem which the Italians themselves must solve. But most of them say privately that land reform is absolutely essential.

THE AVERAGE Italian worker has an extremely hard time making both ends meet financially.

He works hard but earns little. He can afford few of the mechanical devices he helps manufacture. His living quarters are cramped and poorly furnished. And he's also constantly subjected to raging ideological conflicts.

Italy in a sense is only about three years old. Her political institutions and her new way of doing things date back only to the end of the last war.

Openly and underground there is a great struggle for power. This frequently results in violence and there's constant intimidation of workers by the Communists.

So, it was into a confused and confusing economic and political picture that the ECA stepped with a plan designed to help create a self-supporting democracy.

You can see results already—such as operating transportation facilities that would be idle were it not for ECA petroleum, and factory wheels that turn because of ECA material aid.

Everybody familiar with the situation knows there's a rough road ahead. A lot of hard work and intelligent maneuvering on both the economic and ideological fronts will be required to smooth it out.

AGE-OLD METHODS of cultivation are still used through Italy, a nation which does not produce nearly as much food as her people need. America's ECA experts are attempting to get improved agricultural techniques introduced. Above is a typical scene on a large Italian farm.

Murray Wishes New Italian Confederation Success

CIO PRES. PHILIP MURRAY has sent his warm fraternal greetings to the new non-Communist Free Italian General Confederation of Labor.

Murray's message was sent to Giulio Pastore, general secretary of the new group, with headquarters in Rome. Pastore was formerly an opposition leader in the Communist-led General Confederation of Labor.

Murray said the CIO is glad to learn that the new organization "is undertaking an extensive campaign on behalf of free democratic trade unions among the Italian workers.

"We want to assure you that the CIO wishes you every success in your efforts, and believes that the interest of trade unionism throughout the world will be served by your activities.

"We will inform all our affiliated bodies of your campaign and of your need for all the help that can be possibly extended to you."

Mailing address of the new group is: Free Italian General Confederation of Workers, Casella Postale 513, Roma Centro, Rome, Italy.

AFTER NINE DAYS: Intl. Pres. Mike Quill, CIO Transport Workers, removes the "strike captain" button from lapel of Andrew Kaelin, president of TWU Local 234, Philadelphia. The nine-day strike against the Philadelphia Transportation Co. ended when workers voted to accept 8c wage offer. Before the strike PTC refused to budge above 2c an hour.

Transport Gains 8c In Phila. Walkout

PHILADELPHIA'S CIO Transport Workers last week voted by almost six-to-one to accept an 8c hourly wage increase offer, thereby ending a nine-day strike.

The 8c increase represented four times the company's pre-strike offer of 2c, and brought the average for Philadelphia transit workers to $1.43 an hour. This, as TWU. Pres. Michael Quill noted, is only 1c below the New York City bus drivers' rate. "It took you five years to achieve what it took us 15 long years to do," he told the strikers.

Actually, the walkout which had tied up all the city's buses, street cars, subways and elevated lines, ended before the official vote was taken by secret ballot.

At a lively mass meeting on Sunday afternoon some 3000 strikers indicated by a show of hands their willingness to accept what Quill had termed "half a loaf." Only about 25 stood up in opposition to returning to work. Acceptance was recommended by the union's negotiating committee, which included Pres. Quill.

THE Sunday meeting had been called after a meeting Saturday night ended in confusion. Dubbed a "house-party" by Quill, the first gathering rapidly turned into a booing and jeering contest as a vocal minority attempted to drown out speakers favoring acceptance of the company's "package."

The TWU president urged the strikers to accept the compromise as the best that could be obtained from the adamant Philadelphia Transportation Co.

He charged that the PTC, which holds a transit monopoly in the city, had been anxious to force a strike in the midst of its efforts to obtain a fare increase. Thus, he said, the company could build up public sympathy for its fare rise, and shift the blame on the workers.

Major objection to the PTC proposals was the exclusion of improvements in working conditions, including an end to the "split shift," under which some employes must be "on the property" as much as 15 hours a day to work 8 hours. The company had offered to continue negotiations on working conditions if the employes resumed work.

"Your working conditions here are miserable," agreed Quill. The union's negotiators, he said, had "pounded and pounded" on the necessity for working conditions improvements—without success.

"But sometimes," he reminded his listeners, "it is better to take half a loaf, or a quarter of a loaf, than no loaf at all."

Quite a Change

John Hopkins Hall, former labor commissioner of Virginia who aroused the opposition of all arms of organized labor, has landed a new patronage job at Washington as a Senate doorkeeper. The post pays around $3,000 a year, about half what Hall drew as labor commissioner.

N. J. CIO Asks Tax Hearing

THE NEW JERSEY State CIO has called for immediate public hearings before the Legislature reconvenes March 7 on the CIO tax program.

These proposals are designed to yield $47,300,000 by a 4% tax on corporate net profits over $25,000 yearly and permit repeal or reduction of other state and local taxes.

In a letter to State Senate Pres. Alstyne (R-Bergen), Exec. Secy. Stephen J. Moran of the New Jersey State CIO, declared:

"In view of the widespread resentment which has welled up against the gross receipts sales tax, threatening to defeat the bonus referendum in November and in view of the tremendous support for the CIO tax program, we respectfully request that you, as Senate President schedule immediate public hearings on both proposals before the Legislature reconvenes . . ."

He pointed out that the New Jersey State CIO "has not only gone on record for the veterans bonus, but it has vigorously opposed the gross receipts tax on business, which has been suggested to pay off the bonus bonds." Moran said that "we have an alternative tax program which has met tremendous and widespread support throughout the state."

The CIO program embodied in a bill introduced by Sen. Hull (D.) "involves the levying of a 4% tax on the net profits exceeding $25,000 of all New Jersey corporations, except railroads, canals, ferries, etc., which are already heavily taxed.

CONGRATULATIONS: James C. Quinn (r.) new executive secretary of the Cleveland CIO Council, receives congratulations from William F. Donovan, district director of the CIO Steelworkers. Quinn defeated A. E. Stevenson, who held the post for 10 years. The entire right-wing slate was elected. Patrick J. O'Malley of the Auto Workers was elected president.

GUILD AWARD WINNER: Elias A. McQuaid, reporter for the New Hampshire Sunday News, won the 1948 Broun Memorial Award sponsored annually by the CIO Newspaper Guild. The judges found his story uncovering irregularities in the awarding of New Hampshire state contracts "the most outstanding journalistic achievement in the spirit of Heywood Broun."

State Graft Expose Wins Guild's Broun Award

A REPORTER who took a routine assignment on a Manchester, N. H., weekly paper and followed it up to expose granting of $700,000 in state contracts without bids and under questionable circumstances, is the winner of the 1948 Broun Memorial Award.

The award, given annually by the CIO Newspaper Guild, is for the "most outstanding journalistic achievement in the spirit of Heywood Broun," a crusading columnist and founder of the Guild. It carries with it $500 in cash and a Guild citation.

The winner is Elias A. McQuaid, for his work on the New Hampshire News, Manchester, N. H. As a result of his searching stories, which rocked New Hampshire, two public officials have been indicted and the state is suing to recover $250,000 from the former state comptroller for alleged overpayments to a contracting firm, and purchasing methods were revised.

McQuaid is now press attache for the U. S. Embassy in Paris. The New Hampshire News has since been absorbed by the Manchester (N. H.) Union-Leader.

At the same time, five additional $100 awards were made through a fund provided by Robert S. Allen, Washington correspondent and author, who also served as alternate judge.

Three of the special Guild awards were for "examples of distinguished public service," and they went to:

Theodore C. Link, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, for his expose of graft and corruption, vice and gambling in Illinois. The series spotlighted Gov. George Green and Atty.-Gen. George Barrett as being responsible for the breakdown in law enforcement, and led to the defeat of the Green GOP machine at the polls.

Don Magnuson, Seattle Times, for his painstaking work in following up a letter to the editor, to bring justice to a man wrongfully imprisoned for a murder he did not commit. After 13 years in prison, Clarence C. Boggie, an innocent man, was freed.

Drew Pearson, Washington Merry-Go-Round (Bell Syndicate), for a series of columns charging payroll padding and kickbacks to Congressman J. Parnall Thomas (R., N. J.), former chairman of the House Un-American Activities Committee. Thomas is facing trial on the charges.

Other special $100 awards went to:

Alan Barth, Washington Post editorial writer, now a Nieman fellow at Harvard, for distinguished editorial writing. Fourteen of his editorials were submitted, discussing civil liberties problems raised by governmental attempts to deal with the communist threat to national security.

Judges were Bert Andrews, winner of the 1947 award and chief of the New York Herald Tribune Washington bureau; Karin Walsh, Chicago Sun-Times city editor; Nathan Robertson, Washington writer; Herbert Block (Herblock), Washington Post cartoonist. Wade Franklin, of the Chicago Sun-Times, was chairman of the Broun Award committee, and was named chairman again for 1950.

Mich. U. Cancels New Workers' Course

A watered-down Workers Education Service has been cancelled by the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich., after it was found that the program, which had been reinstituted with complete disregard to advice of the WES advisory committee, did not meet the needs of the workers.

The move came as no surprise to union officials. "The University was informed prior to putting the program into effect, that it would meet with failure unless it had labor's support," declared Barney Hopkins, Michigan CIO Secretary-Treasurer.

Act Soon On ERP —Murray

The CIO has called for "unanimous and quick action" by Senate and House foreign affairs committees to report out pending legislation providing funds for the European Recovery Program and the Economic Cooperation Administration.

Pres. Murray, in letters to Chairman Tom Connally of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and Chairman Sol Bloom of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, said the CIO "is wholly committed" to support of the appropriations bill for European recovery.

He described ERP as "the greatest experiment toward peace that has ever been entered upon by any people" and said it is "entirely in keeping with our American traditions of good will and decency."

Recalling CIO's strong endorsement of the European Recovery Program at the 1948 convention last November, Murray said that position "was by no means a new departure in CIO policy.

"We foresaw the necessity of planning for economic recovery of the war-devastated nations in 1942, less than a year after we were forced into the war by the aggressor nations."

The CIO President recalled that Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and a number of CIO vice-presidents have frequently gone to Europe "to lend our cooperation and give encouragement to the labor movements of the nations that had been so fearfully scourged by the destruction of war."

The ECA bill provides over $5 billion to carry out overseas recovery projects for the year beginning July 1. Hearings have been under way for the past few weeks and Pres. Truman last week voiced confidence that ECA would continue until its job is done.

TWUA Names Unit To Study Intl. Pacts

The international executive council of the CIO Textile Workers has set up a committee to establish a union policy on reciprocal trade agreements affecting textile products.

The council went on record against "Chinese wall" tariffs, but warned that the goal of worldwide free trade must be approached gradually and with caution.

In another action, the council voted to hold the union's sixth biennial convention in Boston, Mass., early in May, 1950.

Pres. Emil Rieve has appointed the following TWUA vice presidents to the committee: John Chupka, woolen and worsted director, chairman; Mariano S. Bishop, cotton director, and Herbert W. Payne, synthetic yarn director.

MAP CAMPAIGN: Plans for an organizing drive in North Carolina were made at this meeting at High Point, N. C. Forrest Shuford, North Carolina commissioner of Labor, is speaking. Secy.-Treas. S. H. Dalrymple of the CIO Organizing Committee is fourth from the left in the front row. The meeting was one of a series held in Southern States.

Carey To Senate: Extend Trade Pacts To 1951

UNCLE SAM'S power to negotiate trade agreements and cut international tariff barriers should be extended until 1951, CIO Secy.-Treas. James Carey told the Senate Finance Committee last week.

The bill—designed to strengthen a weak version approved by the 80th Congress—has already been passed in the House. It is a key issue in President Truman's legislative program.

The 80th Congress extended the act for only one year—which makes it difficult to work out necessary long-range commercial and trade programs.

Carey praised the new bill (HR. 1121) for removing many of the "restrictive provisions" written into the law last year.

"It is essential that we reduce the barriers to trade which exist between ourselves and foreign countries so that these countries may export to us, and by so doing, acquire the necessary means of exchange which is so vital for rehabilitation and continuous international trade," the CIO officer said.

He termed the reciprocal agreements "an important cog in our complex domestic economy." However, he went on, the "importance does not stop there. Reciprocal trade agreements play an equally important part in enabling us to carry out our tremendous world responsibilities and commitments under the Economic Cooperation Act (the Marshall Plan) to 'reduce trade barriers.'"

WHY DOES LABOR have such "a direct stake in international trade?" Because Carey told the senators, the United States is a large exporter of products made by American workers and because "our standard of living is, in part, dependent upon importing many commodities from countries abroad."

He sharply criticized those who contend that lower tariffs would reduce American wage levels to those of foreign countries and that a reduced tariff would lead to the flooding of U. S. markets with foreign-made goods.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

(NOTE: Much legislation of interest to labor is still in a preliminary stage, with committee hearings just getting under way. As definite action takes shape in House and Senate, this listing will be expanded.)

6000 to Aid Dixie Drive —Bittner

MOBILIZATION of more than 6,000 Southern CIO members to take their places in the ranks of the Southern Campaign is rapidly becoming a reality, Van A. Bittner, Director of the Southern Organizing Campaign, has announced.

Just returned from the last of a series of state CIO meetings, the drive director declared the new Local Union Organizing Committee movement is sweeping the South like wildfire. These last meetings, just drawn to a successful conclusion, were in Texas, Mississippi, Louisiana, North and South Carolina.

Meanwhile, Georgia has reported its first textile mill victory in two years, as a result of cooperation of a local union organizing committee and drive representatives. This election brought the 250 production employes of the Berryton Mills, Berryton, Ga., under the banner of the Textile Workers.

Following the election, Kenneth Douty, TWUA's Georgia director, wrote to Bittner commending the close cooperation of Staff Rep. William Rowe and Barney Wethington, rank-and-file president of TWUA's local union in the Goodyear mill at Cedartown.

THE TEXAS, Mississippi and Louisiana meetings, attended by Bittner, resulted in overflow attendance representing both local unions and international representatives anxious to help the drive.

Following the Texas meeting, State Director Robert Oliver said:

"CIO membership in Texas promises to become one gigantic organizing committee."

In addressing this meeting, Bittner made it clear that the work of the Southern Organizing Drive representatives must be restricted to organizing the unorganized.

Vice. Pres. A. R. Kinstley of the Oil Workers, said at the meeting that the 30,000 members of his union in Texas stood behind the movement and that all locals would be instructed to form committees immediately. Speaking for the Steelworkers, James Dickerson, district director, pledged full support.

LOUISIANA and Mississippi followed closely on Texas, with a combined meeting in New Orleans. Robert Starnes, CIO Director for both states, opened the session, then turned the chair over to Harry Zebal, of the Chemical Workers.

With the CIO hall filled to the overflowing, Bittner once again heard the Local Union Organizing Committee plan endorsed unanimously.

At High Point, N. C., the staff for the State met to hear Sherman Dalrymple, Secretary-Treasurer of the Campaign; George Baldanzi, Executive Vice President, Textile Workers Union of America; John Ramsay, Director of Community Relations, Ed Stone, Director of Public Relations; State Director William Smith and other speakers.

A speech by George Baldanzi, vice president of TWUA and assistant director of the Southern Organizing Campaign, highlighted the session at Rock Hill, S. C.

CIO OFFICIALS EXIT SMILING AFTER WHITE HOUSE PARLEY

'Know President Will Do All in His Power'

A group of top CIO leaders met March 4 with President Truman.

The group consisted of: CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey; Pres. Walter Reuther, Auto Workers; Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald, Steelworkers; Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel; Secy.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum, Amalgamated Clothing Workers; Exec. Vice Pres. George Baldanzi, Textile Workers; Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, Rubber Workers; Pres. Joseph Curran, Maritime Union; Pres. John Green, Shipbuilding Workers; and Jack Kroll, PAC Director.

At the conclusion of the White House meeting they issued the following statement:

"At the request of CIO President Philip Murray, who is convalescing from a recent operation, we have met today with President Truman for a review of the legislative program now before the 81st Congress.

"We expressed to the President our firm, unstinting support of the splendid Fair Deal program which he enunciated in his Jan. 5 State of the Union Message, and more recently in his Jefferson-Jackson Day Dinner address.

"The program outlined on both those occasions recognizes the needs of the American people.

"We told the President we welcomed his suggestion for taking that program directly to the people once again, in order to overcome the fierce resistance of those special interests whose propaganda campaign is designed to nullify the results of the election.

"We pointed out that the great numbers of people who made possible the Democratic victory in November are looking to the Congress to proceed with the enactment of the President's program and to put an end to filibustering, both in committees and on the floor of the Congress.

"We know that the President will continue to do all in his power to insure quick and affirmative action on the Fair Deal program by the Congress. There must be a speedy end to the undemocratic filibuster inaugurated under the cloak of 'free speech.' We call for immediate decisive action to pass the Thomas-Lesinski bill repealing the Taft-Hartley Act, to enact an adequate minimum wage law, and for passage of civil rights, social security, the economic and tax program, housing, rent control, health insurance, and the other legislation outlined in the President's messages and in the Democratic platform.

"Our conference with the President was satisfactory and we are confident that Mr. Truman, who has shown his deep sincerity in formulating and supporting this praiseworthy program in behalf of all the American people, will take all necessary steps to secure its approval by the Congress."

More Aid Urged For Aged, Widows, Children, Sick

VAN A. BITTNER, Chairman of the CIO Social Security Committee, has urged the House Ways and Means Committee to give speedy approval to two bills which would increase federal assistance to the aged, to surviving widows and children, to certain groups of injured or sick workers and to the needy.

In a letter to Rep. Robert L. Doughton (D., N. C.), chairman of the House Committee, Bittner noted that an Administration bill, HR 2893, and the Forand Bill, HR 2645, would provide "more nearly adequate protection" to these four groups than the present laws allow.

The first bill—HR 2893—would extend old age and survivors benefits to "virtually all groups," Bittner said, and would almost double benefit payments. It would, in addition, permit a beneficiary to earn as much as $50 per month without losing the rights to his insurance benefits.

A third feature of the bill would initiate a national system of disability insurance for workers idled by sickness or injuries not covered by state workmen's compensation laws.

The second measure—HR 2645—under committee consideration would provide Federal aid to needy families not receiving adequate insurance protection. Mr. Bittner described this bill as "our last line of defense against suffering. It must be strengthened and improved to preserve human dignity and to protect the national health and welfare and our national security."

BITTNER wrote to the House Committee:

"Your committee has the opportunity to make a tremendous contribution to the welfare of the American people through reporting favorably on the social security bills now under consideration at your hearings.

"Increased living costs make it essential that benefits be increased in line with the tremendous resources of our nation.

"Continued prosperity and stability of our economy depend in a substantial degree upon these measures for sustaining purchasing power and markets for food and manufactured goods.

"Action is urgent because many unemployed workers have exhausted their benefit rights so that the relief burden is increasing rapidly. Many states are so hard-pressed for funds that, like the District of Columbia, they are not giving any help to employable persons.

"We urge your committee not only to report favorably on these phases of social security but to then move speedily to recommend much needed improvements in unemployment insurance and the employment service.

"The CIO favors a unified national system of unemployment insurance as the most effective method of grappling with the national problem of unemployment and providing truly adequate benefits. The present state laws in many cases give too little protection and many thousands of workers find the protection they thought they had removed through disqualification or terminated long before they find jobs."

UAW Says GM Cuts Dwarfed by Earlier Rise

GENERAL Motors has thrown consumers a "fish," and its employes a 2c hourly pay cut.

The pay cut was expected, but GM's sudden "magnanimity" to consumers was a surprise package—a sort of off-season Christmas present.

Prospective buyers of a GM car—Chevrolet, Pontiac, Oldsmobile, Buick, or Cadillac—will find the price tag chopped down by all of $10 to $40. The buyer might do better to buy a GM truck instead, however, since these are reduced by $100 to $150.

What GM neglected to mention—and what the CIO Auto Workers was quick to point out—was that the "piddling price reductions," as UAW called them, were far from sufficient to offset the corporation's price boosts tacked on to the 1949 models.

After enjoying record profits in 1948, GM early this year quietly increased the price on 1949 Chevrolets by $42 to $110; on new Pontiacs, Oldsmobiles and Buicks, the increases were from $55 to $150.

"If General Motors had shown the same modesty in increasing prices as they now show in price reductions," said the union, "the American people would not still be paying Cadillac prices to buy a Chevrolet."

The pay cut, effective March 7, was based on the decline in the Bureau of Labor Statistics cost-of-living index.

Last September, under terms of the contract, the 341,000 employes received a 3c hourly increase when the index went up. In May the 2c pay cut will be offset by an automatic raise of 3c, as provided by the agreement.

Give To Red Cross, Murray Urges

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has urged all CIO members to contribute to the American Red Cross during its drive March 1-31. Murray said:

"I know that members of our labor unions will give their usual warm support to the annual appeal for funds of the American National Red Cross.

"Through the years, the Red Cross has come to the aid of people in their time of need—in war and in peace, in times of disaster and of community emergency.

"Its nursing service and its National Blood Program have made vital contributions to the welfare and health of the American public.

"These and the many other services provided by the Red Cross call for support of every citizen. I know that they will respond generously; and I call upon members and leaders of the CIO in particular to cooperate with the Red Cross in this worthy cause."

PAC Likened To Fire Dept. Operating 365 Days A Year

"CIO-PAC IS like a fire department," says a PAC pamphlet on "Off Years," just issued.

"If it's going to do its job—the job of speaking for labor in the field of politics—it has to be kept up on a year-round basis.

"You can't organize a fire department after the alarm bell rings and you can't organize for political action after the candidates have been selected and the election date has been set."

At the same time PAC issued another pamphlet on "Dollars," which said:

"We have seen the millions that big business has thrown into politics. We have fought those millions in other years with the contributions of many people. In 1949 PAC must look again to the dollar drives of our unions for money to keep up the fight for good government."

The leaflets bearing the general title "How We Win" urged local PAC affiliates to concentrate on more than 550 city and county elections to be held this year.

15-MONTH RENT BILL OKAYED

A RENT control bill, considerably stronger than the present law, but much weaker than Administration and CIO recommendations or Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas' bill, has been reported out by the House Banking & Currency committee.

Principal weakness in the bill, using the CIO rent control program as a guide, is the omission of enforcement provisions. Under the bill, as under the current Republican statute, landlords may violate the law without fear of criminal prosecution.

With the present law scheduled to expire March 31, the committee approved, by a vote of 20-to-4, extension of controls for 15 months, as provided in Committee Chairman Brent Spence's bill. The Douglas bill would have extended controls for 27 months.

OTHER features of the bill:

- The 15% "voluntary" rent rise provision of the old law is out.
- The Housing Expediter is given authority to re-control areas that he has decontrolled since June 30, 1947, if it becomes necessary.
- Criminal prosecution of violators, as advocated by Rep. Douglas and the CIO, was omitted, but the administrator is permitted to sue for treble damages landlords who overcharge their tenants.
- Require landlords to have a "certificate of good faith" from the administrator before starting eviction proceedings.
- Retain controls on "luxury" housing.
- Re-control permanent residences in trailer camps and apartment hotels. (These provisions were in the Douglas bill but not in the Spence proposals.) Rooms in transient hotels are left un-controlled.
- Provide for relief of landlords suffering because of controls. The present law also provides relief.

MEANWHILE, the Senate subcommittee swung into hearings on rent control, with Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods the first to occupy the stage. CIO Sec.-Treas. James Carey is scheduled to testify this week.

Republican Sen. Charles W. Tobey (N. H.) announced his determination to get a simplified form for landlords and to assure them a "fair return on invested capital."

Unless such a formula is worked out, said Tobey, he will vote against rent control.

Crumpet-Eating Envoys Hit by Carey in ERP Talk

BANKERS, industrialists and Treasury Dept. officials got the inside story on what American labor is doing for the Marshall Plan and American foreign policy in Europe.

They got it straight from CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey at an annual Treasury Department Savings Bonds conference in Washington. When he was through, they came up to the platform to shake hands and make one comment: "That's the first time we had that story."

"Because of their closeness to the people, American labor leaders have been more helpful in getting popular support for the Marshall Plan than all the crumpet eating, tea-drinking diplomats," Carey declared.

"American unions have won the confidence of European labor and that's one major reason why European labor is for the Marshall Plan. They know that when we in the CIO support the Marshall Plan, that plan cannot be the offspring of Wall Street."

Carey rocked some of the bankers with the comment: "They know, and you and I know, that Wall Street never gave anybody something for nothing any place or any time."

Carey also declared that America should continue to fight for more democracy as the best bulwark against communism.

Carey also approved the Treasury's Savings Bonds program as making for more individual and national security.

Bill Introduced

A new bill to set up a Labor Education Extension Service—long advocated by unions throughout the country—was filed in the House last week by Rep. Kelley (D., Pa.).

Kelley, a veteran pro-labor Congressman, told Congress that his bill (H. R. 3096) would "aid in the orderly and constructive solution of industrial relations problems."

JAMES B. CAREY

He told the bankers a thing or two.

Senate Committee Okays Thomas Bill

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE democratic members of the Senate Labor Committee have kept faith with the people who chose the Fair Deal Nov. 2.

By a vote of 8 to 5, the committee last week sent the Thomas-Lesinski Bill—which is backed by Pres. Truman and labor—to the floor of the Senate. The move came amid anguished cries from Republicans, who have attempted to stall off the people's mandate.

Here is how the committee voted:

FOR THOMAS-LESINSKI

Democrats—Chm. Elbert Thomas (Utah); James Murray (Mont.); Claude Pepper (Fla.); Lister Hill (Ala.); Matthew Neely (W. Va.); Paul Douglas (Ill.); Hubert Humphrey (Minn.); Garrett Withers (Ky.).

Republicans: None.

AGAINST THE BILL

Democrats: None.

Republicans: Robert Taft (O.); George Aiken (Vt.); H. Alexander Smith (N. J.); Wayne Morse (Ore.); Forrest Donnell (Mo.).

The committee didn't change a comma in the Thomas-Lesinski Bill.

Biggest fight during the hearings was over the sections concerning "extra national emergency strikes." No two Senators could agree on just what constitutes such a strike.

Sen. Robert Wagner (D., N. Y.), father of the Wagner Act, has approved the Thomas-Lesinski Bill.

The action was taken as the first order of business at the initial executive session of the committee. Taft indignantly called the move "the most high-handed procedure I have ever seen taken by a Senate committee."

Thomas, in reply, defended the move and declared the Republicans had intended to talk procedure "until doomsday while the country awaits action."

He said that in the committee Taft and Morse had attempted to delay action by a series of amendments. Thomas ruled them out of order under Congressional procedure.

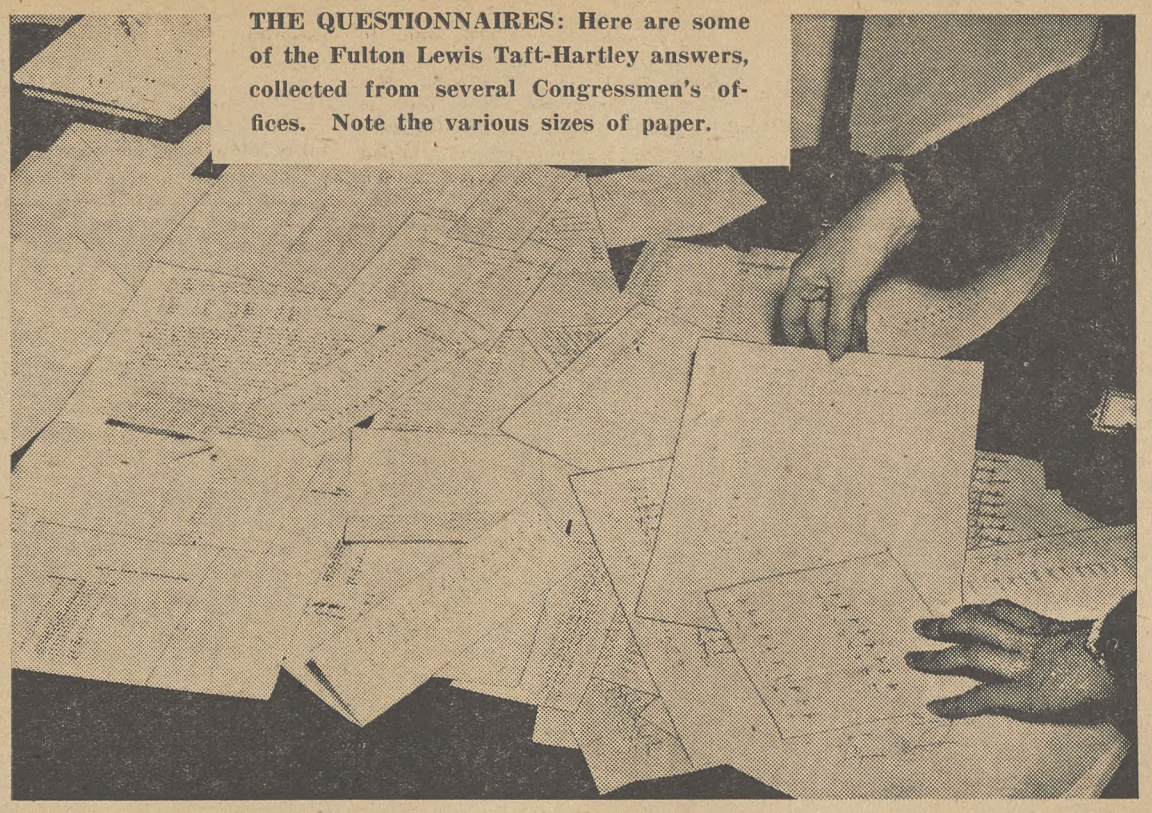
Taft's were mostly crippling amendments. Morse, who is opposed to T-H, wants a milder bill than the Thomas-Lesinski measure, which repeals T-H and reenacts the Wagner Act with some revisions.

Pepper, after the vote, said the country and labor will judge whether the action was right or not. He asserted he was sure the people would back the move.

Thus, the bill goes to the floor. How soon debate would start had not been determined as the CIO News went to press, but it was known that Truman wants speed.

Meanwhile, the House Committee, of which Rep. John Lesinski (D., Mich.) is chairman, voted to start hearings this week on T-H.

The hearings are expected not to be prolonged. A sub-committee headed by Rep. Augustine Kelley (D., Pa.) will conduct the hearings.



THE QUESTIONNAIRES: Here are some of the Fulton Lewis Taft-Hartley answers, collected from several Congressmen's offices. Note the various sizes of paper.

WHILE all this was going on, Congressmen were having a chuckle over confusion caused by a self-styled "entirely objective and impartial" questionnaire conducted by radio's most anti-labor commentator, Fulton Lewis, Jr.

Lewis, apparently concerned over loss of sponsors and listening public, read 19 questions over the air one night last week, asking his listeners to send their attitudes to Congressmen. Lewis rasped that he would give Congressmen the questions and that all the listener would have to do was to put the numbers down on a piece of paper and answer "yes" or "no."

Lewis' office must have slipped up, because some of the Congressmen received the replies before they got the questions.

What caused the laughs was Question Number 14, which says:

"Do you believe it should be unlawful for a worker to be prevented from performing his job, by the use of violence, force or intimidation?"

Enterprising freshman Rep. Andrew Jacobs (D., Ind.) did a little checking of the answers. He told the House:

"Fulton Lewis has brought to poll-taking a new technique—a technique definitely more accurate than Dr. Gallup's.

"I have received 91 answers, 70 of which answered 'no' to Question 14.

"In short, the fact that 70 out of 91 people said 'no,' the law should not prevent violence, proves that the poll-takers are deadly accurate and crystal clear.

"Perhaps that was a mock election we had last year and the poll-takers were right after all."

Even the Republican Representatives—some of them, anyway—had to laugh.

The same percentage of error occurred in almost every Representative's mail.

ONE SENATOR was asked whether he would take seriously the replies. The senator said: "Of course not, anyone who does would be foolish.

"There is no way of telling whether or not the people have any knowledge whatsoever of the law, whether or not they have any knowledge of labor, and it appears lots of them sent in replies because their bosses asked them to."

The latter was very apparent in some replies which came from the same city. Apparently some one had typed out originals and carbon copies and left space for signing names. Like this:

"I vote 'yes' on Nos. 1 to 13 and 15-19; 'no' on No. 14."

The 19 Fulton Lewis questions, which were almost identical with the 18 General Electric questions, were far from "entirely objective and impartial." They were the usual "do you still beat your wife" type of query. In fact, an opponent of the Taft-Hartley Law could not answer them negatively, such as in No. 14, because he would be putting himself in favor of such things as violence.

The definition of a secondary boycott, for example, was completely slanted, as was this one on the closed shop:

"When a union, by contract or otherwise, requires an employer to hire only members of that union, that is a closed shop. Do you believe the law should permit a 'closed shop?'

The gimmick in that is obvious. It takes two parties to sign a closed shop contract and many employers are happy to have them, especially in the printing, maritime and construction industries.

THE GENERAL Electric questionnaire, which first appeared in full-page daily newspaper ads, was reprinted by many chambers of commerce and other such organizations. It didn't get much response. Sun Oil of Toledo, for instance, mimeographed—but did not place its name on it—the questionnaire and asked its employes to fill it out. Few did. (One employe let the cat out of the bag by writing on the sheet that it had been given to him by Sun.)

GE must have spent thousands of dollars on the ad—just at the time it was refusing to give a wage increase to its employes who are members of the CIO Electrical Workers. And, UE hadn't yet adopted its proposals for a new contract!

I examined a number of the Lewis replies and they certainly showed a lot of confusion. Users of the Lewis pressure method actually were demanding that Congressmen ignore "pressure groups," like labor.

Most Congressmen are not taking the Lewis poll too seriously. They well remember Nov. 2 when the people voted thusly:

Truman—24,045,092
Dewey—21,896,927

That was a poll that just can't be mistaken.

* * *

There was a sharp contrast between the Lewis queries and mail being received by Congressmen from workers.

Their letters were simple, usually handwritten rather than typewritten. They knew what it was to live under T-H. They wanted out.

Congressman Tom Burke (D., O.), who was a CIO official before his election and who carries a CIO Auto Workers' card, is receiving a lot of voluntary petitions from workers in the shops of his city.

They know how Burke stands on legislation. They just wanted him to tell the President and other Congressmen how they feel.

Burke is a member of the House Labor Committee.

How About It?

You against Taft-Hartley?

Well, why don't you let your Congressmen and Senators know that you meant it when you voted for the Fair Deal in November?

Turn to Page 12. There you'll find a coupon. How about filling it out, putting it in an envelope and mailing it to your Congressman or Senator?

CIO Urges Approval Of TVA Steam Plant

Nathan Cowan, CIO Legislative Director, has urged all members of the Senate to vote for an appropriation for construction of the new Johnsonville steam plant, proposed as part of the TVA system. He wrote:

"The CIO has at all times advocated full development of the TVA program . . . CIO reaffirmed its unqualified support of the TVA program, and specific endorsement of the TVA steam plants, by resolution unanimously adopted at its annual convention in November, 1948.

It's On The Air

It's good listening.

Turn your dial to your local ABC station Saturday, March 12, from 8 to 8:30 P. M. You'll hear James B. Carey, secretary-treasurer of the CIO; William Green, president of the AFL, and George Harrison, president of the Railway Clerks.

The subject: Taft-Hartley.

Remember, ABC, Saturday, March 12, from 8 to 8:30 P. M.

What They Say About T-H Act

Rep. Thurman Crook (D. Ind.): "The Taft-Hartley Act is the most confusing, deceptive, atrocious and abominable piece of class legislation that has ever been placed upon our statute books. It is so designed that no two men of legal talent will agree as to the exact meaning of any portion of it . . .

"We may say that it is a 'Full Employment Act for Labor Attorneys' and we can safely say that it was designed to break the backbone of organized labor so the agents of exploitation may once again take over."

Sen. Wayne Morse (R. Ore., who doesn't like the Thomas T-H repeal bill and wants his own milder amendments enacted): "As one reads that testimony (at T-H repeal hearings), he finds management witnesses confessing, under cross-examination, that the most restrictive uses of the Taft-Hartley law will come when unemployment becomes widespread in America."

Sen. Claude Pepper (D. Fla.): "We propose to take that (injunction powers) out of the law. There is nothing in the Thomas bill about injuctions, and I can assure the Senator from Oregon that the eight Democratic members of the Senate Labor Committee will not let anything go into the bill about injunctions."

Sen. Paul Douglas (D., Ill., in radio debate with Sen. Taft): "But you so crippled the economic powers of the unions that when they sat at the conference table they were greatly weakened.

"And also, in a period in which we might have considerable unemployment, the employers could break virtually any union in the land by suing them, by replacing the strikers and having the replacements vote and take the union out of existence, and if the Republicans . . . were ever to get control of the nation, and control the Labor Relations Board, you would have those terms 'restraint or coercion' interpreted so strictly that peaceful picketing would be broken."

Right Wing Wins In D. C. Council

With a vote to adhere to Natl. CIO policy and the election of right-wing officers, the Washington, D. C., CIO Council changed complexion last week.

Recent affiliation to the Council of nine CIO locals, representing 3500 members in the city, was responsible for the policy switch. Previously, the Council was composed of only six locals in the area.

Elected to the presidency was Dillard Stokes, Newspaper Guild. His opponent, Milton Kelenson, Public Workers, received no votes, since he and 10 of his supporters walked out of the meeting before the election.

James C. Gildea, Office & Professional Workers, was elected executive secretary. The new board is composed of Philip Price, Guild; T. J. McCarthy, Oil Workers; Edgar T. Cook, Laundry Workers; Morton Lifton, Government Workers; and J. P. Covington, Transport Service Employes.

Some Facts To Remember

Last June the Democratic Party adopted a platform calling for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act. (The platform did not call for mere minor amendments to T-H).

Last summer and fall, President Truman and scores of candidates for Congress, campaigned for office on the Democratic platform. They advocated repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act. (They did not campaign on a platform of mere minor changes in T-H).

Last November 2 the men and women who campaigned on that platform won the people's votes. The House and Senate, which had been in Republican control, were won by the Democrats.

This is all recent history—so recent it should not be forgotten.

The people who cast their ballots haven't forgotten. President Truman hasn't forgotten.

And we hope that Senators and Congressmen, now being deluged with reactionary propaganda, won't forget it either. While they read the answers to loaded questionnaires circulated by corporations and radio commentators, let the members of Congress remember the results of a big, secret, nation-wide poll held in November.

The mandate of that poll was clear: Pass the Fair Deal program; repeal the Taft-Hartley Act and re-enact the Wagner Act.

The Thomas-Lesinski Bill (S. 249; HR 2032) will accomplish that. You can help by writing your Senators and Congressman to quickly vote for the Thomas-Lesinski Bill—and for the other sections of the Fair Deal program. ★ ★ ★

ONE STEP FORWARD ONE STEP BACK

The world does move — and its human inhabitants seem to be moving faster and faster, in all directions at once.

An Air Forces plane goes round the world in 94 hours without stopping, and reminds us of the tremendous progress in transportation during this air age.

But while we're making amazing speed in the world of science, we seem unable to decide whether to go forward or backward in our human and political relations.

One backward step was announced the other day in Germany, where the occupying powers in the western zone were presented with a list of 12 candidates to act as "trustees" over the powerful industries of the Ruhr district.

At least half of those men, whose economic power would be enormous, were closely identified with the Nazi regime. One was a director of Krupp, the big German steel and munitions firm which got along just fine with the Nazis. Another was Hitler's closet adviser on tank construction.

A lot of American boys sacrificed their lives to end the system of Nazi industrial conquest which these men represent. That system brought death and oppression to millions of Germans and citizens of other European countries.

Our war aim was certainly not to turn back fundamental controls to the men who promoted the aggressive Nazi system and untold suffering in every section of the globe.

Our war aim was not to permit the development of a new, slightly refurbished German imperial system.

That Germans in high position would be so brash as to nominate former kingpins in the Nazi system to positions of economic power, is indication that the aims and ideals for which we fought World War II have not been sufficiently impressed on the new German leadership.

We hope that General Clay will quickly veto these astounding nominations for control of the Ruhr.

It Must Not Happen Again

World Can Afford to Pay High Price to Avoid Another Major War

By ALLAN L. SWIM

Swim in Europe

Allan L. Swim, editor of the CIO News, is visiting western Europe to study effects of the Marshall Plan on workers and their unions.

MORE THAN three years have passed since Hitler's bombers unloaded their last batch of "eggs" on an European city.

Paris—on the surface—is again a gay place, where the wine flows freely and there's plenty of food for those who can buy it.

Rome, untouched by explosives, puts on a bold front and is getting ready to make another play for the world's tourist trade.

Couples laugh and joke as they drink their "bitters" or ale in the pubs of London—and the lights shine brightly along the streets of Britain's capital.

But the physical scars of the last war are deep. And the mental scars are even deeper.

BY WALKING a few blocks from my hotel in London you can see some of the physical scars.

There's a big hole in the ground where a fine building stood before the bombers came. There is a row of buildings occupied only on the ground floor because the upper stories were burned out by fire bombs. There are vacant lots or car parks where there formerly were structures of brick and concrete.

The rubble has been cleared away, but the evidence of great destruction remains.

Londoners don't complain—at least not to visitors from America. But all you have to do to get some grasp of the situation is to look and listen and then try—unsuccessfully—to buy the type of meal you could obtain in almost any restaurant in the U. S.

Great Britain, like the other countries of Europe, is still "fighting" the war and is somewhat fearful that there will be another war in the future.

THE MARSHALL Plan may be just another piece of important legislation to the average American.

The unions, in the main, supported it—and it's going to cost a lot of money. We'll be paying for it for a long time.

It will be a low price to pay, however, if it brings about European recovery and stamps out the conditions in which the seeds of totalitarianism grow best.

To many Europeans the Marshall Plan offers a hope for economic salvation and a chance for establishing and maintaining peace.

It means the difference between jobs and unemployment—between idle factories and production—between democracy and Communism.

NOBODY CAN state in simple terms the problem which confronts Europe. There are many problems—varied and complex.

The Marshall Plan by itself will not solve them, but it will provide European countries with a "breathing spell" in which they can begin to work out their own solutions.

It will provide them with many of the materials necessary to begin putting their economic houses in order.

But if they are to succeed they must do the very best they can with the aid provided and do a lot of pulling on their own bootstraps.

They must work hard and they must work together.

PERHAPS THE Marshall Plan will prevent war in the future. Perhaps it won't.

But without some measure of world prosperity there is little possibility of peace—and there would be little possibility of prosperity without the Marshall Plan.

At least we're trying. At least we're going along with the theory that it's less costly to pay for peace than for war.

It's easy to outline theories on paper. It's easy to sit on the sidelines and offer advice. It's easy to make mistakes in guessing about Europe's future and the future of the U. S.

But when you're in Europe viewing the damage of war you cannot escape the feeling that "it must not happen again."

And we in the U. S. must do everything we can to see that it doesn't happen again.

Questions GE's Questionable Questionnaire

IN RECENT weeks, General Electric has taken full-page ads in 77 papers to ask 18 questions about labor laws. The questions are carefully framed to produce the "right" answers from GE's point of view. Take No. 14, for instance:

"Do you believe it should be unlawful for an employe to be prevented from working by the use of violence, force or intimidation?"

This one just begs for a "yes." But as union members know, what it really means is "Let's not be nasty to the scabs."

Textile Labor, official newspaper of the CIO Textile Workers, has presented its own list of 10 questions—being a little more modest than GE. Every one of them concerns present practice under the Taft-Hartley.

"Unlike GE, we do not provide boxes for 'yes' and 'no' votes," Textile Labor remarked. "We think there's only one answer in each case. But like the company, we hope you'll tell your Congressman how you feel."

The questions:

1. Do you think employers need help from the government to meet unions on even terms?
2. Do you believe a union should be required to get the employer's permission before organizing a plant?
3. Should it be legal for a boss to force his workers to attend an anti-union meeting on company time?
4. Do you think employers should be free to bring company spies, criminals or scabs into the mill to work alongside you?
5. Should an employer be free to set workloads without any consultation or agreement with the union?
6. In case of a strike, do you think the government should recognize scabs (instead of strikers) as "employes"?
7. Should you, as a union member, be forced to do the work of other union members who are on strike?
8. Is it all right to restrict picketing and other strike activities by unions, leaving the employer free to do whatever he wants?
9. Suppose a strike is threatened in a vital industry like the railroads. Should the government force the workers to stay on the job with no change in conditions, while the employers continue to collect profits?
10. Is it fair for the government to handle employer complaints against unions right away, while union complaints against employers are pushed aside?

"I know I promised them a wage increase this week, but my liquor bill came due."

Senate Unit OKs Labor Extension Bill

The Senate Labor Committee has approved a bill to set up a Labor Extension Service, which would create a system of classes and other services for unions and workers through state educational institutions. The bill, endorsed by every section of organized labor, is expected to pass the Senate and go to the House, where a similar bill is under consideration.

It's All Done By The Light Of Moon

"We plan our trips according to the weather forecast, we do our tooth pulling when the sun is on the feet, we expect our babies in the full of the moon and plant our turnips on the dark nights of August."

That is the type of statesmanly statements the good people of North Carolina's 5th District will get in the next two years.

That statement was made by Richard Thurmond Chatham (he calls himself Thurmond for short), U. S. Representative from the 5th N. C.

In case you naturally decide that the statement is nonsensical, we hasten to explain that Chatham thinks it is wholly sensible. It certainly takes all kinds of people to make up Congress.

Chatham—he's just a country boy who's made millions out of manufacturing open shop blankets—came to the big city of Washington in January. He looked around and got right lonely for his old almanac. So, he toted a raft of Blum's Farmers' Almanacs down to the Old and New House Office Buildings and presented one to every Congressman, even the Yankees.

Pehaps you ought to know something about Thurmond Chatham. Who's Who paints his career as a success story. Why, didn't he begin as a mill worker in the Chatham mill and, by "perseverance" and "natural ability" climb to the presidency and treasuryship of the mills?

Only a nasty mind would point out that Thurmond Chatham went to work for the mill—which his family owned—after coming out of Yale University.

THE BLUM'S Almanac (it's 121 years old) carries all the usual stuff that almanacs carry which explains the statement from Chatham at the top of this story and explains why it takes all kinds of people to make up Congress.

In addition, the Almanac has a lot of advertising—and what advertising!

Here are some examples:

- Love drops—"Just a tiny drop is enough."
- Female Beauty—you can get a book which carries "strange and secret photos."
- Cures—all sorts of them. Health Herbs. Reducers.
- Marriage—you can marry rich by writing to certain addresses.
- Dreams—dream books are there.
- Perfume—One is called "Mantrap," another "Love Me"—both manufactured by the Trulove Co.
- Hypnotism—You can learn it by mail.
- Gray hair—you can dye it.
- Dresses—used ones are to be had by mail.
- Gems—how about a Magnetic Lodestone?
- The Mind—There is available the secrets of Ancient Mysteries and also the Psychiana Movement.
- Fishing—A method for catching more fish.
- Luck—There's High John's Good Luck Roots. Some say "they bring good luck in love."
- Chew—You can get Bull of the Woods to chaw on.

Chatham's 5th District contains Winston-Salem, which is the home of a lot of the tobacco you smoke. He made Congress last fall after failing attempt in 1946.

He belongs to Winston-Salem's Twin City Country Club and can drop in at the Merchants and Racquet and Tennis Clubs when in New York.

"I hope this Blum's Almanac—the best—will take its rightful place, after the Bible, in your daily life," wrote Chatham to his fellow Congressmen in sending them the almanac.

They were struck too speechless to comment.

SOUTHERN EXPOSURE

Author Of Anti-Rent Control Tirade Revealed As Hitler Apologist

NEVER A publication to shy from giving a hearing to fascists and fascist sympathizers, the Reader's Digest February issue makes itself the vehicle for No Vacancies, an anti-rent control tirade by Bertrand de Jouvenel, once described in the New York Herald-Tribune as the "French Goebbels."

The magazine, which reaches 4½ million people in the U. S. alone, is also carrying on a broad campaign to distribute reprints of the article to realty boards, chambers of commerce and other allies of the real estate lobby currently operating against rent control.

At recent hearings on rent control conducted by the House Banking & Currency committee, reporters and visitors found reprints of the article prominently stacked on the front tables, along with piles of landlord testimony and printed anti-rent control propaganda.

Originally published by the Foundation for Economic Education Inc. of Irvington-on-Hudson, N. Y., an organization financed by Alfred P. Sloan (General Motors board chairman), No Vacancies holds up the horrible example of France, where many rents average only 1% to 4% of family income. (How would you like that, as a tenant?)

This is a result of sustained rent control, supported by intervening governments, both conservative and liberal, since World War I. And it leads, says the apologist for no rent control, to widening slums and total lack of building in France.

Phony as these arguments are, they are less damaging than the character of the "journalist" whom Reader's Digest and Sloan are foisting on the American public.

HERE IS A part of the dossier on Count Edouard Bertrand de Jouvenel des Ursins:

His long-time editor, Pierre Lazareff, identifies him as the man who, with Jean Luchaire (shot as the leading French wartime collaborator with the Nazis), introduced Hitler's Otto Abetz to Pierre Laval, thus starting the association that was to blossom into the Vichy dictatorship.

As a reward, in February 1936, Abetz arranged for de Jouvenel to interview Hitler. According to Lazareff's book of memoirs, the editor saw through the Nazi maneuver and sabotaged publication of the interview, which de Jouvenel had written on the train back from Berlin to Paris, with Abetz looking on and okaying the copy for Der Fuehrer.

Abetz, when the piece finally appeared, stormed into Lazareff's office and accused him of welching on their "deal." The interview had been intended to scuttle the Franco-Soviet pact, it was alleged. However, when the pact went through anyway, Hitler partly based his remilitarization of the Rhineland the following week on the "warning" to France he had given through his chosen mouthpiece, de Jouvenel.

When the Spanish counter-revolution broke out, de Jouvenel was assigned to cover Franco's armies (which he did sympathetically) for Paris-Soir. Later that year, in November 1936, John Elliott, writing from Paris, said in the New York Herald Tribune: "The French Popular party not only has its Hitler in Doriot, but also its Goebbels in Bertrand de Jouvenel. This charming and clever young man . . . is an avowed admirer of Hitler . . ."

THE LEADING French conservative journalist, Pertinax, in his book published during the war, The Gravediggers of France, says that on the eve of Abetz' expulsion from France (July 1, 1939), the editor of the pro-fascist weekly, Gringoire, entertained the German envoy, with Bertrand de Jouvenel in attendance.

Writing about a libel suit he filed against the same Gringoire, Pertinax tells of the paper "parading a string of witnesses whose shamelessness has become today (1944) a blatant scandal: Fernand de Brinon, Bertrand de Jouvenel, Edouard Pfeifer, Gaston Bergery, Paul Marion, Eugene Frot, most of them now bedecked with honors in Paris or Vichy."

Today, most of those witnesses have received their just "rewards," shooting or imprisonment, as Nazi stooges in France. De Jouvenel has become an "anti-deGaullist exile in Switzerland" as well as an outspoken royalist. And a leading fighter against U. S. rent control!

De Jouvenel's wartime activities, according to best information available here, consisted essentially of giving a course in economics, the lectures of which were published in Paris in 1944, with German authorization, as World Economy In The 20th Century.

Health Insurance—A Plan To

Medicos Set To Fight Pre-Paid Medical Care

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

FORCES ARE lining up for another hot fight over legislation to provide a National Health Program for the American people. The bill never got to first base in the 80th Congress.

Predictions are that the battle for passage of the bill, which has again been introduced in the Senate and the House, will be one of the bitterest facing the 81st Congress—rivaled only by the knock-down fight over repeal of the anti-labor Taft-Hartley Act.

Already verbal brickbats are flying thick and fast in preliminary skirmishes, as the two sides fling challenges at each other over the air waves and in speeches and statements reported in the nation's press.

What's the fightin' all about? The welfare of the American people now and in the future, is tied up in the outcome of this struggle; yet it's hard to pick out the facts and get at the truth. With so much shouting going on, you scarcely know what to believe.

THE FIGHT over national health insurance is not new. It's been before Congress since 1939. In 1945-46 extensive hearings

Medical Yardstick

"We must measure our resources and services against the actual health and medical needs of all the people, without regard for their individual ability to pay." —From "The Nation's Health."

were held in Congress on an earlier bill that contained all the essential principles of the one before the present Congress. Opposition was strong enough to keep it from coming to a vote, and in 1947 it was introduced again, hearings held and some important changes made on the basis of suggestions and criticisms expressed at the hearings.

These included extension of coverage to civilian federal employes and their dependents; decentralization of administration under a Board instead of a single Federal officer; special provisions for rural areas; guarantees of professional rights of doctors, dentists, and hospitals, and other modifications aimed to improve it.

The 1947 version also failed to come to a vote, and expired with the 80th Congress.

Powerful Supporter

In his State of the Union message to Congress on Jan. 5, this year, President Truman again recommended, as a part of his social security program, "a system of pre-paid medical insurance which will enable every American to afford good medical care." He urged that action be taken "without further delay."

Immediately thereafter a new health bill, identical to the 1947 version, with the exception of dates, was reintroduced in the 81st Congress. The new Senate Bill (S-5) is sponsored by Democratic Senators Murray, (Mont.); Wagner, (N. Y.); McGrath, (R. I.); Pepper, (Fla.); Chavez, (N. Mex.), and Taylor, (Idaho); and the companion House Bill (HR-783) by Congressmen Dingell, (Mich.), and Celler, (N.Y.)

So far this year, the controversy over the National Health Insurance Bill has been raging outside the halls of Congress, spiked by propaganda violently opposing such legislation cooked up by the American Medical Association, but hearings before Congressional committees are expected to start soon and the fight will grow even hotter.

JUST WHAT is this National Health Insurance and Public Health Bill that is provoking such a battle of words?

The CIO has been strongly in favor of it ever since it was first proposed, and many other groups including a number of socially minded doctors, want to see it become a law.

The Committee for the Nation's Health, headed by Dr. Channing Frothingham, eminent physician from Boston, was organized

Everybody's Business

"Health is everybody's business. Everybody should want and demand for himself and for those dependent upon him, the best of health and medical services. He must ask why he is not receiving them, and what can be done about it."—From "The Nation's Health."

to fight for the program set forth in the bill, and a number of prominent citizens, including CIO Pres. Murray and Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, who are ardent supporters of the bill, are serving as honorary vice-chairmen and board members of the Committee.

What does the bill contain that it can arouse such hearty support and such bitter opposition?

The big idea behind the proposed law as expressed in the bill itself, is that the health of the American people is of vital concern to the United States, and that it is the national policy to use all the country's resources necessary to make "adequate health services" available to all the people, no matter where they live, how much money they make, or what their race, religion or color is.

It is estimated that 85% of the population would be covered by the system of national health insurance set up under the proposed law, which would include both employed and self-employed persons, and their dependents.

Eligibility requirements are set so low—for example earnings of $150 in a year—that most people could qualify.

This would make eligible for services such groups as employes in industry, commerce, agriculture and domestic service; employes of non-profit institutions; farmers, business and professional men and women and others in business for themselves; recipients of old age or survivors benefits, or civil service pensions.

The wives, children under 18 (or over 18 if disabled), dependent parents, and disabled husbands of all the insured are also covered. Needy persons not insured through their own earnings will qualify if contributions are paid on their behalf by a public agency.

Services Available

Insured persons eligible for benefits would be entitled to medical and dental service from general practitioners and specialists, home nursing and hospital care, laboratory service, X-rays, prescribed medicines, eye glasses and special appliances.

Here's how it would work. If you or the wife or the kids got sick you could call in the family or some other doctor. If you're well, you could get special preventive treatments aimed to protect you from getting sick.

You could all get physical examinations regularly to make sure that nothing is wrong. You could go to a specialist if you needed one. In short, under it you could get all kinds of medical services, usually available only to those who have the money to pay big bills.

Or suppose your wife had to have an emergency operation. You wouldn't have to borrow money from a loan shark, or a kind-hearted relative not much better off than you are, or beg for charity to pay the hospital bill.

You wouldn't have to wait until you got a bad toothache before going to the dentist. You and the family could have your teeth cleaned regularly and filled—or pulled—when they needed it.

These are a few of the things that would come under the medical, dental, hospital and other services mentioned in the proposed bill as covered in the "prepaid person health service benefits."

Does this sound like a pipe dream to you? It shouldn't. This is no crackpot idea.

The right of every American to have his health protected by all the modern methods known should be regarded as fundamental. It should not have to depend upon how much or how little money a person has, or whether he lives in a city where hospitals and doctors may already be available, or on a farm where they are not.

Who Pays the Bills?

But getting back to the "prepaid" business mentioned in the bill. All this would cost a lot of money. Who would "prepay" it and how? This brings up a ticklish point which is taken up on page 51 of this 84-page long bill—after a number of other matters have been dealt with.

It is mentioned briefly and not too clearly, but behind the words lie many long bitter arguments still unsettled.

THE BILL proposes a 1% tax on all wages up to $3,600 a year for the fiscal year ending June 1951, as a reserve; and a 3% tax for every year thereafter. It makes no mention of how the tax is to be paid. Presumably in the case of people who work for a boss, it would be divided equally between management and worker, each paying 1½%.

Self-employed persons apparently would pay the whole 3%, though these and other details have been left to be thrashed out later.

BAIT FOR THE POOR: Many people who can't afford to see a doctor, fall for these quacks, who are often seen at country fairs and other places where they can get away with it.

The bill calls for the setting up of a separate account on the books of the U. S. Treasury, to be known as the "Personal Health Service Account," from which expenditures necessary to carry out the provisions for a national health service would be drawn.

What all this means as far as you as an individual are concerned, is that you would insure your health with the U. S. Government, just as you might take out life or fire insurance with some private company. You would pay the premiums to cover health insurance through "premium" deductions from your pay check.

Then when you or anyone in your family needed medical, dental or hospital care, you could get it. It would not be charity, or a government dole. You would have it coming to you for the insurance you were paying.

Choose Your Doctor

One of the things you're apt to ask: "Do I have any choice in the matter of medical care?" "Must I and my family go to whatever doctor the government tells me to?"

The answer is: The bill guarantees free choice of doctor and dentist, and the right to change if desired. Qualified doctors, nurses, dentists and hospitals are also given the right to participate or not participate in the health program, to accept or reject patients. There is no compulsion placed on either patient or medical personnel.

Payments for services would be made from the insurance fund, under guarantees that the amount of payment would be adequate and fair. Physicians and dentists may choose the method of payment they prefer. They can be paid either on a basis of fees for services rendered, on a per capita basis, or on a part-time or whole-time salary basis, or a combination or modification of these methods.

Provisions are contained in the bill for decentralizing the administration of the health program through local administrative committees, acting wtih the advice and assistance of local citizens, including members of the medical profession.

EACH STATE is given the right to administer the system through its own state agency, and to divide the state into local areas. The state plan, however, must meet certain general requirements specified in the bill. At the Federal level, administration is under a five-man board, assisted by an advisory council of lay and professional people.

In addition to prepaid personal health service provisions, the bill also sets up a o assist the states in carrying out health vices, the bill calls for the appropriation $100 million for the first year; $150 million the second year; $225 million for the d year, and $300 million a year for the t two years. To aid states in the con-uction of more hospitals and other health lities, it woud appropriate $75 million for first year, and $100 million a year for the t nine years.

More Progress Needed

Ve read that the United States has the hest standard of medical care in the ld, the best doctors, the finest hospitals. we are getting along so well, is it neces-y or justifiable to spend such vast addi-al sums of the people's money for health poses?

t certainly is, if we are to continue to ke the social progress of which America so proud.

U. S. Responsible

"No man really has that equality of economic opportunity which is the tradition of our American democracy if, through being unable to obtain the health or medical services he needs, he suffers ill health or disability.

"It is the Nation's responsibility, and to the Nation's advantage, to do its utmost to insure that all people everywhere attain the highest possible level of health." —From "The Nation's Health."

"A little over a hundred years ago, many hospitals were little better than pest houses, not the modern workshops of scientific medicine they have become," says Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing, in his report on "The Nation's Health."

They would still be pest houses, if the type of opposition now offered the present health bill had prevailed.

IT'S TRUE health conditions have improved enormously in recent years, but there are still a lot of things terribly wrong.

Here are some of them as explained in "The Nation's Health":

1. Millions of people still are deprived of even minimum health and medical service, because there are not enough doctors and nurses, and because they are poorly distributed.

2. We do not have enough medical colleges and training schools to turn out the professional people necessary in such a big country.

3. There are not half enough hospitals, and the ones we have were built independently without regard for one another or the overall national need.

4. Local public health departments are inadequate and under-staffed, where there are any at all.

5. We skimp on funds spent for medical research. Only 10% of the total amount spent on research goes for medical purposes. The bulk goes for industrial and military research.

6. Only about 20% of the American people can afford the medical care they need. About 50%, those with incomes of $3,000 a year or less, can afford little or no medical care. Another 30%, those with incomes of $3,000-$5,000, often find it difficult to pay for needed medical care.

"By and large, only the well-to-do and to a certain extent charity patients, get satisfactory medical care," says Ewing's report. It estimates that every year some 325,000 people die who could have been saved if they'd had the advantages of the skill and knowledge available.

Who are some of the people that suffer most under our present inadequate medical system?

MOBILE CLINIC: The British National Health Service—much like proposed U. S. plan—which has been in operation for eight months now, is growing in popularity. Picture shows mothers leaving the back door of a mobile clinic after having their children immunized against diphtheria.

Outstanding among them are children, old people, Negroes, the disabled and the mentally ill. "The Nation's Health" also reports:

From Pearl Harbor to V-J Day, 281,000 Americans were killed by war casualties. In the same period, 430,000 babies died in their first year of life. Every year, an average of 100,000 babies die before they are a year old, and 7,000 mothers a year die from accidents of childbirth. The rate for Negro mothers is 143% higher than for white women.

Handicapped Children

The figures on the number of handicapped children, many of whom could have been cured if they'd had proper medical care in time, show that four million have eye defects, one million have hearing defects; 500,000 suffer from rheumatic fever and rheumatic heart's disease; 200,000 have epilepsy; 175,000 have tuberculosis; another 175,000 have cerebral palsy; at least as many more are crippled by infantile paralysis; 35,000 have diabetes.

Chances of living to a ripe old age are better today than ever before. In 1900, people 45 and older made up only 18% of the population. Today this age group comprises 28% of the population.

There are now 10 million people in the U. S. past 65. And yet their long years of life have not been entirely a blessing to a large part of these old people, for many of them suffer from chronic diseases and ailments which make their lives miserable.

Chronic disease, most frequent among this older group, is responsible for 70% of all invalidism and partial disability.

More than 25 million people are victims of chronic diseases, with heart ailments and cancer leading as the two main killers.

Mental Disorders

Hundreds of thousands are incapacitated by mental disorders. Every year 150,000 are committed to mental hospitals. It is estimated that eight million people in the U. S. suffer from some form of mental disorder. Some time in his life, one out of every 20 persons will require psychiatric care. Half of the patients in a hospital on any given day are victims of mental disease.

Every year 250,000 men and women become disabled through injury or disease, many of whom could be helped to lead useful productive lives again. But only a small portion of them are receiving rehabilitation, mostly through voluntary agencies working with inadequate funds—thousands where millions are needed.

Endowments and gifts are failing as a source of revenue. Over the years they have remained fixed or declined in some cases, while need and costs have increased tremendously.

The death rate of Negroes is almost 50% higher than for white people. Their life expectancy is 17% below that of whites. They make up 10% of the total population, and yet they have only 2% of the doctors.

There are some of the groups that would be aided by a national health plan. As citizens of the richest country in the world, they are more than entitled to the best modern medical science has to offer.

Precious Resource

"This Nation owes its very beginnings to the inspiration and the drive of the people. They are the strength, the resource of our national existence—and health is their own most precious resource as well as the foundation of national security and prosperity."—From "The Nation's Health."

Health Bill in Nutshell

1. The National Health Insurance and Public Health bill, known as the Murray-Wagner-Dingell bill (S-5 and HR-783) would set up a system of health insurance which would cover about 85% of the population.

2. You would be eligible, together with your dependents, if you are employed or self-employed; receive old age, survivors' or civil service benefits. Needy persons whose contributions to the insurance fund are paid by a public agency would also be eligible.

3. Medical care would be based on the insurance principle. You contribute another 1½% of your earnings up to $3,600 and your employer will contribute another 1½% up to $3,600. If you are self-employed, you will pay 3% up to $3,600 of your own earnings.

4. Insured persons eligible for benefits would be entitled to medical and dental service from general practitioners and specialists; 60 days' hospital care (except for tuberculosis and mental diseases); laboratory and X-ray services; expensive prescribed medicines; eye glasses and special appliances.

5. You would choose your own doctor, hospital, group clinic, specialist and other services from among all the practitioners and institutions in your community that serve under the Act.

6. Voluntary health insurance plans can continue to provide you with services under this Act, and be reimbursed from the Health Insurance fund.

Fancy Press Relations Job

THE Committee for the Nation's Health last week called the 12-point program recently announced by the American Medical Assn. to sidetrack the National Health Insurance plan, "a fancy press relations job designed to obscure the AMA's stubborn opposition to any program which would bring medical care within the means of the average man."

Dr. Channing Frothingham, chairman of the committee, which is a voluntary group of doctors and laymen backing the health plan, said most of the proposals advanced by the AMA either are on the statute books already, or are in President Truman's program now awaiting action by Congress.

The AMA, he said, is "belatedly jumping onto the bandwagon as it has in the case of most social advances in the past." He pointed out that the AMA recently hired a new and clever publicity firm for what is reported to be the biggest public relations fee in history.

THE ASSOCIATION hopes to pay for this drive against the health bill by raising a $3,500,000 propaganda fund through an assessment of $25 from each of its members. A large scale revolt within the AMA against this is now going on.

"That publicity firm has begun to pay off," said Dr. Frothingham. "Its first achievement is a fancy press relations job designed to obscure the AMA's stubborn opposition."

DETERMINED NEGOTIATORS: Almost as if to show the Taft-Hartleyites that it takes genuine collective bargaining—not injunctions—to avert strikes, these representatives of the CIO Utility Workers, the Consolidated Edison Co., New York City, and the government get down to brass tacks, and head off a walkout. Seated, l. to r., Con.-Ed. Vice-Pres. A. A. Lowe; Acting Mayor Vincent Impelliteri and UWUA Pres. Joseph Fisher; standing, Daniel Kornblum and Joseph E. O'Grady, City Labor Relations Division; Con.-Ed. Pres. H. R. Seering; Regional UWUA Dir. Patrick J. McGrath, UWUA General Counsel Herman E. Cooper, and Bernard Forman, Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service.

Utility Workers Win 7-12c Hourly Raise

SOME 28,000 CIO Utility Workers, set for a strike on March 2, won a last-minute agreement from the Consolidated Edison Co., New York City, providing a 7c hourly increase for all employes plus an additional 5c for 24,500 of them.

Following a 98% vote of the membership to strike, the company sat down to some serious bargaining, reversed its stand-pat "no wage increase" position, and granted most of the union demands. Among the other concessions won by UWUA:

- A permanent, instead of provisional, pension plan to be mapped out by a joint union-management committee. The program will be management-financed.
- Automatic wage progression to the maximum, thus doing away with a merit increase system now in effect.
- Streamlined grievance procedure with arbitration as the final step.
- A union shop to become effective automatically on May 15, if Taft-Hartley is off the books by that time. If not, the union shop will be contingent on an NLRB poll, required by the law.

THE AGREEMENT, still subject to approval by the membership, is to run two years, with a wage reopening in a year.

The across-the-board increase is retroactive to Jan. 1. In addition. those employes eligible for the additional 5c raise will receive 2½c retroactive to Jan. 1 and the remaining 2½c on July 1.

Threat of a strike loomed when the company refused to grant any wage increase, pleading inability to pay due to a Public Service Commission order reducing the company's electricity rates by $21,500,000 a year. At the same time it permitted an increase in gas rates amounting to more than 11 million.

THE COMMISSION argued that the utility's request for a rate increase was unjustified in view of its rising profit level. During the first nine months of 1948, Consolidated Edison's net profit figure hit $27,985,413, compared with $23,801,272 during the same period of 1947.

UWUA Pres. Joseph Fisher expressed much satisfaction at the agreement and pointed out that it was in no way contingent on any Public Service Commission decisions regarding rates.

Shortly after agreement was reached, the union's counsel, Herman E. Cooper wired Sen. Elbert Thomas, chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, that the Consolidated Edison experience demonstrated that "collective bargaining alone can resolve a labor dispute of national proportions."

An injunction, he said, would have created an atmosphere of discord and stalling, "rather than the harmony which here led to agreement."

Burke Offers Rights Bill For Women

Added support to proposed legislation to eliminate discrimination against women in industry has been given by Rep. Thomas H. Burke (D., O.), who introduced a bill calling for a Presidential Commission on the Legal Status of Women to investigate and eliminate such practices.

Burke's bill is a duplicate of a bill presented by Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D., Calif.) earlier in the session. The same bill also has been introduced by Rep. Stephen M. Young (D., O.) and other congressmen favorable to the legislation are expected to follow suit. The bills have been referred to the House Judiciary Committee.

In addition to providing for investigation of discrimination, the bill would establish a policy of equal status for women without endangering the special benefits afforded them because of differences in physical makeup and maternal functions.

The bill is characterized by Burke as an answer to a proposal to amend the Constitution to provide that "Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

"Easy when you polish, dear. I just made a dent on the other side myself."

Humphrey Sees MVA As Boon To Nation

WHEN THE junior Senator from Minnesota rose last week to address the U. S. Senate for the first time, it was to deliver a plea for a project long close to the hearts of American liberals.

Sen. Hubert Humphrey, (D.), devoted his maiden speech on the Senate floor to the development of the Missouri River valley.

As one of twelve sponsors of the bill which would do for the Missouri Valley what TVA did for the Tennessee River Valley, Humphrey said he considered the project essential to the nation's prosperity, as well as that of the ten states which would be immediately affected.

Among the bill's sponsors are Sens. James Murray, (D. Mont.), who has headed the MVA advocates in the Senate for the past 4½ years, and Sen. Gillette, (D. Ia.).

SHORTLY after the bill was introduced, John Brophy, chairman of CIO's Missouri Valley Committee, congratulated the 13 sponsors on "rendering a pronounced public service."

Brophy described the unified public plan for management of the Missouri River as "an imperative necessity."

That, in essence, was what Sen. Humphrey told the Senators. And then he told them the MVA story, which he likened to the story of Croesus, "who had all the wealth he might want—who instead was destroyed by his wealth.

"So it is with the Missouri. Wealth is locked in its stream—unused—and every year that potential wealth flows over its banks and destroys and does not build."

What would development of the valley mean for the 10 Midwestern states and the nation?

- For valley residents it would mean more and cheaper electricity.

(Today these people pay from 50 to 130% more for electricity than those in the Tennessee Valley pay.

"It is little wonder, then," says Humphrey, "that the electric power lobbies are fighting MVA, just as they fought TVA some years ago.")

- As a result of the new and cheaper power, new industries would locate in the region.
- It would mean, he said, more diversified agriculture.
- Cheaper transportion, resulting from the proposed waterway, would make possible cheaper consumer goods for the whole nation.
- The entire nation would benefit from cheaper fertilizer and light metals with the introduction of competition into these industries, now monopoly-controlled.

FOR THE past 4½ years the "Battle of the Missouri Valley" has raged, with the power lobbies, the railroad lobby, the National Reclamation Association ("a plush-officed lobby representing a variety of vested interests," according to Humphrey), the Pittsburgh Coal Exchange and other business interests on one side.

On the other side are the MVA proponents—residents of the valley, the nation's consumers and, says Humphrey, "the same spokesmen for the interests of the people who have constantly . . . represented honestly what all the people want and deserve."

"What we are asking," insisted the Minnesota Democrat, "is not a subsidy for the Missouri Valley, but rather a loan. That money will come back to the people in many ways."

CWA Unit Urges CIO Affiliation

Affiliation with the CIO, urged by national officers of the Communication Workers of America-independent, was endorsed by a resolution approved at the Third Annual Convention in Detroit of Michigan Division 44, CWA.

Organizationally Speaking

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

SEEKS FAVORABLE VOTE FOR CIO

I am at this time channeling all of the available energies and resources of the CIO into activities which, in cooperation and coordination with Communication Workers of America, are intended to acquaint all CWA members who will vote in the referendum on affiliation with CIO, with all of the facts and all of the benefits which will come to these CWA members through such affiliation.

Within the month that has passed since the CWA National Executive Board recommended to its members that they affiliate with CIO, action has been taken, either by conventions or the Executive Boards of 17 of the CWA Divisions, endorsing the National Executive Board's recommendation and urging that all CWA members vote for CIO affiliation. These CWA Divisions are: Research Division 8, Illinois Traffic Divson 14, Maryland Clerical Division 16, Mountain States Division 17, Sales Division 18, Wisconsin Division 23, Virginia Division 33, Washington Division 36, Michigan Plant Division 43, Michigan Traffic Division 44, Northwestern Division 45, Southern Division 49, Equipment Workers Point Breeze Division 54, New Jersey Traffic Division 55, Pacific Division 61, both in Southern California and in Washington and Idaho, Equipment Workers Lincoln Division 62 and Equipment Workers Buffalo Division 63.

SOUTHERN CAMPAIGN

Seven new victories for the CIO's Southern Organizing Campaign have just been announced by Director Van A. Bittner. They include: The W. P. Morris Co., Gumberry, N. C., and The Burgess Lumber Co., Jackson, N. C., both Woodworkers.

General Motors Corp., Parts Division, New Orleans, La., Auto Workers; Douglas Public Service Corp., Marrero, La., Oil Workers; Tennessee Furniture Co., Morristown, Tenn., Textile Workers.

Trueman Fertilizer Co., Jacksonville, Fla., Transport Service Employes, and Pure Pep Co., Tuscaloosa, Ala., Oil Workers Union.

I arrived in Los Angeles last week and will remain there this week to analyze the problems of the Los Angeles Industrial Union Council and will attempt to find a solution for these problems. The Council is at present in the hands of unions representing a minority of the actual CIO membership in Los Angeles and opposed to the National policies of the CIO. The CIO unions representing the majority group in Los Angeles have preferred charges against the anti-CIO minority.

Court OKs State Anti-Labor Law

THE RIGHT of a state to dictate what kind of strikes a union can or cannot conduct has been upheld by the U. S. Supreme Court.

With the Court's usually-liberal block of four dissenting, the majority held that the Wisconsin Employment Peace Act is neither unconstitutional nor in conflict with federal labor law.

Involved was the AFL Auto Workers at two plants of the Briggs & Stratton Corp. Negotiations on renewing the contract had been stalled since before the old pact's expiration on July 1, 1944. The union waited patiently until the war was over, then in November 1945 began to call union meetings on production time.

The company invoked the state law, which forbids unauthorized stoppages. Five justices upheld the state law and the company. In his dissent, Justice William O. Douglas wrote:

"The right to strike, which Congress has sanctioned, can in that way be undermined by state action.

Million Strong Organize For Columbia Valley Control

Private utility interests are engaged in a bitter cold—and hot—war against public power development.

They fought the TVA, and fortunately for the country's welfare, they lost. Now they're fighting similar proposals to develop our resources in other river basins—the Missouri, the Columbia, the St. Lawrence waterway and the extension of TVA itself.

CIO's 1948 convention called for extension of the "TVA principle" to other areas. Here's the dramatic story of the people's fight to develop the Columbia River Valley in the Northwest—to promote a CVA to avoid floods, build up power supplies, make jobs more stable.

The author's a former Seattle newspaperman, now working closely with the League for CVA.

By JOE MILLER

THE PRIVATE power lobby has dug up an old song they plugged during the Thirties and are doing their best to revive it around Washington these days.

The song? "The TVA Blues." Do you remember it? The refrain went something like this:

"TVA is socialism, fascism, a super-state,
"If it is inflicted on the American people,
"We will suffer an awful fate.
"TVA, TVA, stay away, stay away,
"We must stop it before it is too late."

The number wasn't popular; most people decided it was a "turkey" after TVA saved the Tennessee Valley from economic extinction and proved to be one of the finest examples of living democracy in America.

Now the private utility "song pluggers" are making another try. The reason is President Truman's intention to ask a Columbia Valley Authority for the Pacific Northwest. This announcement has, in the words of the New York Times, "aroused the power industry to a degree of opposition unparalleled since passage of TVA."

Typical was the comment of Purcell Smith, $65,000 a year lobbyist for the nation's private utilities. Cracked Smith from his luxurious Washington, D. C., office:

"The people of the Northwest neither want nor need a CVA.

"If it was brought to a vote out there, it would not pass."

Perhaps he doesn't know that all the Northwest region's farmer-labor organizations—representing more than a million of the Northwest's four million residents—are spearheading the CVA campaign.

Seattle's Roy W. Atkinson, CIO regional director, takes issue with Smith's statement. He says:

"The people of the Northwest know that a CVA will mean more industries, more jobs and a better living for all our people."

Argues For CVA

Atkinson, who is an officer of the League for CVA, adds that "the utter confusion exhibited by the existing agencies during last year's Columbia floods and this year's power shortage are impressive arguments for CVA."

Perhaps a farmer in Washington state's Columbia Basin, where the majestic Columbia bends gracefully to the north, might agree. As he watches the dark snow clouds gather over the distant Cascade Mountains, he wonders apprehensively, "Are the floods coming again?"

THERE IS good reason for his fear. Last June he was one of the thousands of Northwest farmers who lost his crops as Columbia flood waters destroyed 224,000 acres, cost more than one billion dollars in land and $75 million in homes and equipment, destroyed a city (Vanport) and took 60 lives. After one of the Northwest's worst winters, the people in the Columbia's path have no assurance she won't run wild again.

Perhaps they remember that when Washington Sen. Hugh B. Mitchell introduced the first CVA bill in 1945, the private power lobby scoffed:

"Flood control on the Columbia? What could be sillier! It's a needless expense, a waste of the taxpayer's money."

Mitchell, now a representative, is pushing the Truman-backed CVA bill, after spending the better part of the last three years selling CVA to Northwest leaders. And the Purcell Smiths have to find new arguments.

The worst power shortage in Northwest history has idled many hundreds of men this winter. A region that boasts almost 50% of the nation's total supply of potential hydroelectricity doesn't have enough to go around because only 5% of it has been harnessed.

This shortage has cost the Northwest many new industries.

"We're losing new industries every day," moans a high official of the Portland Chamber of Commerce. How badly these industries are needed is shown by U. S. Bureau of Census figures which tell us that both the Northwest's population increase and unemployment figures are twice the national average.

SCORES CRITICS: Rep. Hugh B. Mitchell (D. Oreg.) tells the Portland meeting that CVA opponents don't realize that the plan would spell greater prosperity for the Northwest. Utility companies lead the opposition.

Many an idle worker remembers that at a power hearing in 1946 spokesmen for three large private utilities held up construction of more dams on the Columbia by testifying that "we would have a surplus supply of power so great that it would leave us with a million kilowatts or more for a period of ten years."

Murray For CVA

CIO Pres. Philip Murray called attention to this neglect of the Northwest when he spoke at an ADA dinner in Portland before the CIO convention last November.

"We must reclaim your lands, control the waters, harness your great river and develop these great natural resources," he said.

President Murray's stand is supported by the Northwest's No. 1 businessman, E. B. McNaughton, publisher of its largest newspaper, the Portland Oregonian, president of Reed College and chairman of the board of one of its biggest banks, the Portland First National.

McNaughton, who is a lifelong Republican, recently spoke for CVA at a luncheon of Portland businessmen and asked them:

"If Roosevelt had not given Bonneville and activated Grand Coulee, where would we be today?"

UNFORTUNATELY McNaughton is almost a lone voice crying in the wilderness of private enterprise. The giant private power combines, the hirelings of the absentee owners, many Republicans and what Bernard DeVoto terms the region's "astonishingly reactionary" press have immediately condemned CVA, although many admitted they knew little about it.

It is easy to see why the big electrical interests would not want to face the competition of a CVA. Northwest power rates are supposed to be low, but in 1944, a typical year, its residents paid $122,106,315 for private and public power. Under TVA rates, they would have paid $90,345,147—a saving of almost 32 million dollars.

Some other groups oppose CVA because they have profited from the Northwest's undeveloped colonial status. They want to halt CVA because it might stop them from greedily plundering a great region of its natural resources.

What they would seek to prevent is the creation of an over-all agency, located in the Northwest, which would coordinate these tasks:

1. Preparation of some 2½ million acres—most of it now covered with sagebrush—for immediate development. This will mean that many thousands of family-size farms will be made available to veterans and others.

2. Development of a river transportation system to provide the Northwest's great hinterland with cheap and easy access to the sea.

3. Full development of America's greatest hydroelectric source, the Columbia. This power will be of mighty and lasting value to our country, particularly in the atomic age. Its importance in this sense is shown by the location of the large atomic plant at Hanford, Wash.

4. Exploration of the region's untapped mineral wealth.

5. Development of power technology with a view to stimulating electro-chemical and electro-metallurgical industries of the West in the Northwest. A good start has been made. CIO Steelworkers in the Northwest produce 600,000,000 pounds of aluminum a year (one-third of the nation's total).

6. The protection and stabilization of our valuable fishing and lumbering industries. The men of the Alaska Fisherman's Union and the International Woodworkers of America know too well how these resources are being plundered. According to the U. S. Forest Service, there won't be any private timber left in 15 years at the present rate of cutting.

7. The exploitation of the unlimited possibilities of the region as a tourist and recreational area.

8. An adequate flood control program.

It is certain that the working people of the Northwest need and want a CVA, and that they are determined to fight to achieve it.

We Want CVA NOW!

A GRASS ROOTS campaign to consolidate popular support for a Columbia Valley Authority has been mapped out.

Meeting in flood-surrounded Portland, Ore., were the leaders of 11 farmer-labor organizations, which represent more than a million of the state's four million residents.

These leaders, together with public power proponents and other liberals, sounded this common battle cry:

"We want a CVA and we want it now"!

What amounts to the broadest farmer-labor coalition in Northwest history includes the Oregon and Washington CIO, the Washington, Oregon and Idaho Federations of Labor, the CIO International Woodworkers and the Farmer's Unions of Idaho, Oregon and Montana.

After being warned by several speakers that "reactionaries and the giant private utility combines will spend big money to beat CVA., this meeting unanimously voted to levy a two-cent per capita tax on its members to support the fight for CVA.

THIS WAS THE answer of the working people of the Northwest to claims made by private utility spokesmen that "the people of the Pacific Northwest neither need nor want a CVA."

It was also their answer to the Republican governors of Oregon, Washington and Idaho and other political diehards and the region's newspapers, all which have opposed CVA.

Rep. Hugh B. Mitchell (D., Wash.) told the meeting that "these foolish, shortsighted men do not realize that creation of a CVA will lead to the greatest period of prosperity the Northwest has ever known."

The Seattle legislator, who was reelected president of the League for CVA at the meeting, added:

"CVA is an urgent and practical necessity not a dream of do-gooders. It will be President Truman's 'Fair Deal on the Columbia'."

MITCHELL pointed out that Northwest unemployment figures had increased alarmingly in recent months, with 155,000 men thrown out of work because of the power shortage.

"This, and the spectre of more floods threatening the Northwest today should be evidence enough of the need for coordinated hydroelectric and flood control development."

Chet Dustin, Oregon regional CIO director, also warned of flood dangers and pointed out that flood control plans "are still in the blueprint stage because of inter-agency squabbling in the Northwest."

Dustin, George Roberts, PAC representative for the 11 Western states, and Roy W. Atkinson, Seattle regional director, promised that the CIO "will support to the fullest the fight for CVA."

Gibson Resignation On Truman's Desk

John W. Gibson, assistant secretary of Labor, says he has submitted his resignation to Pres. Truman.

No reference to the resignation has been made by the White House.

Ruling of NLRB Aide Is Boon To Dixie Drive

A SWEEPING victory for the CIO was contained in an intermediate report by an NLRB examiner ruling that the Anchor Rome Mill, Rome, Ga., must:

- Rehire the men and women who struck against the management.
- Make good for tne financial loss all who have applied but not been rehired since the strike ended in mid-January.
- Bargain collectively with the CIO Textile Workers.
- Post notices instructing employes that the company will not permit physical assaults or threat of physical assault for the purpose of discouraging membership in or activity on behalf of the union.

Director Van A. Bittner of CIO's Southern Organization Campaign hailed the trial examiner's report as the greatest boon to the Drive in Dixie since the Textile Workers won their strike against the Celanese Corp.'s giant mill in Rome.

COMMENTING on the NLRB report, Kenneth Douty, Georgia director for TWUA, said:

"The Board report is a complete vindication of the union's position, and should serve as a warning to other mills who refuse to bargain with their employes. It also places the responsibility on the company for the violence that occurred during the strike and means back pay amounting to thousands of dollars for the workers who made the fight for their rights.

"The courage and determination of the strikers has been rewarded and we are asking the company for an immediate conference for the purpose of resuming negotiations."

Frank Constangy, who recently appeared before a congressional committee in an effort to retain the Taft-Hartley Law on the statue books, served the Anchor Rome Mill as legal counsel in this case.

This strike, which started in March, 1948, was marked by company violence. On one occasion, two pickets on a railroad spur were attacked by more than 75 men who charged at them from the mill.

MEANWHILE, from Birmingham, Alabama, Carey Haigler, State CIO Director, and H. D. Lisk, TWUA Director, reported that an intermediate report of an NLRB examiner recommends that 142 former employes be re-employed with back pay by the West Boylston Manufacturing Company.

Bittner declared that such decisions will go far in aiding the CIO organize the South's unorganized industrial workers. The Southern Campaign Chief said:

"Fear has long been a basic material in the manufacture of Southern textiles. Management has long been able to bluff its employes out of the unions by use of discharges, intimidation threats of closing the mills, and other means of coercion.

"These report findings will be of great benefit in convincing the Southern working men and women that the days of unrestrained despotic management are through, and that the Government of the United States stands ready to defend the unions and their members against such vicious, discriminatory practices."

Godfredsen Gets Post With ECA

Appointment of Sven Godfredsen, labor information specialist attached to the Paris office, Economic Cooperation Administration, has been announced by Administrator Paul G. Hoffman, Godfreysen will handle labor informational work primarily for Denmark and Norway but will also have an itinerant assignment in Belgium, Holland and Luxembourg.

Godfredsen has had extensive experience in educational and journalistic work in the packinghouse ares. He is a member of the Packinghouse Union, CIO. He has served as editor of the Packinghouse Workers.

Ex-Fighter Held In CIO Man's Death

GUS DORAZIO, onetime heavyweight fighter turned member of the AFL Teamsters, has been indicted at Philadelphia on a charge of slaying Albert Blomeyer, a shop steward of the CIO Brewery Workers.

The Brewery Workers charged that Dorazio, who fought Joe Louis in 1941, assaulted Blomeyer while the latter was collecting signatures on a petition for a union shop election.

Aroused by the alleged slaying, the union's executive board contributed $500 to Blomeyer's widow and issued an appeal for more funds for Mrs. Blomeyer to the union's locals which had contributed $1596.60 by Feb. 23.

The CIO Brewery Workers have opposed for many years efforts by AFL Teamsters in their jurisdiction. The Brewery Workers won an important NLRB election among Philadelphia brewery employes in 1948.

House Measure Admits Orientals

A bill to end racial barriers against Orientals in U. S. immigration policy was approved by the House last week, but only after the measure was criticized for cutting down entry quotas for residents of the West Indies.

Rep. A. C. Powell (D., N. Y.) hailed the general purposes of the bill but fought vigorously against a provision pulling British territories in the West Indies out of the Empire's 60,000 immigration quota. The bill provides that only 100 West Indians may immigrate to the U. S. each year.

Powell and many other liberal Congressmen attacked the provision, but were unsuccessful in removing it from the bill. A motion to send the bill back to the committee for removal of the West Indies section was also defeated, 336-39.

The measure (H. R. 199) now goes to the Senate.

It provides that any immigrants legally living in the U. S. but proviously barred from citizenship may now become citizens. It also sets up regular immigration rights for Orientals along the lines of present laws covering China, India and the Philippines.

Packing Union To Seek More Pay and Security

A GENERAL wage increase and improved health and welfare provisions will be sought this year by the CIO Packinghouse Workers, Ralph Helstein, UPWA president, has announced.

In a nine-point program adopted by the UPWA executive board, the union noted the "sharp reduction in working hours which we predicted over a year ago has had a serious effect on weekly earnings."

The Board commented that the "reduced numbers of livestock available for slaughter can only mean continued short work weeks."

"Beyond that," the union continued, "packinghouse earnings are far below the figures necessary to approach" the Bureau of Labor Statistics' minimum budget for a family of four.

The union stated its "determination to secure health, welfare and retirement protection to go far beyond our present sick pay and to include medical care, hospitalization, disability, pension and death benefits."

THE UPWA also announced a campaign to secure national and local legislation prohibiting any employer from operating a plant or entreprise while a legally called strike is in effect.

The union recalled that three of its members were killed last year during the nation-wide meat strike as a result "of the decision of the employers to operate in face of our legal strike."

The program calls for union shop at all packing plants, union organization including the winning of a contract with Wilson & Co. support for government-aided housing, modernizing of building codes and sponsorship of cooperative housing whenever possible, expanded education program within the union.

Continued political action at local, state and national levels, and increased public relations activities were also advocated.

CIO Latin-American Committee Acts To Aid Mexicans, Cubans, Canal Zone Workers

THE CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee has taken three important steps to protect workers in Latin-American countries. They are:

1. A demand that the U. S. bar the illegal entry and economic exploitation of Mexican seasonal workers in this country. Conditions now border on peonage.

2. Protest this country's reduction of imported Cuban raw sugar by nearly one million tons.

3. Insistence that wage inequalities through discrimination be eliminated among the Canal Zone workers.

All three actions were taken by Committee Chm. Jacob S. Potofsky, who is president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

In a letter to Secy. of State Dean Acheson and Atty. Gen. Thomas C. Clark, Potofsky called for vital changes during the drafting of a new agreement concerning the employment of Mexican labor in this country. He made the following five-point proposals:

"1. Prohibition of, and adequate penalties against the hiring, harboring, concealing, or transporting of Mexican seasonal workers who have entered the United States illegally.

"2. Prohibition of allocation of Mexican seasonal workers to employers who discriminate against them on the grounds of race, color and national origin, and to all localities which refuse them equal access to public places or facilities.

"3. Full participation of bona fide labor organizations in all negotiations concerning these workers.

"4. Creation of a permanent supervising and grievance agency with full union participation.

"5. Guarantee of social and economic protection including union wages, decent housing, adequate social and health insurance and civil rights."

Dixie Senators Fight for Filibuster; CIO Asks Curb by Majority Vote

The Truman Administration's determination that it will meet the filibuster situation head on was being fought noisily as usual by the Southern bloc.

As the CIO News went to press, the Dixie Senators were striving to avoid an immediate showdown.

Here is how the showdown would occur:

Sen. Scott Lucas (Ill.), the Majority Leader, is circulating a petition — requiring 16 names — which calls on Vice Pres. Barkley to rule whether or not the present cloture rule — a two-thirds vote—could be invoked now as a step towards getting filibuster curbs through the Senate.

Last year, Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg (R., Mich.), then President Pro Tem, ruled that the cloture rule could not be used on a motion to take up a bill, but only on the bill itself, after the take-up motion had passed. This gave the Southerners an open chance to filibuster Pres. Truman's civil rights legislation, when it was moved that those bills be taken up.

The Lucas petition would require Barkley to make a ruling on closing debate on the take-up motion.

No matter which way he rules, an appeal could be taken from the ruling. Or, possibly, a motion to table the ruling could be made. In either event, here would be the first clear indication of how strong the Southern bloc is.

The Republicans, who earlier in the session offered a phony resolution to take up cloture action immediately, now aren't talking about how they stand officially. But, voters recall that when they controlled the 80th Congress, the Republicans could easily, with the aid of liberal Democrats, have passed a curb on filibusters.

There was other filibuster news last week:

1. Pres. Truman said he favored a simple majority rather than a two-thirds majority, to vote cloture.

2. Nathan E. Cowan, CIO Legislative director, wrote Senators opposing the Hayden-Wherry Resolution, which merely applies the two-thirds majority to motions. "This is an evasion of the real issue," he said.

3. Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D., Minn.), who led the fight at the Democratic convention to secure a strong civil rights platform, told Howard University Students that those who fight civil rights "would ignore a Golden Rule so that they can keep a Senate Rule. They tamper with the morality of a determined nation of people."

Truman's call for a simple majority was opposed by Sen. Lucas. Lucas favors the Hayden-Wherry measure.

Cowan awaits the Myers-Morse resolution, which embodies what Truman asked for. Cowan hit at the "strategy of senators which is aimed also at delaying, and, if possible, preventing repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law and enactment of the major items of legislation for which the American people voted Nov. 2."

Fair DP Law Urged By Murray

CIO Pres. Murray has endorsed "every effort . . . to amend the Displaced Persons Act of 1948 into a fair and equitable law" which will restore to the U. S. its "reputation as a haven for the oppressed of all lands."

Murray's letter was sent to Rep. Francis Walter (D., Pa.), chairman of the House Judiciary subcommittee on Immigration, which began hearings March 2 on possible changes to the act passed by the 80th Congress.

Murray voiced CIO indorsement of provisions in the bill introduced by Rep. Emmanuel Celler (D., N. Y.), which amend provisions of the present displaced persons law that "flagrantly discriminate against many of these up-rooted human beings because of their creed, race or country of birth."

Murray went on: "It is the firm belief of the CIO that to do our full share the U. S. should admit 100,000 displaced persons a year for four years.

"I wish to emphasize again that the interests of labor, in terms of employment or otherwise, are not in the least threatened by the admission of this handful of people, the vast majority of whom will be consumers rather than breadwinners."

"The CIO is also in favor of eliminating the house-and-job provision from the present law, as unnecessary, unworkable and not required of regular immigrants. This section of the law, if literally applied, could rule out all admissions.

"The amendment requiring guarantees that displaced persons are not to become public charges will properly safe-guard our interests."

Jobs Decline

A serious drop in employment over the New Year period touched all sections of the working population, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics report on non-farm employment. The figures show the loss of jobs was far greater than the usual post-Christmas slump.

To Union Members: There are indications that delaying tactics are holding up repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law.

We suggest that you fill out this coupon, place it in an envelope and mail it to your Congressman or Senator.

To The Congress

- I favor repeal of the Taft-Harley Law.
- I favor passage of the Thomas-Lesinski Bill (S249-HR2032) with no crippling amendments.
- I urge you to do these things as quickly as possible.

"Don't Boost Pop's Rent," the boy in this picture may well be thinking. Cincinnati's Better Housing League reports that 120,000 persons reside in this "Basin" area of the city where nearly 50% of the families live in two rooms or less. Plans have been proposed to replace these hovels with more livable quarters. An investigation by the city of furnished rooms reveals that violations of rent control laws were found in 50% of 5000 cases probed. Imagine the situation with no rent control. (See Page 8)

CIO Economists Warn

Unemployment—One Economic Danger Signal

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

What's happening to the economic machinery?

Are we on the threshold of depression or crisis?

Is the cost of living headed for a nose-dive?

Is unemployment moving up to pre-war levels of seven or eight or nine million persons?

What can we do to stabilize the economy at high levels?

These questions are matters of deep concern to workers, to union officials, to businessmen and to the government. They have been receiving serious study from CIO economists and researchers.

Here are the general views of the CIO research staff—views which will be presented in more detail in coming weeks to government agencies and Congressional committees:

THE ECONOMIC MACHINERY: CIO economists believe that the economy is neither in a state of serious illness or of complete good health. It is displaying symptoms of basic weaknesses, which, if not checked soon, can lead to serious complications.

Ever since the end of the war, the CIO has urged an anti-inflation policy to guarantee jobs for every worker, and income sufficient to permit a rising standard of living. But price controls were killed, and the 80th Congress took no action to meet the probem of nflation.

As a result, savings diminished; prices rose and buying power fell. Now, with the reservoir of buying power falling in the low and middle income brackets, supplies of consumer goods are piling up.

What the economists like to call "soft spots" are developing in many industries that provide products for the ordinary consumer—textiles, electrical home appliances, clothing, shoes, furniture. Those industrial "soft spots" are "hard spots" for workers who are forced to work part-time or to lose their jobs altogether.

UNEMPLOYMENT: Unemployment has increased in recent months. It is now, according to the Bureau of the Census, at a 3,200,000 figure.

Nevertheless, CIO economists do not believe that unemployment is going to snow-ball in coming months to pre-war levels.

As a matter of fact, although unemployment in February was greater than at any time since 1942, the number of people at work was also up from 1947. In February, there were 57,168,000 people on the job, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. That was a little more than in February 1948, and nearly two million more people working than in February 1947.

Between January 1948 and January 1949, the number of farm workers increased. So did the number of government employes. But, the number of jobs in manufacturing industry dropped by about 400,000.

The figures show that we are adding about a million people a year to the country's working force. In recent years, these new workers have been easily absorbed. This year, they are finding it much more difficult to get work.

That explains why there are more jobs, and more people out of work, at the same time.

The job figures, of course, are nationwide figures. In many localities, dotted throughout the country, there are "pools of unemployment."

Dept. of Labor figures, for instance, show these decreases—on an industry basis—in employment since a year ago: Leather, 33,000; Textiles, 95,000; Rubber, 20,000; Electrical manufacturing, 47,000; Furniture, 50,000; Transportation equipment, 26,000; General machinery, 47,000.

On the other hand, there is little unemployment in several durable goods industries—steel, aluminum, heavy industry—where production facilities have not been expanded and where inflationary pressures still exist.

A localized public works program must quickly be adopted to provide jobs for working men and women in the "pools of unemployment." Such programs must be geared to local needs in those communities where unemployment has become a major local problem.

Increased social security and unemployment compensation benefits are also needed; better re-employment services; and perhaps travel allowances to permit workers in areas with dim job outlooks to seek employment in other industries or areas.

COST OF LIVING: Will unemployment rise sky-high, and will the cost-of-living drop down to the cellar?

CIO economists think neither of these things will happen.

They believe that we have had a heavy seasonal drop in jobs, and that unemployment will be much lighter by late spring than it is today. They also predict that no major changes in the cost-of-living index will take place in coming months.

Both these factors—a limit to increasing employment, and maintenance of present price levels—are based on the probable effect of heavy government spending.

The military budget will approximate 15 billions; ECA costs will run over $5.5 billions; possible lend-lease to the North Atlantic Pact nations may be sizeable; and possible Latin American economic aid programs may also be under way.

Government spending on those projects will be a continued economic "pump primer," in terms of jobs and industrial activity. But government spending of this sort cannot be looked upon as a long term method of keeping the American economy on an even-keel, full-employment basis.

ECONOMIC STABILIZATION: Altogether too much thinking, planning and acting by corporation executives has been done on the basis of the "inevitability" of depression, rather than for continued full employment.

This sort of corporation policy in itself helps bring on the depression which corporations presumably want to guard against.

In the steel industry, for instance, this thinking has kept many companies from expanding their facilities, so that all necessary steel will be available for industrial consumers. Shortages of steel have kept prices up, have swelled steel industry profits, and have brought about resultant shortages in many consumer industries. The whole process, CIO economists point out, has priced many goods out of the market, so that production falls and jobs decline.

What CIO predicted would be the result of inflation has already occurred in many of these consumer industries. It is urgent that these dead-end results of inflation be prevented in the durable goods industries before it is too late.

That is one reason why CIO and the Steelworkers have urged a government program to expand steel and other basic industries and to stop further price increases. More plant capacity, more steel production, would help cut shortages of automobiles—and the effect in jobs would be felt in many industries.

The economic stabilization programs outlined by Pres. Truman and by the CIO would curb inflation in heavy industry, promote production, and guard against the possibility of depression-breeding stresses throughout the entire economic system.

Some newspapers and some conservative Congressmen have played up lay-offs and unemployment, because they hope it will forestall an anti-inflation program. But adoption of such a program is more important now than ever, while inflationary pressures continue to exist at the heart of the economy.

LABOR'S ECONOMIC OUTLOOK: The basic fact remains that America cannot have a stabilized economy so long as its present stresses and strains are not corrected. With full employment threatened for the first time since the war, a forthright economic counter-attack is obviously called for.

What is needed?

- Substantial and continual rises in the buying power of workers, farmers, professional people—the mass of American citizens. Prices are not coming down, and wages must be lifted. Substantial wage increases will provide a great reservoir of buying power. They will help relieve the piling up of merchandise—and the drop in jobs—in the consumer goods industries.

- Present corporation profit rates—which are producing super-profits for American industry—must be trimmed for the common good. The high rate of profits (many companies are earning 20% a year) is throwing the economy out of kilter. It has led to cutting of production, and to limitation of expanded production capacity. The President's economic stabilization program will help remedy this situation.

- An over-all program, along the lines recommended by CIO, should be adopted—to institute a progressive tax policy, to improve social security benefits, to provide low-cost or low-rent homes, to improve minimum wages.

If the country fails to take these corrective steps, a serious depression condition is almost certain to develop.

That would have widespread repercussions—in terms of suffering throughout America and the world, and in threats to the democratic system everywhere.

Fewer Jobs in Tenn.

Unemployment has almost tripled in Tennessee since January 1948. With 1,457 new applications for jobless benefits filed with the state unemployment compensation office at Chattanooga, Tenn., the first two weeks of February, total claimants reached 7,500, highest since the war. A year ago the number was 2,748.

Annual Wage Seen As Solving Layoffs

A guaranteed annual wage plan has been proposed by a New York City arbitrator as the solution to the problem of layoffs in the city's brewery industry.

Arbitrator Theodore W. Kheel, to whom the issue went after a recent strike, urged the CIO Brewery Workers and the New York City Breweries to consider a program which would provide a guaranteed wage and amount of work each year. To evenly distribute the available work throughout the year, workers would not be permitted to work more than the allotted amount each year.

Yonkers City Workers Win Despite N. Y. State Law

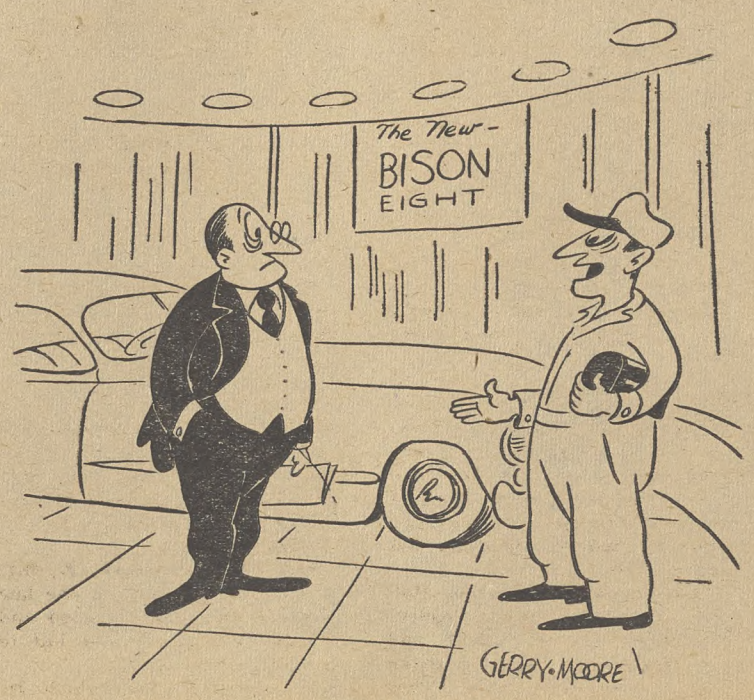
REFUSING TO succumb to pressure by the Yonkers, N. Y., city administration, 500 workers won reinstatement last week when Mayor Curtiss E. Frank announced a strike settlement.

The men who had been fired March 4 for striking in defiance of the Condon-Wadlin law, which bars walkouts by city employes, were restored to their jobs without discrimination. At the same time 18 workers whose firing had originally sparked the walkout also got their jobs back. Dismissal of the 500 men was the first attempt to invoke the two-year-old law.

Under the anti-strike law, reinstated strikers are required to serve on probation on their jobs for five years, with no tenure during that period. The law also bars any pay boosts for three years. Union spokesmen declared these provisions would not be enforced against the reinstated strikers.

The victory came after city officials were completely unsuccessful in their attempts to get strike-breakers to pick up garbage, which had accumulated on city streets during the eight-day walkout. Immediately before agreeing to terms of Local 1025, Government Workers Union, an affiliate of the Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers (CIO), and Local 456, AFL Teamsters, the city obtained an anti-picketing injunction in state court. Under terms of the settlement the city will not press enforcement of the injunction.

A conference has been scheduled to work out details of pay for Sunday and holiday work, one of the key points of dispute.



"What, me buy a car? I only make 'em."

URWA Board Backs Conveyor Project

The executive board of the CIO Rubber Workers has adopted a resolution supporting the proposed construction of a belt line conveyor between a port on Lake Erie and the Ohio River.

The resolution stated that the production of materials necessary for the project, such as belting, rollers, steel and motors would provide considerable work for members of the URWA and other CIO unions.

"The construction of the conveyor will result in the reduction of the price of fuel for thousands of families in the area," the resolution said.

It was resolved that "the URWA, its local unions and its members supporting the pending legislation on the conveyor in the Ohio legislature."

Congressmen Remind Industry Of Nov. 2

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

IF YOU HAD sat last week at House hearings on the Taft-Hartley Law repealer, you would have thought that industry didn't know that Nov. 2, 1948, had ever existed.

Industry representatives, arguing for their beloved T-H (they almost bowed their heads in mentioning the law) testified as if American people had not elected Pres. Truman and a liberal Congress pledged to repeal T-H.

But, the eight Democrats on the sub-committee soon made each witness well aware of Nov. 2—and well aware that T-H will soon be on its way out. The subcommittee of 13 members is considering H. R. 2032, which reenacts the Wagner Act with certain revisions.

The first week of the House hearings—under the chairmanship of Rep. Augustine B. Kelley (D., Pa.) had these main developments:

1. Industry had developed a new party line on the non-Communist affidavits. Witness after witness urged that the affidavit be retained, but that management also would have to sign. "I would be proud to affirm that I am not a Communist," was the way it went.

Ignored by industry was the basic point that such an affidavit is an invasion of a man's personal rights, and ignored was the fact that the affidavit by its very nature presumes a man is a Communist until he signs it.

2. An admission by Rep. Frances Bolton (R., O.), who testified for retention of the "content" of T-H, that she was not familiar with the provisions of either T-H or the Wagner Act.

She had just contended that she never votes for a bill unless she has thoroughly perused it.

3. Ex-Rep. Hartley, who co-authored T-H, has often accused unions of being undemocratic in their elections, strike votes, etc. Last week, the committee heard read into the record a ruling by the Board of Standards and Appeals of the N. Y. State Labor Dept. that the Tool Owners' Union, of which Hartley is now president, is "facistic" because it has no democratic voting procedures.

The Tool Owners' Union, which claims to "represent" 50,000,000 persons, allows only three persons to vote — its founder, his wife and his partner.

4. The CIO Textile Workers, in a statement sent to the committee, accused the textile industry, "by outright trickery and crude economic pressure," of attempting to get its employes to sign questionnaires stating they favor retention of T-H.

REP. KELLEY

The union specifically named the Rock River Woolen Mills, Jamesville, Wis.; the Bemis Bros. Bag Co., which has plants in many states, and the Wyandotte Worsted Co., Waterville, Me.

The subcommittee did a lot of debunking of the one-sided General Electric and Fulton Lewis T-H questionnaires.

Government and labor witnesses are slated to be heard this week. Rep. John Lesinski, (D., Mich.) is chairman of the full committee.

Some witnesses appeared last week in person to testify; others handed in statements for the record. Here are some samples:

The Congressmen

Rep. Peter W. Rodino, Jr. (N. J.): In addition to denouncing Hartley, Rodino said his own father worked at General Motors and that the long UAW strike of 1945-46 naturally caused hardship in his family, "but thank God GM workers held out!" He noted that Gerard Reilly, former member of the NLRB, is now on GM's payroll as a $3000 a month lobbyist against legislation fair to labor.

RODINO

Reilly also represents GE and the printing industry.

Rodino noted several instances where T-H had destroyed locals in his district. In one case, NLRB Gen. Counsel Denham refused to seek an injunction against the telephone company though he sought injunctions against unions with "undue haste."

Rep. Raymond Madden (D., Ind.): "In 1947, when we were considering T-H (I was on the Labor Committee then), Hartley and Rep. Clare Hoffman (R., O.) made much of an alleged mandate given by the people in the 1946 Congresional elections.

"Now, it's high time the 81st Congress carries out the mandate—an unmistakable mandate—given to it by the people last Nov. 2."

He noted that in 1947, ten of the 12 Indiana Congressmen voted for T-H. He himself voted no and the liberal Rep. Louis Ludlow (D.) was ill. On Nov. 2, seven of the 10 were defeated and a liberal democrat—Jacobs—replaced Ludlow, who did not run.

"Last summer, Charles Halleck (Republican House leader) challenged the President and the Democratic Party to make T-H a campaign issue. That challenge was accepted. The people gave a mandate in electing Truman and giving him a Congressional majority."

REP. JACOBS

Madden denounced GE's T-H questionnaire as a misleading one, "which doesn't give a man a fair chance to answer." Of Rep. Smith, he asked: "Have you read Rep. Jacob's letter to C. E. Wilson of GE?"

Smith: "No, I haven't."

Smith had been praising GE's questionnaire.

Madden went on: "In 1947, 98% of the employers who testified to live within the Wagner Act.

"Also, in 1947, I asked Rep. Hartley to investigate the Tool Owners' Union. He refused. Now he's its lobbyist."

Rep. Daniel Flood (D., Pa.): "When T-H crossed the line of corrective action, it became destructive.

"I wouldn't sign a non-Communist affidavit, even though I hate and despise the Communist Party.

"It has been attempted to prove that the American people didn't know all about T-H when they voted last fall. That's not strange, since even we in Congress aren't conversant with all its details."

Rep. Carl D. Perkins (D., Ky.): "Doesn't the requirement for an affidavit put an undue burden on a citizen?"

Flood, "Yes, it does."

When McConnell asked Flood if T-H had not helped eradicate Communists from unions, Burke interrupted to deny that. He said that it had been leadership and the rank and file, such as in his own UAW.

Rep. Frances Bolton (R., O.): "I want the contents of the law retained. Discipline is good and necesary for those who fail to discipline themselves.

Jacobs asked her which restraint she would retain.

Mrs. Bolton: "I don't have a list handy and can't recall all."

Jacobs: "Well, what about the mandatory injunction?"

Mrs. Bolton: "I am against the use of them. Injunctions should be a last gasp procedure . . . I am against secondary boycotts . . . I am not familiar with the Wagner Act."

She has been in Congress for nine years.

She referred to "unfair domination" of labor leaders and the necessity for protecting them.

Burke told her that sounded strange. "Three of us on this committee have been labor leaders. Last fall, the people elected us to Congress. Doesn't that seem to mean the people, rather than thinking we dominated them unfairly, actually gave us a vote of confidence?"

Mrs. Bolton hastened to say that she was referring to only a small number of labor leaders.

She also said that there must be a time at which unions must stop asking for more. Burke said that time had far from come, noting that industry itself has far from reached the peak of technical perfection.

Within the course of two minutes she made two statements which startled the Representatives. In one, she said: "I never vote for a bill until I have digested it thoroughly."

In the other statement, she said: "I am not familair with the details of T-H."

Wier remarked dryly: "I am amazed you aren't cognizant of a law you back so vehemently."

Rep. Barrett O'Hara (D., Ill.): "T-H is bad and the people want to get rid of it.

"Last fall, I campaigned for repeal of T-H. My district, which embraces the Univ. of Chicago, is definitely not a working class section. Yet, I won.

"I have been a lawyer for years. I have never known a union which refused to deal with management. I have known many managements which refuse to deal with unions."

Rep. John Blatnik (D., Minn.): "You must reject the spurious argument that Taft-Hartley has some good points. It is a coordinated law and it is bad.

"Suppose you take honey and cream and drink it. It is fine. Next time, suppose you put a drop of arsenic in the honey and cream. The one bad ingredient destroys the whole drink.

"That's the way it is with T-H."

Blatnik began by saying: "I will speak frankly and to the point. I want T-H repealed in the shortest possible time. I maintain that it is a vicious and un-American measure which was written by labor-hating corporation attorneys who were in the pay of the NAM. It was adopted by the equally-reactionary and now-repudiated 80th Congress during a period of passion and 'lynch-labor' hysteria. Its one and only purpose was to shackle and eventually destroy the American labor movement.

"I also want the original Wagner Act reinstated in letter and principle. This law was based on the obvious truth that the public welfare requires the existence of strong and free trade unions who are able to bargain on equal terms with management.

"I am not against any constructive and honest proposals to improve the Wagner Act in the interests of better labor-management relations, and any recommendations offered in good

Carey Says Pro-T-Hers Failed

PROPAGANDA organs and lobbyists of the special interests haven't been able to "sell" the Taft-Hartley Act to workers "because there are mighty few fools among union members.

Talking on a special broadcast March 12, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey said that union members "have eyes and ears and brains and common sense. They don't believe the steady drum of propaganda in behalf of T-H.

"They know T-H has weakened their unions, and that it has cost them money from their pay envelopes at a time when profits are the highest in all our history."

Carey appeared as a representative of CIO on the program, which was arranged by the Democratic National Committee. Others on the program were Sen. Elbert Thomas, head of the Senate Labor Committee; AFL Pres. William Green; Pres. George Harrison of the AFL Railway Clerks; and Pres. Harvey Brown of the Machinists.

The CIO official urged quick passage of the Thomas Bill, which would repeal T-H and bring back the Wagner Act. That, he said, "would restore rightful equality between employer and employe."

"We need the Thomas Bill just as we need laws to protect the rabbit from the hunter," he said.

"But we don't need a single, solitary law to prohibit the rabbit from taking the shotgun away from the hunter and turning it against him. T-H is a law to protect hunters from rabbits, and it's unnecessary."

PASS SOME OF IT!

The 81st Congress, which convened Jan. 3, hasn't passed a single piece of major legislation.

It's true that the first part of the session was devoted to reorganization of the House and Senate, but we think it appropriate to quote part of an editorial we ran last Nov. 22:

"There is a strong inclination on the part of Truman supporters to count their legislative eggs before they've hatched.

"Many of them assume that the new Congress will jump at the chance to enact into law the program the President advocated during his campaign.

"In doing so they're making a bad mistake. They are discounting—or completely forgetting—the forces in Congress opposed to various portions of the Truman program.

"We're not predicting that Congress will toss the President's legislation plans into the ash can. Far from it.

"We're merely saying that it would be foolish for the voters who put the Democrats in power to ignore the realities of legislative procedure—to ignore the anti-civil liberties block in Congress—to ignore the need for reminding some of the lawmakers they have a mandate from the people.

"It is a reasonably clear mandate and the Democratic voters should not permit it to become clouded.

"And it won't become clouded if the 'folks back home' keep reminding the men and women who were elected that the 'do nothing for the people' attitude of the 80th Congress caused many political heads to roll."

None of our big legislative eggs has been hatched. Some of them haven't even been put in the incubator.

So, we suggest that the "folks back home" start telling their senators and congressmen that they want quick passage of the Truman Fair Deal measures.

Letters, postcards, telegrams, petitions and telephone calls are standard equipment for such a task. Use them!

'OTHER SIDE' TELLS STORY

Big business and many of the small special interest groups have been taking full advantage of the time that has elapsed since Congress went into session nearly 2½ months ago. They have really been turning on the heat in Washington.

If you believed some of the stories their lobbyists are telling, then the election of Nov. 2 meant nothing. The voters didn't vote for a change. Truman didn't really win. The Republicans weren't really defeated.

Unfortunately they've been able to sell some of their nonsense, largely because of the silence of those who put the Democrats back in control of Congress.

(Incidentally, some Congressional committee could perform a valuable public service by investigating the activities—and expenditures—of the lobbyists. And those who claim they represent "small business" shouldn't be skipped, either.)

It's time for those who spoke loudest at the polls last November to begin speaking again—directly to the men and women they sent to Washington to represent them.

It's time for them to tell again—in communications to senators and congressmen—the same story they told at the polls Nov. 2.

Task Is Big And Difficult

Much Must Be Done Before Europe Can Be Put Back On Its Feet

By ALLAN L. SWIM

MILLIONS of U. S. Marshall Plan dollars are being spent in Europe each month in a pump-priming operation designed to put war-devastated countries back on their feet.

There is strong evidence that this huge undertaking—financed by all Americans who pay taxes—has already saved a portion of Europe from bankruptcy and has considerably strengthened the economy of all nations participating in ERP.

But there is not yet equally strong evidence that the "pump" which is now being primed will be able to carry the load by itself by the time the ERP is scheduled to end—in 1952.

The lack of such evidence does not detract from the job the Economic Cooperation Administration is doing abroad. It merely focuses attention on the real problem—the establishment of a sound European economy.

DURING A recent five-week period I visited six of the key ERP nations of Western Europe.

I talked with ECA mission officials, with governmental leaders, economists, trade union officials, leaders of political parties, workers in factories, miners, industrialists, shippers, taxi drivers, production experts, union newspaper editors, industrial reporters and many others.

They agreed, generally, on two points:

1. Western Europe would have had virtually no chance to recover from the effects of the war had there been no Marshall Plan.

2. The "Marshall Plan" countries must take the fullest advantage of U. S. aid, must tighten their economic belts as much as possible during the next three years, must step up production considerably and must work together as they have never done in the past if there's to be economic advancement after the Marshall Plan expires.

But there was not general agreement on whether the various countries are now doing—or will do in the future—those things which need most to be done.

THERE IS not a country in Western Europe which can establish a high standard of living for its people without buying from and selling to its neighbors.

Thus a certain amount of overall economic planning and cooperation is needed. Such cooperation and planning is increasing under the guidance of the Office of European Economic Cooperation—but much more will be needed if real success is to be achieved.

Modern industrial and agricultural techniques are badly needed in many parts of Europe—but there is considerable opposition to change from practices that have been followed for years.

There is a great need for a better and more equitable distribution of wealth in some parts of Europe—but little is being done to bring it about.

DOLLARS FROM the U. S. can do much to help Europe get back on its feet but they alone cannot do the job that needs to be done.

They alone will not alter the system which in Italy permits thousands of agricultural workers to live in caves near large farms which contain idle acres used only as hunting preserves by the wealthy.

They alone will not alter the type of thinking which permitted the Nazis to rise to power in Germany.

They alone will not remedy the conditions which enabled the Communists to gain a real foothold in France.

They alone will not eradicate the trade barriers erected by nationalist-minded countries.

THIS IS not an appeal for the ECA to use U. S. dollars and its influence abroad to bring about badly needed social reforms. ECA should not become involved in the internal political affairs of the nations to which it gives economic aid.

This, however, does not alter the fact that social and economic reforms are badly needed in parts of Western Europe.

And it does not alter the fact that the lack of reforms may seriously hinder the effectiveness of ECA.

We must continue to pour our dollars into Western Europe for some time, but we shouldn't have any illusions about what they can and will accomplish.

Those who live in Europe—not in the U. S.—will largely determine their own future.

NLRB Reports Fewer Union Victories Under T-H

ANOTHER month of Taft-Hartley, another slump in the percentage of union victories in NLRB representation elections.

In January, the last month for which the NLRB has issued election figures, unions won only 66% of the collective bargaining elections in which they engaged. Included in this figure are CIO, AFL and many so-called independent unions, a number of which have a distinct company aroma.

In the previous month, workers expressed a desire for unionization in 67% of the elections.

During the 12 years of the Wagner Act, under which employer intimidation before an election was more rigidly prohibited, unions won, on the average, 81% of the elections. By the time Taft-Hartley ended its first year, union victories had slumped to 73%.

With the NLRB undergoing heavy attack in Congressional committee hearings as being anti-labor, the Board worked hard in January to prove it isn't so.

In one month the number of complaints against employers almost tripled. The board issued 48 complaints for unfair labor practices against management in January, compared with only 17 in December. Unions, on the other hand, drew complaints in three more instances in January than in December.

"It's almost March 15, and you men haven't figured out my income tax yet."

50% U. S. Shipping Of Aid Cargoes Approved

The House merchant marine committee has approved unanimously a bill requiring that 50% of all cargoes carried to foreign countries under programs supported with U. S. money shall be transported in U. S. flag vessels.

Demanded by American maritime unions as unemployment on the waterfront has been rising, the 50% requirement had been promised but abandoned in the first year of Marshall plan operation. The bill (HR 1340) would cover Marshall plan cargoes and others where U. S. loans or grants play a part.

The 50% requirement must be adhered to by each country for each of these three classes of carrier: dry bulk, dry cargo and tanker. It is to be calculated on the gross tonnage of the cargo.

Enforcement would be assured by requiring the U. S. Maritime Commission to report to Congress at regular intervals that the requirement is being met, or else list the government agencies not meeting it.

The Picket Line Changed Color Overnight

IT HAPPENED about 10 years ago in a Southern city which had a police department that boasted it was "tough on Negroes."

The attitude of the city administration toward race relations made the problem doubly difficult.

CIO leaders, completely familiar with the situation, anticipated there would be trouble as soon as the strike started — unless they were extremely careful.

The walkout started on schedule and ended sooner than most people expected, with a victory for the union.

But it was touch-and-go for a few days, and a quick change in tactics was required to avoid defeat.

IT TOOK CIO representatives only a short time to organize a fairly large plant which employed only Negroes in its production force.

Management refused to recognize the union until ordered to do so by the NLRB.

Negotiations finally got under way and dragged on for weeks, with the company refusing to grant what the union considered a decent wage increase.

Eventually a strike vote was taken and nearly every member of the union voted to walk out.

The date of the strike was set several days in advance and then a strategy meeting was held.

ONE OF THE white leaders of the CIO talked bluntly with the Negro strike committee as plans for the walkout were being made.

"Now, let's not kid ourselves about what's likely to happen," he said. "The city administration doesn't like the CIO and it likes Negroes even less.

"You're going to be heckled from the minute you form a picket line and the cops are going to use every trick in the book to cause 'trouble' which will give them an 'excuse' for arresting your men.

"We've got to play it smart. So instruct your men to keep absolutely silent while picketing — regardless of what anybody says to them. Tell them not to talk back to the cops or to management.

"You are likely to get a raw deal just because you're colored, but I believe we can outsmart them."

THE HECKLING began soon after the picket line formed and continued for several days.

The pickets maintained silence despite jibes and insults from the police. They opened up their lines every time a police squad car approached.

There was not a single incident which could be used as an excuse for making arrests.

Then the police began bringing white strikebreakers through the picket line in their squad cars.

The union was notified that the company had decided to replace its Negro force with white workers.

Another union strategy meeting was held and a new plan worked out.

The following morning not a single one of the regular pickets showed up for duty on the line.

In their place were an equal number of the largest white men who could be recruited from nearby CIO-organized plants.

Soon the cops arrived with white strikebreakers in their cars. They took one look at the pickets, discussed the situation with the strikebreakers and then drove away.

Nobody went through the line that day or the next. On the third day the strike ended, with a good wage settlement.

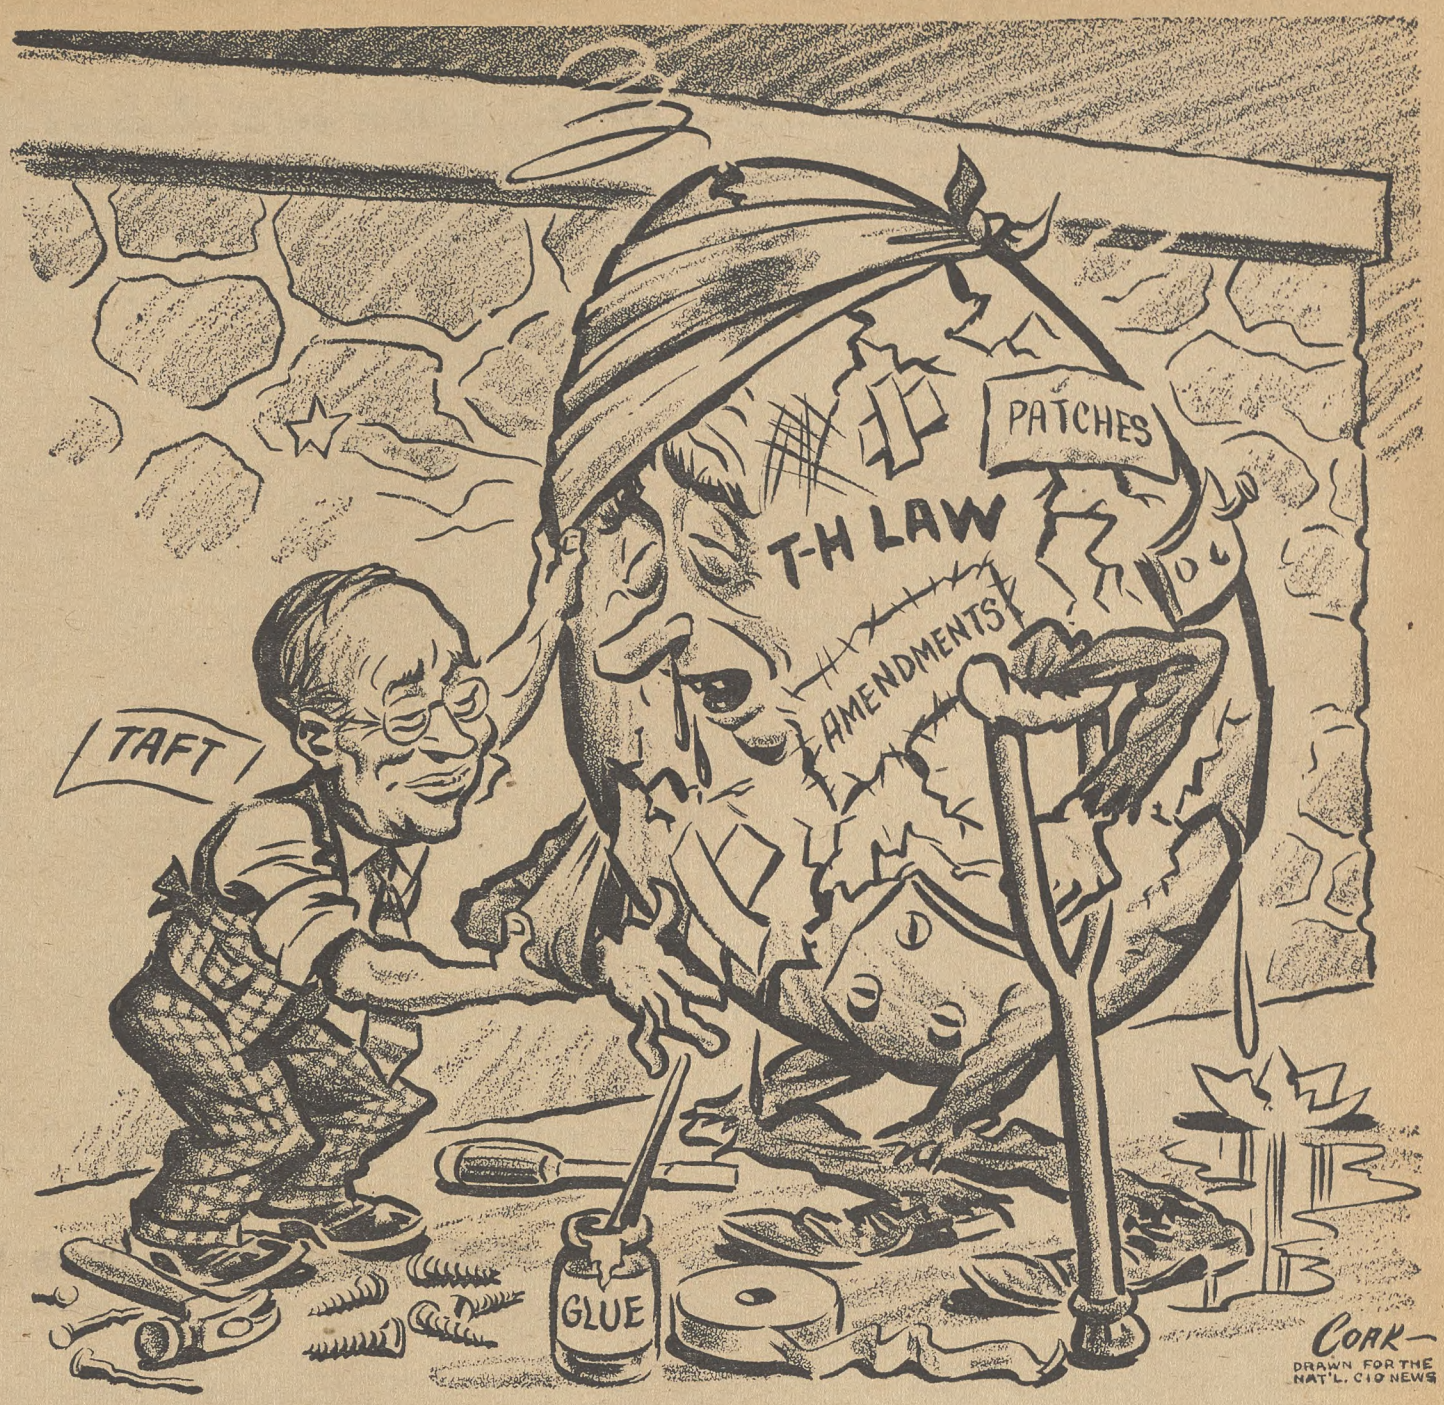
Putting Humpty-Dumpty Together Again



Truman Needed PAC To Win, Says Saturday Evening Post

"MR. TRUMAN could not have won without the Kroll machine," says the ultra-conservative Saturday Evening Post in a recent issue. In a lengthy portrait of the CIO-PAC director Jack Kroll, Hugh Morrow tells what makes "The CIO's Political Hotshot" tick. Following are excerpts:

John Jacob (Jack) Kroll, the director of the CIO Political Action Committee, is a fatherly, pipe-smoking man of sixty-three who looks like Santa Claus without a beard.... Kroll's importance was confirmed last November by the election of President Truman and a Democratic Congress. "Only two people thought Harry would make it—Harry and me," he is fond of saying. Other Democrats, in remarkable numbers, have tried since the election to talk themselves into the We Always Had Faith in Harry Club, but Kroll can prove his right to membership. He headed a 250,000-man political machine which helped to make the supposedly impossible Truman victory come to pass, and he not only predicted the final outcome accurately, both publicly and privately, but he also came close to forecasting correctly the state-to-state results.

Kroll's talent for remaining inconspicuous is so highly developed that he is one of America's least-known political leaders. Yet he has transformed PAC from a noisy campaign issue—which it was in 1944—into one of the most effective, quietly operating political machines in the country. Kroll thinks it is the most effective, and there is evidence to support his claim, not all of it indisputable. PAC was by no means solely responsible for the Democratic victory.... It is demonstrable, however, that Mr. Truman could not have won without the Kroll machine.

Now labor's power clearly is on the upgrade again. A series of events in January indicated the trend. President Truman's January-fifth message to Congress, proposing a social-welfare state, could have been written at CIO headquarters. In the House of Representatives, 102 Democrats fought for the nine vacant seats on the Labor Committee, which handles labor legislation or the repeal thereof, and when the smoke of battle cleared, PAC-backed Democrats were firmly in the majority on the committee—and on the Senate Labor Committee as well. "Labor is in politics to stay," CIO President Philip Murray announced in New York. "The CIO Political Action Committee will expand."

While other labor leaders do the lobbying in Washington, Kroll and his PAC are out in the field again, bearing down on the municipal elections taking place this year in 535 cities of forty-six states; gubernatorial elections in New Jersey and Virginia, and elections of legislatures in five states. A Supreme Court decision in January that the states have power to ban the closed shop and its variations prompted Kroll to demand as much hard work from his machine in local elections this year as it contributed in the national election of 1948. Object: more "progressive"—that is, pro-labor—officials and local laws

Kroll and (Sidney) Hillman led the famous 1910 strike of 40,000 garment workers against Hart Schaffner and Marx, and four years later organized a rebel faction in the United Garment Workers union which established Amalgamated.

Those were rugged times for a labor organizer. Kroll was thrown into jail so often that he lost track of the number of his arrests, but he takes pride in the fact that he was never convicted of anything. Every time Kroll hung around a clothing plant, trying to organize an union local, he could be reasonably sure of a ride in the paddy wagon. On one occasion, not being able to think up any other charge, a cop accused Kroll of staring at the ankles of women boarding a streetcar near the plant, and off he went to the hoosegow again.

From 1926 through 1934, Kroll led a strike every year in the men's-clothing industry at Cincinnati. Every year he lost, until 1935, when he sewed up the town for Amalgamated. He operates the same way in national politics. Labor's miserable showing in the 1946 elections, a few months after he took over PAC upon Sidney Hillman's death, did not discourage him.

Kroll Urges More PAC Work In Ohio

Ohio CIO-PAC isn't going to ignore the important city and congressional elections in so-called "off-years."

That was the promise made last week by Jack Kroll, Natl. PAC Director and President of the Ohio CIO Council, in a message to Ohio CIO members. "For us here in Ohio and for the people of the nation, there is no such thing as an 'off year'," Kroll said.

Kroll pointed to the record of reactionaries elected in Ohio's last two off-year elections, 1942 and 1946. The record shows the machine-controlled Republican vote in Ohio is much more stable than the liberal Democratic vote.

Both drop in off-year elections but the Republican vote slump is far smaller.

House Subcommittee Studying Taft-Har

faith should be considered by the Committee.

"Perhaps some amendments will have to be considered at some later date when the Wagner Act is again operating as the law of the land. Such deliberations will require statesmanship of the highest order, and it is my feeling that now is not the time.

"During the last campaign I promised the working people of my District that I would fight for complete repeal of T-H, and for a return to the original Wagner Act. I know that the workers voted for me on this basis. Today all the major labor organizations — the AFL, CIO, and the Brotherhoods — are on record in support of complete repeal, and I stand with them on this issue."

T-H Proponents

Following the Congressmen, a group of anti-labor representatives paraded to the witness stand, read prepared statements and then faced the members of the committee. In every case it was a field day for the Democratic members of the committee. Especially was it a field day for Rep. Jacobs, who was supplied with part of their time by other Democrats, so he could carry out his adept questioning.

However, every Democratic member scored many times for a decent labor bill.

What did the Republicans do? Well, most of the time at least four of them were missing, with only Rep. McConnell, mildest of the lot, attending most of the sessions.

Jack Garrett Scott, general counsel, Natl. Association of Motor Bus Operators: This representative of the inter-city bus industry stated that "the members of our industry favor retention of T-H in its present form, primarily because it has worked out well in fact, both as to the carriers and their employes, and consequently the public."

Kelley asked Scott: "How do you know the law has worked out well for employes?"

Scott: "Ive heard that from employers."

Kelley: "Your argument that strikes have declined is not a good argument because you are comparing with the years immediately after the war, when strikes rose because workers were faced with stubborn resistance of industry."

Scott: "You may be right. I can't speak for employes." Scott, under questioning by Rep. Bailey, admitted that "I am not too sympathetic" with the T-H provision which allows strike-breakers to vote and bars strikers.

What's in a Name?

Charles M. Brooks, former associate of NLRB General Counsel Robert N. Denham, is in favor of one major change in the Taft-Hartley Law.

"I think the name should be changed, since that name has become a hated one with the American people."

REP. JACOBS then for the first time started developing one of his many cases against portions of the T-H law. He noted that Section (c) of the law provides "that what an employer may say about a union may not be used as evidence against him in an unfair labor practice charge. If a boss says publicly that a union is bad, then fires all the union officers, don't you think in logic that his remarks should be used as evidence?"

Scott: "I think so."

Rep. McConnell tried to get Scott into a discussion of the national emergency injunction features of T-H, but Scott said he didn't see how that would apply in his industry, since bus strikes are only local.

Hoyt P. Steele, in behalf of U. S. Chamber of Commerce and of Benjamin Electric Mfg. Co., Des Plaines, Ill.:

Steele said the C. of C. opposes all types of union security—union shop, as well as closed shop.

However, it was brought out that the Benjamin Co. has a maintenance of membership clause with the CIO Electrical Workers.

Steele stated that "adequate machinery should be set up to achieve a settlement when bargaining breaks down."

Kelley broke in: "That kind of procedure invites stalling on the part of one party."

Speaking slowly and with obvious emotion, Kelley said: "When you surround collective bargaining with procedures set up by law, collective bargaining is destroyed. I speak as an employer who has negotiated union contracts for years. There are bound to be results if you keep the parties talking around the table."

Kelley owns two bituminous coal mines and a coke plant at Mamoth, Pa. All his employes are members of the Mine Workers.

Rep. Irving took up the question of how a union could get its story to the general public. Steel said: "The American free press, the labor press, the pulpit and the radio are available to labor."

Irving—(he is an AFL official)—asserted: "In my union capacity, I have been refused advertising space to answer an employer who had inserted an ad in the same newspaper the day before. The radio is rarely available to labor. And you know as well as I do that union newspapers reach only union members, not the general public."

REPS. IRVING, WIER AND BURKE

WHEN THE Democrats finished questioning Steele, it was McConnell's turn.

"I object strenuously to the methods by which the Democrats are questioning this witness," he said. "Yesterday, Rep. Bailey read into the record a lot of material purporting to attack Ex-Rep. Hartley and the Tool Owners Union. Today, Bailey has called the Chamber of Commerce un-American."

Bailey said: "Will the gentleman yield?" and when McConnel did, he said: "I didn't call the C. of C. un-American. I said it was composed of rugged individualists."

Kelley then said: "I agree with part of the statement made by my good friend from Pennsylvania, Mr. McConnell. I think witnesses should be treated politely by Congressional committees, but unfortunately this is too often not true.

"However, I want to recall to the gentleman's memory that what my colleagues on the Democratic side are doing is mild compared to what the GOP did on this committee in the 80th Congress when the Republicans were in the majority. Labor witnesses were handled discourteously."

McConnell then withdrew his protest.

Harry P. Jeffry, George Drieke and A. H. Wilson, representing the Foreman's League for Education and Association:

Jeffry, an attorney, and the other two witnesses, both working foremen, urged that the new law contain a provision barring unionization of any sort for foremen.

Interruptions

The House hearings were interrupted by two important events.

One was the vital meeting of the full committee at which the 75c minimum was approved. The other was the time when the House went into a committee of the whole to act on rent control.

Sen. Thomas' Character And Career

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

SOON, A bill aimed at restoring basic freedoms to the workers of America will start its way through the United States Senate.

That bill will be under the leadership of Sen. Elbert Duncan Thomas (D., Utah).

Here are some facts to let you know why Sen. Thomas is well fitted to that job of leadership:

He has been a missionary, an author, a humanitarian, a scholar, an educator, a soldier, a politician and a statesman. In the U. S. Senate, his interests have been perhaps the most varied of any member of that body.

He has sponsored and worked for and won legislation for labor, for businessmen, for farmers, for war preparedness, for winning the war, for winning the peace, for veterans, for education.

New, he's chairman of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. He used to be, just before and during the war, acting chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee. He also serves on the Foreign Relations, Mines and Mining and Pensions Committees.

In addition to all that, he served on the famous LaFollette Committee, which exposed factory espionage and organized terrorism against working people and their unions.

HE RECALLS some anecdotes about those LaFollette Committee days.

Let him tell the story:

"One morning, representatives of a new General Motors plant at Baltimore were called before our committee. That was just after passage of the Natl. Labor Relations Act (Wagner Act) and industry was being advised that it should ignore the law, which the attorneys believed — or said they did — was unconstitutional.

(The Supreme Court had for years operated under the dictum that manufacturing, mining and agriculture were of local concern —Intrastate, rather than interstate.)

"I suggested that Sen. LaFollette let me 'go to school' with these GM representatives. With a constitutional test of the Wagner Act being considered by the Supreme Court, I asked them question after question.

"When that questioning was over, I had wrung admissions from them that virtually everything the GM plant would do was in interstate commerce. They got their steel from another state, labor from outside Maryland, their building plans were drawn somewhere else, their sales would be mostly outside the state, etc.

"I think that was the first time a Government record showed the fallacy of the Government dictum that manufacturing was intrastate. The same was logically true of mining and agriculture.

"I think that morning 'school' was a major factor in the Supreme Court's decision that the Wagner Act was constitutional."

ANOTHER anecdote of the LaFollette Committee days concerned the self-styled "constitutional" pressure groups.

"One witness told us his job was to save the American Constitution. I questioned him about the Constitution.

"Was it long or short?

"He didn't know.

"Was it in articles, or in sections?

"He didn't know.

"He knew nothing."

SEN. THOMAS has had a lot of experience in labor relations.

In 1922, he was a major in the inspector general's department, U. S. Army. That was the year of the big Utah coal strike. The governor of Utah declared martial law and Major Thomas was put in charge.

"At first, the unions thought I was their enemy. This was intensified when the employers ordered that the families of the striking miners must get out of company homes by the end of the month. The union shipped in a number of tents from other areas. I ordered that they not be unloaded from the freights.

"The union members squawked — their children would be without homes, they said. But, they cheered at the end of the month when I forbade the company from evicting the strikers."

ELBERT THOMAS was, from 1907 to 1912, missionary and president of the Japan Mission, Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Travelling widely throughout the empire, he learned to speak and write Japanese fluently. That knowledge came in handy during the Utah coal strike and proved of top value to this country during World War II as we shall see later.

In the Utah strike, Major Thomas ordered the men to end picketing, promising them that no scabs would be brought in.

"One day," he recalls, "a report came in that a mine operator in an isolated section had brought 41 Japanese from over the mountain to help mine the coal.

THOMAS was one of a large number of senators elected with Roosevelt in 1932. (He defeated Senator Reed Smoot, one of the biggest powers in the Republican Party.) Now, only Thomas, Sen. Pat McCarran (D., Nev.) and Sen. Harry Byrd (D., Va.) remain of the 1932 freshmen.

Thomas recalls that when the Senate Labor Committee was considering the Wagner act, he was the only member of the sub-committee who had experience in labor relations.

(Incidentally, Senator Thomas had the unusual distinction of becoming chairman of a Senate committee — Labor — in his first term.)

There was more experience beside Utah.

"As a youngster, I saw armed guards on trains during the Eugene Debs Pullman strike.

"Having lived in China and Japan, I saw the boycott in operation — the Chinese use the boycott even against their own government.

"I was in England during the 1926 general strike.

"I saw Hitler kill unions in Germany in 1934."

That sounds like a full life for a versatile man. It is. But, there's more.

HE IS A native of Salt Lake City, main city of the Mormons. In 1906, he took his B.A. degree at the Univ. of Utah. A year later, he married Edna Harker and soon they were on their way to his missionary assignment in Japan. While there he found time to write articles — in Japanese— for Nipponese magazines.

(His oldest daughter was born in Japan and they named her Chiyo, which means "a thousand years of happiness.)

Back from Japan, he went on the Utah U. staff as a Latin and Greek instructor. He held various jobs at the university (simultaneously with his inspector general department duties) and went to the Univ. of California in 1922 and won his Ph.D. degree.

He was active in political science affairs and put that to practical use when he was elected to the Senate in 1932.

In the Senate, he accomplished these things — and is planning to accomplish much more:

For Businessmen: Sponsored bill for disposal of billions of dollars of surplus war goods.

The Farmer: Backed all of the broad agricultural program of Presidents Roosevelt and Truman — and saw to it that his prestige helped win enactment for these.

Education: The Educational Press Association in 1943 named him first in educational service to the nation. He is sponsor of the Federal aid for education bill; he has put forth and won many other educational measures and is sure he will see his aid bill win this time.

Preparation for War: Urged stockpiling of raw materials five years before World War II; air bases here and abroad were provided for by his legislation; in 1935 he fought for and won laws which led to air bases at such places as Dakar.

On New Year's Day, 1942 Senator Thomas spoke over the short wave radio to the Japanese, warning them in their native language that they could not win the war started so treacherously by their leaders at Pearl Harbor 24 days before.

Winning the Peace: Sponsored or helped win all of the crucial means under which it is hoped an amicable world can be achieved.

Labor: Was chairman of the conference committee which gained the Fair Labor Standards Act — the Thomas-Norton Bill — fostered the CCC — served on the LaFollette Committee whose achievements were monumental — fought against labor drafts — represented the U. S. at every Intl. Labor Organization conference since 1944 and took all ILO legislation through the Senate.

* * *

In 1946, following the death of his first wife, he married Ethel Evans, his capable secretary. She still works in the secretarial post.

* * *

These days, Senator Thomas smiles wryly when he receives telegrams urging him to vote for federal aid to education, for which he has campaigned throughout his 15 Senatorial years.

He also smiles wryly when he receives telegrams urging him to vote for the Thomas-Lesinski Bill, of which he is co-sponsor and for which he is making the most strenuous battle of a career which has seen a lot of strenuous battles.

That's the man who'll guide the Thomas-Lesinski Bill through the U. S. Senate.

Hank Strobel, who identified himself as a farmer, but who actually represented the notorious Associated Farmers of California:

Under T-H, agricultural workers are not covered; however, all the secondary boycott, mass picketing and injunction features of the law can and have been applied against the workers. In other words, there is no protection of their right to organize, but there is a way to punish them if they have to use direct action after they organize on their own.

STROBEL

Strobel was questioned about the contributions of manufacturers to the Associated Farmers. He said that they gave approximately $20,000 a year to the organization.

Perkins demanded he submit data to support the $20,000 statement. Strobel refused to submit such data, insisting that his figure is correct.

He was questioned concerning the DiGiorgio strike of the AFL Natl. Farm Labor Union in which there have been charges that the employer used violence and other methods in an attempt to break the strike. Perkins asked him if it were not true that Joseph DiGiorgio had made a profit of $3 million after taxes in 1946.

Blasphemy

Hank Strobel, official of the notorious Associated Farmers of California, entered a blasphemous statement into the subcommittee's records.

He said that God had permitted the severe storms of last winter because He was angered by the 16 years of the New Deal.

Strobel: "I don't know about that. To me he's just another farmer."

He also answered "I don't know about that" when questioned about an attempt to assassinate one of the strikers' leaders, who was seriously wounded in a shooting about which the Kern County authorities have done nothing.

It was also brought out that though Strobel was an official of the employers' organization against which the workers were on strike in 1946, Kern authorities had sworn him in as a deputy sheriff. Nearly 2,000 pro-management deputies were sworn in; not a single worker was made a deputy.

Reps. Nixon and Wardell were very solicitious in their questioning of the witness. Wardell, who represents the home district of Strobel and Di Giorgio, actually tried to give the impression that he was not acquainted with the witness. In one question he said: "Now, Mr. -uh—— I forget your name—oh, yes—Strobel . . ."

Lyle H. Fisher, director of industrial relations for the Minnesota Mining & Manufacturing Co., which he said has contracts with the AFL, CIO and Mine Workers:

Fisher gave a detailed set of things that MMM wanted in a new law, which, added all together, was just the same as T-H.

The MMM representative, like the one from the C. of C., had forgotten to include the non-Communist Affidavit in the set of things he wished in the law.

Rep. Wier said: "I want the record to show that the C. of C. did not urge that the oath be in the new law." Rep. Velde had to remind Fisher of his omission.

Jacobs noted that Fisher had made much of statistics purporting to show that strikes have declined since T-H. He said the witness' comparison between the T-H period of June, 1947 to the present time and the postwar strikes of from September, 1945 to June, 1947 was an erroneous way to move. He reminded the witness that the postwar strikes were brought on by management.

Fisher then said that there are always the same number of strikes after a war.

Jacobs said: "I suppose you mean the same number of persons involved in a strike, but you are wrong, because there were five times as many persons involved in strikes immediately after World War II as were involved after World War I."

Jacobs then led Fisher through a legal analysis of Section 9 of T-H and other sections which are applicable to Section 9. He showed that under this section labor has been taken back to the days previous to the time when yellow dog contracts were outlawed.

He said that after strikers had been barred from voting in an NLRB election and the strikebreakers have won that election, then the strikers are barred from attempting to organize the strikebreakers. Fisher said: "I don't think that's so bad."

Jacobs: "You mean the whole procedure?"

Fisher: "Yes, though I am not very familiar with it."

Jacobs: "Take it from me, one who has read the law carefully, Uncle Sam is set up as an absolute strikebreaker." Later he told Fisher to look at Section 8 (d), which concerns itself with decertifications.

Fisher: "I don't see anything about decertifications in (d)."

Roomy

In contrast to the Senate hearings, which were mostly held in a tiny room, the House sub-committee, under Rep. Augustine Kelley (D., Pa.), met in the huge Caucus Room.

Jacobs: "Oh, you're looking at the wrong (d). This law is so involved, it is easy for anyone to get confused."

Roadley, under questioning by Jacobs, defended the provision which bars use of the boss' statement against the union as evidence. He became confused under questioning by Jacobs and had to be set right on just what the law said in several instances.

ROADLEY

At one point, he asked Roadley to read section 9 (b). Roadley asked: "(b) for boy?"

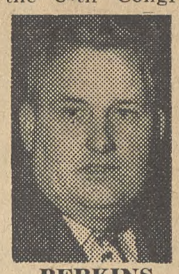
Jacobs: "(b) for boy—or (b) for boycott."

Jacobs also questioned him on the GE questionnaire. Roadley admitted that some GE questions could not be answered with either yes or no.

George J. Tichy and John C. Curran, two well-fed representatives of the Natl. Lumber Manufacturers' Association:

They were hot for the T-H, but particularly the non-Communist affidavit.

Perkins told them he thought the 80th Congress had "played into the hands of the Communists in adopting the affidavits. This was just one of those things put into this law to save face with the public and gloss over the unfairness of T-H."



PERKINS

Burke, reminding the committee that he is a former CIO official, said he had signed the affidavits. "But," he asserted, "My feeling was that I was presumed to be a Communist until I proved I wasn't."

Dixie, GOP Congressmen Riddle Rent Control

By GLORIA CAPLAN

A juggernaut of angry Southern Democrat and Republican Congressmen, with the assistance of Federal Rent Administrator Tighe E. Woods, last week rode roughshod over the President's rent control program, gutting it completely with landlord amendments.

Sen. Sparkman
Tenants' Hope

With the narrow defeat of an amendment sponsored by Rep. Jesse Wolcott (R., Mich.) to kill off rent controls after 3 months, the House, as this paper went to press, seemed assured of passing a 15 months extension, severely riddled with weakening amendments. Pluggers for strong tenant protection looked toward the Senate, now awaiting Sen. John Sparkman's committee report, for a ray of hope. But any Senate bill, however good, will suffer considerable whittling-down when Senate-House conferees finally get together for a compromise.

With controls due to die in less than two weeks, administration Democrats in the House began a feverish fight to save the program with three strikes against them.

Before the controversy hit the floor, these three developments had already occurred to undermine their efforts:

1. A Republican caucus of House members voted to kill controls by backing a move to turn controls over to the states following a three-month extension of the federal law. They also backed a Southern Democrat-sponsored "fair return" amendment.

2. Woods surrendered to pressure of the real estate advocates and agreed to support the so-called "fair return" amendment, which he earlier admitted was unworkable. Labor and administration spokesmen had fought the provision on the grounds that it was a cover-up for a general rent rise throughout the country.

They brought out in committee hearings that the government would be used to guarantee a profit to landlords whose property never had and ordinarily never would provide a profit due to poor administration by the owner.

3. Decontrol of 107 areas in 25 states became a certainty as Woods began circulating a list of areas he promised to decontrol if Congress allowed him to reimpose controls on those places when he saw fit.

Thus fortified before debate even began, the landlords packing the gallery had a gay time of it.

Against Control, Reds

The "fair return" amendment, sponsored by Rep. Paul Brown (D., Ga.), sailed through easily. Rejected in committee, the Southerner's proposal was his contribution to his fight against rent control and against "communism."

One Republican who crossed party lines to support rent controls was Rep. Usher L. Burdick (R., N. D.), who warned the Congressmen that "you can't walk off and leave 14 million people defenseless just because the shooting has stopped."

The landlords had come in for a scathing attack by 82-year-old Adolph Sabath (D., Ill.) as the floor fight got under way.

"I hope in view of what has taken place heretofore," said the House veteran, "that my Republican friends will join with us in passing this bill so that they will not find themselves in the position of those who voted for the vicious real estate lobbyists' bill in the last session . . ."

"The activities of the lobby have not in any way diminished and its representatives can be seen in the hotels, in the corridors of the House and Senate Office buildings, and in the galleries of the House and Senate, continuing their activities in full force, determined to kill this legislation in the interest of a few thousand owners of these big apartment buildings and hotels, most of which were acquired under distress conditions at 10, 15, and 20c on the dollar.

SEN. CAIN (R. WASH.)
Darling of the landlords, he pitched in to help the Southern Senators' filibuster, harangued against a presidential appointment for 6 3/4 hours, while rent controls moved toward expiration on March 31.

Lists Opponents

"They have spent over $3 million trying to beat this legislation, legislation in the interest of the American people, but I hope none of you new members and even some of you Republicans, will not fall prey to the ingenious and arrogant tactics of this lobby which, mind you, Mr. Speaker, is sponsored by the Natl. Association of Manufacturers, contractors, hotel apartment operators, and by certain groups and combinations of hotel organizations that are acquiring every hotel and apartment hotel it is possible for them to obtain."

Meanwhile on the other side of Capitol Hill, the rent control bill was scheduled to move right out of committee hearings into the stone wall of filibustering Dixie Democrats and helpful Republicans.

The week of Senate Banking & Currency hearings, like those on the House side, had been swamped with persistent landlords—and landladies—all decked out in well-rehearsed airs of martyrdom.

It was to them that Sen. Harry P. Cain (R. Wash.) played, badgering pro-rent control witnesses, then looking to his property owner audience for approval.

But at the hands of other Senators the lobby didn't fare so well.

Sen. Myers (D. Pa.), sponsor with Rep. Helen Douglas (D. Calif.) of the CIO-backed rent control bill, condemned the lobby for its "selfish, vicious attacks on decent housing legislation and decent rent control legislation." The Senate majority whip appeared as a witness at the hearing.

"Doesn't the real estate lobby know what hit them on Nov. 2, 1948? Doesn't the real estate lobby recognize that rent control was one of the big issues of this campaign, and so was housing?" he asked.

Likened To Reds

And then, the real estate lobby, which has hurled the epithet "communist" at every federal effort to protect housing-shortage victims, found itself likened to the communists.

To the prim landladies who had dutifully applauded every real estate witness's reference to the "un-Americanism" of controlling rents, it must have come as a severe shock. Said Myers: "I sometimes believe that in its tactics on rent control the real estate lobby has adopted the techniques of the Communist Party. Cause confusion, cause turmoil, throw gimmicks in the works, sabotage every worthwhile proposal, and let's have dog eat dog."

To the many small landlords who have written him, urging an end to controls, Myers said he has replied, advising them of their right under the law to obtain rent increases if they suffered hardship.

"In instance after instance," said Myers, "the small landlord who had written me originally protesting against the unfairness of rent control . . . sent me a further letter saying in effect that the increase wasn't worth bothering with and that all he wanted was an end to rent control, get him out from under, get him free, give him back his traditional rights to manage his property as he sees fit."

Myth Exploded

The widely publicized myth of the hard-pressed landlord under rent control had been exploded earlier in the hearings by professorial-looking Sen. Paul Douglas (D., Ill.).

Sen. Douglas Finds Profits

With Federal Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods on the stand, Douglas explored the landlords' profit position and found it rosy.

Because no provision for such national surveys was included in the Republican rent control bills of 1947 and 1948, the last nationwide study of landlords' profits was for the year ending June 30, 1946. At that time, according to the government study, net operating income of apartment house owners was 28% higher than in 1939. But the net operating income of owners of small structures had gone up much more —43%.

WHILE TENANTS SEARCH
This Chicago apartment house owner's son tacks up the notice that his father is joining the Tulsa landlord's "sitdown strike" against rent controls. Sen. Myers (D., Pa.) called such attacks on rent control "selfish, vicious."

Because "vacancies have virtually dropped out of the picture" and landlords have shifted decorating and repairs expenses on to the tenant, Douglas said, "the net income position of landlords has been improved to a much greater degree than you would think from the figures on gross rents."

From the landlord audience there were no cheers.

When the CIO had its "day in court," it brought up an issue that had not previously been discussed in the committee's hearings—company housing.

(The testimony was presented in the name of CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey by Legislative Representative John Edelman, Textile Workers, and CIO Housing Director Leo Goodman. Carey, scheduled to appear first thing in the morning, arrived to find that Cain's "filibuster" in committee had succeeded in keeping Woods on the stand beyond his scheduled time. The CIO secretary-treasurer waited throughout the morning session, then left to meet an out-of-town engagement.)

Under an administrative ruling by Rent Administrator Woods, the CIO witnesses charged, rents in company houses have been increased as much as 320%. Specifically mentioned were instances in Talladega, Ala., and Worcester County, Mass. Woods, they said, had applied the principle of "comparability" to such housing, which resulted in an increase of 320% in the first case and 140% in the second. In all such cases the rent boosts were used as a weapon by the company in collective bargaining disputes, Edelman pointed out.

Citing these and other actions by Woods, the CIO witnesses called for his replacement by an "able and fearless" administrator. Both a strong law and a strong administrator are needed, they said, to prevent a sudden rent rise such as "our economy couldn't stand at this time."

Urging approval of the Myers bill, the CIO representatives said any rent control bill should extend controls for at least two years; eliminate 15% "voluntary" increases; establish strong eviction controls; provide criminal penalties for violators; reimpose controls on "conversions," new houses and permanent residences in trailer camps, hotels, motor courts and tourist homes; and permit tenant and landlord appeal to the courts from administrative rulings.

ECA Spells Jobs and Productivity in Great Britain

By ALLAN L. SWIM

GREAT BRITAIN has a tough economic nut to crack and her people are fully aware of it.

There is no simple solution to her big problem. She is short on food, manpower, machines and raw materials for manufacturing.

She, however, seems to know where her difficulties lie and she's digging in for a long fight in much the same manner she did after Dunkirk.

The British are working hard and spending little time making excuses for their shortcomings. They are operating under strict controls which hold prices down and result in equitable distribution of food among all the people.

Her battle for survival should be of special interest to American trade unionists because Great Britain has a labor government.

BRITAIN'S economic troubles go back to the 1930's—not just to the beginning of World War II.

Free Bargaining

Although there are tight government controls on prices and rationing, there are no restrictions on free collective bargaining in the United Kingdom.

It is encouraged not only by the labor government but by a major portion of industry. The unions, however, have imposed "voluntary restraints" on wage increases.

Her production-consumption-financing machinery got out of whack during the pre-war period and then the war itself added new problems.

Britain cannot produce from her own resources everything her people require for a decent standard of living, and probably never will be able to do so.

She must depend on a complicated system of imports and exports for her existence. She must live largely on her ability to process raw materials and sell them on the world market.

And she must keep her belt tight and take the fullest advantage of Marshall Plan aid until she can achieve a favorable trade balance.

Tractors Doubled

Supplying its people with enough of the right kind of food provides Britain with a big problem.

Although her farms are already highly mechanized, a big increase in agricultural machinery is planned. Production of tractors has about doubled in the past two years.

Steel making, which must be stepped up if the nation is to carry out its industrial expansion program, has increased between 15 and 20% in two years.

YOU LEARN quickly about Britain's "austerity" program the first time you order a meal at a restaurant.

There is enough to eat but the food is simple—and the top price that can be charged for any meal is five shillings (about $1).

Britain produces only about one-third of the food she consumes, so she's engaged in a program to bring production up to 50% of needs by 1952.

She has a big textile industry but doesn't grow any cotton. She's short on copper and lead.

Her production machinery, generally, is not on a par with that found in the U. S. and her power facilities badly need expanding.

Despite these difficulties, industrial production is now running about 20% higher than in 1946 and about 24% higher than in 1938.

THERE IS NO unemployment in Great Britain, but government officials estimate some 1,500,000 would be jobless today were it not for aid extended by the U. S. through the Economic Cooperation Administration.

The British are inclined to measure ECA benefits as much in terms of men and women at work as in terms of specific materials manufactured for the export trade upon which Britain exists.

Workers mean production and production means economic life for Britain—if she can sell profitably the things she manufactures.

Great stress is being placed on increased productivity, which Britain figures she must have if she is to survive.

The experts disagree somewhat on whether British or American employes work harder, but statistics show that the output per man hour in the U. S. in about 2.8 times that of Britain. This is due largely to differences in equipment, labor-saving devices and the production of small orders as compared with mass production in the U. S.

The drive for greater productivity must bring about a change in the thinking of British workers if it is to succeed. Traditionally, they opposed labor-saving devices on the theory that it would eliminate jobs. There is considerable evidence that workers' views on this point are changing rapidly.

THE COMMUNISTS wield little power in the British trade union movement and there is no problem of labor-government cooperation in connection with the recovery program.

Labor controls the government and there is close liaison between the unions and governmental agencies.

The Commies are not conducting an open and effective campaign against ERP in Britain—as they are on parts of the Continent.

The Labor Party, through its health and social security programs and through equitable distribution of the necessities of life, has denied the Reds one of the chief propaganda weapons they use effectively elsewhere in Europe.

The low-income families of Britain unquestionably are better off today than they have even been in the past. "Austerity" puts its pinch on those in the upper and middle income brackets, where the Communists cannot hope to find any real support.

YES, GREAT Britain has a tough economic nut to crack and she will have to build an improved "nut-cracker" if she gets the job done.

One of her greatest assets can be best described as "spirit." Her people have plenty of it.

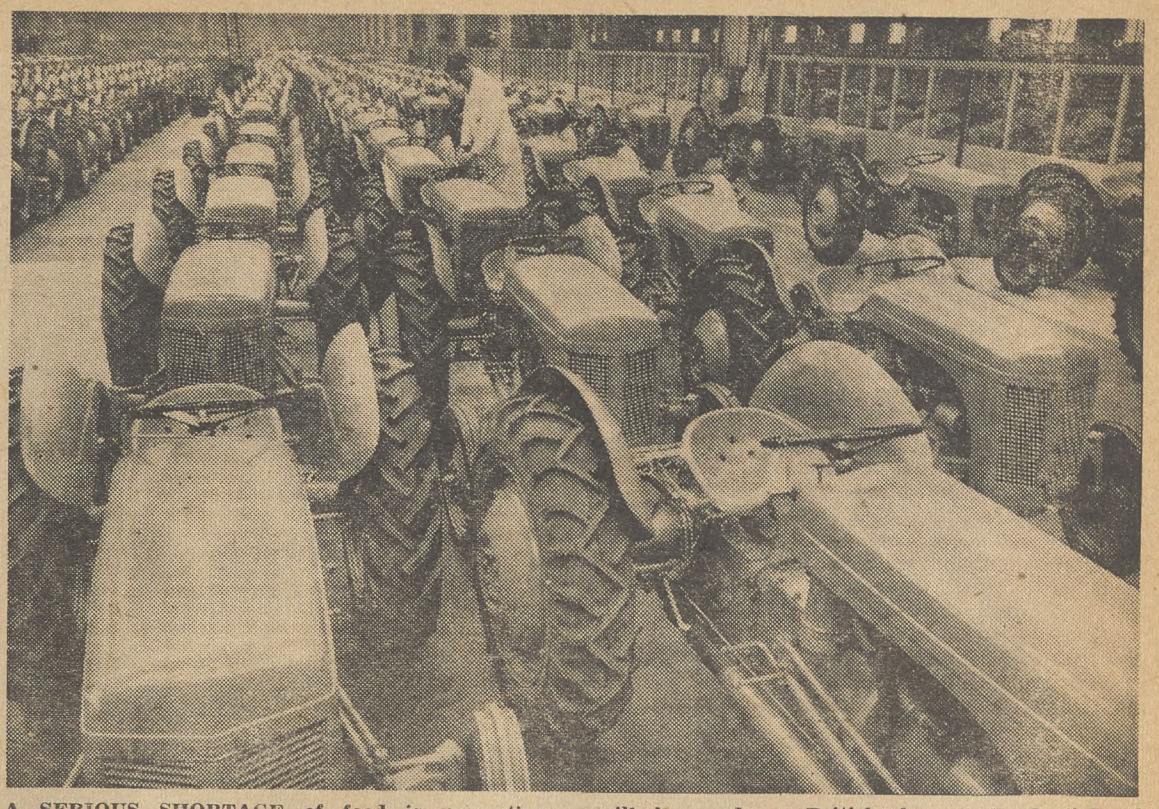
Most segments of labor and management agree that there must be greater productivity in industry and greater production on the farms.

They agree, too, that the U. S. neither can nor will solve Britain's economic problems. That, they say, is a job that Britain can and will accomplish with U. S. help.

There is a realism about conditions that can't be found in France or Italy. There is an awareness of the need for haste.

You get the feeling—after talking to union and industrial leaders and to government officials—that the British are fighting as a team.

Some of them may not like it too well because of political or other differences, but they're pulling in the same set of harness because of the lessons learned when the bombers were overhead.



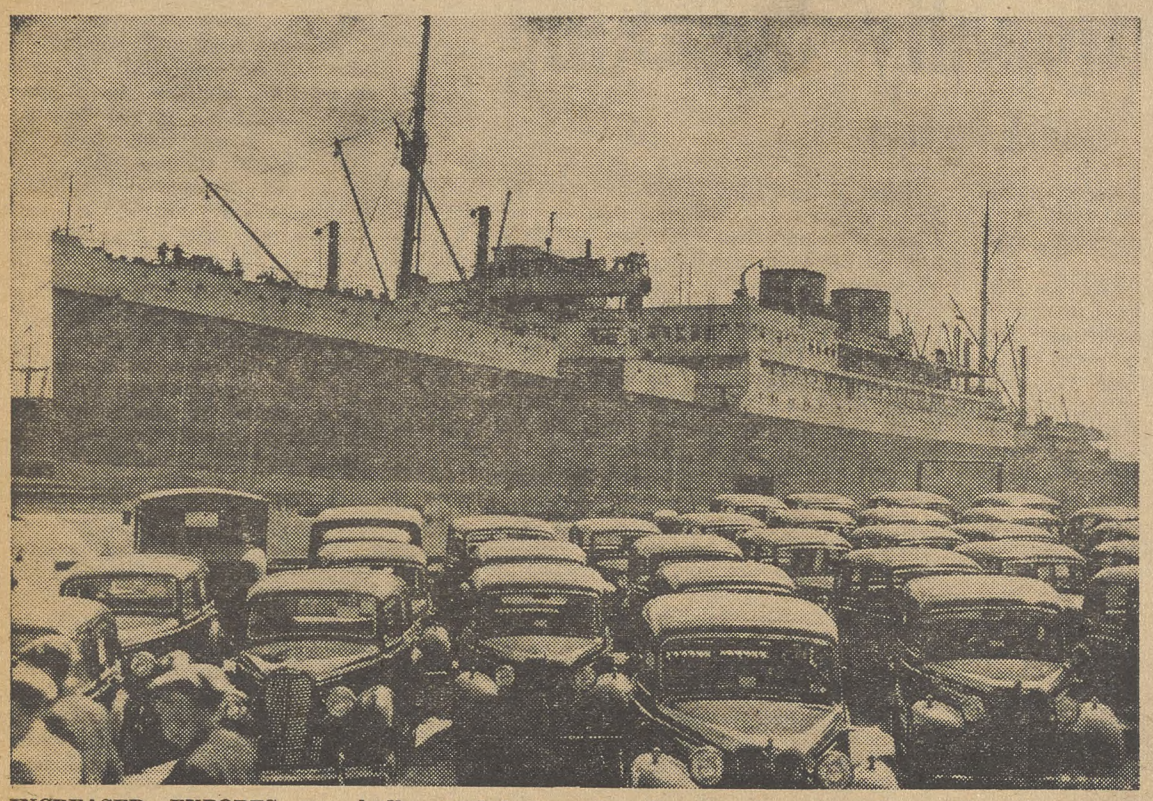
A SERIOUS SHORTAGE of food is prompting Great Britain to put on a real drive for intensified farming. Shown above are Ferguson tractors which will be used on British farms. Production of tractor has doubled in the past two years. British farms are already highly mechanized.

How ECA Helped

The ECA authorized the purchase of $1,093,400,000 worth of food, fuel, machinery and raw materials for the United Kingdom during the last nine months of 1948.

Major commodities provided were $242,000,000 worth of bread grains, $147,200,000 worth of non-ferrous metals, $119,400,000 worth of petroleum and petroleum products and $114,400,000 worth of machinery.

The total authorized for UK was about evenly divided between agricultural and industrial commodities.



INCREASED EXPORTS are badly needed to straighten out the British economy. Automobiles (such as the Austins shown above), locomotives, aircraft and motorcycles—along with various types of machinery—make up a large portion of the nation's exports.

Employment Up

Manpower in Great Britain is strictly controlled by the government in an effort to get enough workers in essential industries.

Employment in the nation is now about 2,000,000 higher than in years just before the war.

Recruitment of workers for coal mines poses a difficult problem.

Persons who worked in well-equipped war production factories often complain about the equipment in some of Britain's older industrial plants. They want better machines with which to work.

Three Firms Fined In Pigment Cartel

The Justice Dept. has announced that it had put a stop to an international cartel agreement in the white pigment field. The companies and company officials accused in its antitrust suit decided to pay fines rather than contest the case. Titanium pigment was the specific product involved.

A total of $43,000 in fines were levied on the corporations. Admitting guilt and paying up were the chemical giant, E. I. DuPont de Nemours & Co., Natl. Lead Co. and Titan Co. and three individual officers of these firms.

House Group Votes Oleo Tax Removal

REMOVAL of all taxes on oleomargarine has been advocated by the House Agriculture Committee, on a 24-3 vote.

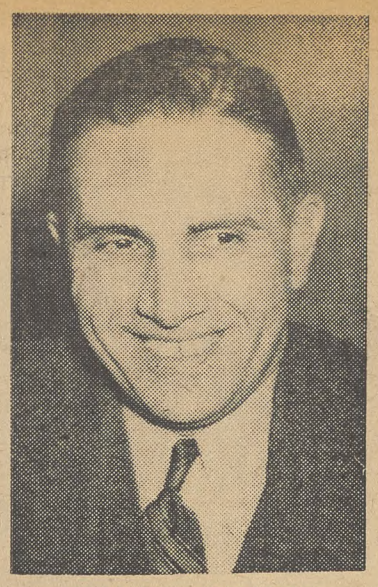
The committee, in approving H. R. 2023, also gave the nod to removing present license fees charged to manufacturers, distributors and retailers of oleo. But the committee banned interstate sales of yellow oleo by a 14-13 vote.

The ban on interstate sales was a victory for the dairy lobby, which has never liked the competition of lower-priced oleo. Butter is now selling at 75c a pound in Washington, while oleo is about 40c a pound cheaper.

Sale of yellow, pre-colored oleo would be permitted in only those dozen states where oleomargarine producing plants are located. In the remaining 36 states, housewives, husbands and children will still have to push the coloring into the white oleo.

Don Montgomery, auto union Washington representative, appeared before the Agriculture Committee and urged not only removal of the taxes but also free shipment of yellow oleo so long as it is clearly identified on the label as not being butter. Montgomery said butter is scarce, because milk is being sold at higher prices for use in other forms of food products. He charged that present high butter prices are a form of "rationing" to permit only high income families to buy it.

The butter shortage, he said, has led the dairy lobby to ease up on its opposition to removal of oleo taxes. But that lobby, Montgomery charged, is still fighting widespread use of pre-colored yellow margarine.



ASSISTS BITTNER

Intl. Rep. Lorne Nelles of the CIO Steelworkers (above) has been named an assistant director of the CIO Organizing Committee by Dir. Van A. Bittner.

Ford Proposes Pay Cut Just Like Last Year

THE FORD Motor Co. tried virtually the same thing last year—and failed.

This year it's making another attempt, and the CIO Auto Workers are determined that Ford will meet the same success it did last year. Last year Ford proposed a 5c hourly cut, and ended up giving a 13c hourly raise.

Now Ford has pay cuts on the brain again. If Auto Workers want an improved pension program, they'll have to pay for it themselves via a pay cut, the company advised in letters to its employes.

The union response was a call to the 200 members of the Ford wage policy committee for a meeting in Detroit beginning April 27. Strategy for negotiations, scheduled to begin May 15, will be mapped at that time.

The union's international executive board is meeting this week.

Meanwhile, the UAW, plagued by production cutbacks and layoffs, is pushing for production of cheaper passenger cars.

Plans for the manufacture of "a motor car named Desire" were all set to go at Chrysler before the war, tool and diemakers say, But post-war profits from heavy, expensive cars have been too attractive, so the plans are filed away.

In Australia, General Motors is already manufacturing a small cheap model. Ford is doing likewise in France. Kaiser-Frazer is reported to have such models ready to go into production.

But apparently the American consumer won't see any of these until he stops paying "Cadillac prices for Chevrolet cars," as UAW Pres. Walter Reuther has expressed it.

AMA Drive On British Plan a Dud

THREE NOTED British doctors invited to this country to address a recent meeting of the American Cancer Society in Memphis, Tenn., have unwittingly caused the American Medical Assn., much embarrassment.

Questioned by the press on what they thought of the British national health system which the AMA has been telling the American public is a flop, the English doctors all spoke highly of it.

Dr. B. W. Windeyer, noted cancer specialist, said that in the long run the great bulk of patients are going to get better medical care under the national program than they did before.

Dr. Stanford Cade, when asked about the truth of stories that British doctors were overloaded with malingerers and neurotics who were not really sick, replied that he had not seen anything of the kind. When the average Britisher calls on a doctor, he really needs one, he said.

The AMA which is trying to raise a 3½ million dollar fund to fight legislation setting up National health insurance for the U. S. similar to the British plan, has used as part of their propaganda, purported first-hand stories from English doctors claiming to show that the program there was a failure.

Many doctors in this country are opposing the AMA's drive to raise money through a $25 assessment on each member to fight the health insurance bill. Its largest unit, the New York County Medical Society, earlier this month withdrew its support from the drive, and revolts are brewing in other units.

Editor & Publisher, longtime enemy of Pres. Woodruff Randolph of the AFL Intl. Typographical Union ate a little crow last week.

Their leaders were pipe-smoking Ben Segal, the Textile Workers' director of education in the upper South (near the top of the stairs) and David Gilbert, union's upper South PAC director (extreme left).

More Funds Asked To Save Soil, Forests

ANTHONY Wayne Smith, assistant director of CIO Councils, last week told the Senate Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations that the amount of money the nation spends to preserve its forests is fantastically low compared to the amount various industries reinvest to maintain equipment.

Smith urged that appropriations for forestry and soil preservation be increased from $51,080,938, the amount set aside for the 1949 fiscal year, to $100,263,000 for the 1950 fiscal year. He urged that the appropriations be increased until they reached $139,429,000 for 1954.

He placed the total capital value of the forests along with their water resources at $100 billion. On the basis of this estimate, Smith said public and private spending for the maintenance and management of the forests is less than one-fifth of 1% a year.

"In the food and canning industry," he continued, "expenditures and additions to reserves are about 10%. If you take net value they are about 20%. In automobiles, if you take gross value, expenditures and additions to reserves are roughly 33%, and if you take net value, they are 100%.

"Contrast this with one-fifth of 1%, which seems to be the comparable figure for our forests. The result is fantastic, yet it suggests the difference between the value some place on machinery and property, against the value they place on living resources."

Turning to soil conservation, Smith said:

"Our present program is one of too little and too late. Present appropriations may be in large part lost, or in any event the amount that we will have to spend will be greatly increased, unless we speed up our operations. Doubling our expenditures in the next 20 years can mean the difference between success and failure."

FSA, Labor Dept. Fund Approved

THE HOUSE without a struggle last week approved funds for the fiscal year 1950 to run the Labor Dept. and the Federal Security Administration. The 30-odd members present passed the appropriations committee bill by voice vote, where a budget-cutting battle had been waged in earlier years.

The bill as passed gives the Labor Dept. virtually all the funds asked for it in the budget Pres. Truman presented in January. The bill carries an appropriation of $16,550,000 for the department. The committee will act later on a request $216,200 for Labor Dept. international activities. It did not pass on funds for a proposed $3 million program of aid to the states for administration of industrial safety laws, since that requires separate legislation.

The Federal Security Administration appropriation amounted to some $1,478,426,585, a $23 million cut below budget figures. Most of the appropriation is for social security and railroad retirement payments over which the Congress has no control. The committee appropriated more than the administration budget requested for three public health programs, namely; cancer research, heart disease and mental health.

Rug Workers Ask Repeal Of T-H

Immediate repeal of the Taft-Hartley act and the passage of a $1-an-hour minimum wage were demanded at New York City by 100 delegates to a CIO Textile Workers carpet and rug conference.

A resolution passed by the conference pointed out that one of the primary issues of that election was the repeal of the Taft-Hartley act. The delegates called on Congressional liberals to ignore "Old Guard obstructionism and fulfill the mandate from the voters."

A second resolution said the the present 40c-an-hour minimum wage law falls far short of providing even a subsistence wage. The resolution asked the passage of a $1-an-hour minimum wage and the inclusion of all possible workers.

House Unit Okays 75c Pay Floor

THE BILL raising the hourly minimum wage from the present 40c to 75c has finally been approved by the House Labor Committee, although Republican efforts to slice it to pieces came dangerously close to succeeding. The Committee held open hearings and closed sessions on the bill for more than a month.

The final vote on approval of the bill was 15-6, with four Republican members withholding their vote, but it was by an earlier crucial vote of 13-12 that attempts to butcher it were stymied.

The bill approved by the House Committee, which is expected to come before Congress later this month, raises the present hour minimum from 40c to 75c and extends coverage to an estimated additional two million workers in the processing, air transportation, retailing, local transit systems and other fields.

CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, in a statement issued for the CIO, called the bill reported out by the House Committee "an important step in the right direction," but expressed the CIO's disappointment that the minimum was not set at $1 an hour.

'We feel that workers on industrialized farms should also have been covered by the bill and its coverage generally widened," he said.

The Senate Labor Committee has scheduled hearings on the bill.

Rep. Cleveland M. Bailey (D.,W. Va.) proposed a substitute for the original legislation after Republicans, supported by some Southern Democrats, had been busily riddling it with crippling amendments. The substitute contained the essentials of the original bill with some compromises.

Bailey's motion squeezed through 13-12. Rep. Hugo S. Sims, Jr., of South Carolina, youngest member of Congress (he is 27). cast the decisive vote in support of Rep. Bailey's substitute motion, while three other Southern Democrats—Graham Barden (N. C.), John S. Wood (Ga.) and Wingate Lucas (Tex.)—lined up with the solid bloc of nine Republicans. Barden switched to the Democratic side on the final 15-6 vote reporting the bill out of the Committee.

Crucial Vote On 75c Floor

Here is the crucial vote on the substitute minimum wage bill proposed by Rep. Bailey (D., W. Va.):

For, All Democrats—Chm. Lesinski (Mich.), Bailey (W. Va), Burke (Ohio), Howell (N. J.), Irving (Mo.), Jacobs (Ind.), Kennedy (Mass.), Kelley (Pa.), Perkins (Ky.), Powell (N. Y.), Sims, (S. C.), Steed (Okla.), Wier (Minn.).

Against, Republicans—Brahm (Ohio), Gwinn (N. Y.), Kearns (Pa.), McConnell (Pa.), Morton (Ky.), Nixon (Calif.), Smith (Kans.), Velde (Ill.), Werdel (Calif.)

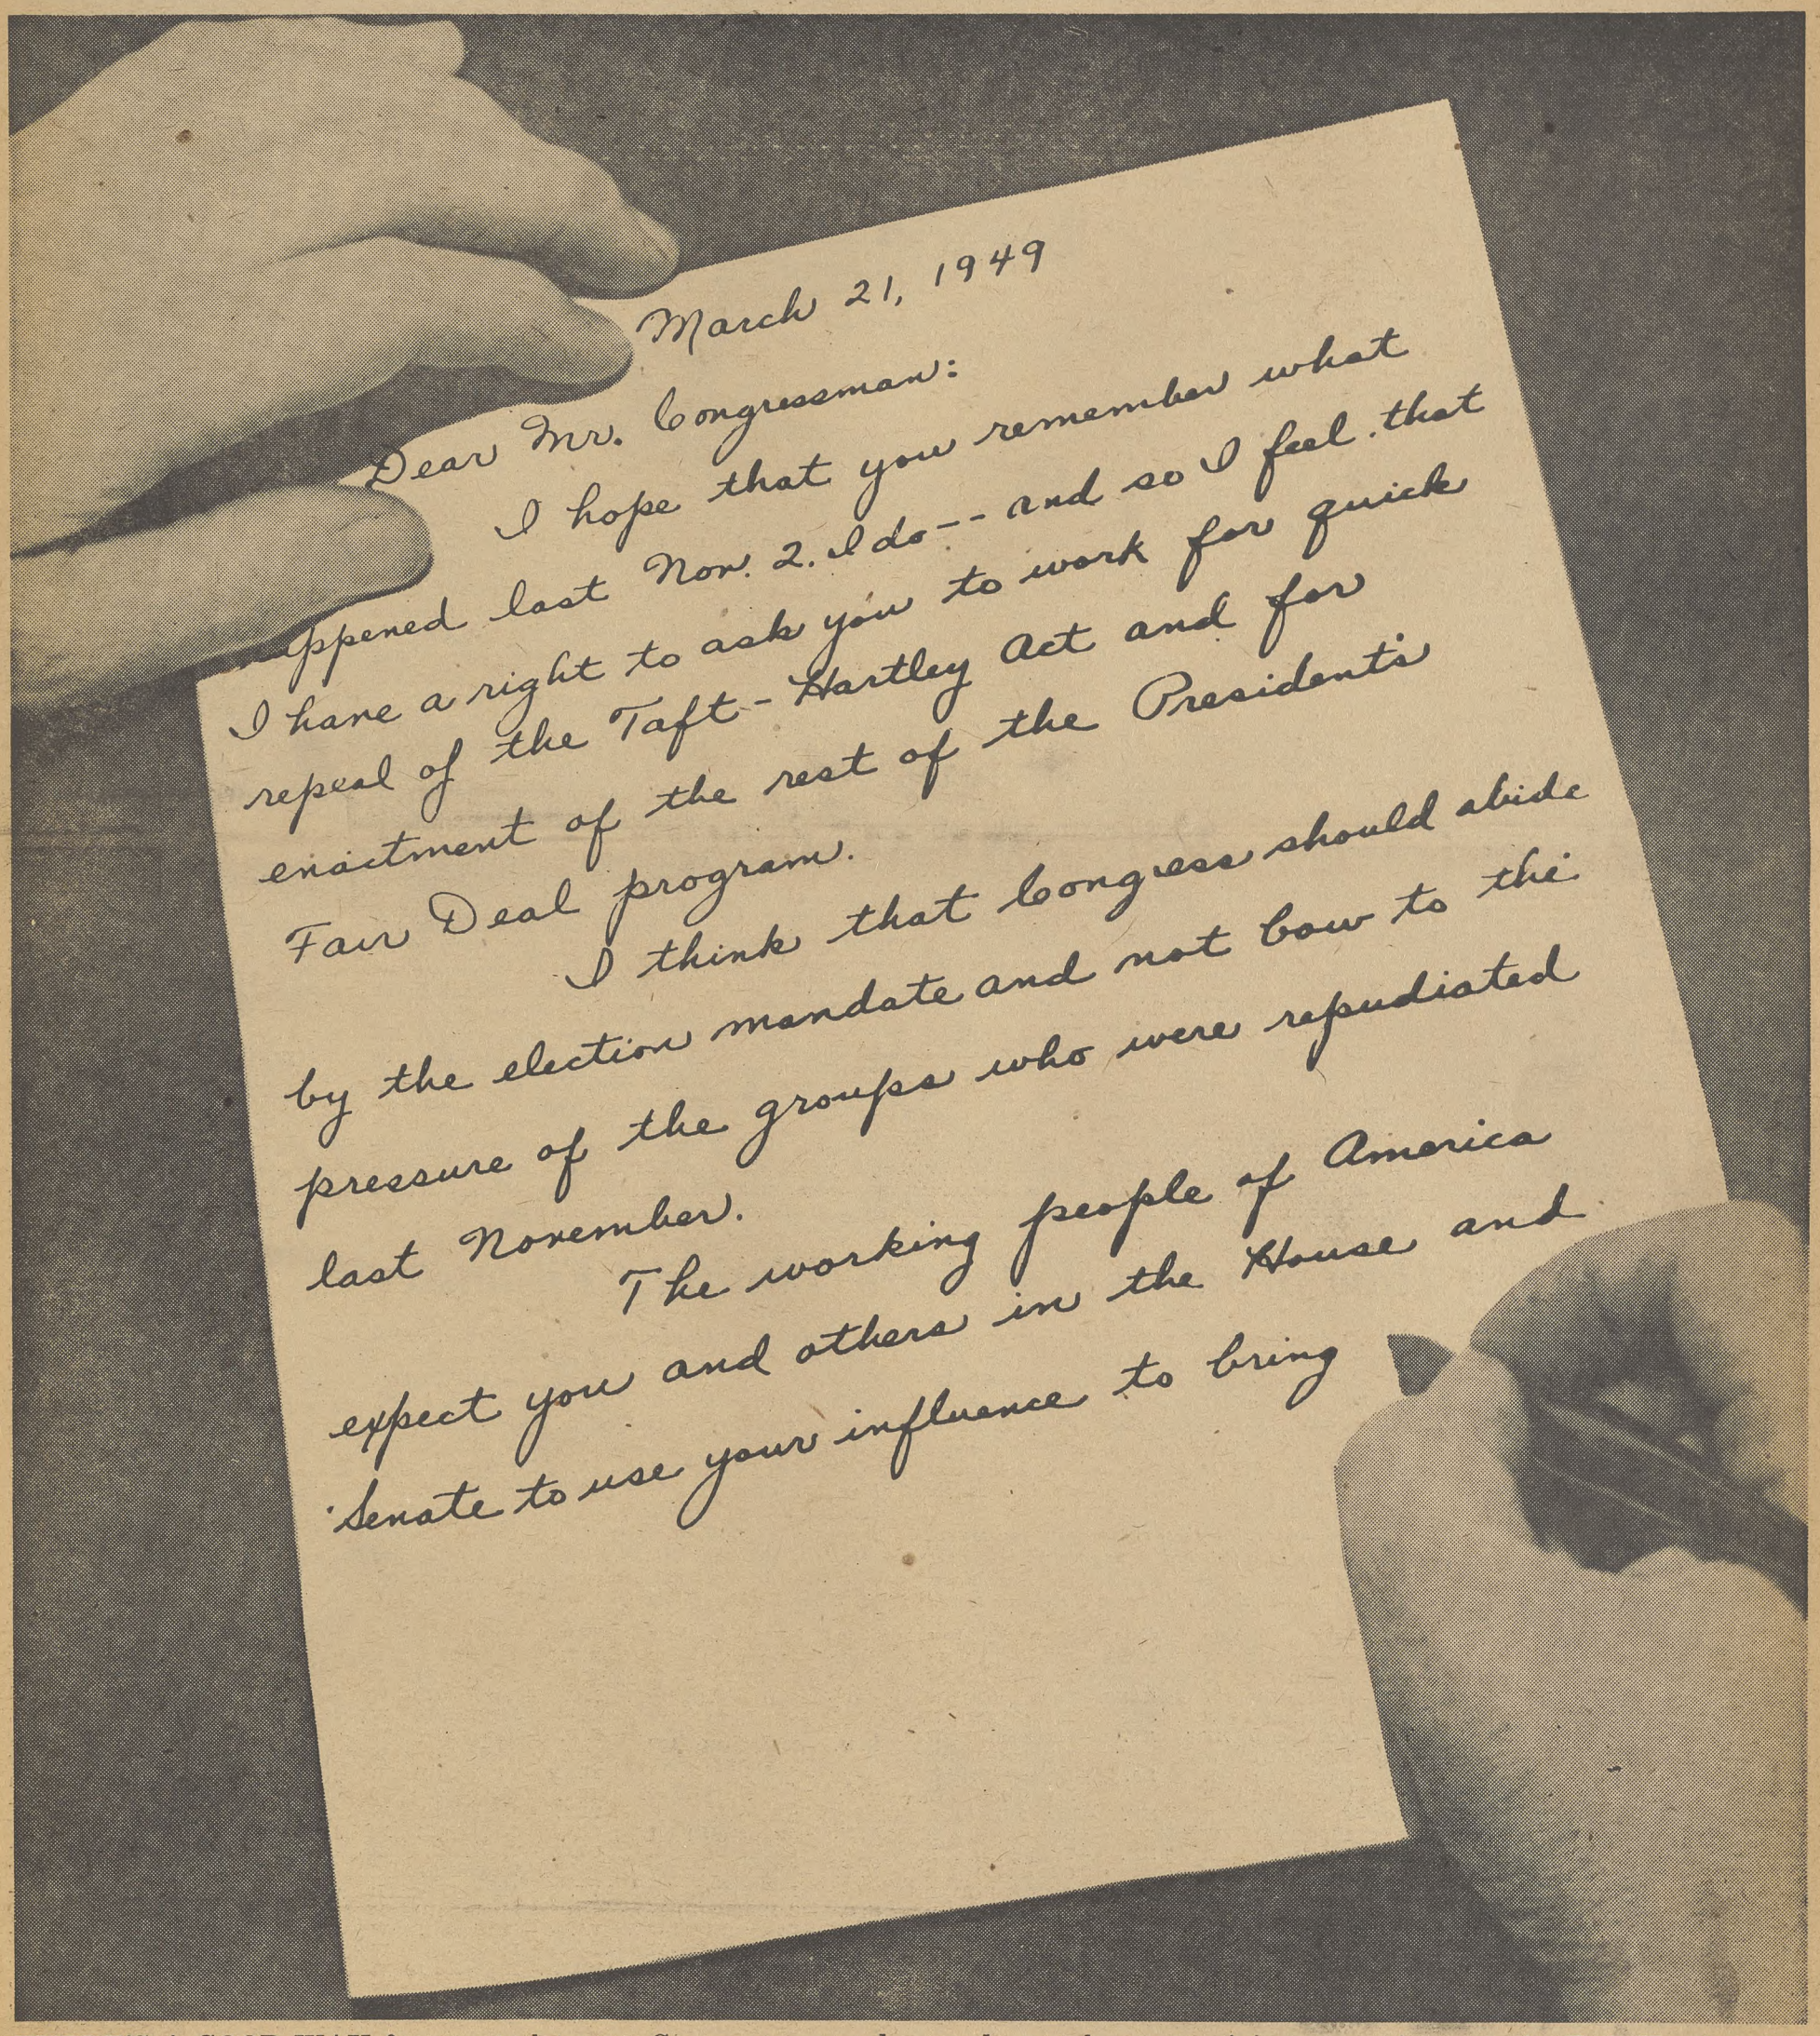
Vol. XII | WASHINGTON, D. C., MARCH 21, 1949 | 82 | No. 12



THERE'S A GOOD WAY for you to let your Congressmen and Senators know how you feel about President Truman's Fair Deal program. It's a simple way, too. Just send them letters, postcards or telegrams, giving your views on the Taft-Hartley Act, minimum wage legislation, rent control, civil rights, etc. Tell them how you voted last Nov. 2 and what you expect of them.

Coal Used As Excuse In Layoffs

MORE than 12,000 employes of the Altoona, Pa., Works of the Pennsylvania Railroad were laid off for two weeks beginning March 6.

The payless vacation was ordered by C. R. Clugh, superintendent of the factory, "because of the coal emergency caused by the miners' strike."

The railroad also served notice on 1,000 other employes in the Altoona area that they would soon be laid off.

Four hundred thousand tons of coal are stored in open air piles on Pennsylvania Railroad property in the area—enough, according to Tom Bloom, president of Local 1476, United Railroad Workers, CIO, to last Altoona Works for about two years.

The coal pile was described by eyewitnesses on Monday, March 14, as 20 feet high, a mile long, and wide enough so that trucks and derricks are running back and forth over it like a paved highway." Further investigation showed the pile to be even larger.

Pres. Green, president of the Shipbuilders Union, with which URRWA is affiliated, wired Sen. Elbert D. Thomas and Rep. John Lesinski, chairman of the Senate and House Labor Committees asking for a "prompt and thorough investigation" of the whole policy of layoffs of railroad workers throughout the eastern system.

Speed on Fair Deal Urged

Strong concern at seeing "the same reactionary forces running the legislative branch of our government today" has been expressed by Pres. Joseph Beirne of the independent Communications Workers of America.

In a detailed letter to Sen. Lucas (D., Ill.), majority leader in the Senate, Beirne said, "I fear the 81st Congress may become known as the group of lawmakers who paid so much attention to some hard-to-understand minority rights (of Senate minorities) that they failed to provide positive relief for the majority of people in the country.

"Sadly, I repeat that the Tafts, Donnells and their supporters are polluting the mails, the press and the public platform with propaganda which is confusing the average citizen," Beirne wrote.

"The leadership which the Republicans and Dixiecrats have usurped can be ended only by an outspoken and vigorous program on the part of the liberal Democrats and their supporters."

Beirne concluded:

"I believe that you and other administration leaders knew a filibuster would take place and you could have made plans that would have placed the Labor-Management Relations Act, the Rent Control Bill or measures of that kind before the Senate prior to the time it got tied upon the filibuster.

"I believe that emphasis on speedy relief in the labor relations field is necessary right now, and speedy action by Congress should be guaranteed right now."

Dixie GOP Talkathon Wins

THE Dixiecrat filibuster against changes in the Senate's rules—and against the civil rights program—was successful only because of the connivance of a majority of the Republican Senators.

That connivance was possible only because 23 Republicans turned their backs squarely on the GOP's platform in the 1948 elections.

It was what Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) called a "Republican sellout..." and what Sen. Morse (R. Ore.) described as "an unholy political marriage with southern reactionaries who are seeking to deny constitutional rights to millions of fellow Americans."

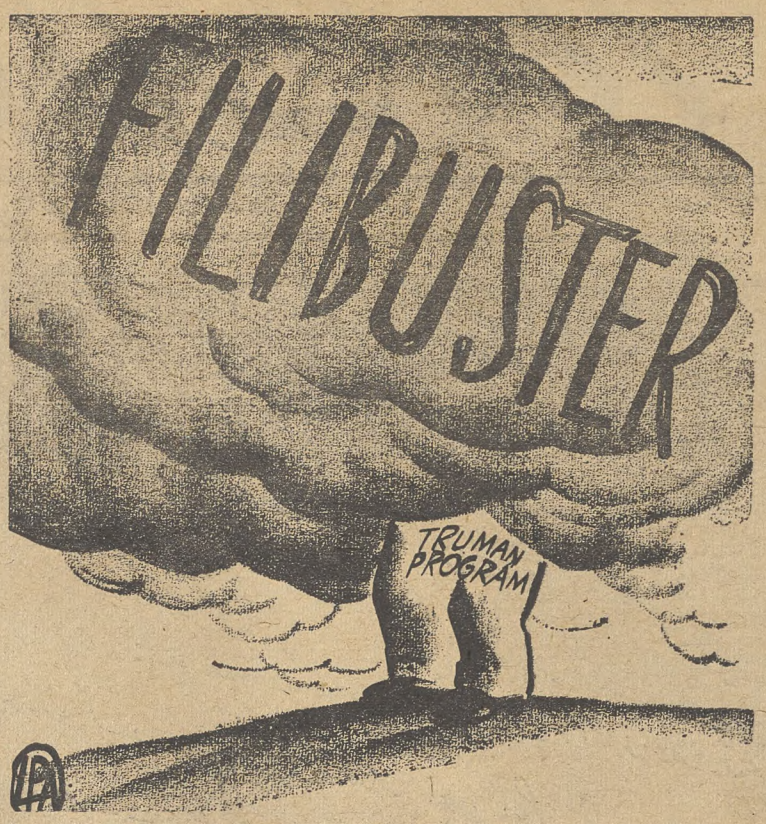
The issue at stake in the 15-day Senate filibuster was considerably more than the technical changes in the Senate rules. It involved the possibility of enactment of any phase of the civil rights program supported by labor, minority groups and the Democratic platform. It also concerned numerous other items in the President's Fair Deal program.

The Dixiecrat filibuster — with Republican assistance — was directed against a Democratic proposal to permit closing of debate by a two-thirds vote on any motion in the Senate. (CIO had supported a Morse-Myers proposal which called for majority vote to end debate.)

NORTHERN Democrats and many Republicans joined in a cloture petition to halt the filibuster. Vice-Pres. Barkley upheld their petition, ruling that debate-closing petitions can apply to motions merely to consider bills, as well as to debate on the measures themselves. The Dixiecrats challenged the Barkley ruling—and they picked up a total of 46 votes to over-rule the Vice-President.

The Dixiecrat opposition to steps to end minority veto power in the Senate was expected. But the Republicans had claimed for two years that they were the real guardians of civil rights. The vote showed considerable exaggeration in their claim.

The 46 pro-filibuster votes came equally from 23 Democrats—almost all from the South—and from 23 Republicans.



The 41 anti-filibuster votes came from 25 Democrats—including Senators Pepper (Fla.) and Kefauver (Tenn.)—and from 16 Republicans, most of them from the Northeast. (Every New England Senator voted against filibustering.)

THE TOP-LEVEL character of the Republican back-turning on civil rights was indicated in a summary written by Columnist Doris Fleeson.

She showed that five of the GOP's nine-man policy committee voted with the Dixiecrats. Fifteen GOP Senators who voted on a technical motion in February to show their "zeal" for civil rights, voted with the Dixiecrats. Eleven of 24 GOP Senators who signed debate-limiting petitions in 1946 and 1948 also voted with the Southern Democrats.

With one victory under their belts the "Dixie-gop" coalition then moved to guarantee that changes in the Senate filibuster rules will become almost impossible to achieve in the future.

Sen. Morse, a consistent advocate of improving the Senate rules, scoffed at the idea that the "Dixie-gop" filibuster was aimed at protecting the democratic rights of Senate minorities.

"...What rights?" Morse asked. "Only the right to engage in endless debate, the right to defeat the will of an overwhelming majority, the right to block legislation which, if I read the Democratic platform correctly, the Democratic Party is pledged to pass in the 81st Congress.

"These so-called rights are not rights at all. I think they represent an abuse of the legitimate right of full debate on the merits of legislative proposals."

In any case, they present the Truman Administration and the people who voted for the Truman program in November with a problem of the most serious nature. To many Dixiecrats and Republicans in the Senate, the repudiated do-nothing 80th Congress appears to be a model.

How Senators Voted On Limiting Filibuster

Here's how the Senate voted (46-41) to over-ride Vice-Pres. Barkley's ruling to limit filibusters and pave the way for possible action on civil rights and other Fair Deal legislation. (The vote was taken March 11.)

Twenty-three Republicans joined up with 23 Democrats—most of them from southern states—to override Barkley. Twenty-five Democrats and 16 Republicans —most of them from the northeast—voted to sustain the Vice-President.

Barkley had ruled that cloture petitions to end filibusters could be entertained on any motion before the Senate. By overruling that decision, the Republicans who joined with Dixiecrats destroyed the chance to end the filibuster, to liberalize Senate debating rules, and to move ahead with the President's program.

Votes marked (R) indicate support of Vice-Pres. Barkley's ruling to limit debate; votes marked (W) indicate opposition to that ruling. NV indicates not voting.

Senators Anderson (D., N. M.), Murray (D., Mont.), Wagner (D., N. Y.) and Tobey (R., N. H.), who did not vote, indicated they would have voted to support the Barkley ruling (R). Senators Gillette (D., Ia.), McClellan (D., Ark.), Martin (R., Pa.) and Williams (R., Del.) did not vote but would have opposed the Barkley ruling (W).

U. S. Plans Big Scale Intl. Spying

THE UNITED STATES will be fully immersed in the international spy business within the next few weeks, if a hush-hush intelligence administration bill is passed by the Senate.

By a 348-4 vote, the House earlier this month approved a measure turning over administrative powers of a far-reaching nature to the Central Intelligence Agency. The bill (HR 2663) has already been approved by a Senate Committee.

CIA, a post-war successor to Gen. "Wild Bill" Donovan's wartime Office of Strategic Services, was given its first grant of power by the National Security Act of 1947. Its job is to get intelligence and information outside the boundaries of the United States. Some of its operations presumably are out in the open; but CIA also has power to use undercover operations to obtain its intelligence.

The new bill gives CIA broad grants of administrative powers with which to carry on its work. Many of these powers relate to routine personnel problems, and are much like those previously given to the armed forces for its officers, and to the State Department for foreign service officers.

THUS CIA can pay tuition for its employes at schools or colleges; can send employes and their families overseas and bring them home again; and can provide transport "to and from school, of children of Agency personnel who have quarters for themselves and their families at isolated stations outside the continental United States . . ."

Other powers, though, are more unusual. CIA can transfer to or receive from other government agencies; bring into the United States for permanent settlement 100 aliens a year; and keep secret all data on its staff, titles, functions, salaries or expenditures.

Intelligence agencies, of course, have never gone out of their way to advertise their activities, since the nature of intelligence work rules out much publicity.

But some Congressmen voiced strenuous objection to voting in the dark. Rep. Celler (D., N.Y.), although "not opposing" the bill, said he didn't like the hush-hush atmosphere.

". . . If the members of the Armed Forces Committee can hear the detailed information to support this bill, why cannot our entire membership?" Celler asked. "In Washington, three men can keep a secret—IF two men die. It's like the old lady who said 'I can keep a secret, but the people I tell it to, cannot.'"

CIA has no espionage functions within the United States, where the FBI has jurisdiction. Central Intelligence officers or employes, however, may be assigned for special instruction, research or training with domestic or foreign public or private organizations—including labor unions.

But these programs would presumably be to train persons for overseas use, and not for domestic intelligence work.

Give PAC $1, Make NAM Holler

ABSENTEES: Republicans, who had the gall to foist the Taft-Hartley Law on the public in 1947, apparently didn't want to listen to the attacks on their brainchild—or even to its defenders. Here, Chairman Augustine B. Kelley (D., Pa.), of the House Labor subcommittee studying T-H repeal, listens to a witness while the five Republican seats to the right of him remain vacant. At this time, the Republicans were all absent for 45 minutes. It was a rare occasion when all five were there at one time—and then usually to hear industry witnesses. Usually, it was one or two. Girl is the stenotypist.

CIO Winds Up T-H Repeal Hearings

BY ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE HOUSE hearings on the Thomas-Lesinski Bill (S 249, HR 2032) are scheduled to end this week, with the CIO as the last witness.

As soon as the filibuster situation is disposed of, the Senate is expected to open debate on S 249—The Taft-Hartley Repealer—with a long session in prospect.

Mitchell

The House hearings last week saw the windup of testimony by those who want all of Taft-Hartley, or who want almost all of it with minor concessions to labor or who want a toothier T-H. Appropriately enough, the final two pro-T-Hers were the NAM's Ira Mosher and General Electric's C. E. Wilson.

As the CIO News went to press, most outstanding non-union official points scored against T-H were by Clarence Mitchell, general counsel for the Natl. Association for Advancement of Colored People; James O. Monroe, publisher of the Collingsville, Ill., Herald, and Joseph A. Clorety, vice chairman of American Veterans' Committee.

Mitchell, speaking for the 500,000 members of the NAACP, asked for full repeal, declaring:

"Not until T-H was enacted was segregation made the law of the land. The Larus case, which was incorporated into T-H, stated that colored employes of the company could be represented properly by a union which segregated them into a separate local because of their race."

Monroe, who still holds a card in the AFL Intl. Typographical Union, told the committee:

"If someone tried to get a mandamus against me (referring to T-H injunctions), I wouldn't cool off, not by a damsite!

"If a union is not dominated by Communists, it will not elect Communists to office; and if it is dominated by Communists, it will be smart enough to elect officers who either are not Communists, or being Communists, will not hesitate to take the oath. Either way, the oath is futile."

Clorety: "We appear here as 'Citizens First, Veterans Second,' indorsing this legislation (HR 2032) because we believe its enactment is in the public interest."

C. E. WILSON must have made Wall St. weep. He had to have the aid of three lawyers, his vice president in charge of labor relations, L. R. Boulware, and three other executives. He referred so many questions to the others that one wondered how he had ever become head of the above-a-billion corporation.

Mosher didn't smile as he said he considered everything on a "broad, overall public basis." He declared the public had elected the 80th Congress and therefore by a "mandate" had "written T-H." He changed the subject when asked about Nov. 2.

OUTSTANDING contributions to the committee's study were made by Joseph A. Beirne, president, Communication Workers, and Carl Brown, president, Foreman's Association.

Brown noted that his organization "was on the receiving end of the hardest blows delivered by T-H." Walter McNally, a former foreman at the Murray Corp., told the committee how he and three other presidents of the local had been fired by the Murray Corp. for union activity.

Beirne held that the so-called free speech provisions of T-H enabled the A. T. & T. system to show its true anti-union colors, such as in the Chesapeake & Potomac bargaining election where C & P opposed both CWA and CIO.

Rep. Jacobs pointed out that the top 32 unions in America have assets of only $200,000,000 (millions that is) while A. T. & T. is worth nearly $10,000,000,000 (billions that is.)

Funniest sight of the sessions was the spectacle of Gerard Reilly, lobbyist, at fees of upwards of $75,000 a year for GE, GM and others, trying to show he knew something about the printing industry, for which he also lobbies.

The ITU's Pres. Woodruff Randolph ($10,000 a year) made mincemeat of Reilly.

WINDY DIXIEGOP VICTORY

The Dixiegops—a coalition of Dixiecrats and members of the GOP—last week won a noisy victory at the expense of the public and majority government.

In doing so they subjected the nation to the disgusting spectacle of two dissident groups ganging up on the Administration to provide continued protection for windbaggery.

Undoubtedly the victory brought great happiness into the hearts of the Senate's chattery Claghorns, but those who believe in majority rule felt pretty bad about it. They had hoped the talkathon method of blocking legislation would be curbed, if not entirely eliminated.

The Southern Democrats performed according to tradition, so nobody was surprised when they began giving their lungs an extended workout. They figured they had to preserve the filibuster if they were to win their battle against the civil rights legislation which they profess to abhor.

The Republicans, throwing support behind the Dixiecrats, played something closely resembling dirty political pool. The GOP, as you may recall, has some very stout civil rights planks in its campaign platform.

Obviously the Republicans had more than civil rights in mind when they joined up with the Southerners. It could be that they were hoping to form a coalition that would prevent passage of the program that was indorsed by a majority of the people at the polls last Nov. 2.

Let's forget for the moment the possible motives and indirect issues involved and give attention to the filibuster itself.

It is a parliamentary device by which meaningless hot air is substituted for votes to thwart the will of the majority. It should be outlawed.

YOU CAN'T CALL IT 'RENT CONTROL' LAW

The powerful real estate lobby won a real victory in the House when a "local option" measure described as a "rent control law" was approved by a vote of 261 to 153. Southern Democrats teamed up with Republicans to push the bill through.

The lawmakers who approved the local option feature by a vote of 227 to 188 would have been more honest had they called the amended measure a "rent decontrol bill."

The measure, in effect, passes the buck to states, counties and cities. It gives them—not the Federal government—the final say-so on whether controls will be retained or removed.

This, of course, makes a farce of rent control as an effective means of holding down the cost of living.

And, following the lead of the House, the Senate Banking and Currency Committee has reported out a bad rent bill.

IT TAKES ONLY A FEW MINUTES

If you're like us, you're a bit burned up about the trend of things in Congress, where Republicans and Southern Democrats have been teaming up in an effort to defeat the program which won re-election for President Truman.

Our suggestion is that you take a few minutes of your time to register your protests where it's most likely to count—with the Senators and Congressmen who make the laws.

Don't wait until tomorrow. Do it now. Tell them how you feel about things.

To heck with the fancy grammatical phrases. Just lay it on the line.

Are We Cutting Our Own Throats?

U. S. Following Dangerous Course Because of Hysteria and Fear of Reds

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE U. S. is going into the espionage business on a big scale and will have a first-class spy system if a bill passed by the House is enacted by the Senate, which seems certain.

Only four votes were cast against the measure in the House, which provides a pretty good idea of how the public mind is functioning these days.

This vote—and the probable Senate action which will follow it—should prove rather frightening to those who have fought for individual freedom and against secret police tactics.

But it should not come as a surprise to those who have been following the limitations placed by our lawmakers on liberty.

WHEN THE old House Un-American Activities Committee first started getting the headlines under the leadership of Martin Dies many persons considered the group relatively harmless.

Perhaps it was, in a strict sense, but it marked the beginning of a trend that has led the U. S. far from its original concepts of liberty and civil rights.

The committee, under the chairmanship of the discredited J. Parnell Thomas, trampled unmercifully on the individual rights of persons it called to testify and attempted to establish the theory of guilt by association.

The government loyalty program was another step in the same direction.

So was the Taft-Hartley Act, with its requirement that union leaders sign non-Communist affidavits or be denied the use of NLRB.

Still True Today

Benjamin Franklin said, "Those who would give up essential liberty to purchase a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty nor safety."

Editor William Allen White said, "Liberty is the only thing you cannot have unless you are willing to give it to others."

THE QUESTION all of us should be asking ourselves is, "Where do we go from here?"

Do we ride the present trend to the limit—to "thought control," to the prosecution of individuals because of their beliefs, to the institution of secret police?

Do we call a halt, throw the trend into reverse and proceed on the old theory that the U. S. is good enough and strong enough to withstand bombardment from peddlers of the Red ideology?

The trend is still strongly toward the imposition of "loyalty" restrictions.

Several states are considering the establishment of "little House Un-American Activities Committees."

A measure introduced in the national House by Rep. Walter of Pennsylvania would deprive native-born members of the Communist Party of citizenship.

Various civic and service organizations throughout the country are talking about setting up "loyalty" committees to "screen" their members.

A MAJOR portion of the American press, which once boasted it was the chief guardian of individual rights, has made no real effort to point up the trend and its dangers—and a number of papers have lent support to it.

There was only mild protest from the newspapers when Atty. Gen. Tom Clark made his dangerous wire-tapping proposal.

An Indiana publisher recently requested that his reporters—members of the CIO Newspaper Guild—sign "loyalty oaths." (They refused.)

Many editors gave support to the House un-American Activities Committee although occasionally criticizing some of its tactics.

BEHIND THE trend is an insidious form of hysteria that began spreading soon after the end of the war—and behind the hysteria, of course, is fear of Russia.

The U. S. certainly must not close its eyes to Russian efforts to dominate the world. It must safeguard its own institutions against subversive activities. It has a right to "crack down" on those who steal confidential documents and attempt in other ways to sell us down the river.

The purpose of this column is not to question the right—and need—of the U. S. to protect itself. Its purpose is to question whether the right steps are being taken.

We are coming dangerously close to following the cockeyed theory that we can preserve liberty by sharply limiting it.

New N. J. Law Hits Discrimination

CONGRESS wasn't doing anything about civil rights, but the New Jersey State Legislature was.

Although the bill was weakened by an amendment opposed by the CIO, the Legislature passed a measure which prohibits racial and religious discrimination in the field of education, recreation and places of public accommodation.

The latter include hotels, restaurants, taverns, theaters, swimming pools, bath houses, boardwalks, gymnasiums and bowling alleys.

The change opposed by the CIO was one which transferred original appeals to the lower courts, rather than starting from the superior courts. It was felt this delayed final action.

Penalties set up fines of as high of $500 and jail sentences up to one year. The legislation, which amends a previous law dealing mainly with discrimination in employment, arose out of studies by the State Commission on Civil Liberties.

Meanwhile, the American Bowling Congress agreed to meet with representatives of the Natl. Committee for Fair Play in Bowling, of which Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D., Minn.) is co-chairman. The ABC group which met with the committee's group turned out to have no authority and the time was wasted.

ABC confines its members to "male Caucasians."

The recent ABC convention refused to change the rules.

In Washington, D. C., a rugged 75-year-old real estate broker showed the younger men a thing or two.

William R. Brown, for 45 years treasurer of the West End Citizens' Association, is snorting "poppycock" these days.

It's all because the association suddenly adopted a rule that the officers must sign non-Communist affidavits.

"No one's ever questioned my loyalty before, and no one's going to do it now," snapped Brown.

As The CIO News went to press, Brown still was in the treasurership.

"So I said to him—'Unions are only a 1938 fad'."

Gets Welfare Post

Alfred W. Wagner, chairman of the New Jersey State CIO Community Services Committee, has been appointed to the program committee of the N. J. Welfare Council. He is also a member of the Council's Public Assistance Committee, and is labor relations secretary of the Neighborhood Community Chest of Passaic, N. J.

His Contract Said That It Was OK

A GROUP of CIO representatives and their wives were sitting around the dinner table one night recently, just "shooting the breeze" about this and that.

They talked about politics and lobbying, about horse racing and Europe, and about the quality of the food they were being served.

Finally the conversation swung around to wrestling.

"Say, I've really got a good story to tell you about a 'rassler'," said the big-broad-shouldered CIO man, who knocked holes in some of the country's best lines while playing college football back in the 1930's.

And his yarn illustrated what might be considered the ultimate view regarding the sanctity of contracts.

A CHARITABLE organization in the Mid-West needed some money with which to carry on its program, so it decided to sponsor a benefit football game.

One of the country's well-known professional teams agreed to play a group made up of graduates from one of the nation's top universities.

The job of getting the grads together posed a bit of a problem, but finally the team was assembled.

The day of the game arrived and the players were in their dressing rooms, donning their uniforms.

At this point the players were told about a little "deal" that had been worked out by the coaches.

THE GAME was for a worthy cause and, after all, the customers expected some action and thrills, the grads were told.

Because the two teams hadn't been playing in the same "league" nobody knew whether they could give the customers what they wanted— that is, without a bit of arranging.

So it had been decided, the coach said, that there would be a couple of staged "thrill" plays.

Early in the game one of the teams would be permitted to make a touchdown on the kickoff. Later the other team would be permitted to do the same thing.

It wouldn't really be cheating, the coach explained, because the rest of the game would be strictly on the level.

AMONG THE grads who listened to the coach's story was a young grunt and groan artist who always knew at the beginning of a wrestling match whether it was his night to win or lose.

He probably knew more about arranging the outcome of athletic events than anybody in the room, yet he was the one person who objected to the coaches' scheme.

No, sir, he declared, he wouldn't have anything to do with such a phony arrangement.

He didn't think that such a thing should be permitted—not even for the sake of charity.

He was adamant about it, declaring he wouldn't go on the field unless the game was completely on the up and up.

SOME OF his old college buddies started arguing with him, trying to convince him that there wasn't anything really wrong with the set-up.

The player who later became a CIO representative told him, "I don't see how you—of all people—can object. Why, you 'throw' wrestling matches whenever you're told to do so."

"Yeah, but that's different," declared the wrestler. "That's covered by my contract!"

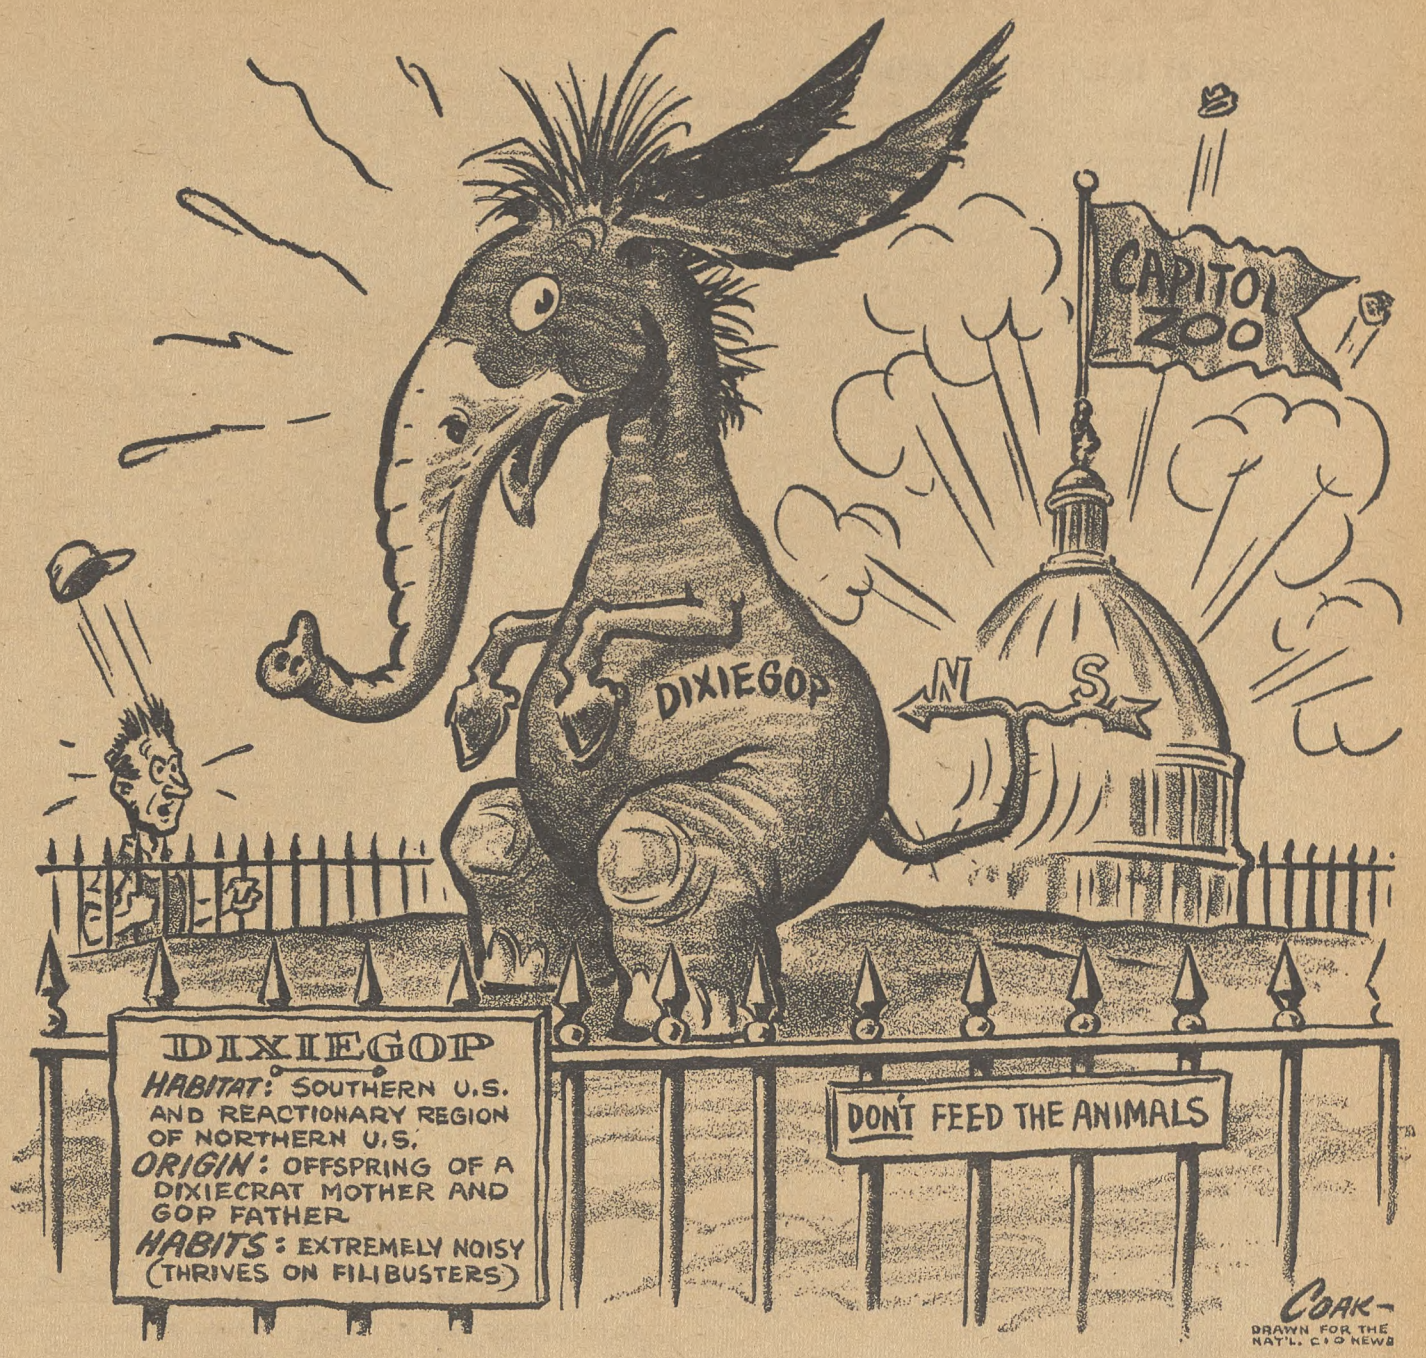
Who Said There Ain't No Such Animal?



Fort Wayne C. of C. Says 'Socialism Is Here'

JUST IN CASE you think that letters from the opponents of social legislation will not continue to be sent to Congressmen and Senators, take a look at these excerpts from the Fort Wayne, Ind., Chamber of Commerce News Letter:

"? ? ? ? ? ? MILLIONS FOR FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION? (S. 246 referred to the Public Welfare Committee, Elbert D. Thomas, chairman; Robert A. Taft, minority leader). Is there any child in this country who really WANTS an education who doesn't have the opportunity NOW to get one?

"Is there a single state who WANTS Federal aid, or who is not in much better financial position to take care of its own requirements? . . . this reformation of our American school system is as neat a piece of socialistic legislation as can be found in either England or Russia today! How's your writing arm?

"? ? ? ? ? ? BILLIONS FOR PUBLIC HOUSING? (S. 1070 approved by the Senate Banking Committee, scheduled for vote in the near future). The government's own census figures show that in 1920-30-40 the number of rooms available per person in the United States was .8.

"The 1947 U. S. Department of Commerce survey shows that this has risen since 1940 to 1.8! Rent ceilings have prevented any increase in the number of rental units, but have you noticed the number of houses for sale lately? And the price trends? If the government subsidizes the housing industry and 'gives' its citizens homes at a price less than it actually costs to build them, why not subsidize automobiles? Why not food? Why not everything else? Are we going to pay for our cost of housing what housing really costs, or are we going to pay even more for it through higher and still higher taxes: Housing shortage? Or political control? How's your writing arm?

"? ? ? ? ? ? BILLIONS FOR 'LIBERALIZING SOCIAL SECURITY FROM THE CRADLE TO THE GRAVE?' What security? The security of a bankrupt government and a collectivist dictatorship. If you don't believe us, get out your history books. The pattern is as old as time. How terribly 'under-privileged' were our Lincolns and Andrew Carnegies, only they don't know it!

"Isn't anyone for America anymore. Or has everyone fallen prey to the mistaken idea that central government can take care of us better than we can take care of ourselves? How's your writing arm?

"AND TO CAP THE ENTIRE NIGHTMARE we are faced with the incredible 'Spence Bill' (H. R. 2756) which would completely destroy the power of the legislative branch of our government. Impatient with Congress' deliberations, it is now proposed that the President shall have power to:

"1. Allocate all materials and supplies which HE deems in short demand.

"2. Regulate all wages and prices, with Washington approval necessary to change either!

"3. Control all production in order to maintain a 'balanced economy!'

"4. Put the government in any kind of business where HE is convinced that Private Enterprise has failed to meet the requirements of the 'people.'

"5. Launch public works programs whenever HE believes it necessary to meet the country's needs for employment and economic stabilization.

"Certainly this should awaken everyone to the fact that SOCIALISM IS HERE. Make no mistake about it! Only if we drag this monster out in the open and take a good look at his size, can we hope to lick him.

"LOOK IN THE MIRROR. What is the fellow you see there doing to steer this 'ship of state' which is headed so surely for the wrong port? This is war—just as if we were in mortal combat with the enemy—war against national bankruptcy and socialism. Your own future, the future of your children, and the destiny of your country are at stake . . . Are you REALLY too tired OR too busy to care?

"Or—will you join in this determination to let everyone know how YOU feel about this rapid abdication of a FREE America for a SLAVE STATE ? ? ? ? ?"

Harvard Host To CIO

Old John Harvard entertained a new type of student body at Cambridge last weekend.

CIO union members from all parts of New England converged on Harvard's Littauer Center for a three-day CIO New England Conference. The confab was sponsored by the CIO Dept. of Education & Research.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James Carey spoke at an opening banquet on the CIO program, and Asst. Sec. of Labor John Gibson was scheduled to address a Sunday afternoon closing session.

ECA May Fail in France Without Union Support

By ALLAN L. SWIN

THE GUYS WHO work in the textile mills of New England or Virginia may think they have no direct connection with the textile workers in the Roubaix-Tourcoing section of France, but they're wrong.

There may be no feeling of kinship between the auto workers in Michigan and the fellows who man the production lines of the Renault plant in Paris, but there should be.

Many of the miners in Alabama and West Virginia probably never heard of Lens, heart of the French coal fields, but they should learn something about the picturesque town and its people.

That's the impression one gets after touring some of the principal industrial areas of France, a nation which looms large in the overall picture of the European Recovery Program behind which the CIO has thrown its support.

CIO members and all other Americans who pay taxes are helping finance ERP. Their lives in the future will be greatly influenced by how well—or badly—ERP works.

THREE UNION newsmen from the U. S., including the writer, sat in a dimly-lit, unheated trade union hall in North France recently and discussed economics and politics with local unionists.

It was so cold our breath turned to "steam" as we talked.

"Back in 1938 an unskilled worker worked one day to earn enough to buy a shirt but now he has to work four or five days to buy the same kind of shirt," one of the unionists said.

"Before the war a worker could earn enough in an hour to buy one pound of meat, a gallon of wine or a dozen eggs. Now for an hour's work he gets enough to buy four ounces of meat—or less—about a pint of wine or three eggs."

Prices in France today are about 20 times as high as they were back in 1938, but wages are only about 12 times as high, according to the economic experts

There is an acute housing shortage and few buildings are being constructed.

FRANCE obviously has taken some firm steps on the path to economic recovery, but she has a long way to go.

Aid provided through the Economic Cooperation Administration has been an important factor Some of the persons most familiar with the situation say bluntly that France might be in bankruptcy today had it not been for ECA.

Industrial production is now 10 to 14% higher than in prewar days. Although many of the low-paid workers cannot afford everything they need, there seems to be almost enough food for the nation.

But France is beset by fear and doubt. There is little confidence in the ability of the government to straighten things out.

The French government has done little to inform the populace about the part the ECA is playing in the post-war recovery program.

Trade union leaders know about the Marshall Plan. The right-wingers among them support it strongly. The Communists never miss an opportunity to discredit it.

But it seems safe to say the average French worker has received only a small amount of accurate information about ERP.

The Commies, well financed and well equipped to handle propaganda, have done a fair job of selling French workers the idea that ECA is an American agency engaged in "imperialist expansion" in Europe.

MOST OF THE ECA officials in Paris say frankly that the trade unions may not be able to make the Marshall Plan a success in France but that they could make it a failure.

They hold a "balance of power" which might easily determine both the economic and political future of their nation.

Yet the French government has done very little to remedy the conditions under which the seeds of Communism grow best.

One of the nation's leading right-wing trade unionists put it this way:

"The workers cannot have faith in their government unless the government demonstrates that it it trying to distribute the benefits of recovery equitably.

"The government said it was going to freeze wages and prices, but it froze only wages.

"Although the non-Communist trade unions strongly support the Marshall Plan, the French government has not given these unions an opportunity to help make the Plan effective.

"We are never given a chance to discuss new recovery plans with officials. After the plans are made we're told about them.

"France, with help from the U. S., may win the battle for production but lose the ideological battle because too many workers' bellies are not well filled."

LEON JOUHAUX, head of the right-wing union group known as Force Ouvriere and president of the government's Council of Economic Advisers, said that "the Marshall Plan has helped France a great deal—and there can be no doubt about that."

He said France's food supply was not "really adequate" despite a good crop year in 1948 and that "the present price situation is not favorable to the workers."

Modernization of French industry and an increase in industrial production are needed badly, he said.

His organization, he said, is asking for elimination of government control over wages and a return to free collective bargaining.

Gaston Tessier, president of CFTC (Christian trade union organization), said his group threw its support behind the ECA program "as soon as it was announced."

He and other CFTC leaders said they "tried hard" to work out arrangements for cooperating with French governmental agencies in carrying out the ECA program but had little success.

CFTC also is seeking a return to free collective bargaining on the theory that it might wipe out wage-price inequities.

AT THE ECA'S general European headquarters in France and at the ECA French Mission you find a gradual shift in emphasis that is interesting to trade unionists.

During the early phases of their operations, ECA officials and their staffs thought largely in terms of dollars, credits, tons of materials, imports and exports.

Now they are beginning to think in terms of human beings.

They are becoming more and more aware of the fact that France's problem is ideological as well as economic.

They are saying more frequently that the trade unions hold the key to the future of Europe and perhaps to the future of the world.

It is impossible to tell how much of a shift has taken place, but it's obvious that "ECA thinking" in France has been undergoing a change.

One of ECA's top men used a Roosevelt-type phrase when he said, "What France has most to fear is fear itself."

And he stated—without quibbling—that France cannot achieve economic and political stability unless the standard of living of French workers is improved considerably.

UNCLE SAM, through ECA, has poured more than $450 millions into France since the Marshall Plan began operating.

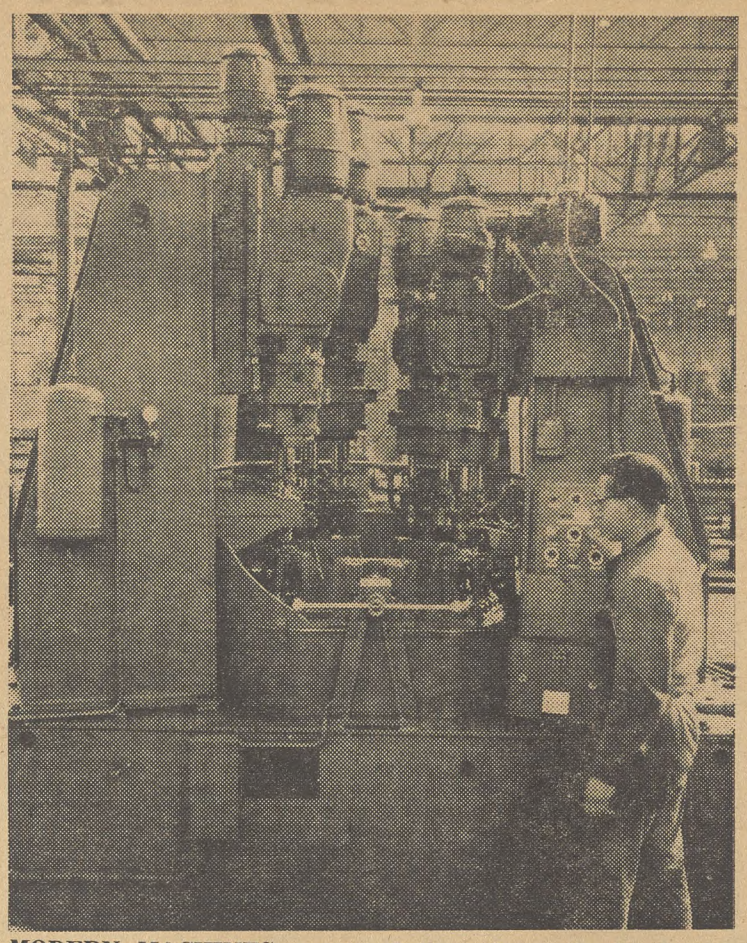
In various spots throughout the country you can find specific examples of how this money has kept industries alive or has served as "pump priming."

French industrialists with whom we talked placed emphasis on the power development and installation of machines which ECA is financing or fostering.

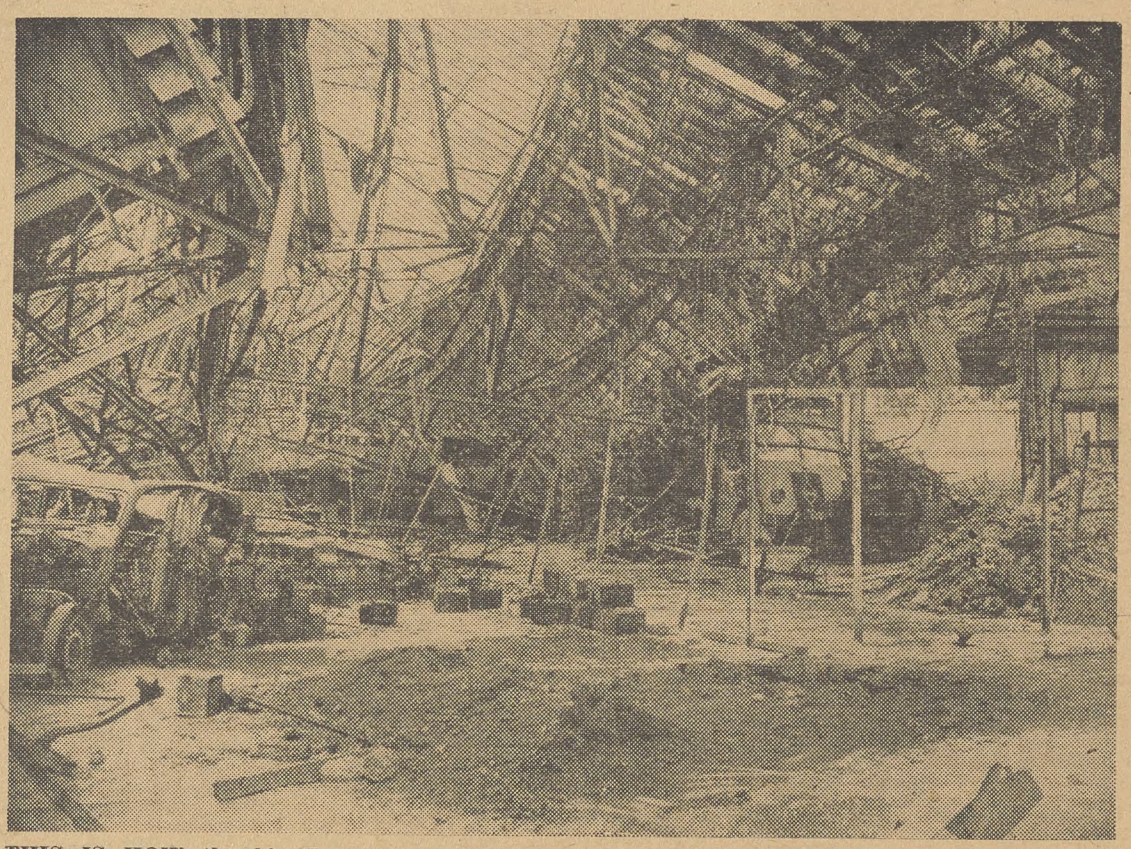
France's big need, they say, is to build an industrial machine capable of economically processing the raw materials which are available.

They admit, of course, that there are other serious problems, but from their standpoint increased production through greater use of power and technological development is the thing.

And most of the right-wing trade unionists go along with this idea, with the proviso that increased productivity must bring a higher standard of living to all Frenchmen.



MODERN MACHINES, many of them from the U. S., are being installed in French factories in an effort to step up production and bring prices down.



THIS IS HOW the big Renault automotive plant at Paris looked at the end of World War II. Bomb explosions turned it into a shambles. The plant has been completely rebuilt and has been able to resume production of cars.

Food Costly

Economists estimate the average French family spends between 80 and 85% of its total income for food.

Only about 3% of the income goes to rent, which has been "frozen" by the government.

The average French worker receives about $60 for 200 hours of labor.

CP Dominant

The Communists are the dominant force in the French labor movement. They are well financed and publish a large amount of propaganda material.

Membership figures are so unreliable that it's impossible to accurately compare the strength of Communist and non-Communist groups. Many persons familiar with France say the right-wing groups are gaining in strength and would make considerable progress if they had funds with which to hire organizers and publish more newspapers.

Major Problem

A Communist-led strike last year seriously damaged coal production facilities because strikers permitted mines to become flooded.

House Votes For Local Rent Controls

AT THE hands of a group of Republicans and Southern Democrats, the administration bill for strong rent controls was torn to bits in both houses of Congress.

The deft hand of the real estate lobby—hundreds of whose members have moved in on Capitol Hill and persistently dogged the tracks of every Congressmen—was ever-present on the floor of the House and in the Senate Banking Committee. Legislators all but drowned in the tears that flowed for "mal-treated" landlords.

In the House the "Dixiegops" had a field day. Led by Rep. Paul Brown (D. Ga.), Jesse Wolcott (R. Mich.), and John B. Williams (D. Miss.), they shoved through (by margins of 39 votes in one case and 62 in another) two amendments which will do for rent control what the same coalition did to price control.

THE FIRST amendment — the Williams amendment—throws responsibility for rent control on the ctiy councils, county commissioners and state legislatures. If passed, it would permit any of these bodies to lift controls from their respective areas, by the simple passage of a resolution.

Such administration Democrats as Reps. Buchanan (D. Pa.), Spence (D. Ky.), Patman (D. Tex.), and Monroney (D. Okla.) tried vainly to describe the chaos such a provision would create. Patman referred to it as an "absurdity."

Also victorious in the House was Rep. Brown's "reasonable return" amendment, which, it was charged, would result in a sharp rise in rents throughout the country.

In addition, the House bill extends controls for 15 months and empowers the Housing Expediter to recontrol areas he previously decontrolled. Attempts to include criminal penalties for violation of the law, or provide stronger tenant protection against eviction were defeated.

ON THE SENATE side the tenants suffered another big defeat, when the Banking Committee approved a general 10% rent increase, to be put in effect in two lumps—5% on Oct. 1, 1949, and 5% on April 1, 1950. This was intended as an alternative to the House-passed "reasonable return" amendment, which was considered unworkable.

Instead of the 27-months extension urged by Sen. Myers and Sen. Flanders, or even the 15-months extension included in the House bill—the Senate Committee's bill extended controls for only 12 months, plus a three-months moratorium on evictions.

In deference to the House action on the Williams amendment —permitting local governments to decontrol—the Senate committee drew up its own version of a "states' rights" bill.

This provision would permit the state legislatures to decontrol an entire state or any given area. It would also turn over the administration of controls to the state whenever the governor informs the Housing Expediter of the existence of an "adequate" law in the state.

Only four members of the committee voted against this provision — Senators Sparkman (D. Ala.), Wagner (D. N. Y.), Taylor (D. Ida.) and Paul Douglas (D. Ill.).

As the CIO News went to press, the bill was scheduled to receive speedy Senate floor action. The present rent control law expires March 31, and the bill must still go through the Senate, into a conference committee of Senators and Representatives for a compromise, and back through both houses of Congress again before is reaches the President's desk.

'Tenants' Letter Exposed as Phony

The tactics of the real estate lobby's high-powered campaign to wreck rent control were exposed last week by Columnist Tris Coffin in the Washington Times-Herald.

Coffin calls it the "Aunt Kate"—approach—"the poor, widowed old lady who owns a rental house she bought from a lifetime of scrubbing floors and is losing her savings because of rent control."

These letters have been pouring into Congressmen's offices by the thousands, and wherever Congressmen have taken the trouble to check, large numbers have been found to be completely phony.

Rep. Frank Buchanan (D. Pa.), for instance, has received 10,000 such letters. An investigation by his own political workers revealed that many were from nonexistent persons, others from "crackpots" without rental properties.

Another phase of the campaign is a deluge of letters to newspaper editors. One signed by "Sarah H. Terriel," allegedly an 82-year old landlady, appeared in at least two eastern newspapers on the same day, Coffin reports. An identical letter, signed by "Sarah H. Levine" appeared in a New York City daily with a large Jewish circulation.

Lauds Reuther

Chm. Lesinski (D., Mich.) of the full House Labor Committee asked AFL Pres. William Green:

"Is it not true that the best job of routing Communists has been done by UAW-CIO Pres. Walter Reuther without the aid of T-H?"

"Yes," answered Green.

Vote On Giving Rent Control To States, Counties, Cities

Following is the roll-call in the House on the crucial Williams amendment to the rent control bill. This amendment, which permits states, counties or cities to decontrol their areas by resolution, was passed by a vote of 227 (primarily Southern Democrats and Republicans) to 188. The CIO and Administration Democrats consider the amendment the equivalent of complete gutting of rent control.

Ever Try Layoff On A. M. After

WANTED—Young skinny, wiry fellows, not over 18; must be expert riders, willing to risk death daily. Orphans preferred . . . This ad for Pony Express riders to carry mail over the Overland Trail appeared in 1860. Ah, what a boss could get away with in those good old days!

"OPERATION GODIVA"—Who says the British don't have a sense of humor? A surprise move ending clothes rationing in England, Mar. 15, after eight long years was planned by the Board of Trade under the code name, "Operation Godiva." In case you've forgotten, Godiva was the legendary Saxon lady who rode through the town clothed only in her long hair.

THOSE KINDLY BOSSES—"Reports of layoffs and cutbacks in other industries and a decline in job opportunities have had a sobering effect on our workers. Now they're more appreciative of their jobs."

"Everybody is hanging on, and you get more work out of a lazy old employe than out a lazy new one."

A reporter for the Wall Street Journal doing a piece on layoff trends and "worker output" quotes the above remarks made by employers. They're typical samples of a whole batch of similar comments from industrial big shots which he gives to back up his theme that "workers are putting more elbow grease into their jobs these days." A few quoted do show signs of realizing that workers are humans, too, but the large part seem to be looking forward gleefully to unemployment—for their workers, of course, not themselves.

UNION PLAN: A Civic Full Employment Committee has been set up in Buffalo, N. Y., to study and recommend action in case a wave of lay-offs threatens the city. The idea is the brain child of CIO Council Pres. Hugh Thompson, who initiated a similar committee in 1945. Members of the Committee are appointed by the Mayor and serve without pay.

POOR BUSINESS DEPT.—The CIO's Oil Workers Union has just moved its international head quarters from Ft. Worth, Tex., to Denver, Colo., where it has purchased a two-story building, address 1840 California St.

One of the reasons for the move was that the union was forced to occupy a ramshackle building in Ft. Worth because landlords with better accommodations didn't want to rent to a union.

Now that the Oil Workers International Union has gone, maybe the city's bright business men will be saddened to learn what a good financial asset they have lost.

The OWIU spent more than $400,000 a year in the city and took in about $4,000 a year in dues from its Local 208 members in Ft. Worth.

"Where else can you find an institution that spends a hundred times as much money in a city as it collects in that city?" asked union officials as they departed for Denver.

Aged Ask Security; Not Relief

CALL HIM John Kelly. He wouldn't like it if we used his real name, for he has his pride and he's in trouble—real trouble.

It's not his fault, but mixed in with his indignation at a great injustice done is the shame most men feel who can't support their families. So we'll call him Kelly.

Kelly who lives in Maine, worked in a textile mill there until he was laid off in November 1947, when the textile boom began to drop. Since then he hasn't been able to find a job anywhere. Why? Well, he's 61 and he has only one arm. He lost the other in 1934 in an industrial accident. Who wants to hire a man with one arm who is 61!

"I am not looking for sympathy from no one," he wrote in a letter sent to his union, the CIO Textile Workers Union, "but I feel I am entitled to a job from someone who has a sense of fair play left."

What's to happen to John Kelly and many thousands of others like him? He got unemployment insurance for a short time, but that was soon exhausted. He's not old enough for a social security pension. He wants to work, and support himself and his wife but nobody is interested in hiring him.

KELLY'S story was told last week before the House Ways and Means Committee by Kenneth L. Kramer, director of the insurance and Health Dept., Textile Workers Union, at hearings on legislation to improve the nation's public welfare program.

Two bills on the subject have been introduced—the Forand Bill (HR 2645) which the CIO supports with suggestions for its improvement, and the Doughton Bill (HR 2892).

Both bills have many of the same provisions for an improved system of public assistance to be administered by the various states under Federal standards, and many of these the CIO favors.

Improvements are sought in the Forand Bill, particularly because it does not impose drastic limits on the size of payments to individuals which the Federal Government will match.

CIO Sec. Treas. James B. Carey, first CIO witness to testify at the hearing explained the CIO's overall social security program to the Committee which is headed by Rep. Doughton (D., N. C.) He emphasized the need of a complete program of full employment, and expanded social security benefits and coverage to whittle away the need for direct public assistance.

IRVING ABRAMSON, CIO representative and chairman of the CIO Community Services Committee, urged support for the bill "because it is designed to meet an elementary need of the American people," but he emphasized that it is "no substitute for an adequate social insurance and unemployment compensation program."

J. E. Stegall of Spray, N. C., told of the distress caused in southern textile areas by increasing unemployment and short time. He named a number of mills that have either completely suspended operations or curtailed production, throwing thousands of workers out of jobs.

Norris Tibbett, TWUA representative from Danville, Va., also told of the difficulties workers laid off by the big Dan River Cotton mills were encountering. He introduced to the committee two of the workers recently laid off by the Dan River mills who told their own stories.

George F. Lewey, 71, said he could not live on the Social Security old age pension he and his wife were getting. He receives $22.49 and his wife gets $29.40 a month.

Elisha McKinney, 67, said he and his wife together received only $36.36 old age pension. Both men worked in the Dan River mills although they were past the retirement age, until the company laid them off when it began to curtail production.

Columbus CIO Council Goes To Symphony

"CIO GOES to the symphony" is now history in the Ohio State Capital. For the first time in Columbus, Ohio, a labor organization sponsored a special concert of a philharmonic orchestra.

In a civic gesture to support the Columbus Philharmonic Orchestra, the Columbus CIO Council underwrote a special concert March 13, making, in effect, a $2500 contribution to the symphony maintenance fund.

Council Pres. William Spratley said the concert was the brain child of George De Nucci, CIO regional director in Central Ohio.

De Nucci commented that "while we weren't as satisfied as we would like to have been with the turnout, we do feel that the concert proved to the good people of Columbus that trade unionists are good citizens. We intend to continue supporting the Columbus Philharmonic as we support every civic undertaking that is of value to all the people of the community."

Conductor Izler Solomon, who made nation-wide headlines last year when he flew to Palestine to conduct a symphony orchestra while that city was under Arab shell fire, praised the CIO for its undertaking. Said Solomon:

"We wish more groups in the city would show the same interest that has been shown by the CIO.

Attending as guests of the Columbus CIO were pupils at the city's orphanages, indigent blind, old-age pensioners and students in school music appreciation classes.

CIO Sets Up Optical Union

THE CIO has a brand new international union—the United Optical & Instrument Workers of America. Although the group has belonged to the CIO since it came over from the AFL in 1937, it has functioned up to now as an organizing committee.

Steps to turn the committee into a full-fledged CIO International were taken at a convention Mar. 11-13 in Washington. Attending were some 60 delegates from the union's locals in towns and cities east of the Mississippi where the industry is concentrated.

One of the largest plants organized by the union is the American Optical Co., (Scientific Division) at Buffalo, N. Y., employing around 1,000 workers.

CIO Vice-Pres. and Organizing Director Allan S. Haywood delivered the main speech at the convention and swore in the newly elected officers and executive board members.

Haywood and his assistant, R. J. Thomas, who also spoke to the delegates, bitterly denounced the Taft-Hartley law and the ruling issued by the Natl. Labor Relations Board, barring the Optical Workers from Board elections.

THE BOARD ruled some weeks ago that the Optical Workers Organizing Committee was "an adjunct" of the National CIO and therefore ineligible to be on the ballot in NLRB collective bargaining elections, because national CIO officers had refused to sign non-Communist affidavits under the Taft-Hartley law.

After the action taken at the convention, officers of the Optical Union, who had signed the affidavits, arranged to file these with the NLRB and a financial statement with the Labor Dept.

The union's officers stated emphatically that the Optical & Instrument Workers is completely free of Communist influence and has pledged to support CIO policy at all times.

"This has been the policy of the organization in the past," the officers declared, "and will continue to be the policy of the new Optical & Instrument union in the future."

Top officers, elected unanimously by acclamation at the convention, are: Pres. Thomas E. Andert, Secy. Earl Disselhorst, and Financial Secy-Treas. Morris Grief. Newly elected Executive Board members, also elected unanimously, are James Beattie, Sebastian Rebaldo, Cass Suski and Arnold Woehling.

NAM Cries Hoax

The NAM's Ira Mosher poohpoohed the Nov. 2 election in his testimony before the House Labor Committee.

All this unpopularity of T-H, he said, "is a cruel hoax on the American public." Then, said this business representative, "T-H hasn't hurt labor one bit."

He presented a long, legalistic brief for retention of T-H—only it would be a stronger T-H with even sharper teeth to bite labor. But, when questioned about T-H, he retreated with the statement that he wasn't familiar with the law "from the legal standpoint."

Union Guy—A Personalized History of UAW

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

AT SCHOOL the kids used to call him "Smokey" because of the coppery color of his skin. His grandfather was a Chippewa Indian. The boy was born in a log cabin built in a clearing in the wilderness of Michigan, where his father trapped, hunted, fished, and (on the side) ran a small store in the front part of the cabin.

His story begins like a tale of the early pioneers, but it isn't. It's the true story of what the press calls a labor leader, or "pork chopper," as he calls himself—meaning he is on a union payroll. He does publicity work for the CIO United Auto Workers in Detroit.

Clayton Fountain tells his story in "Union Guy," a fascinating book about what happened to him and millions of other workers during some of the most stirring times in recent American life. Into his personal story is woven a vivid inside account of the rise and growth of his union, the UAW-CIO, to which he has belonged for 12 years, and the rough and tumble struggle of labor-management relations.

UAW BOOKSHOP DISPLAY: Clayton Fountain (right), author of "Union Guy," is shown in the United Auto Workers' Bookshop in Detroit with his wife and Bookshop Manager Bob Marshall. The bookshop has good reason for plugging the book because it is a history of the union.

Pioneer Life

Born at Scotts Point, Mich., in 1909, Fountain spent his childhood in one of the more isolated areas of the country where the pioneer way of life hung on past its time. The story starts off on a note peculiarly early American.

All the rest of it, however, is distinctly USA today, dealing as it does with the rush and roar of the modern auto industry and the fight of its workers to build a strong union. Fountain, although only 40, has had the unusual experience of having lived in two vastly different eras.

Author A Worker

Clayton W. Fountain, who is part American Indian, was born in Michigan, where he still lives. He came to Detroit 21 years ago when he was 19 years old. He went to work for General Motors in 1933 and now has 15 years seniority there. A member in good standing of the UAW-CIO since 1937, Fountain now does publicity work on organizational campaigns for the union.

His early working life followed a course common to countless other young men starting out to earn a living—and many a CIO worker can find similarities in it to his own experiences.

Kitchen flunkey on a lake steamer; dishwasher and cook in a hamburger stand; grease monkey in a used car lot; landscaper's helper; truck driver—these were some of his varied early jobs.

Worked At Packard

Then he got work at the Packard plant in Detroit, as a press operator on the night shift at 50c an hour and bonus, a job, he says, that needed only the "traditional strong back and weak mind."

He worked a 12-hour shift, sometimes more, and averaged between $40 and $50 a week, until he got sick, stayed out three days without reporting his illness, and was fired.

In 1929 he found a job at the Briggs body plant in Detroit, then a notorious sweat shop, where he made $6.50 to $7 a day on piece work, and spent his evenings running around with gay young friends. The same year he married a 16-year-old waitress, then decided it was a mistake, and set out on a jaunt about the country with a friend who had a Ford.

They got as far as Kansas City, went broke, and Fountain took a job in a small shop running a punch press, until one night the first joint of his finger was clipped off. He settled with the boss for a $150 award and quit.

A 10-day stretch in the Shelby County workhouse in Tennessee where he labored on the roads in chains, and a job driving a tractor on a cotton and corn plantation where he learned about the sad lot of the sharecropper, were some of his other experiences. Then, he returned to Detroit in the spring of 1930 and was reunited with his wife.

Here Fountain's story follows the pattern common to so many workers in the depression 30's. Through his father-in-law, a truck driver for the Detroit Public Lighting Commission, he got a job as a laborer, making $27 a week. It didn't last long.

In February 1931, just two weeks after his wife bore him a daughter, he was laid off. The depression was on. It was 2½ years before he received a regular pay check again. As Fountain puts it, he became one of "the hapless legion of men who haunted the welfare offices in Detroit."

Couldn't Pay Rent

The young couple couldn't pay rent on the little relief money they got, so they doubled up with his wife's aunt and uncle in a three-room shack. There were seven of them, four adults and three children.

Fountain remembers the winter of 1932 as a long and terrible nightmare of hunger, misery and hopelessness for thousands in Detroit. On March 8, that year, his son was born. It was the day after the Communists organized a hunger march to the gates of the Ford River Rouge plant, where four men were killed by machine-gun fire.

It wasn't until the next July, by an unexpected stroke of good luck, that he got a job as press operator at the Chevrolet Gear & Axle plant at $3.75 a day, almost as much as the family got from the welfare for a week.

Fountain was to continue working in this plant for seven years, and to accumulate eight more years seniority on leave for union business, but some big events were to transpire before he reached this state of affairs, then undreamed of.

Learning about the union shortly after he went to work at the Gear & Axle plant, Fountain had joined the UAW and plunged ardently into union activities. Meanwhile the sitdown strikes at General Motors plants in Flint and elsewhere were erupting, and the situation at his plant was tense.

Already under suspicion of talking union in the plant, he was fired abruptly one day after he had refused to sign a company-sponsored petition attacking the union and the "un-American" sitdown strikes.

He can remember the day well, for it was his daughter's sixth birthday, and when he got home he found a party in progress. Fountain put off giving his wife the bad news as long as possible, but it finally had to come out.

World Smashed

When she heard what had happened, his wife didn't say anything, Fountain recalls. "She just sat there across the table from me, her face strained with emotion, while the two youngsters chattered away, all unaware that our little world had been smashed by a policy issued from GM headquarters in Wall Street."

Although the UAW won the GM strike and Fountain got his job back in a few weeks, his wife never grew to understand or accept union ideas. Relations between them became more and more strained as Fountain's union activities increased, until they finally separated and later were divorced. Several years later he married again—a union girl this time, whom he met at a labor conference.

But before this split came, another event occurred that was to have a big influence on his development. One afternoon in May 1937, he joined the Communist Party. He signed up, he recalls, "in a cramped little apartment in Paradise Valley, the East Side Detroit slum where thousands of dark-skinned Americans are packed into rotten buildings infested with rats and vermin."

He was assigned to build a party unit in UAW Local 235, at the plant where he worked. The Communists were very active in Detroit in these stormy days, and Fountain, in his deep resentment against injustices he saw all around him, took part in eviction riots and other Party-organized affairs, inside the union and out.

For a time he was Detroit correspondent for the Midwest Daily Record, the CP paper started in Chicago in '37 under Louis Budenz as editor.

Doubted CP Tactics

"Fermenting doubts," however, soon began troubling him, he says, as to the wisdom of CP tactics, and he took to discussing his ideas with comrades. He thought the Party should follow in the tradition of American democracy of the basic right of people to fight oppression.

When the CP brass hats took him to task for some of his spoken and written remarks, and gave him orders as to what he could and could not read and think, he was through.

"These men were telling me that I had no right to select my own reading matter," Fountain says. He left the Party in '38, after defying the CP's comical instruction to write a 10,000 word treatise denouncing Jay Lovestone, former member the CP considered a "renegade," as a stooge for the fascists.

"The point the Communists miss," Fountain writes, in reflecting later over his brief sojourn with them, "is that political democracy has been a living, dynamic thing here in America for more than a century and a half.

"It's different here from the way it is in European nations, where lack of freedom has generated a higher degree of political militancy among the workers.

"There is no need in America to waste our time with Marxist mumbo-jumbo about dialectics and stuff: there is no need to idolize Lenin or obey Stalin. What we need in America is a homespun political organization that will harness the historic American sense of justice and fair play."

For a time after he left the CP, Fountain had a hard and lonely time. He was frozen out by his former associates and distrusted by their opponents, but his personal difficulties were soon submerged in the union's struggle with factions inside the UAW, and its battles with management.

Interunion Fight

Fountain relates in detail the long-drawn-out factional fight over the union's erratic president, Homer Martin, who was finally defeated at the 1939 convention by R. J. Thomas, and other crises in the union's early years which it weathered successfully.

Some of the interesting things he has to say about this period concern the 1939 GM strike, which he thinks was the turning point in the UAW's history. Conducted on the strategy devised by Walter Reuther, then the union's vice-president in charge of its GM division, the union struck only the skilled operations, while the production workers stayed on the job to the tail-end of the 1939 production line.

The dispute was settled Aug. 4 and was a tremendous victory for the union. GM signed a company-wide agreement, the first in its history, recognizing the UAW as sole bargaining agency in 42 plants.

Using this dispute as an outstanding example of the "justification of the strategic use of the strike weapon," Fountain gives a persuasive argument in its defense aimed at well-meaning liberals who criticize the strike without understanding

"Violence," Fountain writes, "is relative. It exists in forms other than stoppages of work and brawls on picket lines. There are varying degrees of violence.

"Let us assume that an imaginary employer is paying his workers starvation wages and driving them like slaves in the plant. This is one degree of violence. But it does not stop there.

Violence's Victims

"The wives and children of oppressed workers are also the victims of this violence. If they do not get the proper amount and quality of food, if they are ill-clothed and ill-housed, if they are denied sufficient medical care—all because of low wages—an enormous degree of violence has, in effect, been inflicted on them by the employers."

An Inside View

Clayton W. Fountain, author of "Union Guy," says his book "is intended to give the reader an inside view of the working of a powerful labor organization to help to inform him on the labor problems about which so many people shout so loudly and know so little."

Fountain's book gives the complete and colorful history of the auto union from the time it broke away from the AFL in 1936 and took its few thousand members into the CIO down to its present status as one of the world's most powerful unions with a membership of more than a million.

It is the inside story of the UAW told by a "pork chopper" who came up the hard way. Certain parts of Fountain's account may go into the union's inner affairs in too much detail for some readers, but the overall impact of the book is powerful.

Not only labor people, but also those on the bosses' side of the fence who have no idea of what makes workers tick, will find it well worth reading.

Although it is not a preachy book, "Union Guy" definitely has a pro-union message. By telling frankly and honestly what happened to him, Fountain shows how the union can bring meaning and understanding into workers' lives by offering them a chance to unite with others in a democratic way to protect themselves from injustice.

In a way it is a new kind of American success story. Perhaps some day when our schools come to recognize more clearly the great contributions unions have made to the country, "Union Guy" may take its place alongside the story of the famous immigrant, Jacob Riis, whose "The Making of an American," has been read by millions of school children.

UE Says 80,000 Are Idle In Electric Industry

UNEMPLOYMENT in the electrical industry rose to 80,000 in the last half of 1948, Pres. A. J. Fitzgerald of the CIO Electrical Workers has said in a letter to Pres. Truman.

At the same time, Fitzgerald said a UE study of unemployment figures, based on findings in the electrical industry, has led to an examination of governmental figures for the entire country.

In the letter to Pres. Truman, made public at a press conference held by Russ Nixon, UE's Washington representative, Fitzgerald said the union's study indicated unemployment figures of about 4,800,000. The Bureau of Census has reported about 3,220,000 out of work.

The Census Bureau figures—for February 1949—indicated a 100% rise in joblessness since last October.

The CIO Dept. of Education & Research, however, said that Census figures have in fact "reflected the recent rise in unemployment, which although serious and requiring continued attention and rigorous action, is still below depression size."

THE DIFFERENCE between the UE's estimate and the Census figure develops from statistical questions over the inclusion of certain groups of people in the unemployment total.

The UE pointed out the Census does not include as unemployed those workers on "temporary" layoffs or waiting to start new jobs; those who may be involuntarily working a very short workweek, either at their regular jobs or in other lines of work; and those persons willing to work but not actively looking for a job at any particular time.

Fitzgerald said there are 80,000 unemployed at present in the electrical industry, warned against a "dangerous tendency" to underestimate joblessness, and accused the government of "looking the other way" from unemployment problems.

CIO economists agree that an estimated quarter-million workers suffering from "temporary" layoffs should be included in the unemployment figure.

On other problems—concerning which a standing committee of CIO research directors has been meeting for some time with government statisticians — they do not think that "sufficient information is at hand for either us or the Census Bureau to make a considered judgment as to changes to be made in handling" the figures.

Bill To Kill Warrant Against Bail Approved

A bill cancelling deportation warrants against Sec.-Treas. Alex Bail of the CIO Playthings & Novelty Workers has been passed by the House and forwarded to the Senate.

Bail came to the United States from Russia in 1926. A member of the Communist Party in its early days, he was expelled in 1929 because he "spoke out" against its policies. A number of people have filed affidavits with the Justice Dept. attesting to Bail's loyalty to the United States and "to his efforts against Communism in the labor union field."

The bill, introduced by Rep. Klein (D. N. Y.), would nullify an old Dept. of Justice order deporting Bail as a "foreign-born Communist."

Cleveland Guildsman Wins Willkie Award

Simeon D. Booker, unit officer of the American Newspaper Guild local in Cleveland, Ohio, and executive board member of the Cleveland CIO Council, has won a Wendell L. Willkie award in Negro journalism for 1948. The selection was made by the Nieman Foundation of Harvard University.

The Cleveland Call & Post reporter won the award for "a searching series of feature articles exposing discriminatory conditions in Cleveland's public schools."

Other Willkie winners were the Norfolk, Va., Journal and Guide for best public service, and Louis R. Lautier, Washington correspondent for the Atlanta Daily World. Judges were Nieman fellows.

CIO Helps Get Pact For Guatemala Union

THINGS ARE looking up for Chiquita, the lady who tells you NOT to put bananas in the refrigerator.

For a time during the past month, it looked as though there'd be no more bananas coming here from Guatemala—one of Latin America's big banana-producing areas.

More serious, it looked as though a strike by Guatemala banana workers would produce serious international complications and cause hardship to the people of Guatemala.

But the strike of Guatemala dock workers and banana plantation workers and the powerful United Fruit Co. has now been settled. The CIO Latin American Affairs Committee, headed by Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, and CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, lent a strong helping hand in working out the settlement.

The Guatemalan strike started in February after the Union of Banana Workers had spent a fruitless year seeking to get United Fruit Co. to bargain collectively. Wages and other grievances of the workers were involved.

When the big U. S. corporation, whose influence in Central America is extensive, refused to bargain, the liberal Guatemalan government tried to mediate, but without success.

THAT WAS followed by circulation of a strike petition among the workers, but intimidation by company spokesmen prevented the union from getting enough signatures. That was followed by a workers' slowdown, and a company speed-up at Puerto Barrios docks, where new conveyor equipment had been installed.

The company retaliated with a boycott of Guatemalan ports—an action that caused widespread unemployment and hardship to the country, whose economy is based on banana exports. Meanwhile, Washington lobbyists were busy seeking to persuade members of Congress that the dispute was not over wages and working conditions, but between the company and an allegedly "communist" government.

At that point, Manuel Pinto Usaga of the Guatemalan unions established contact with the CIO. In Washington, CIO Sec.-Treas. Carey brought representatives of the United Fruit Co. together with Usaga. Carey said American workers would not be fooled by the "red" charges of the company, and demanded that bargaining be instituted at once.

Usaga returned to Guatemala with a promise from the company to bargain, and on March 7 an agreement was signed.

USAGA, IN A letter to Carey, voiced thanks "for the valuable collaboration of the CIO. I am satisfied with the results of my visit to your organization, and so are all the workers involved in this dispute."

The agreement was signed, Usaga reported, despite United Fruit Co. propaganda from Guatemalan papers, foreign press services and radio stations. The situation was further complicated by the fact that the company's Guatemalan attorney is considered to be a conservative candidate for president in the next national elections.

Commenting on the propaganda build-up against the Guatemalan unions, Carey said the "CIO is deeply concerned when it sees the already preponderant power and wealth of a giant American corporation over the life of a small neighboring republic supported by extremely partisan statements on the floor of the U. S. Congress."

Carey said he was shocked by the company's "callous efforts . . . to poison American public opinion over the economic issues involved." He voiced fear it would have a bad effect on the Good Neighbor Policy throughout Latin America.

Now that a settlement has been reached, Carey voiced pleasure that CIO had been able to help bring about a constructive solution and he congratulated the United Fruit Co. for finally engaging in collective bargaining with the union of banana workers.

He said that "continued action such as this would help the Good Neighbor policy."

Organizationally Speaking

Allan S. Haywood

CIO Reg. Dir. James Leary reports that the employes of the Wilson & Co., Kansas City, Kans., chose the CIO Packinghouse Workers as their collective bargaining agency by a vote of 989 to 278.

The UPWA delegates to the Greater Kansas City Industrial Union Council meeting, expressed their appreciation and thanks to the CIO Director and his staff, the secretary, other officers and delegates of the City Council and the affiliated Unions for their cooperation and assistance during the campaign.

Leary also reports that the powerhouse employes of the U. S. Gypsum Company, North Kansas City, Mo., voted 5 to 1 in favor of retaining CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers as their union in an election which resulted from an attempted AFL raid. The work in this election was done by CIO Field Reps. Henry A. Schwarzott and William E. Lewis, and Emery Aubrey, Local President.

Leary also reports that the Utility Workers won a union authorization election among the employes of Middle States Utility Company of Bethany, Mo., by a vote of 103 to 16. Field Reps. Schwarzott and Lewis and Local Pres. Lee Williams and Local Sec. Ross Barber participated in this victory.

Dir. Paul E. Miley of UAW Region 2A announces an overwhelming NLRB election victory among the workers of the E. L. Wiegund Company, Pittsburgh, Pa. Nearly 95% of the 719 eligible voters participated in the election and gave the UAW an overwhelming proportion of 33 to 1.

A. T. Stephens, director of organization of the Packinghouse Workers, reports additional election victories. The Harris Soap Co. workers in Buffalo, N. Y., voted 11 to 0 for the union. The Central Packing Co., Kansas City, voted 49 to 0 for the union. Employes of the Chicago Plant of the Wilson & Co., gave the UPWA 2578 votes out of 3284 cast to win CIO representation by an overwhelming majority. In a union shop election at the Pet Milk Co., Mayfield, Ky., the employes were in favor of the union by a vote of 97 to 5.

CIO Reg. Dir. Fullerton Fulton reports that the Chemical Workers won an election at Smith-Douglas, Inc., Albert Lea, Minn., by a vote of 35 to 2.

Southern Campaign

Van A. Bittner, National Director of the CIO Organizing Committee, has announced seven more victories for the Southern Organizing campaign. Four of these mean new local unions for the Oil Workers and one each for the Utility Workers, the Lithographers and the Textile Workers.

ALABAMA: Dir. Carey Haigler reports the employes of two of the Gulf Refining Co. establishments in Birmingham, voted unanimously for the Oil Workers.

VIRGINIA: Dir. Ernest Pugh reports the employes of the Sinclair Refining Co., Portsmouth, voted unanimously for the Oil Workers.

TEXAS: Dir. Robert Oliver reports employes of the Panhandle Refining and Producing Co., voted affiliation with the Oil Workers, while employes of the Texas Public Service Co., Port Arthur voted affiliation with the Utility Workers.

SOUTH CAROLINA: Dir. Franz Daniel reports employes of the Calico Engraving Co., Spartanburg, chose the Textile Workers as their collective bargaining agency.

FLORIDA: Dir. Charles Cowl reports employes of the McDonald Printing Co., Tampa, chose the Lithographers as their bargaining agent.

The writer has just returned from Los Angeles, Cal., having been there dealing with the problems of the Los Angeles Council. This matter is discussed in full in another column. While in California, a number of telephone meetings were addressed also.

Upon the writer's return to the East, Sunday, March 13, he attended and spoke at the first Constitutional Convention of the Optical Workers, which has been changed from an organizing committee to a National Union. Tom Andert and associates are to be complimented.

CWA Votes Soon on CIO Affiliation

The affiliation program of the Communication Workers of America is moving ahead with the transmission by the union to its divisions of the official ballot. Ballots will be distributed to the CWA membership by each division which will also collect and tally the vote in its jurisdiction. Official tallies will be forwarded to CWA headquarters in Washington and the final results will be compiled on May 5.

To date, 22 CWA Divisions have endorsed the action of the Executive Board recommending CIO affiliation and have urged their membership to vote favorably in the referendum. Seventeen of these Divisions were listed in an earlier column. The new ones are: Indiana Plant and Accounting, Division, 1; Indiana Traffic Divison, 56; Lincoln, Nebraska Division, 31; Cincinnati Division, 46, and Washington Traffic Division, 50.

All CIO Regional Directors, staff people and TWOC Representatives in the areas in which CWA Divisions are located are cooperating with the CWA officers in seeing that the widest distribution is given to the CWA membership of all of the facts and advantages of CIO affiliation. Reports from these directors indicate a favorable reception in most places.

14 Veteran NLRB Men Are Fired

A GROUP of western Natl. Labor Relations Board trial examiners are preparing a legal fight against Civil Service "disqualification" orders which have resulted in notices of their dismissal at the end of June.

Fifteen of the NLRB's 41 trial examiners were found disqualified by a group of Bar Association lawyers acting as consultants to the Civil Service Commission. They judged trial examiners from a number of government agencies.

But their recommendations hit hardest at Labor Board trial examiners who have been with the agency since its Wagner Act days, before June, 1947.

Of 28 NLRB pre-Taft-Hartley trial examiners, 14 were ordered fired, and 14 were given an o.k. Of 13 NLRB trial examiners appointed since Taft-Hartley, only one was ordered dismissed.

AMONG those reportedly receiving disqualification orders were men of long legal experience with high reputations in the trial examining field. Among them were many of the men who have ruled favorably for unions in important NLRB cases, and who have over-ruled some of the worst of the anti-labor efforts of NLRB General Counsel Robert Denham.

This law provided a new and improved status for hearing examiners, making them independent of discharge by their own agency. But the law also provided for the examination of each examiner for fitness.

The Civil Service Commission set up the standards under the law by which these men were to be judged. A consulting group of six lawyers, touted as outstanding members of the legal profession, did the actual judging.

Observers noted:

1. The make-up of the consulting board which considered each examiner was quite conservative, including two former presidents of the American Bar Association.

2. The examination included interviews with associates of the examiner under scrutiny and with lawyers who had appeared before him, and what the Civil Service Commission called "a review of his personnel record and the quality of his work." The consultants also examined case records and reports he had written and gave him an oral interview.

3. The system taken as a whole disqualified, for instance, NLRB men who have for years handled labor cases. It may send to the NLRB in their place "qualified" examiners with experience only in agencies handling far different matters, such as the Interstate Commerce Commission.

UNITED AGAINST T-H: CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey (r.) in a broadcast March 12 urged quick passage of the Thomas-Lesinski Bill, which would repeal T-H and bring back the Wagner Act. He was joined in his appeal by (l. to r.) Pres. Harvey W. Brown of the Intl. Association of Machinists (independent), AFL Pres. William Green and Sen. Elbert Thomas (D., Utah), chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, one of the sponsors of the bill.

U. S. Labor Greets Swedish Union Officials

TWELVE Swedish union officials received a warm welcome from every branch of American labor when they visited Washington last week at the beginning of a month's tour of this country.

The group, brought to the U. S. under auspices of the Economic Cooperation Administration, will visit American industrial cities to see our production methods and to meet with union officials and members. They will travel to Pittsburgh, Chicago, Detroit and New York.

At a luncheon attended by officials of the CIO, AFL, railway brotherhoods, ECA and the Labor Dept., Axel Strand brought greetings from the million and a quarter members of the Swedish Federation of Trade Unions, which he heads. "We hope that when American labor comes to Europe, you will come united, so that we will know that all American labor is behind us," Strand said.

Present at the luncheon were CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood, AFL Pres. Green and others. Carey pointed out that CIO and AFL—as well as labor and management—"get along a lot better than you have been led to believe."

SWEDISH UNIONISTS: A group of Sewdish union leaders are touring this country under the auspices of ECA to study U. S. methods of production. Here are some of them at a reception in Washington, l. to r., Erik Ostrand, of the Metal Workers Union; Birger Ohqvist of the Papers Workers Union; Sture Lindblad of the Stockholm Longshoremen. Esther Peterson of the CIO Clothing Workers is at the right.

The delegation spent several days in Washington visiting union headquarters and conferring with officials of ECA and the Department of Labor.

L.A. Bodies Accept CIO Peace Plan

A FORMULA for bringing together two warring factions in the Los Angeles, Calif., CIO, has been concluded under the direction of CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, and an administrative committee has been appointed to direct the affairs of the CIO Council until its reorganization next month.

A nine-day visit by Haywood to the trouble spot brought the following agreement, signed by representatives of both the Council and the L. A. Committee for CIO Policy, which had charged the Council with refusal to follow CIO policy and interference with local unions:

- An administrative body, composed of Natl. CIO Rep. Richard Leonard and two assistants—Albert T. Lunceford, L. A. Committee secretary, and William L. Lawrence, Council president—was put in charge of both groups, beginning March 21.
- Officers of both groups were to have resigned, effective March 21.
- On April 23-24, a convention will be held, to which all CIO locals in the area may send delegates. At that time officers of the reorganized council will be selected by roll call vote, and the constitution will be subject to a complete overhauling.
- Between now and the convention, both groups will cease attacks on each other.

In accepting the agreement, the Council recognized for the first time the role of CIO Councils as an instrument of CIO policy, rather than as an autonomous unit, such as the international unions.

BOTH sides acknowledged that the "duty of officers of the Council is to support, implement and enforce the policies and program of the Natl. CIO, that the councils are instruments of Natl. CIO.

"Any officer who refuses to carry out Natl. CIO policy and who makes public utterance against CIO policy shall resign. Failing to resign, he shall be removed as per the Natl. CIO Constitution and Rules Governing Industrial Union Councils."

The dispute within the Council began about a year ago when the group voted to maintain a neutral position on the Marshall Plan and the third party.

THE L. A. Committee for CIO Policy was formed by the Lunceford group shortly thereafter, and today claims 80% of the CIO membership in the area.

Several months ago the Committee forwarded a petition to CIO Pres. Philip Murray, making 12 charges against the Council and urging revocation of its charter.

Haywood's entry in the situation followed receipt of the petition.

The new agreement, Haywood said, will make it possible for the L. A. Council to "be of great assistance to Natl. CIO. Any at- other purposes is outlawed and will be resisted."

CIO Councils Dir. John Brophy described the arrangement as a "complete meeting of the position of Natl. CIO and the Councils Dept." and said he welcomed it as a basis for "advancing the interests of all CIO in Southern California."

T-H REPEALER SENT TO FLOOR; KEEP YOUR EYE ON CONGRESS

Morgan: GOP Natl. Committee paid him to write T-H

Legislators Readying For T-H Debate

The halls of Congress are about to resound with debate on the Taft-Hartley Law. Committees of both houses have now reported out the Thomas-Lesinski Bill, which would wipe out T-H and put back a streamlined Wagner Act. The hearings have brought out mobs of unanswerable arguments against T-H, not the least of which came willingly from two of the men pictured on this page and unwillingly, obviously, from the third. For further details, turn to pages 3, 6 and 7 of The CIO News—and don't forget to let your Congressmen and Senators know that you wanted the end of T-H when you voted for the Fair Deal on Nov. 2.

Local Option Weakens Rent Control Bills

By GLORIA CAPLAN

A CONFERENCE committee of 12 House and Senate Banking Committee members last week began ironing out differences in the House and Senate versions of a rent control bill.

Working against a March 31 deadline, when the present rent control is scheduled to die, the conference began fashioning a single bill out of the two the day after the Senate passed its versions by a vote of 68 to 10.

House members are Reps. Brent Spence, Ky., Paul Brown, Ga., Wright Patman, Texas, Mike Monroney, Okla.—Democrats; and Jesse P. Wolcott, Mich., Ralph Gamble, N. Y., and John C. Kunkel, Pa.—Republicans.

A rent control measure as strong as that advocated by the CIO and Pres. Truman is now out of the picture, since both bills fall considerably below that mark.

MOST WEAKENING feature contained in both bills and assured a place in the final bill—is one which permits state or city governments to decontrol their areas, subject to the governor's approval. This provision in the Senate bill was inspired by a House amendment which permits States, counties and city governments to decontrol their areas by passage of a resolution.

As a concession to the House action, the Senate Banking Committee inserted a provision in its bill which permitted state legislatures—but not counties or cities—to decontrol. When the bill reached the Senate floor, this section was brought closer to the House version by an amendment sponsored by Sen. Fulbright (D. Ark.). The amendment, adopted by a vote of 45 to 35 after bitter protests from Senators Sparkman and Hubert Humphrey (D. Minn.), permits cities to lift controls, subject to gubernatorial approval.

Of this amendment Humphrey said: "In the years 1947 and 1948 the Property Owners Associations and the real estate lobbies really began to feel their strength. I say with all reverence, may God pity the city councils and may God pity the mayors of all cities if the Fulbright amendment shall be agreed to. Rent control will become the plaything of local politics. Effective rent control can be destroyed by this amendment."

CIO SPOKESMEN strenuously opposed three other actions by the Upper House:

- A provision permitting a 5% general increase in rents on Oct. 1, 1949, and another 5% increase on April 1, 1950. (This section was intended by the Senate Committee as an alternative to a House provision insuring a "fair return" to landlords, considered unworkable by administration supporters.) However, in no case is the rent increase to exceed 15% of the rent established on June 30, 1947. Therefore, tenants who have agreed to voluntary 15% increases since that date would not be subject to further increases.
- Extension of rent controls for only 12 months—instead of the two years asked by President Truman—with a three months' moratorium after that, during which landlords cannot evict tenants for refusal to pay higher rents.
- Defeat of a section imposing criminal penalties on wilful violators of the act.

On the credit side, however, CIO leaders pointed to a number of provisions in the Senate version, which were advocated by the CIO at its 1948 convention. These are:

- Elimination of the "comparability" test for rent increases in company housing. Using "comparability" as his guide, Federal Housing Expediter has raised rents in company houses as high as 300%.
- Strong eviction controls, similar to those in operation under OPA.
- Recontrol of trailer camps, motels, and motor courts.
- Right of the tenant to appeal any rules or regulations of the Housing Expediter.
- The addition of one person in each rent office to assist both tenants and landlords in protecting their rights under the law.

In agreeing to permit two general 5% increases, the Senate committee apparently felt that such increases would head off the large number of those currently being granted by the Housing Expediter. In its report it stated:

"In view of the provision for over-all rent increases, your committee hopes that during the next year the occasions on which the Housing Expediter shall be called on to grant hardship adjustments will become few in number."

1-29-49

Dear Mr Huber.

I am writing to you as one who should be interested in the "Fair Deal For All." as promised by President Truman.

For the last seven years I have rented a house here in Akron for $18.00 a month. it should rent for $35.00. The Federal Rent Office here has given me no relief in spite of higher costs for improvement. I am a widow & need a few dollars profit from this house. Can you help me?

Gratefully,
Anna Ward
135 Mayfield
Akron Ohio

Feb 16, 1949

Dear Mr. Huber.

The rent control office called me about your letter they received. I told them my property was in New Jersey & my sister looks after it. They didn't tell you about that & made you think I wasn't telling the true. They said if there was under rent control. Thank you very much.

Anna Ward.

LANDLORD METHODS: When Rep. Walter Huber (D. C.) received the "hardship" letter shown above (left) he asked the Akron rent director, Charles G. Mitchell, to investigate. Michell learned that the writer, who is totally deaf, is the housekeeper in the home of Dr. C. F. Wharton, head of the local Property Owners Association; that she owned no property in Akron and that she never requested assistance from the rent office. When the trick was publicized, a second letter signed by "Anna Ward," arrived, explaining that her property was in New Jersey. (The first letter says "here in Akron"). But an affidavit from Mrs. Ward's sister, Gladys Reed, states: " . . . . Anna denies that she ever wrote any letters to these gentlemen or that she knows who may have written . . . I know that it is not my sister Anna's handwriting nor her signature . . . To the best of my knowledge, my sister Anna Ward does not own any property . . . " Democratic Congressmen believe this is but one of thousands of make-believe "hardships" used in the real estate lobby's letter-writing campaign.

Senate Vote On Giving Cities Rent Control

Here is the roll call in the Senate on the crucial Fulbright amendment to permit cities, with the governor's approval, to decontrol rents in their areas. It passed by a vote of 45 (mostly Southern Democrats and Republicans) to 35. R indicates a vote against the weakening amendment; W indicates a vote for it; and O means not voting. Sen. Humphrey warned the amendment would make controls a political "plaything."

T-H Repealer Goes To Floor Of Congress

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE hearings are over. So now, Congress must at long last decide what to do about Taft-Hartleyism.

The people who spoke their minds against T-H in no uncertain terms Nov. 2 are now reminding their Representatives and Senators that they knew what they wanted Nov. 2 and that no propaganda drive by Fulton Lewis, Jr., by General Electric, by the "free press" will change their minds.

These were the key legislative occurrences on T-H last week:

1. The House Labor Sub-committee, of which Rep. Augustine B. Kelley (D., Pa.) is chairman, ended its hearings—CIO officers were the last witnesses—and then voted, 8 to 5, to recommend to the full committee approval of HR 2032, which would repeal T-H and reenact the Wagner Act with certain revisions.

For HR 2032: Reps. Kelley, Powell, Bailey, Perkins, Irving, Jacobs, Burke, Wier, all Democrats.

Against HR 2032: Reps. McConnell, Wint Smith, Nixon, Werdel, Velde. all Republicans.

2. The full Labor committee, of which Rep. John Lesinski (D., Mich.) is chairman, then voted approval of the bill, 13 to 10.

For HR 2032: Reps. Lesinski, Kelley, Powell, Kennedy, Bailey, Irving, Perkins, Howell, Sims, Jacobs, Burke, Steed, Wier, all Democrats.

Against HR 2032: Reps. Lucas, Democrat, and Reps. McConnell, Gwinn, Brehm, Smith, Kearns, Nixon, Morton, Werdel, Velde, all Republicans.

Present but not voting: Rep. Barden.

Absent: Rep. Wood.

3. The Senate Labor Committee, which had indorsed S249—identical with HR 2032, issued a report stating its reasons for the action. Said the committee, of which Sen. Elbert D. Thomas (D., Utah) is chairman:

"The past two years constitute an unfortunate chapter in the history of Federal labor legislation." (The past two years have been Taft-Hartley years.)

The CIO's case was presented by Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey: General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg; Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald, of the Steelworkers; T. A. Johnstone of the Auto Workers; Exec. Vice Pres. George Baldanzi, Textile; Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, Amalgamated Clothing; Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald, Electrical; Pres. Joseph Curran, Maritime; Pres. O. A. Knight, Oil; Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, Rubber; Pres. John Green, Shipbuilding.

Carey, Goldberg, McDonald, Buckmaster, Johnstone and Knight gave oral testimony. Since the committee's time had expired, the others entered their briefs into the record.

Several other CIO unions, which had not been scheduled for oral appearances, also had briefs entered into the record.

Chairman Kelley used the same procedure with both AFL and CIO. He asked the national bodies to nominate witnesses from unions where the act hit hardest at the most members.

PARLEY: Joseph Jarosz (standing), research specialist for the House Education & Labor Committee, answers a request from the Labor Subcommittee chairman, Rep. Augustine B. Kelley (D., Pa.), who is at the right. To the left is Rep. Cleveland Bailey (D. W. Va.), a member of the subcommittee. Jarosz is former president of Local 227, CIO Auto Workers, De Soto, Detroit, where he worked as an assembler on the line. He was on the UAW-CIO staff before coming to Washington. On the recommendation of the subcommittee, the Labor Committee reported out the T-H repeal bill which is supported by CIO.

CIO TESTIFIES: James B. Carey (right), secretary treasurer of the CIO, leads off CIO's witnesses at the House subcommittee hearings. With him is Arthur Goldberg, general counsel.

BEFORE CIO appeared, three witnesses gave perhaps the most sensational testimony of the 10-day hearings. They were:

Theodore Kheel, former director of the Division of Labor Relations of New York City and, during the war, an official of the Natl. War Labor Board, now a practicing attorney; Arthur Kornhauser, professor of psychology and research psychologist, Institute of Industrial Relations, Wayne University, Detroit, and Gerald D. Morgan, an attorney.

Kheel, who handled such touchy New York labor situations as the longshore, tugboat, teamster and transit difficulties—all of which were of the "emergency" type, had this to say of T-H:

"I have come to three definite conclusions:

"1. A 'cooling off period' will not contribute to the settlement of labor disputes. The use of injunctions serves as an irritant.

"2. Fixed procedures specifying time limits and other requirements for the various stages of collective bargaining will not help to settle.

"3. The most effective way of settling disputes is to concentrate all efforts to bringing about a settlement within the time limits set by the parties themselves.

"4. The use of citizens' committees can be of great help in bringing about settlements if they are composed of outstanding men whose stature and ability command the respect of the parties. These committees should have the power to make recommendations, but should not be required to make recommendations. That should be left to their judgment."

Kornhauser, noted as an expert on public opinion polls, said:

"I refer particularly to the circulated lists of questions by General Electric, by the Revere Copper & Brass Co. and by Dr. Claude Robinson, Opinion Research Institute (Look Magazine).

"It seems clear that any short list of 18 questions composed in language simple enough for at least many citizens to understand, cannot adequately reflect the actual complications and indirect implications and interrelations of the provisions in a law such as T-H.

"One of GE's questions reads:

"'Should labor law protect employes against unfair practices by unions and management.'

"Since we are all against unfairness, an affirmative answer is easy to give. But the problem arises over what are unfair practices, in what way are they to be prevented and by what specific procedures are they to be dealt with when they occur. These essential matters are completely sidestepped in the question.

"A few questions are open to criticism because of biased wording. From the Revere questionnaire:

"'Should the union shop, under which a person is forced to join a union a short time after his employment, be unlawful?'

"Americans are likely to react against anything a person is 'forced' to do—especially when, as here, no explanation or justification is offered as to who forces whom or why. The question would be a little nearer to the law and less open to charges of bias if it mentioned that a majority of employes have entered into an agreement with the employer and that under this agreement, employes are required to join the union.

"In my judgment, it is totally impossible to frame questions on the points in T-H in a way that will be simple enough to be understood and answered by the ordinary voter and that will be at the same time adequate in their reflection of the actual import of the law."

Morgan, a Washington attorney, claimed he had written the draft of the T-H law for former committee Chairman Hartley and the Majority members. He said his fee was not paid by the committee, but:

"Several months after the bill became law, through the good offices of Mr. Halleck (former Republican Majority Leader), I received compensation for my time from the Republican Natl. Committee."

Under questioning, he said his fee was $7,500.

Two days later, Sen. J. Howard McGrath (R. I.), chairman of the Democratic Natl. Committee, assailed the newspapers of America for failing to give prominence to Morgan's statement.

Most papers actually ignored the startling admission.

Fish Story

CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week received this letter from George C. Williams, president of the State Bank, Evanston, Ill.:

"I have just returned from a fishing trip at Key West with Frank Rathje, former president, American Bankers. He caught three whip rays. (He enclosed a snapshot.) The spots on the back of one ray are all C's, I's and O's. This is all very discouraging to us capitalists."

'Our Best'

Rep. Smith (R., Kan.) remarked that he had met CIO Oil Pres. O. A. Knight when the latter was touring Army camps during the war while Smith was in the Army.

"Yes, Mr. Smith," replied Knight. "At that time, you and I, each in his way, was doing his best for our country."

Last year, Knight and his union were sued for $31,000,000 under T-H during the California strike. The OWIU's war service was forgotten.

THAT MORGAN DEAL

We often refer to it merely as the T-H Act but perhaps we should call it the Taft-Hartley-Morgan-Reilly-Iserman measure.

And, somehow or other, we ought to work the initials "RNC" into its title.

No, we're not trying to talk in riddles. We're merely commenting on the solution of a riddle that's been troubling us for some time.

The story goes like this:

A Washington attorney named Gerald D. Morgan appeared before the House Labor Committee recently to give his views on a successor to T-H (or whatever you prefer to call it).

Under questioning he admitted he was retained at the request of Rep. Fred Hartley as a special counsel to help draft the Taft-Hartley Act.

He was aided in this project by two "experts" in the field of management-labor relations—Gerald Reilly, now counsel for General Electric, General Motors and the Printing Industry of America, and Theodore Iserman, counsel for Chrysler Corp.

Furthermore, Mr. Morgan revealed, his $7500 fee was paid by the Republican National Committee. (So we add the initials RNC.)

Far be it from us to question the right of a House committee to employ counsel when writing difficult legislation.

But there's something very, very smelly about the Morgan Deal, because of the manner in which he was paid.

However, the deal has its good points. It enables the public to get a better idea of the birth of T-H.

Among its creators in the House were a Republican congressman, a lawyer paid by the Republican National Committee and two industry lawyers.

And some people still have the nerve to refer to T-H—or the Taft-Hartley-RNC-Morgan-Reilly-Iserman Act—as a "bill of rights for the working man!" ★ ★ ★

CONGRATULATIONS, SENATOR GRAHAM

A little man from North Carolina, who has done many big things during his 62 years, has taken on a new public assignment—the job of serving his state (and the nation) in the U. S. Senate.

He is Dr. Frank P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina, appointed by Gov. Kerr Scott to fill the unexpired term of the late Senator J. Melville Broughton.

"Dr. Frank," as he is affectionally called by his students and former students, is well known for his many public services—with the National War Labor Board, the Consumers Board of the National Recovery Administration, the Good Officers Committee of the United Nations, the Cabinet Committee on Economic Security, the Oak Ridge Institute of Nuclear Studies and other agencies.

People in the labor movement probably know him best for his work with NWLB and his attempts to strengthen civil rights. In recognition of the latter he was given the Sidney Hillman Foundation Award early this year.

When presenting the award, Pres. Jacob Potofsky, of the CIO Clothing Workers, said of Dr. Graham:

"He has never asked, 'Is it safe?' His only concern has been, 'Is it right?' "

We want to congratulate Senator Graham on his new assignment and commend Gov. Scott for appointing such an outstanding citizen.

Ridicule Won't Do The Job

But Strong Trade Union Movement In South Could Unseat The Dixiecrats

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THOSE WHO call themselves liberals or progressives seem to get a lot of personal enjoyment out of heaping ridicule upon the Dixiecrats.

Sometimes they become adamant in their denunciation of the "states righters." Often they work themselves into a fine lather over the fight Southern politicians make against civil "rights" legislation.

We on the CIO News have done our share of ridiculing and denouncing. We get hot under the collar, too when the boys from below the Mason-Dixon line stage one of their "rights" filibusters.

The Dixiecrats, however, continue to return to Congress and keep on following the same old line.

Obviously more than heated words is needed to change the situation.

ONE OF the CIO's legislative representatives put his finger squarely on the need the other day when he returned from a session on Capitol Hill.

"After witnessing the Senate filibuster and seeing what the House did to rent control I suddenly—for the first time—realized the full importance of the CIO's Southern organizing campaign," he said.

This representative, whose home is in the North, added, "I now understand what CIO leaders meant when they said that the entire nation will be greatly affected by the success of our organizational work down in Dixie."

His changed viewpoint resulted from having seen Southern Democrats and Republicans team up to defeat the Administration's attempt to curb filibustering.

THE TRUTH of the matter is that the Dixiecrats, for the most part, represent the viewpoints of a majority of the people who elect them.

Many of the unorganized workers of the South don't take the trouble to vote. Others are limited in their voting by the poll tax and racial discrimination.

Consequently, a minority of Dixie's citizens run things politically—and a majority of this limited group follows the Dixiecrat line.

The group in the South which is making the strongest attempt to alter this situation is the CIO—and the CIO has been ineffective in many parts of the region because of its lack of members.

In some sections, where the CIO is well organized, the Dixiecrat line has been weakened or broken.

But no major changes in the Southern political line-up can be expected until Dixie is more strongly organized.

LET'S SPELL this thing out in simple A-B-C terms that place the emphasis where it belongs.

The CIO is in politics to stay—because it has to be. Its political arm—PAC—has proven its effectiveness where there are strong concentrations of CIO members.

There are CIO strongholds in the South but not enough of them as yet to change the political complexion of the region as a whole.

CIO strongholds are built the hard way — by the day-by-day grind of union organizing.

Thus the men and women who are handbilling plants and signing up new members today are making a real contribution to the political scene of tomorrow.

THE CIO is not conducting an organizing campaign in the South merely to provide new muscle for its political arm. Far from it.

The main objective is to set up strong unions which can bring about improvements in wages and working conditions.

Strong unionism of the CIO type, however, produces worthwhile by-products.

One of these is a desire to wipe out discrimination, upon which many of the Southern politicians thrive.

Another is the creation of political awareness—the first step toward effective political action.

Ridicule and condemnation may have their place in our scheme of things, but what we need in the South is the very thing the CIO Organizing Committee is building—union membership.

More Druggists Favor Health Plan

"THE MORE the retail druggist knows about the Truman proposal for national health insurance, the more likely he is to favor it," says the March issue of the "American Druggist."

Reporting on the result of a post card poll taken among the nation's druggists, the magazine found that 16.8% of the druggists favor the Truman Health Plan today, in contrast to 8.2% who in 1946 approved the Wagner-Murray-Dingell Bill — essentially the same program.

The American Druggist reports that in metropolitan areas of over 500,000 people, the percentage skyrocketed to almost 40%. "In eastern large cities, 50% of the druggists favor the plan," it states.

The article, written by Bernard Zerbe, managing editor of the monthly, has the mystifying head, "A Danger Signal," for Zerbe goes on to say:

"In December, 9.4% of all druggists favored the plan, but when they knew how it would work, 13.3% favored it. In the current tabulation, when all druggists know how it will work, 16.8% favor it."

The retail druggist should know all he can about the health plan, says Zerbe, "for 15 million Americans visit drug stores every day. If their questions go unanswered, pharmacy will be remiss in its responsibilities."

The magazine received 2,501 return post cards in the poll, representing a 4.8% cross-section of the druggists throughout the country.

Assistant Secretary Of State Quotes Carey

"The only safeguard against the exploitation of labor must always be the ability of labor to protect itself against either management or bureaucracy."

That's what Asst. Secretary of State George V. Allen, told foreign students attending the New York Herald-Tribune High School Forum.

"Labor has this power in the U. S. through our great, free trade unions which are constantly expanding their membership," Allen declared.

"Jim Carey of the CIO told me yesterday that the medicine men of Moscow picture labor in the U. S. as a helpless body, ground under the heels of Wall St. I hope you have had an opportunity to see that this also is a wholly imaginary picture of the western world."

I'll Quit, She Said, If It Happens Again

AS A RULE she was a pleasant, talkative person—but on this particular night she was silent and moody.

She didn't give her husband—a union member—the customary greeting as she alighted from the bus on her way home from work.

Together — silently — they entered their house, and then he saw her brush tears from her eyes.

She had behaved in this manner only once or twice before. Obviously something was wrong, but he was a bit skeptical about asking questions.

PERHAPS, HE told himself, she was just too tired to be pleasant and chatty.

Maybe their financial difficulties were weighing too heavily on her. After all, she didn't make much as a receptionist at a large hospital, and he had been out of work nearly a year because of illness.

Thoughts like that ran through his mind for a few minutes, and then he decided to find out what was troubling her.

"Oh, it was just routine," she said, "but tonight it was a lot worse than usual."

He asked her to explain—and she told the following story.

AN ELDERLY man approached her desk at the hospital and asked to be admitted as a patient.

She began asking him the usual questions about his name, age, address, etc.

Then she came to what she termed the $64 question, "Can you pay a week's room rent in advance?"

"No, lady," he replied. "I have been ill for three years and all of my money is gone."

It was obvious from his appearance that he was broke and in need of help.

AFTER A slight hesitation the elderly man continued with his story—a story similar to those the receptionist had heard before.

"I had heard that this hospital was experimenting with cancer, and Walter Winchell said that the Damon Runyan Foundation had given over $100,000 to this institution," the man said.

"I thought, perhaps, that you might take care of me.

"I have been to 'charity' institutions and one of them removed a large portion of my tongue in an effort to cure me.

"But, you see, I'm trying to get the best, but it looks hopeless. This is my last resort and if you can't help me I don't know what will eventually happen to me.

"I used to be young—and I worked hard and saved my money, but this malady struck me and now all my funds are gone.

"Goodbye, lady."

THE RECEPTIONIST, aware of the fact that the man's jaw had been nearly eaten away by cancer and that he obviously was in bad shape, told him to wait a minute.

She hurried to the manager's office and explained the situation to him. "We don't take charity patients," he told her.

That ended the story, as far as the receptionist was concerned, but, tearfully, she added to her husband:

"This health insurance that the doctors call 'socialized medicine' might work a hardship on the doctors, but it would take care of people like that old man.

"I don't know what happened to him, but I know what happened to my nerves—and if it happens again I'll be looking for a new job!"

Improved DP Bill Is Seen Facing Dixiegop Opposition

REP. FRANCIS E. WALTER, chairman of the House Sub-Committee on Immigration, has indicated to a CIO delegation from his district in Pennsylvania's Easton-Bethlehem area that improvements in the Displaced Persons bill, as recommended by the CIO and Pres. Truman, will have tough sledding in his sub-committee.

The delegation—composed of John D. Shannon, Clothing Workers, area PAC director; Eddie de LaSalle, Steelworkers; Pat Ninno, Clothing, and Joseph Rader, Textile—came to Washington to confer with Rep. Walter on the DP bill now under the sub-committee's scrutiny.

Dispute on the Displaced Persons bill in Congressional cloakrooms has centered around three main issues:

1. The number to be admitted.
2. Admission by nationality and religion.
3. "Mortgaging" of quotas.

("Mortgaging" is a device, included in the DP Act passed by the 80th Congress, by which each nation must "pay back" in future years the immigration quotas taken up by Displaced Persons. To do this, up to 50% of regular annual quota allotted a country by our immigration laws is withheld for a period of years until the number of that nation's DP's admitted here is "paid for.")

Rep. Walter, himself sponsor of a bill which incorporates the measures advocated by the CIO, told the delegation he will push in committee for admitting 400,000 DPs, the number originally requested by Pres. Truman two years ago.

Some members of the committee are now attempting to reduce this number to 280,000. They argue that the figure originally requested by the administration constituted 40% of the estimated million DPs then in the camps. Since that time, a number have been repatriated in other countries—over 80,000 in England, 43,000 in Canada, and many in the new Jewish state of Israel.

Still remaining in the camps are about 700,000. Congressmen who would reduce to a minimum the number of DPs to be admitted here say that U. S. should open its doors to only 40% of those DPs still remaining—280,000, in other words.

Administration supporters and spokesmen for the Citizens Committee on Displaced Persons, of which CIO Pres. Murray is an officer, reply that the 400,000 for which they ask would constitute less than half the unused regular immigration quotas of the war period. About 900,000 were unused.

Asked about his stand on "mortgaging" future quotas, Rep. Walter asserted that while he is personally opposed to such a concept, he would suggest a compromise in committee. Instead of mortgaging up to 50% of the regular quotas, as the law now provides, he said he would propose mortgaging 5% of a nation's quota annually for 10 years.

(The CIO convention resolution urged the removal of "provisions of the Act which require future immigration quotas of regular immigrants to be reduced by up to 50% to pay back for DPs admitted under the Act.")

Elimination of the present law's selection of DPs on the basis of religion and nationality also seemed in for rough treatment. The Sub-Committee chairman said he would continue to oppose, as he has in the past, such discriminatory features, but indicated that this method of selection has strong support within the committee.

CIO spokesmen have described this section of the law as unworkable, "anti-semitic," "anti-Catholic" and one of the reasons why only 7,000 DPs have so far entered the country in the nine months since the 1948 law was hurriedly enacted. An estimated 75,000 DPs should have already entered under the law, since it permits entry of 100,000 in the first year, CCDP spokesmen say.

Truman Wants More DPs Here

Democratic Rep. Francis E. Walter, chairman of the House Sub-Committee on Immigration, told the CIO News last week that Pres. Truman, with whom he had just conferred, said he felt strongly that a "determined effort" would have to be made to improve the Displaced Persons Act.

The President, Walter said, expressed himself strongly in favor of admitting 400,000 DPs, and eliminating the present law's "mortgaging" provision.

(See accompanying story for explanation of this provision.)

Atomic Workers Order CIO News

More and more members of the CIO Chemical Workers are subscribing for the CIO News.

The "atomic workers" local of the union at Oak Ridge, Tenn., recently sent in an order for 1694 copies of the paper each week.

Herbert R. Locke, financial secretary of Local 138 in Brooklyn, N. Y., has been putting on a one-man campaign to get members of his union to subscribe to the CIO News as part of an educational program.

CIO Witnesses Show Unfair

MARTIME: Joseph Curran (right), president of Maritime Union, checks with NMU General Counsel Herman Cooper, before being called to the stand in the T-H hearings. Curran testified from bitter experience on what T-H has done to NMU, particularly on the hiring hall.

SONS: Members of Congressmen's families often attend Congressional sessions. Here, two sons of Rep. Augustine B. Kelley (D., Pa.), chairman of the House Labor Sub-committee, read CIO testimony during the hearings. They are Regis, a law student, and Hilary, a mining engineer.

BRIEFS OFFERED by CIO and its affiliates made a big impression on the Labor Subcommittee. Here's why:

CIO: The organization's general case was presented by Secy.-Treas. Carey, who was accompanied by General Counsel Goldberg. The latter turned in a 126-page brief giving detailed information on the workings of T-H.

Carey said: "Today, the second-guessers and the Monday morning quarterbacks are busy manufacturing tortured reasons to explain that the act had nothing to do with the elections.

"In the 20 months the law has been on be books, the workers have learned what it means to have free collective bargaining destroyed by arbitrary restrictions and regulations. They profoundly resent a law which prevents them from agreeing with their employers on such matters as pensions, welfare funds, checkoffs and union security."

Goldberg: "Our opposition to T-H is not based on 'slogans and generalities', as sponsors of the act insist, but on a detailed picture of the vicious effects of this law which will refute the glib claims that nothing specific in the act can be condemned.

"The press and highly-paid lobbyists are seeking by every means to give the impression that T-H is not bad; that labor does not really want it changed; that the Thomas-Lesinski Bill will create national emergencies.

"The press devoted little or no time to testimony before the committee of top experts in the field of labor relations who urged repeal of T-H.

Goldberg was referring to William H. Davis, former chairman of the Nat'l. War Labor Board; William Leiserson, former chairman of the Nat'l. Mediation Board, and Nathan Feinsinger, former member of the NWLB.

"This law has not served the needs of industrial peace. It has turned back the clock on progress in the field of industrial relation."

Clothing: Amalgamated's brief, by Jacob S. Potofsky, the union president, remarked:

"T-H interfered with free collective bargaining by imposing technical and rigid restriction upon bargaining with respect to health and welfare funds and pensions.

"Let us conclusively establish that our representative form of government accurately reflects the desires of the people and translates their desires, without temporizing, into action."

Auto: brief offered by T. A. Johnstone, assistant director, General Motors Dept.:

"The Congress, in enacting T-H, mistook the symptoms of labor unrest for causes of that unrest

"The causes were (1) attempts of employers to hold down wages while prices and profits before and after taxes were rising, and (2) the action of Congress itself in prematurely destroying price controls, priorities and allocations of scarce necessary commodities such as building materials, steel and other items.

"Congress misread the wage disputes and the costly strikes of 1945-6—costly in terms of wages and delayed production but less so in profits. Sitting in judgment, Congress overlooked the cause, which was an inflation set loose in part by its own acts, and attempted to pin the blame on labor, to punish labor with T-H. In the words of Sen. Morse, the 80th Congress missed the apple and hit the boy.

"There are some people of good will, not too well-informed about labor-management relations, who believe that T-H is good in spots. Like the addled egg served the visiting preacher which he said was good "in spots," T-H is bad in so many spots that for all practical purposes it is bad all over.

"Were T-H to remain in force, and were the 81st Congress to sit idly by while our economy continues another vicious cycle of a short boom and a long bust with resulting large-scale chronic mass unemployment, the full evil of the act would come into play."

Electrical: brief submitted by UE Pres. Fitzgerald:

"The real T-H issue between the corporations and the people is that the corporations enjoy an anti-labor law and want to keep it and the people suffer under T-H and want to get rid of it.

"Many employers refuse to arbitrate arbitrable grievances, claiming that employes cannot go on strike in view of Section 8(d) of the act.

"The OWIU was sued for over $31,000,000 for daring to call a strike on the Big Six (the California oil strike). Fantastic injunctions and damage suits took on a typical California razzle-dazzle.

"In addition to naming all union officers, they named thousands of 'John Does.' One suit named 'Does 1 to 2000' inclusive, the Does being unidentified union members.

"Such citations were printed en masse and passed out like handbills on picket lines by process-servers. Cameramen stood by to take pictures of the pickets as the citations were thrust into their hands, thus establishing identity and proof of service. Particularly bizarre in Hollywoodism was the naming of 'Doe Associations 1 to 20,' to include any unions which might be assisting OWIU."

Knight said the damage suits hal all been dismissed, but that the fight against them had been extremely expensive.

Rubber: L. S. Buckmaster, the union's president, asserted:

"T.-H is a one-sided law, dishonest in its motives and obviously of harm to the public good.

"Only by adopting HR 2032 can justice and equality be restored to the field of labor relations.

"This should be done quickly."

Ship: John Green, president of IUMSWA, told the subcommittee:

"There is no doubt that the demands which shipyard management made upon the union and which led directly to the shipyard strike of 1947 were based upon prescience of the passage of T-H.

"The passage in the midst of the strike prolonged it for many months."

Steel: David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer, spoke for nearly 1,000,000 members:

There are fundamentally different philosophies between the Wagner Act and T-H. I think we in America have chosen. We have chosen the fundamental philosophy of Wagner. The choice is plainly reflected in the recent election.

"We have found in plant after plant that T-H has interfered with free collective bargaining. We have found that even among employers of good will, the act has created serious obstacles to harmony and to mutual agreement on important matters in the collective bargaining field."

Textile: George Baldanzi, executive vice president of TWUA, declared:

"Our industry is concentrated in New England, in the Middle Atlantic States, and throughout the South in small towns or mill villages, where the mill dominates the lives of all who work in it and live within its shadow.

"If it is a mill village, the employer owns the house the worker and his family live in; the school his children go to; the store at which his wife shops. In addition to this direct ownership, the mill owner usually dominates the local church, press and radio.

"At the Frank Ix plant, Charlottesville, Va., the union organizer was constantly followed by the personnel manager, the plant superintendent and groups of foremen when he visited workers' homes. The company even tried to rent a room overlooking his residence.

"Workers found talking to the union organizer were harassed in the plant; one was beaten for wearing a union button; another was followed to the rest room to prevent him from talking about the union.

"The company sent stool pigeons to union meetings and boasted openly of its gestapo's efficiency. Foremen usually informed pro-union workers that one of the watchmen was a 'dead shot with the revolver.'

"The company's bulletin board carried brazenly anti-racial and anti-religious propaganda. Workers who had won company awards for efficiency were accused of doing bad work when suspected of union sympathy.

"An elderly worker who had been called to task told a foreman:

"I had three sons who went over to Germany to fight for my right to think as I please. One of my boys died over there."

The foreman replied:

"'It would have been better if they had all died there than to have come back and joined the CIO.'

"The situation is typical of our experience generally throughout the South."

TEXTILE: George Baldanzi (right), executive vice president of the Textile Workers, chats with Alex Barkan, the union's PAC dircetor, on "CIO Day." Baldanzi spoke particularly of southern experiences.

ELECTRICAL: Albert J. Fitzgerald, president of the Electrical Workers, sits with James Matles, UE's director of organization. They hit hard at pro-T-H propaganda of industry.

Southern School Grows With Workers' Needs

IDEAS ARE often born in many ways. Sometimes a shock will start one going.

Several years ago a local of the CIO International Woodworkers was holding its regular meeting in a North Carolina town. During the course of the meeting, as usually happens at such affairs, the secretary of the local passed out some mimeographed material for consideration of the 40 or more members present.

MISS JONES

A visitor sitting in on the meeting noted curiously that as soon as the material was handed to them, all but two of the members folded their copies carefully and put them in their pockets without even glancing at them.

The visitor, who happened to be Miss Brownie Lee Jones, director of the Southern School for Workers, with headquarters in Richmond, Va., was puzzled by this action. Weren't the members interested in the material their union gave them? Did they think from past experience that it would be deadly dull?

Startling Answer

As a workers' education specialist concerned about such matters she wondered what was wrong, so after the meeting she asked the local's president about it. The answer startled her.

Only two of the union members present could read. The rest always carried their copies home to have them read aloud by somebody who had schooling.

That's how Brownie Lee Jones' idea of running literacy classes for workers as part of her school's activities, was born.

She reflected that people who can't read, can't vote. Upon further inquiry she found that there were many other union members similarly handicapped.

Brownie Lee, who is small, bright-eyed and full of energy, wasted no time after this was confirmed. She started organizing literacy classes. At first she ran into a snag. People don't like to admit that they can't read. They were ashamed.

But Brownie Lee, who has tact and patience as well as energy, set about breaking the ice. Attendance was pretty small at the first class, and then it began to grow as those who had come to the initial meeting started bringing their friends.

No Regular Classrooms

The Southern School for Workers has no regular classrooms. Meetings are held in a local union hall, in the backyard of a home, or some place convenient for the worker students. A blackboard may be a roughly painted black square on the side of a chicken house.

Polly Hayden, one of the school's staff members, says it's "truly amazing" how fast the students progress in the literacy classes as they learn to write simple words and understand their meaning. "Self consciousness disappears after the first few classes, and is replaced by an intense desire to learn," she says.

Literacy classes are only a small part of the school's activities. Other courses include elementary economics, practical English and public speaking, Parliamentary law, health education and dramatics.

Working with co-operating unions in the South, and with the Natl. CIO Education Dept., the school helps set up labor institutes, conferences, political action activities and other special educational programs.

One of its projects of particular interest is a School for Government. For the past three winters, the school has brought a group of southern workers to Washington for a week's study and observation of our national government at work.

The third year's group, comprising union workers from Virginia, visited the nation's capital several weeks ago. They attended sessions of Congress and hearings on the Taft-Hartley law; talked with Senators and Representatives, and visited National CIO headquarters and various government agencies.

Enthusiastic Boosters

William W. Weiss, publicity director for the CIO Organizing Committee in North Carolina, reports that the school has many enthusiastic boosters among CIO union officials in the south. William Smith, CIO director in North Carolina, and Boyd Peyton, director of the Textile Workers Union in Virginia, are two who have high praise for Brownie Lee Jones and her staff.

Weiss says that Smith attributes much of the recent success of a long strike at the Green Bros. Lumber Co., in Elizabethtown, N. C., to the classes and strike relief work done by Carla Meyerson, one of the school's field workers, who assisted the union there for several months.

Peyton has found the work of the school most helpful in supplementing the activities of TWUA organizers in Virginia.

The CIO Paperworkers, Woodworkers and other CIO unions in Virginia have also availed themselves of the educational advantages offered by the school, from its headquarters in Richmond. Pres. Charles Weber of the Virginia State CIO Council, which has 80 affiliated locals with a membership of 40,000, says that the council has received 100% cooperation from Brownie Lee Jones and her staff whenever it has asked for assistance.

Pres. Frank P. Graham of the University of North Carolina, who is a member of the school's advisory committee, has this to say about the school.

"The increasing interest in the Southern School for Workers is one of the most important signs that the New South is beginning to be aware of and to respond to the needs of its citizens. I have watched the growth of this school for 15 years, and have seen its usefulness expand as the necessity has grown for educating a growing army of southern industrial workers."

LEADERSHIP TRAINING: Ben Segal, Textile Workers education director for the upper South, showing how to swear in officers at a mock union meeting. This was one of the workshop courses held at a school run last summer at New Windsor, Md., by the National CIO Educational Dept. with the aid of the Southern School for Workers.

Teaching Workers For 22 Years

The Southern School for Workers, now 22 years old, is the outgrowth of the Southern Summer School, which held its first session at Sweet Briar College in Virginia in the summer of 1927.

In the early years, the SSS held resident six week's courses for industrial women workers on the campus of various schools and colleges in the South, and did limited extension work during the winter.

Later the school opened its course to both men and women, changed its name, and instead of holding regular resident summer schools, modified its program to emphasize year-round work with local union groups. The school also cooperates closely with the National CIO Education Dept.

RE-ELECTED

James J. (Scotty) Mitchell has been re-elected General Secretary-Treasurer of the CIO Shoe Workers for his seventh consecutive term. He was unopposed in a general election of the union March 15. Mitchell is also acting president of the Shoe Workers.

A successor to the late Pres. Rocco Franceschini will be appointed by the executive board in May.

Donner Resigns From Legal Staff

Frank Donner has resigned as assistant general counsel of the CIO and of the United Steelworkers, in order to enter private labor law practice in New York City.

Donner came to the CIO more than four years ago, after serving five years with the National Labor Relations Board as a principal enforcement attorney. A graduate of Columbia University Law School, Donner engaged in law practice in New York before joining the NLRB at its Washington headquarters.

A recognized expert on the Wagner and Taft-Hartley Acts, Donner helped write many of CIO's most important legal briefs on cases under these two laws.

Donner finishes his work at the CIO on April 1. No successor has yet been selected, according to Arthur J. Goldberg, general counsel.

Laski To Speak Here

Harold J. Laski will deliver a series of ten lectures in various parts of the country on behalf of the Sidney Hillman Foundation, set up by the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers in honor of the union's late president.

BACK ON JOB: This latest picture of CIO Pres. Murray was taken on his return to his Pittsburgh home. Murray entered Mercy Hospital, Pittsburgh, Jan. 15 for a rest and a check-up, underwent an appendectomy Feb. 7, and went to Atlantic City later to recuperate. He returned to Pittsburgh March 18.

$15,000 Is Won For Ga. Workers

An arbitration award will cost the Celanese Corp. of America's plant in Rome, Ga., a minimum of $15,000, according to J. D. Pedigo, manager of the Textile Workers' Northwest Georgia Joint Board.

Pedigo said that an arbitration board has ruled that persons who had not been returned to their positions after a strike was won several weeks ago, must be paid.

The case came to arbitration after TWUA learned that the company was holding a number of non-strikers on its payrolls at the expense of the men and women who had been on strike for 17 weeks to bring to Georgia Textile workers the same benefits granted by the company in its Cumberland, Md., plant, Pedigo said.

Dir. Van A. Bittner of CIO's Southern Organizing Campaign, said: "In their strike these Rome Textile workers served every Southern man and woman who makes his living in the mills and went a long way towards eliminating the north-south pay differential which management would like very much to increase."

Good Indonesian Relations Is Key To Dutch Recovery

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE LAND of the tulip, the windmill and the dyke took a terrible pasting during the last war.

Bombs did great damage to her famous docks at Amsterdam and Rotterdam during the long conflict. They completely destroyed some 85,000 of her homes and damaged about 450,000 others.

The Dutch sabotaged much of their own production machinery to keep the Nazis from using it.

When the Germans finally began their withdrawal from the Netherlands they damaged or destroyed additional dock and industrial production facilities.

Many Dutchmen were on the verge of starvation when V-E Day arrived, but they dug in soon for another battle—a battle for economic recovery.

They have made considerable progress despite the touchy and complicated Indonesian situation —thanks to their own ability to plan and work hard and to financial aid from the U. S.

THE Netherlands, which depends heavily on trade, lost about half her shipping tonnage during the war.

She also lost a large portion of her trained work force.

With the odds against making much progress immediately, the Dutch launched a recovery program of their own soon after liberation from the Nazis.

Then, as many had foreseen, the nation ran out of U. S. dollars, which were badly needed.

The Economic Cooperation Administration then stepped into the picture with the kind of currency the Dutch needed most.

"If the ECA hadn't provided aid when it did the gains the Dutch already had made would have been lost and there would have been a sharp decline in the economy of the country," said Dr. A. C. Valentine, head of the ECA mission at The Hague.

Complicating an already complicated situation was the outbreak of trouble in Indonesia—chief supplier of raw materials for Dutch industry — which prompted Netherlands officials to order military action and prompted the ECA to cut off aid to Indonesia.

Unless the Dutch can establish good relations with the Indonesians they will have an extremely difficult recovery problem — regardless of help from the U.S.

Nothing To Say

The only trade unionist in Holland who refused to discuss economic conditions with three American union editors (including the writer) was a Communist building construction worker. When told the editors were interested in the Marshall Plan, he turned his back on them and walked away.

Job Training

The Dutch government has established 36 training centers at which workers are receiving training for what are considered "essential" jobs.

THERE ARE about 900,000 trade unionists in Holland, which has a population of 9,800,000.

The largest group—about 360,000—is affiliated with the Netherlands Federation of Trade Unions. The second largest—the Catholic union group—has about 260,000 members. The Protestant unions have a membership of about 160,000.

These three groups are strong supporters of the Marshall Plan and backers of their own country's recovery program.

The Communists affiliated with a fourth union group—estimated to number 100,000 or less—oppose ERP, as do Reds throughout Europe. Their strength and influence are on the decrease, according to leaders of non-Communist unions and government officials.

Union members with whom I talked in industrial plants, on the docks and on construction projects have a fairly wide knowledge and understanding of the Marshall Plan.

Most of them said they believed they would be eating considerably less food and that there would be more unemployment in the Netherlands had aid from the U. S. not been provided.

Several top union officials estimated the standard of living of their members would be 25% lower than it is today had there been no Marshall Plan.

The average worker now gets about 1775 calories daily, and the Dutch hope to increase this to 2850 by 1952.

The present diet is generally considered as being adequate in calories but is too starchy and poorly balanced. There is an acute shortage of meat.

Housing provides the Dutch with a major problem. In many parts of the nation two to three families are now living in the space occupied by one family before the war. Because of a shortage of materials and skilled workmen there is expected to be little improvement in the housing situation during the next three years.

Despite these and other problems, over-all production in Holland is now about 18% higher than it was just before the beginning of World War II.

Dutch leaders said their job is not one of merely duplicating their pre-war economy. They must make many changes in their production set-up so as to be able to take the best advantage of conditions as they exist today and as they are likely to exist in the future, they say.

MANAGEMENT-labor relations in The Netherlands are regarded as being extremely good at the present time.

Union leaders reported there was "extremely good cooperation" between Dutch government officials, the trade unions and the American ECA representatives stationed at The Hague.

All of the bona fide unions have representatives on the ECA Trade Union Advisory Committee, and this committee is consulted by Dutch officials before recovery program decisions are made.

The union movement was almost completely destroyed during the war, but now it is much stronger than it was before the conflict began.

In the late 1930's about 15% of Dutch workmen were under union contracts. Today about 85% of them are under contract or governmental rules which establish pay and working conditions similar to those provided by contract.

Day-shift workers put in about 48 hours a week. Night-shift workers average about 42 hours.

Highly skilled workers receive enough pay to cover living expenses and save a little. The pay of average workmen provides the bare necessities of life.

THE DUTCH have an extremely difficult problem on their hands and most of them seem to realize it.

The population of The Netherlands is increasing rapidly, and the death rate is decreasing.

Although agricultural production is being increased, Holland must import about one-third of its food and feed.

Markets in which the Dutch sold much material before the war are no longer able to buy from them.

Indonesia, upon which the Dutch must depend for a major portion of their industrial raw material, is a real trouble spot.

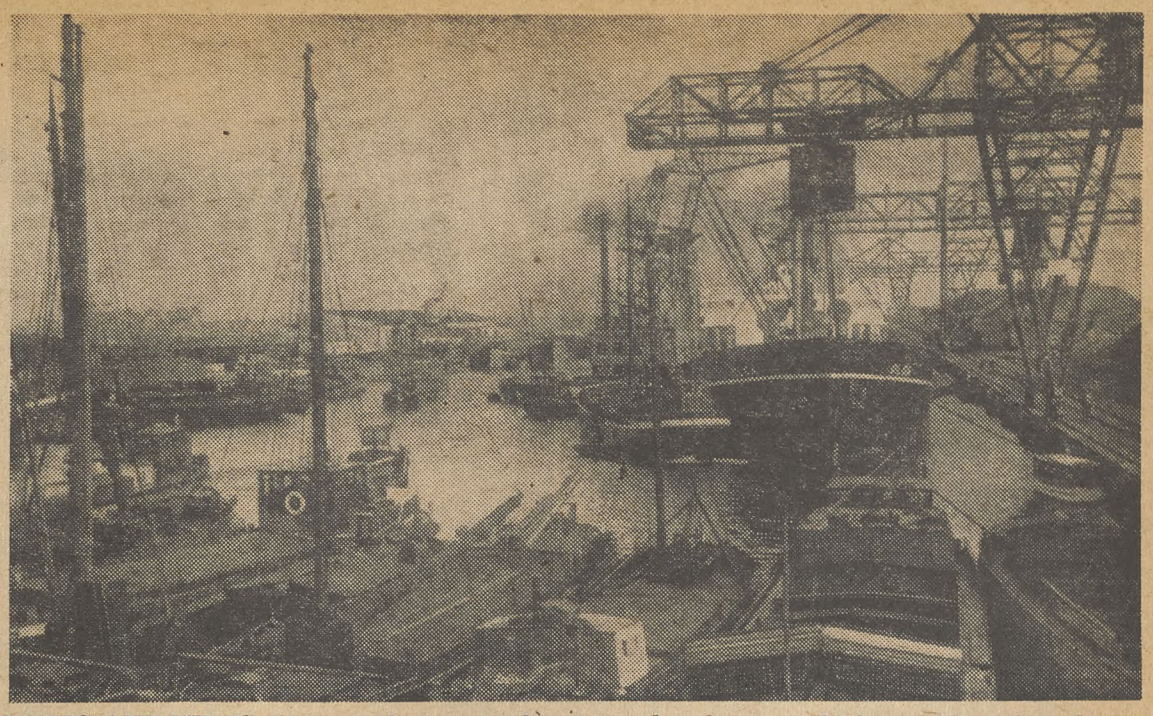
Nevertheless, The Netherlands has dug in for another war— a war against poverty—and obviously is trying to take advantage of every opportunity to get back on her feet.

One Peril

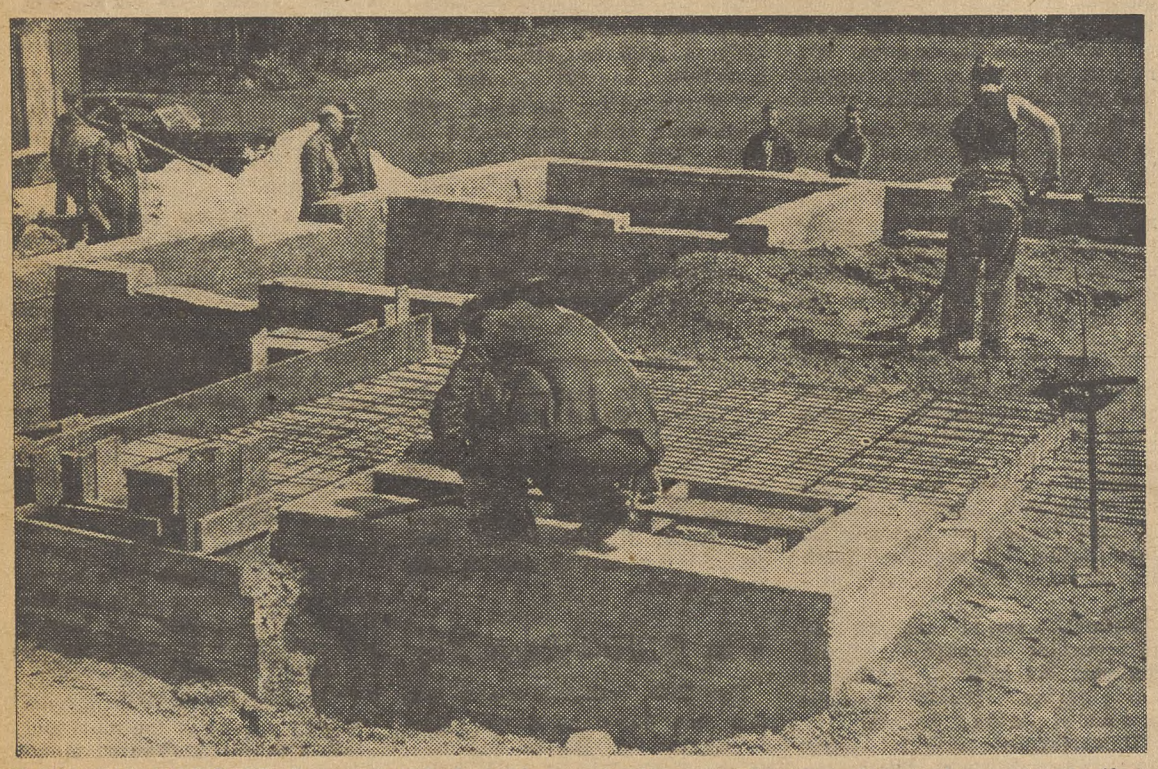
Non-Communist trade unionists in Holland report the one thing which could give the Reds a real foothold in their country would be a serious depression.

Controls May Go

Dutch government leaders predict that a number of strict controls under which the country has been operating since the end of the war will be removed quickly if economic conditions improve.



BOMBS AND MINES did great damage to the docking facilities of Holland, a country which depends heavily on shipping. Much of the damage has been repaired, and there is a heavy flow of traffic in and out of the excellent Dutch harbors.



LACK OF HOUSING has created a major problem in Holland. There is an acute shortage of building material and skilled building craftsmen. The men shown above are erecting a residence that will be occupied by a coal miner and his family.

CIO Host To British Unionists

A GROUP OF leading British union officials were scheduled to be guests of CIO at a Washington luncheon March 27, with the talk ranging over problems both of Marshall Plan reconstruction and the formation of a new international labor federation.

Included among the visitors are Vincent Tewson, secretary of the British Trades Union Congress; Arthur Deakin, transport union secretary and former president of the World Federation of Trades Unions; Will Lawther, British mine union head, and others.

Tewson, who with Deakin arrived in the U. S. before the rest of the group, conferred in Pittsburgh last week with CIO Pres. Murray, Secy.-Treas. Carey and Intl. Affairs Director Michael Ross. It is understood that they discussed possibilities of quickly establishing the new international union body. The CIO is anxious to move ahead along these lines, but some leaders of the AFL are very conscious of technical problems.

Nevertheless, it is hoped that progress may not be delayed during coming weeks.

They received briefing on CIO legislative program and on union technical problems. Above, left: Asst. Sec. of Labor John Gibson, who spoke at Conference luncheon, talks things over with George Guernsey, CIO associate director of education, who managed the conference. CIO 'Pupils' Hold Classes At Harvard

"Up in Manchester, New Hampshire, there are more people out of jobs than ever before. We've got a lot of veterans who had to buy their homes, at inflated prices, right after the war. Now they're out of jobs and having trouble keeping up the payments. What can we do about it?"

* * *

"About every month, we go through the mill getting collections for various charities—the Red Cross, the Community Chest, and what not. It's all done by the union, and the girls chip in a lot of money. But the union never gets any credit—the papers always make it sound as though the gifts came from the company. How can we change that?"

* * *

"What's holding up Taft-Hartley repeal?"

* * *

"Almost all the Senators from New England voted right on the civil rights filibuster. What more can we do to help the civil rights program—and the 75c minimum wage?"

* * *

THOSE WERE the sort of questions that kept popping up at the CIO's New England Educational Conference, held March 18-20 in the Ivy League surroundings of Harvard University at Cambridge, Mass.

The questions — and a good many of the answers—came from more than 150 union members in every state in New England. The confab was one of a series scheduled by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research throughout the country.

"Students" attending the sessions were given a cover-to-cover briefing on the whole CIO legislative program, on problems raised by Taft-Hartley, and on union functioning on problems of unemployment, public relations, educational and community relations.

Opening speaker at the conference was CIO Sec.-Treas. James Carey, who summarized the CIO's campaign to push through a Fair Deal program "for all the American people." He described CIO's major contributions to developing the Marshall plan machinery and its demand for adequate voice for labor in governmental affairs.

The group heard Asst. Sec. of Labor John Gibson—a CIO dairy union member from Michigan—warn that they'd have to get a heavy mail into Congress if they want Taft-Hartley repealed.

Gibson reminded the New England CIO-ers that a good many votes—in both the Senate and the House—are still in doubt. Unless those wavering votes can be swung into line by the voice of the folks back home, he said, Taft-Hartley repeal may be endangered.

PROF. JOHN GAUS of Harvard, chief speaker at the Saturday night banquet, warned New England unionists that area plans for development of water power, navigation and transportation deserve top priority.

Warmly praising the TVA and other valley authority programs, Prof. Gaus predicted that densely-populated New England areas will have to work out new forms of government authorities to meet their economic problems.

Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO director of research and education, urged the New England unions to give full support to the Economic Stabilization Bill, which sets forth the President's anti-inflation program.

Failure to act, he said, will lead to spreading unemployment and distress, and make more difficult any program to provide new jobs and added purchasing power.

Unemployment was a subject of considerable discussion at the confab, with delegates reporting widespread lack of jobs or short work-weeks in many textile, shoe and electrical manufacturing centers.

The educational conference was managed by George Guernsey, assistant CIO director of education, and Stuart Brock and Jane Mandel of the education staff at CIO headquarters.

Dollar Drive, This Year's Elections Stressed at Phila. PAC Dinner

By IRVING FAGAN

ALMOST 1000 CIO members attended the Philadelphia CIO-PAC 1949 Dollar Drive kick-off dinner March 19 at the Broadwood Hotel.

They heard Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas of California; Jack Kroll, national CIO-PAC head; the four Democratic Congressmen whom Philadelphia elected last November; Sen. Francis Myers; Joseph Kelly, head of Philadelphia CIO-PAC, and Richardson Dilworth, 1947 Democratic candidate for mayor and leader of the Independent Democrats.

Declaring that the labor movement is the very core of the liberal movement in the United States, Rep. Douglas said that if labor continues as it did in 1947 and 1948, "we are indeed going forward, not backward." She added: "Yes, we get setbacks, but we are not discouraged. You have to continue to fight, because the liberal movement, spearheaded by the labor movement, is the hope of the world."

"THE 1948 election," she said, was notice to the world that the American people govern themselves, that they cannot be propagandized, and are going forward, not back. Nov. 2, 1948, strengthened the democratic way of life all over the world."

She pointed out that two-thirds of the world's population is colored, that the colored races are on the march, and that America "can give them leadership," because unless we do, they will adopt another way of life.

"The program you fight for," she continued, "is not just narrowly labor's program alone. It is the only program that will carry us through."

KROLL DECLARED, "The opposition wants you to get discouraged, but you would have no unions if you got discouraged and quit after you lose a fight. If those reactionaries think we'll give up they're simply nuts. You have a job to do in Philadelphia. You need money to do it.

"You need the money now, and not the day after elections. You've got to get started immediately to collect those PAC bucks. You need the money if you're going to continue to win elections." He stressed the need of registration drives, of constant work, of not letting up between elections.

Kroll reminded his audience that PAC has a job to do this year in Philadelphia.

(Officials to be elected this year include judges of county and municipal courts and of state superior and state supreme courts; controller, city treasurer, coroner, seven magistrates, ward constables, and judges and inspectors of election.)

He charged that "the men who walked out of their Democratic party at the Philadelphia convention are calling the shots on Capitol Hill . . . The reason this minority is able to hold up the will of the majority is that the proud party of Abraham Lincoln—the party that last October was so sure it was going to occupy the seat of power—that party today has become the willing stooge of the Dixiecrats."

DILWORTH also stressed the importance of the Philadelphia elections. Kelly appealed to his listeners to start organizing their PAC drives now.

The four Democratic Congressmen who spoke were William Barrett, William Granahan, William Green, and Earl Chudoff.

Senator Myers declared, "We Democrats have just begun to fight. The Democrats will continue to fight for the party platform pledges, but we need your help, constantly, day in and day out."

Win $4500 Back Pay

The CIO Textile Workers has just won $4,500 as a back pay award for five former employes of the Swift Mfg. Co. of Columbus, Ga., discharged for union activities.

Congressmen Back Labor Extension

CONGRESSIONAL sponsors of the Labor Extension Service bill promised at a dinner meeting given in their honor last week in Washington to use their best efforts to help speed passage of the proposed legislation.

Representatives of the CIO and other labor groups, educators and Dept. of Labor officials, in addition to 11 Congressmen were among some hundred guests at the affair, sponsored by the National Committee for the Extension of Labor Education.

Six Senators who have endorsed the bill planned to attend but were prevented from coming at the last moment by a night sesion of the Senate, and were represented by their aides.

House sponsors of the legislation who attended and were introduced by Miss Hilda Smith, chairman of the National Committee were: Andrew Biemiller (D. Wis.), James Fulton (R. Pa.), Charles Howell (D. N. J.), Augustine Kelley (D. Pa.), Ray Madden (D. Ind.), George M. Rhodes (D. Pa.), Thor Tollefson (R. Wash.), Richard Welch (R. Calif.) and Sidney R. Yates (D. Ill.).

TWO OTHER Representatives also present were Mrs. Chase Going Woodhouse (D. Conn.), who said she was a warm supporter of the bill, and Rep. T. B. Morton (Ky.), who jokingly introduced himself as "a black reactionary Republican."

The bi-partisan measure (S-110) to establish a Labor Extension Service under the U. S. Dept. of Labor was reported out favorably by the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare in February and is now awaiting a date on the Senate calendar for debate and vote on the floor.

Its supporters are Sens. Wayne Morse (R. Ore.), Elbert D. Thomas (D. Utah), George Aiken (R. Vt.), Paul H. Douglas (D., Ill.), Edward Thye (R. Minn.) and Hubert Humphrey (D. Minn.).

Twelve Representatives have sponsored separate bills in the House. These, like the Senate bill, call for an extension service for labor comparable to the Agriculture Department's service for farmers.

The proposed legislation is designed to meet the problems of workers through a broad program of information and instruction.

House Bill Aids Labor Dept. Little

WHEN the House of Representatives approved the appropriation recommended by the President for the Labor Dept. recently, it was hailed by the newspapers as an administration victory. But American labor, which has supported the President in all other aspects of his program, had that old let-down feeling.

Although the appropriation was $2,176,850 more than the rock-bottom figure doled out last year by the "penny-pinching" 80th Congress, it failed to restore most of the Department's services, curtailed by a whittled-down budget.

That's because the increases that were allowed for all the divisions of the Department will have to go mainly for in-service pay raises, provided by Public Law 900.

Only service scheduled by the House appropriation to receive a noticeable boost is the Bureau of Labor Statistics, on which both labor and business groups have made increasing demands in the past few years.

But for the illegally-employed children, the low-paid victims of chiseling employers, the workers exposed to industrial accident hazards, there will be no more —and possibly less — protection than last year.

Of the $2,176,850 increase over last year, $991,000 will go for in-service pay raises and $1,129,000 will go to the BLS. The Women's Division wil be able to add 10 members to its staff, which was cut sharply last year. But the other divisions, among them the important Wage-Hour Division, will remain static.

THE APPROPRIATION is now under consideration by the Senate Appropriations committee.

Appearing last week before the committee as a representative of CIO, Katherine Pollak Ellickson, assistant CIO research and education director, appealed for an increase in the Labor Department's appropriation to at least $25 million.

She noted that this amount would be $8 million less than the department had three years ago. It would represent, she said, an expenditure of 50c for each employed worker in the country, as compared with the Dept. of Agriculture's expenditure of $200 annually for each farmer.

"Is Congress now more willing to vote money to maintain the health of farm animals than of factory workers?" Mrs. Ellickson asked, noting that many of the committee members are from farm areas.

DISCUSS LABOR: American and Italian labor leaders talked things over at Washington during a visit of the latter to this country. They are, l. to r.: George Baldanzi, executive vice president of the CIO Textile Workers and head of the CIO Italian-American Affairs Committee; Appio Rocchio, general secretary of the Executive Committee for Labor and Economic Affairs of the (Italian) Republican Party; Giovanni Canini, a vice secretary of the General Confederation of Labor; Guilio Pastore, secretary-general of the Christian Labor Union, and James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer. The Economic Cooperation Administration sponsored the visit of the Italians.

Organizationally Speaking

Allan S. Haywood

UAW Reg. Dir. Paul E. Miley reports the employes of the Chevrolet Cleveland Division, Parma Plant, voted 836 to 184 to be represented by the UAW. The AFL was the contesting union. The drive was under the direction of UAW Intl. Rep. John Troeter who was assisted by UAW Reps. Lewis Ress and Charles Mobley and an organizational committee of 60 employes of the plant.

Ray T. Aylor, Oil Workers Representative, reports an election victory over the AFL Chemical Workers at Quaker State Refinery, Farmers Valley, Pa. The Oil Workers received 193 votes, the AFL 2.

CIO Reg. Dir. James J. Leary, reports that the employes of the Moundridge Milling and Elevator Co., Moundridge, Kan., voted 12 to 3 to be represented by the UAW. This plant was organized by UAW Rep. Vernon Welling.

Thomas J. Gallagher, Director of Organization, Shipbuilding Union, reports that the employes of the Bushey Shipyard, Brooklyn, N. Y., voted 139 to 14 for a union shop.

Pertinent History Sixteen years ago this month a new president of the United States took oath of office. The nation, employer and worker alike, was in despair. Unemployment prevailed. Unions, driven almost out of existence by the depression, were on the ropes.

But the few remaining union members, former union members, and millions who merely longed for the right to be union members had voted for him. Philip Murray, Sidney Hillman and others who later formed CIO and PAC supported and worked for him.

F. D. R. was that man.

He knew that while laboring people were denied democracy by injunctions, police terror and anti-labor laws there could be no real democracy for anyone.

Because labor urged it, and because he believed in it, he sponsored Section 7A of the National Industrial Recovery Act. Under this, unions revived, grew, became powerful and were heard by employers and in legislative halls.

Then the Supreme Court declared the NIRA unconstitutional. The Blue Eagle was killed by a chicken. F. D. R. joined anew with labor and the Wagner Act was passed. Unions again grew. Workers again benefited and made great gains.

Recently those who hate labor, decry democracy and resist progress seized upon a temporary reaction to pass the Taft-Hartley Act. Last week, the Congress received HR 2032, the T-H repealer.

It is our responsibility to see that the mandate given by the election to President Truman and the Congress to return to the liberalism and democracy of F. D. R. is not defeated by dishonest or fearful men. We must mobilize our memberships to urge passage of the kind of an act which will restore to workers the rights made law in the Wagner Act.

N. Atlantic Pact Given CIO Okay

THE NORTH Atlantic Pact, aimed at the military defense of western European countries, has received endorsement from the CIO.

"The CIO would not support a pact which diverted money aimed for reconstruction to the purchase of arms," the statement said. "Fortunately that is not the purpose of this agreement, and the CIO is happy to go on record as a firm supporter of the principles and purposes of the North Atlantic Pact."

The statement charged that the Soviet Union has "done everything in its power, short of war, to wreck the ERP" and that its propaganda machine has sought to spread fear and distrust throughout Europe.

"In the opinion of the CIO," it continued, "the North Atlantic Pact is the necessary reply to this terroristic campaign. More important than that, however, is the fact that the Pact will insure the full operation of the ERP."

Europe's "astonishing and heartening comeback" proves the correctness of CIO's faith in the Marshall Plan, "but the CIO regrets the present-day conditions which make the Atlantic Pact necessary."

Acceptance of the Atlantic Pact, it continued, with prove to the world that the U. S. "is ready to cooperate within the limits of her resources to preserve the social and political freedom of the North Atlantic community."

Appointment Of Graham Hailed

Appointment of Dr. Frank P. Graham of North Carolina to the U. S. Senate brought immediate cheers from labor and liberal groups.

Graham, president of the University of North Carolina, was a public member of the Natl. War Labor Board, and in 1947 of the President's Committee on Civil Rights. Two months ago he received the first Sidney Hillman Memorial Award for public service.

Graham was appointed to the Senate by Gov. Kerr Scott to fill a seat left vacant by the death of Sen. Melville Broughton, who had been elected with labor and liberal support.

In a wire to Gov. Scott, CIO Pres. Murray said workers are "gratified by your splendid appointment . . . Dr. Graham has demonstrated his exceptional knowledge of the economic and human factors involved in labor-management relations."

To Graham, Murray wired that the public "knows well your devotion to the American democratic principle, and they look forward to the great contribution which your experience and understanding will make to the Senate of the United States."

Warn Of Communists

British unionists have been warned, in a pamphlet issued by the British Trade Union Congress, of the activities of Communist party members in the unions. British Communists carry out policy determined "at the instigation of bodies outside these shores," the TUC warned.

Postal Hike Seen Blow To Labor

THE CIO has warned that proposed increases in second-class mailing rates would make "heavy inroads" on the ability of labor and other non-profit publications "to transmit their message to their organizations and to the public."

The statement, signed by Allan L. Swim, CIO director of publicity, was sent to members of the Senate and House Post Office Committees.

The bills, if passed, "would have serious repercussions on the trade union press of this country," Swim declared.

"The CIO News, the official publication of the CIO, made a survey to determine the effect of HR 2945 on its own postage costs. This survey, based only on one of the several editions published by The CIO News, showed an increase of roughly 350% in postage costs."

SWIM URGED retention of the present postal regulation providing special treatment for publications issued by "religious, educational, scientific, philanthropic, agricultural, labor or fraternal organizations or associations not organized for profit and none of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any stockholder or individual . . ."

At present, such organizations, when authorized by the Post Office Department, may mail their publications anywhere in the United States at the rate of 1½ cents a pound.

"The CIO feels that in eliminating this special rate for non-profit organizations, HR 2945 and S. 1103 are going counter to the basic purpose of the second-class mailing system," which, Swim said, is to enable Americans to be "best informed."

WHITE HOUSE VISITORS: These rank-and-file members of the CIO Textile Workers from Alabama are on their way from the White House, where they left a letter for Pres. Truman telling him that the Dixiecrats do not speak for the general membership of the Democratic Party in their state. They are William Lamb, Huntsville; H. D. Lisk, Alabama director of TWUA; Ed. Cochran, Cordova; Dallas Mayo, Gadsden; Earl Ivey, Huntsville, and Burns Cox, Gadsden. They came to Washington to ask the Congressional delegation from their state to vote for the 75-cent minimum wage bill. The bill has been approved by the House Labor Committee.

Greek Unionists Reported Supporting War Against Communists; Say Unions Are Free

FULL SUPPORT for the armed campaign to destroy the Communist guerrilla fighting force in northern Greece has been pledged by the country's 200,000 free trade union members, two Greek labor leaders visiting America told the CIO News last week.

John Patsatzis, treasurer-secretary of the Greek General Confederation of Labor, and Stephan Lolos, secretary of the Greek Tobacco Workers Union, are in this country to acquaint American unionists and government officials with the needs and problems of the Greek unions.

Their principal problem: a mass of incorrect information which has been circulated abroad about the status of the labor organizations in non-Communist Greece.

"Free Greek unions have functioned without interference from the government," Patsatzis told the CIO News. "Despite stories circulated abroad by friends of the Communists, not a single union leader or member has been arrested because of his union activities.

"WHERE unionists have been arrested, in every case it's been because of political activities of a treasonable nature—and not because of their union work.

"The government made a mistake in promulgating the anti-strike law a year ago. But that law has never been inforced, and now it has been removed from the law books altogether."

A man of probably 50 who bears an unusual facial resemblance to CIO Pres. Murray — Patsatzis pointed out that economic conditions in free Greece are extremely bad, and that considerable corruption exists among the small high-income group in Athens.

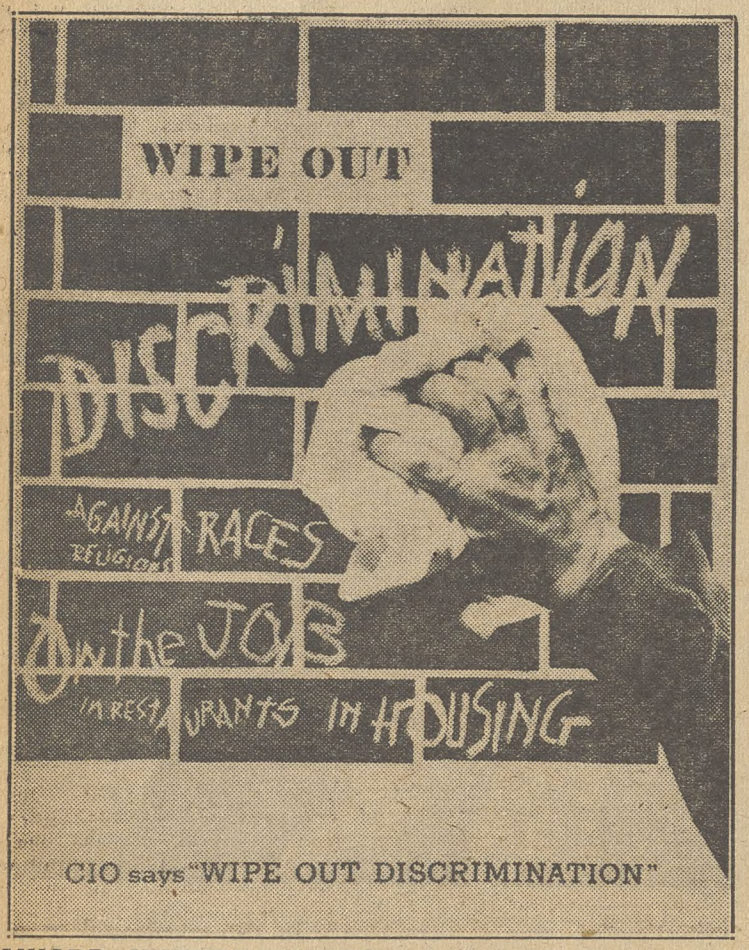
THESE RICH families are doing little to help the military campaign against the Communist guerrillas, the Greek union official official said. The real support comes from "the rank and file of the people, who are inspired by a desire to defeat the enemy and win democracy and decent living conditions.

"After the war, I think the Greek people will call for an accounting by those rich men who profited out of the war and did nothing to help it," he said. "The Greek people look forward to a liberal regime, with strong efforts to rehabilitate Greece's war-torn economic machinery when the campaign against the guerrillas is over.

"Greek standards of living can and must rise when peace comes, and the people and the unions mean to see that that happens."

Patsatzis and Lolos arrived in New York March 15, and plan to visit Baltimore, Richmond, Pittsburgh and New York before they leave the country.

They have talked with leaders of all branches of labor, and with officials of ECA, the State Dept. and the Dept. of Labor.



AWARD WINNER: This CIO poster has received an Award of Distinctive Merit from the Art Directors Club. The poster was produced by the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination and the CIO Research and Education Dept. in cooperation with the Natl. Labor Service.

CCL Disciplines UE and MMSW

The Canadian Congress of Labour's executive council has disciplined two CIO affiliates.

One of them, the Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, has been suspended from the Congress indefinitely. The other, the Electrical Workers, has been barred from council meetings.

The action against MMSW, the council said, was based on the refusal of the union "to comply with the majority decision of the Congress" and on attacks on the Congress and its leadership.

UE was excluded from council meeting "as a result of complaints made by the Ontario Federation of Labour," an AFL body.

Anti-Trust Holiday Fought

A SENATE proposal to provide a two-year moratorium with respect to the application of certain anti-trust laws to individual, good faith, delivered pricing systems and freight absorption practices should be rejected, the CIO asserts.

Otis Brubaker, research director of the CIO Steelworkers union, last week appeared before a Subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee, speaking for the CIO as a whole.

Brubaker told the subcommittee that the Steelworkers made a three-month survey of the industry to "determine the effects of the switchover to an f. o. b. pricing system in steel."

"In that survey," Brubaker said, "we looked for all effects, actual, alleged and potential. Our opinion of the results is not builded on our own prejudices or on some hypothetical arguments about the desirability of either f. o. b. or basing point pricing. We have seen both at work in a key industry and we want neither."

In brief, here are the findings:

1. No evidence of shutdowns, layoffs or plant relocation traceable to the pricing change.

2. No "ghost" towns had made their appearance.

3. Not one single construction plan for a new steel plant has been abandoned.

4. There was no evidence that small companies would suffer any more under f. o. b. than under a basing point arrangement.

Brubaker, in addition to saying the 2-year moratorium (S-1008) was "unnecessary," said that it does not "clarify" the law, will probably legalize price discrimination and price-fixing systems as long as they use delivered prices.

"It will, in any event, serve as an open invitation to the steel and cement industries, which have abandoned their illegal basing point 'systems', to resume use of these price-fixing devices outlawed by the Supreme Court in the cement case.

Wasn't That A Dainty Dish To Set Before GM?

"The king was in the counting house, Counting up his money."

The kings of several big corporations counted up the money made in profits during 1948. The figures were pretty terrific.

GENERAL MOTORS, leading the profit parade, reported earnings —after taxes—of $440,447,724. That comes out to $1,205,884 for every single day of 1948. That also comes out to $50,245 profits for every hour of every day of the year.

GENERAL ELECTRIC reported profits up nearly three times from the high 1946 level. GE, which has already said "no" to preliminary CIO union demands for a wage raise, showed profits of about $125,000,000 for the year.

(Nevertheless, GE Pres. Charles E. Wilson said profits were too low to act as a satisfactory "cushion" against possible drops in sales!)

U. S. STEEL reported, in preliminary figures, that its 1948 profits amounted to $129,552,424—an increase of about $2½ million over 1947. But experts say U. S. Steel's profit statement did not include some $70,000,000 in additional earnings, which had been concealed in other accounting devices.

328 CORPORATIONS—reported by the Wall Street Journal from 22 industries—registered a 23.7% profit jump in 1948. The 328 firms reported $4,400,000,000 net profits—compared to just over $3½ billion in 1947.

Biggest percentage jump—66.1%—was reported by 18 oil companies. Their combined profits rose to $729 million for the year. Nineteen auto and equipment companies had profit increases of 45.3%—to $640 million.

Total profits for 1948 are estimated at about $21 billion.

Disorder In Rules Hearing

(See Page 7 for more T-H news)

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

IF YOU'LL pardon use of the word, it was damnable.

Beetle-browed Gene Cox (Ga.) feigned sleepiness, but rarely ever kept quiet, whether or not he had the floor.

Howard Smith (Va.), who looks like he hoards his lunch money, was carried away with the sound of his own voice, the louder the better.

William Colmer (Miss.), who would pass unnoticed in any crowd, snarled and snorted—and talked.

All three of those men call themselves Democrats.

Saggy-chinned Clarence Brown (O.) ranted and ranted.

Stringbean Christian Herter (Mass.) leaned back and looked like a Harvard man—but didn't act like one.

Brown and Herter are Republicans.

That was the picture last week as the House Rules Committee held "hearings"—all you could hear was Cox, Smith, Colmer, Brown and Herter—on what kind of a rule to grant the Thomas-Lesinski Bill.

In House parlance, a "rule" determines when a bill reaches the floor, whether or not amendments can be offered and how much time is allowed for general debate. An "open" rule allows offering of amendments; a "closed" rule bars them.

Dixiegops Cox, Smith, Colmer, Brown and Herter—joined occasionally by James Wadsworth (R., N. Y.)—insulted every pro-Administration member of the House Labor Committee, refused to let them finish sentences, boorishly interrupted them—sometimes all of them talking at the same time; and insulted the venerable chairman of the committee, Adolph J. Sabath (D., Ill.), whose 83rd birthday was April 4.

Newspapermen, who agreed this was perhaps the most disorderly and childish hearing ever held on Capitol Hill, had a hard time to keep from cheering when Rep. Andrew Jacobs (D., Ind.) walked out on the committee.

Jacobs later told newsmen: "This is a filibuster. It is political shuttlecock. I judge a Democrat by the way he votes. There is not a Democratic majority on the Rules Committee. There are at least three on this side of the table (the Democratic side) who should cross the aisle where they belong."

As The CIO News went to press, no rule had been issued.

* * *

Meanwhile, Rep. Walter E. Brehm (R., O.) said the Administration labor bill, particularly in its national emergency provisions, was far superior to the Taft-Hartley Act.

He indicated he would vote for the bill.

Hearing Granted

The U. S. Supreme Court has agreed to hear appeal argument in the perjury case of Harold R. Christoffel, former leader of the CIO Auto Workers local at the Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co. plant in Milwaukee. Christoffel was convicted of perjury and sentenced to prison on the ground he lied when telling a House labor probe committee of the 80th Congress that he was not a Communist.

Connecticut Council Maps Plan To Curb Unemployment

THE Connecticut CIO Council last week faced the unemployment problem—more than 70,000 jobless in the state—at a special conference in the state capitol at Hartford, and came up with a specific program which calls for:

- Improvement in unemployment insurance through bills supported by the CIO, AFL, the Machinists and the railroad brotherhoods. A joint state Senate-House labor committee is considering the many proposed measures.)
- Adoption of union counselling programs to aid unemployed union members.
- A state public works program, to begin immediately.
- A state study of the causes of unemployment.
- A labor-management conference.

Gov. Chester W. Bowles conferred with business representatives while the CIO conference was in progress, and later met labor leaders.

Speakers included Hyman Bookbinder, assistant research director, CIO Clothing Workers; Julius Rothman, Eastern area representative, CIO Community Services Committee, and Howard Hauseman, director, unemployment compensation division, Conn. Labor Dept. Hauseman blaimed the failure of the unemployed to receive relief checks promptly on inadequate appropriations by Congress for administering the fund.

Council Pres. Mitchell Sviridoff presided at the conference, which was planned by a committee consisting of Daniel J. Gallagher, council vice president and assistant state director for the Textile Workers; Rep. Anthony Miller, Meriden, CIO member, and Clarence Senior, Conn. CIO publicity director.

New Rent Law Kills 15% Voluntary Rises

THE NATION'S tenants were able to give an unexpected sigh of relief last week when a surprisingly strong rent control bill sailed through Congress a short time before the old law expired.

Signing the measure which is expected to hold rents down more effectively than the expired law, Pres. Truman described it as a "crushing defeat for the real estate lobby."

The lobby had financed a stay of several months in Washington by hundreds of landlords in its efforts to convince Congressmen that "the people" wanted the death of controls.

PASSAGE of the bill was hailed in Labor and Democratic Party circles as a major victory for the administration. The Natl. Association of Real Estate Boards, guiding light of the real estate lobby, seized on the bill's one major concession to the "decontrol" forces, and also hailed the measure as a "victory."

Here are the major improvements, from the tenants' standpoint, over the 1948 law:

- The old law's allowance of 15% "voluntary" increases is out.
- Protection of tenants against evictions is strengthened by a provision permitting the Federal Housing Expediter to set up adequate eviction controls.
- Certain housing units, such as conversions, trailer camps, hotels and—in New York City and Chicago—non-transient hotels are put back under control.
- The Housing Expediter can sue willful violators for treble damages, which he couldn't do under the old law.
- Use of the "comparability" formula as a basis for tremendous rent increases in company housing, such as occurred under the 1948 law, is out.
- Local rent advisory board recommendations for decontrol must be approved by the Governor. Under the old law, a number of "stacked" boards succeeded in lifting their areas from control without the necessity of obtaining gubernatorial approval.
- Areas which have been decontrolled by the expediter can be recontrolled, if the necessity arises.
- Tenants, as well as landlords, now have administrative review and the right to appeal to the federal courts.

TWO of the bill's provisions are regarded as weaknesses by the CIO. The provisions, however, are an improvement on those contained in other proposed bills.

Out of the joint House-Senate conference committee came two compromises: Instead of the "fair return on a fair investment" provision passed by the House, the final bill provided a "fair net operating income."

Although none of the conferees explained the compromise term, the Senate committee hearings disclose a detailed analysis of the difference between the terms by Sen. Paul Douglas (D. Ill.). The term which was finally written into the bill permits a fair net profit—after such expenses as taxes, upkeep, decorating costs, etc.

These latter expenses, Douglas illustrated, have gone down, since landlords have mostly turned such responsibility over to the tenants. The almost non-existent vacancy rate has further raised landlords' "net operating income." The other term "fair return," it is believed, would not have taken such elements into account, and would have permitted much greater increases.

THE OTHER "weaknesses," from the CIO viewpoint, is the section permitting state legislatures to decontrol their state or part of it. Local governing bodies also may vote for decontrol and obtain it if the move is approved by the governor.

With the Democrats holding a majority of the governorships, it was believed that few would approve the lifting of controls. (New York's Gov. Thomas Dewey announced immediately that he would disapprove any such recommendations.)

Natl. CIO Housing Committee Director Leo Goodman pointed out that the new law, which will run for 15 months, meets the standards set up by the national CIO convention in Portland in all but four instances.

In addition to the "fair net operating income" and the decontrol provisions, the bill fell short of CIO objectives in failing to include full criminal penalties against violators and in failing to roll back unwarranted increases granted under the old law.

Visits

The Pennsylvania CIO, through its president, Harry Boyer, is urging members in states near Washington, D. C., to send delegations to visit Congressmen when they are home over the weekend.

Purpose of the visit: Urge prompt action on HR 2032, the T-H repealer.

I'm Grateful For Little People's Money, Huber Replies To Akron Paper's Blast

IN AKRON, O., there is a paper called the Beacon Journal, which has a daily newspaper monopoly.

The Journal is angry at Rep. Walter B. Huber (D., O.), who represents the Akron district, because Huber does not join the paper in kowtowing to Akron's financial bigwigs.

HUBER

Last week, the B. J. carried a story from Washington concerning Huber. "Rep. Huber received $2500 in campaign contributions from organized labor prior to the last election," the dispatch said.

"This is shown in the campaign statement filed by Huber, as required by law, to the clerk of the House.

"The Akron Congressman listed $1000 from PAC, $750 from Railway Labor's Political Action League, $500 from Firestone Local No. 7 of the CIO Rubber Workers, $250 from the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers."

An editorial which followed said "Walter—you've got to give him credit—has never made any bones about being the CIO's Congressman."

HUBER WROTE the B. J.:

"Surely, you are aware, Mr. Editor, that after the election I filed my expense account, setting forth each dollar spent and received.

"Why, Mr. Editor, have you waited nearly five months to give front page publicity and editorial comment to this matter? Why have you waited until the eve of Congress' consideration of the Taft-Hartley Act to make comment on my campaign contributions?

"I am proud of the many fine establishments in the 14th District, but your unfair tactics cause me to be ashamed of my home town newspaper. Don't forget, Mr. Editor, that the contributions to my Congressional campaign by labor groups were in many cases the nickels, dimes and pennies from the pockets of working men and women.

"I was proud and grateful to accept and use the money of these 'little people' and I know that they, too, are grateful to me because I have never let them down.

"WHILE YOU are most unfair in labelling me as 'CIO's Congressman,' nevertheless, if I must be labeled, I am thankful that the label is not that of NAM, C. of C., newspaper or utility Congressman.

"Incidentally, you knew that I received a substantial contribution from one of Akron's major institutions the day after the election, and that I returned same, using Truman's language to explain what they should do with it. Why didn't you publish this, Mr. Editor?

"I'm really not angry about your treatment, because only so long as I have the opposition of the B. J., will I enjoy the full and complete confidence of the citizens of the 14th District."

Huber won by 117,770 to 115,145 in 1944; by 88,178 to 77,674 in 1946, and by 125,346 to 92,535 in 1948, all with the opposition of the B. J.

'PARSON JACK' AND COPS

The NLRB apparently has clipped the wings of old "Parson Jack" Johnston, the bombastic Columbus, Ga., minister-editor-publisher who has served as "union buster" for Southern textile manufacturers for years.

"Parson Jack" used a tabloid newspaper called the Trumpet to do for the manufacturers what they could not legally do for themselves. He hid behind "freedom of the press" privileges, and those who used his services attempted to do the same thing.

The Board, of course, could take no direct action against "Parson Jack." But it did rule that Bibb Manufacturing Co. was guilty of an unfair labor practice because it used the Trumpet to fight the CIO Textile Workers.

This, in effect, served notice on manufacturers throughout the South that they'll run into trouble if they use the Trumpet to fight union organizational efforts.

And the Board's ruling should serve as notice that other small newspapers issued solely or principally to combat unionism are taboo if supported financially by employers.

Union organizers—particularly those in the textile field—have been plagued for years by such papers as the Trumpet and the Militant, the latter a tabloid printed at Chattanooga, Tenn.

Principal function of these sheets was to prevent workers from joining the CIO. Their chief weapons were an appeal to race prejudice and repetition of the charge that the CIO is a Communist organization.

Publishers of these papers operated unhampered for a long time because they were not actually employed by union-fighting employers. The employers merely subscribed to the paper for all of their workers.

The NLRB ruling involving the Trumpet also took a slap at the use of police as "union busters." The Board held that Bibb completely dominated the town of Porterdale, Ga., and was illegally responsible for Porterdale police engaging in anti-union activities.

This should serve as notice to those who "run" other company towns.

NLRB, which we've frequently damned for its shortcomings, deserved a pat on the back for its Bibb decision. ★ ★ ★

THEY'LL ATTEMPT TO CRIPPLE IT

If we read the signs correctly, the Taft-Hartley Act as it now exists is a dead duck. Our concern is over the legislation that will be enacted to replace it.

And if we read some other signs correctly, anti-union forces in Congress will do everything they can to make the new act resemble the old one as nearly as possible.

The "crippling" amendment is the instrument they hope to use to bring this about.

Organized labor supports the Thomas-Lesinski Bill, which has the approval of the Truman Administration. It should be enacted without crippling amendments.

Why don't you write your Senators and Congressman today and tell them how you feel about the situation? ★ ★ ★

IT'S THE SAME FIGHT, SAME FIGHTERS

In our concern over the Taft-Hartley Act let's not forget about other legislation we support—legislation such as that which would increase the minimum wage to 75 cents an hour.

Those fighting repeal of T-H are, for the most part, those who are fighting to retain the present 40-cent minimum.

And among those who are hurt most by T-H are many who would benefit most from a realistic minimum wage.

We've Got A 'Tin Lizzie' System

Our Social Security Set-Up Is Badly In Need Of Realistic Streamlining

By ALLAN L. SWIM

MAYBE IT IS hard to get excited about social security—but it's easy to get excited about the lack of it.

If you doubt it, just ask the fellow who's trying to live today on an old-age pension that was designed for pre-war conditions.

Or ask the fellow who's lost his job during the recent rise in unemployment and is trying to make ends meet on unemployment compensation.

Or, better yet, ask the man who has used up all of his unemployment benefits and still can't find a job.

They can tell you how hard it is to get along in this period which most persons refer to as "prosperity."

OUR SOCIAL security system is like the old Model-T, a good machine for its era but sadly lacking in modern improvements.

Ford's "tin lizzie" was a great improvement over the horse and buggy—and the social security legislation enacted back in the 1930's was a great improvement over the old system of going hungry or going on local charity when things got really tough.

The present system is badly outdated if for no other reason than that a "dollar ain't a dollar any more."

This Year!

There is no logical reason for the present Congress to refrain from strengthening our social security system this year.

The CIO is supporting HR 2893, an old age and survivors' insurance bill, and HR 2645, a public assistance measure.

Since it came into being, prices, profits and wages have risen sharply. Social security benefits in the main haven't increased at all.

So, actually, we've "progressed" backwards.

We'll have to go quite a long distance to catch up with where we've been.

LET'S TAKE A good, hard look at the situation and see what's lacking in our present set-up.

Suddenly, because of no fault of your own, you're out of a job for the first time in years.

After a "waiting period" you can begin drawing unemployment compensation, which ranges from about $16 to $25 a week in the various states.

If you're still out of a job after the compensation period ends, you can apply to some local charity for help. A federal public assistance program is needed to plug up the "charity" loophole.

Maybe this seems unimportant if you've got a good job—but it doesn't if the wolf is gnawing at the knob on your back door.

SUPPOSE YOU'RE a healthy specimen of manhood or womanhood who's thought only vaguely about retiring some years in the future.

Suddenly, because of an accident, you're flat on your back in a hospital. In a few days the doctor tells you the sad news: You'll never be able to work again!

If you're insured to the hilt—with the right kind of insurance—you'll be able to care for your family and escape becoming a public charge.

But those who need insurance most are those who can't afford it.

Then, why not disability payments as part of the federal social security system?

WE, OF COURSE, will always have with us those who try to discredit social security by ridiculing it as "cradle to the grave stuff."

Well, why not from the cradle to the grave? Everybody lives that long.

And there's no iron-clad rule in the book which says that a country as wealthy as ours must operate on the theory that people can't appreciate life unless they spend a bit of time on the verge of starvation.

ACW Gives Million To Social Funds

THE CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers has made public its annual financial statement, showing a balance of $6,620,218 as of Dec. 31 last, a gain of $934,420 over 1947.

In its report issued by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky and Secy.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum the union showed that its assets included $4,587,428 in U. S. Government securities, and $1,265,327 invested in financial institutions sponsored by the Amalgamated itself.

The Amalgamated, its joint boards and local institutions contributed, during 1948, more than $1,000,000 to United Nations and community relief funds and educational, charitable and civic organizations.

The union's income for 1948 totalled $3,296,314, of which $2,858,290 was dues per capita.

The Amalgamated spent $1,311,379 for organization expense. Its total expenditures for the year 1948 were $2,361,894.

Commenting on ACW's financial statements, the New York Herald Tribune said:

"The Amalgamated Clothing Workers, one of our most respected unions, in making public its financial report for 1948, lists one million dollars in contributions to charitable, educational and civic organizations.

"There are two points of interest in this brief news item: (1) the union has made its financial report public—a practice of most unions, despite the too widely prevailing notion that a majority of unions conceal these facts, and (2) the union's interest in and concern for civic and community activities expressed by its generous gifts.

"With the growing public acceptance of trade unions as an integral part of our economic and social life, many unions are giving just such demonstrable proof of their feeling of responsibility for our common undertakings. Organized business and organized labor share time and again in local community drives for worthy causes.

"Every such shared endeavor strengthens our social structure and gives heart-warming proof of the vigor of our democratic ways."

"I had to work three weeks for these—you think I'll ever take 'em off!"

Senate Given Women's Bill

A bill designed to eliminate discrimination against women on the basis of sex has been introduced by Sen. Kefauver (D., Tenn.) on behalf of himself and Sens. Morse (R., Ore.), Murray D., Mont.), Wagner (D., N. Y.), Johnson (D., Colo.), and Chavez (D., N. M.).

The bill (S-1430) declares that it is the policy of the Federal government to abolish distinctions based on sex in the administration of U. S. agencies, except such as are reasonably justified by differences in physical structure or by maternal function.

The language of the bill is designed to avoid the main defects of the so-called Equal Rights Amendment which would have the effect of wiping out protective legislation for working women, sponsors say.

A Presidential commission would be set up to study and report on all phases of the legal, economic and social status of women in the U. S. today.

Wheels of Justice Really Grind Slow

WHEN THE decision was finally handed down, George flashed a smile that stretched almost from ear to ear.

He had won a victory involving only a small number of people but he had a hunch it might have far-reaching consequences.

And, too, the waiting was over—and he had had to wait from the spring of '47 to the spring of '49.

The case illustrates one of the difficulties of union organizing and demonstrates again that the National Labor Relations Board doesn't always set speed records.

THERE WERE 28 persons eligible for union membership in the John Deere Plow Co. warehouse at Atlanta when George decided to organize the place.

Within a short time 25 of these signed membership application cards and 22 paid initiation fees. In addition, 20 paid two months' union dues in advance.

It was in the bag, George told himself. But that was before the company went to work on its employes.

When an NLRB election was held the union received only five votes.

George then engaged briefly in that pastime known as "blowing your top." He said some very unkind things about company officials.

EARLY IN 1947 George filed charges with NLRB against the company, alleging that it had refused to bargain with the union and had then destroyed the union's majority at the warehouse.

Several months later a one-day hearing on the charges was held.

The hearing officer said that the company had violated the Wagner Act by restraining workers from exercising their "free choice" in the election.

The trial examiner's intermediate report recommended that the company bargain with the union.

George felt pretty good about the report—but, then, the company refused to follow its recommendations.

The case was then started toward the Board in Washington for final action.

THE SUMMER, fall and winter of 1947 passed—and so did the spring, summer, fall and winter of 1948.

It looked to George as if the case would never be settled.

Then—on last March 15—a decision was handed down. Although George didn't win every technical point he had a victory.

The Board ruled that the company would be required to bargain with the union.

Furthermore, it ordered that the company "cease and desist" the tactics which resulted in loss of the election and that it post notices of its "good intentions" in the warehouse.

GEORGE—George Guest, UAW representative—said on a recent visit to the CIO News office that he realized the case wasn't an important one "if viewed merely from the standpoint of the number of people involved."

"But, darn it," he added, "it was important to me and to the fellows at the warehouse—and it's important to everybody interested in organizing because of what it illustrates.

"We had a clear-cut majority and then the company interfered. Then it took about two years to get a ruling from the NLRB.

"That's a long time to have to wait—for anything." A.L.S.

Newspaper Flays Dutch Policy in Indonesia

The attitude of The Netherlands toward the Indonesian Republic is verbally flayed in the following editorial from the Providence (R. I.) Evening Bulletin:

United Nations Delegate Warren Austin has creditably upheld this country's position on Indonesia by his recent statement insisting once again that the Dutch must permit the youthful Indonesian Republic to resume functioning as a free state.

American opposition is now almost all that stands between the Dutch and continued implementation of their plans for the East Indies region, since they seem determined to ignore United Nations protests and resolutions. We must continue to stand firm, both for the sake of democracy in Indonesia and the prestige of the UN.

There seems little doubt now that the Dutch plan to retain military control over the Indonesian Republic until they can sponsor the establishment of a United States of Indonesia closely tied to the Dutch crown.

LAST DECEMBER, shortly before the Dutch invaded Indonesia, a UN good offices committee attempting to arrange peace in the region filed a bluntly-phrased report with the Security Council. Dutch actions, the report declared, had strengthened the impression that "The Netherlands Government has been proceeding unilaterally to establish ultimately a United States of Indonesia on its own terms and without the Republic." Such a move, the committee warned, would "greatly complicate a negotiated settlement" and could create "serious unrest in Indonesia."

Certainly the Dutch moves since then have done nothing to discredit the committee's conclusions. After invading the Republic and imprisoning its government, they proceeded to mop up the entire region and establish firm military control. Now they have recognized a new group as "more representative" of the area and want to negotiate with them on Dutch terms and without consulting the deposed Republican Government.

We do not believe peace and order can be brought to Indonesia by a sword, particularly by a Dutch sword. The people of this troubled region have been seeking independence for nearly half a century.

IN RECENT years they have been desperate enough to grasp at freedom no matter by whose hands it was proffered. Thus natives of the region were widely disposed to welcome the Japanese invasion of 1942, recalling a cherished legend that predicted a race of men from the north would come down to drive out the white men, remain for 100 days and then leave Indonesia to the Indonesians.

The present Dutch tactics will only serve to make the Indonesians even more receptive to promises of freedom from any quarter—including the Communists. If we wish to foster democracy in Indonesia we must see to it that independence is achieved under the aegis of the United Nations, not the Kremlin.

A modification of The Netherlands position must be the first step in that direction, and Mr. Austin's stubborn insistence may be the only influence that can budge the determined Dutch.

N. Y. Guild Picks Award Winners

WINNERS OF the Newspaper Guild of New York's annual Page One awards have been picked by a special jury of newspapermen. Eleven persons and organizations received awards and five others received citations.

Consisting of a bronze stick of type, mounted and boxed, the awards will be presented at the union's Page One Ball May 20 at the Hotel Commodore. Among the winners were:

Scripps-Howard columnist Thomas Stokes for distinguished Washington correspondence. John Crosby, New York Herald Tribune radio critic, for consistently distinguished writing and for raising the standards of radio criticism. Herald Tribune writer Homer Bigart for distinguished foreign correspondence.

Sidney Kingsley, for the portrayal of newspapermen and policemen in his new play, Detective Story. Awards also went to the play, Death Of A Salesman, and the musical comedy, Kiss Me, Kate.

THE QUIET One, a documentary about a Negro boy's life in the slums, a film which broke new ground and demonstrated that the highest quality is possible in this country on a very low budget. A citation also went to John Huston for his film, Treasure Of Sierra Madre.

Levi Jackson, Negro, and the Yale football team, a joint award for unusual sportsmanship which caused Jackson to earn and the team to give him the captaincy.

Sidney Bechet, jazz saxophonist, for extraordinary creative musicianship.

Chairman David Lilienthal of the U. S. Atomic Energy Commission, for distinguished and disinterested public service and for his statement of a magnificent creed of democracy.

NLRB Finds Use of Anti-Union Paper Unfair Practice

THE NLRB has finally called the turn on "Parson Jack" Johnston of Columbus, Ga., and his labor-baiting Trumpet.

It also has taken a swipe at the use by employers of police in anti-union campaigns.

These actions came in a case resulting from charges filed by the CIO Textile Workers Against Bibb Manufacturing Co.

"Parson Jack," a Baptist minister who has been preaching at Columbus for 18 years, has long been a "crusader" against unions in general and the CIO Textile Workers in particular.

The Trumpet, a tabloid newspaper edited and published by "Parson Jack" since 1932, has been used frequently in opposition to CIO organizational efforts.

THE POLICE involved were those at Porterdale, Ga., a "company town" dominated by Bibb.

Bibb, the Board held, had a "constitutional right to campaign against the union by expression of views and opinions, free of coercion and restraint . . . However, it is abundantly clear that at least some statements in the Trumpet were designed to defeat self-organization, not by appealing to the employes' sense of reason but by inciting physical violence, by threatening loss of employment and by promises of benefits."

Bibb officials admitted at a hearing that many of their employes at Porterdale and Macon, Ga., received the Trumpet as a result of subscriptions paid for by the company.

"An examination of copies of the Trumpet convinces us that it is not a 'newspaper' in the usual sense of the term," the Board reported. "At all times material in the Trumpet was directed particularly to textile mill employes, containing little current news other than on labor developments.

"Its columns were in large measure consistently devoted to attacks against the union's organizational activities among Southern textile mills, including the respondent's, and against the CIO, of which the union is an affiliate.

"In threatening the employes with loss of employment, the publication presumed to speak authoritatively for management.

"In our opinion, the Trumpet can hardly be viewed as more than an anti-CIO tract, with its coercive effectiveness dependent upon its reaching textile mill workers.

". . . We are convinced that the respondent (Bibb) intended to, and did, use the Trumpet as a coercive instrumentality for the purpose of defeating self-organization among its employes."

USE OF THE Trumpet by Bibb, the Board ruled, went beyond "the permissible mounds of free speech" and constituted an unfair labor practice.

The Board upheld the finding of Trial Examiner Thomas S. Wilson that "the police officers and police department of Porterdale, Ga., engaged in illegal surveillance of organizers of the union."

"The surveillance activities of the police force had the necessary effect of intimidating the employes and . . . curtailed the dissemination of union information," the Board ruled.

"Whatever may be the employer's privilege of instigating legitimate police activities, it is clear that an employer cannot utilize a police agency to engage in intimidatory trailing and surveillance where no legitimate police function is served thereby. Here there was no breach, actual or anticipated.

"To interfere with peaceful and lawful activities protected by the Act on the assumption that union activities are inherently dangerous to the peace of the community negates the principle upon which the act rests.

". . . We are convinced . . . that the respondent sought to, and did, use the police department as an instrumentality to impede self-organization of its employes."

The Board pointed out that all of the property within Porterdale, except for a railroad right-of-way and churches which Bibb donated to various religious organizations, is owned by Bibb Manufacturing Co.

All of Porterdale's municipal officers are employes of Bibb, the Board reported, and Bibb "effectively controls the civil life of Porterdale."

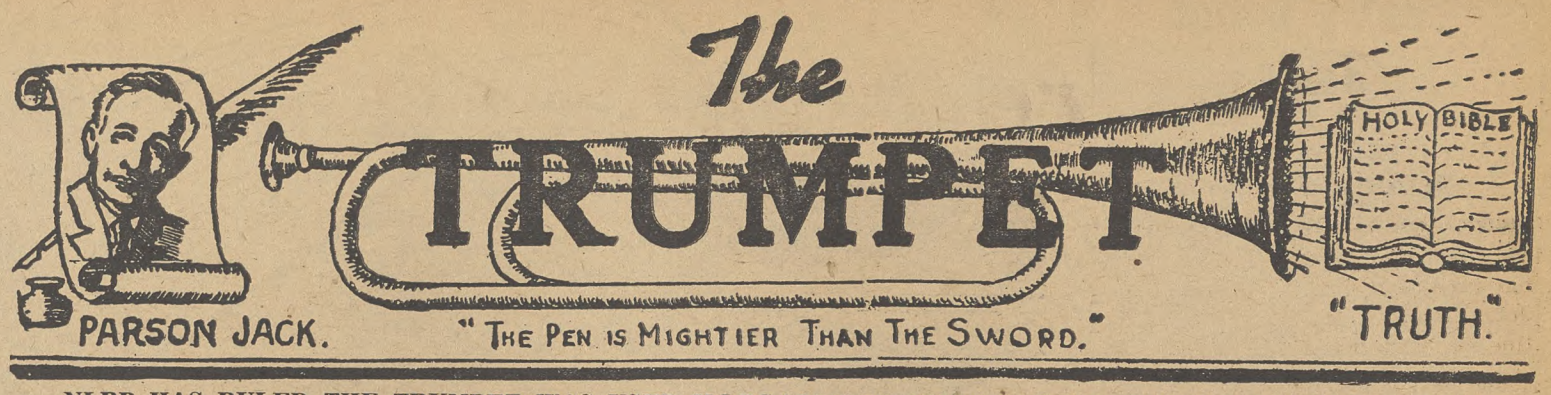
The Board issued a "cease and desist" order instructing Bibb to:

1. Refrain from sending to its employes the Trumpet or other publications "which contain a threat of reprisal or force or promise of benefits."

2. Refrain from "surveillance" activities and use of police in such activities.

3. Refrain from discouraging union membership by firing workers or by entering in coercion and intimidation.

4. Reinstate, with back pay, three workers at the Bibb Macon mill, discharged for union activity.



NLRB HAS RULED THE TRUMPET WAS USED ILLEGALLY TO FIGHT THE CIO TEXTILE WORKERS UNION.

"PARSON JACK" JOHNSTON

To him, union busting is holy

Accusations

"Parson Jack" Johnston has frequently hurled the charge of Communism against the CIO Textile Workers although it is strongly anti-Communist.

He frequently plays on race prejudice in his anti-union campaigns.

Prosperous

The "Parson Jack" tabernacle at Columbus—now called the Roberts Memorial Baptist Church—is valued at considerably more than $100,000.

The first tabernacle building was donated by Columbus Roberts, a Coca Cola Bottling Co. official who has numerous industrial interests.

Given Away

A survey made by the Textile Workers several years ago revealed that the employes of at least 20 Southern textile mills were receiving copies of the Trumpet regularly although they had not subscribed for it.

"PARSON JACK"

P. O. Box 629

COLUMBUS, GEORGIA

A SAMPLE of the anti-union work of "Parson Jack" is shown above.

Anything Against Unions 'Fit To Print'

The Trumpet, anti-union paper published at Columbus, Ga., was characterized by NLRB Trial Examiner Thomas S. Wilson as follows:

"The paper itself is illiterate, often unintelligible, illy informed, if not deliberately misinformed and dishonest. Anything was fit to print as long as it was anti-union. The Trumpet utilized every conceivable propaganda device from fear, hatred, race discrimination, bias and prejudice to loyalty to country and to employer, to promises and inducements of better wages and better conditions purporting to come from manufacturers, in order to prevent the textile employes from joining the union and to keep the union out of the South.

"The Trumpet is anti-everything except 'Parson Jack's' personal interpretation of religion, the status quo, and the Southern textile manufacturers. The paper is viciously anti-union, although in the issues in evidence its attacks upon unionism are almost exclusively restricted to the Textile Workers Union of America and the CIO."

U. S. Seeks Division Of Alcoa Operations

The giant Aluminum Co. of America, which allegedly produces over 85% of this country's aluminum supply, must be broken up into smaller units in order to end its monopolistic hold on the industry, the Justice Department told a Federal Court in Washington, D. C., last week.

In a petition asking the court to divide up the Alcoa operations, the Justice Dept. produced a previous order holding that the company is a monopoly, and said that it has used its size and power for 50 years to restrain trade in the industry.

Meet Mr. Lesinski And Mr. Kelley— They're Fighting Your Battle

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

THE JOB of piloting the Thomas-Lesinski Bill through the House has been placed in the hands of Reps. John Lesinski (D., Mich.) and Augustine Bernard Kelley (D., Pa.).

And they are doing quite well, thank you.

Lesinski is chairman of the House Education & Labor Committee, which approved HR2032—the Thomas-Lesinski Bill. Kelley is chairman of the Labor subcommittee which held hearings on HR2032, which would repeal the Taft-Hartley Law and reenact the Wagner Act with certain revisions.

Paradoxically, both men are employers. Paradoxically, no two other men in Congress have fought so hard for the cause of labor.

They have another thing in common. Both are fathers—and on a large scale. Lesinski has seven children; Kelley has nine.

In 1944, Mrs. Kelley, the former Ella Marie Bates, was selected as the Catholic Mother of America.

John Lesinski, who was one of 15 children, is a native of Erie, Pa., the son of a Polish immigrant who was a millwright (in Poland, a millwright was a combination first class carpenter and a miller of flour.)

Young Lesinski was educated at SS. Cyril and Methodiusz Seminary and Detroit Business University.

REPS. KELLEY AND LESINSKI

Against Us

Here are the members of the House Labor Committee who voted against the Thomas-Lesinski Bill:

Democrat: Wingate H. Lucas (Tex.).

Republicans: Samuel K. McConnell (Pa.), Ralph W. Gwinn (N. Y.), Walter E. Brehm, Wint Smith (Kan.), Carroll D. Kearns (Pa.), Richard M. Nixon (Calif.), Thruston Ballard Morton (Ky.), Thomas H. Werdel (Calif.), Harold H. Velde (Ill.).

Rep. Graham A. Barden (N. C.), voted present; Rep. John S. Woods (Ga.), was absent. Both have expressed opposition to the Thomas-Lesinski Bill.

He went into a partnership with a carpenter-contractor and soon was in the real estate subdivision field. At the age of 26, he had constructed 4000 homes, the nucleus around which Hamtramck (pronounced Ham-tram-ick), the famous "city within a city" (Detroit) was built.

He still operates two lumber yards, one in Hamtramck and another in Dearborn.

He has long been active in Polish-American affairs. During World War I and for 13 years thereafter he was president of the Polish Citizens' Committee of Detroit. That group was part of the national organization, of which the famous pianist, Ignace Paderewski was honorary chairman. Paderewski later became first president of Poland.

Lesinski assisted in organizing the Polish Army recruited in America and sent to France—it was known as the Haller Army.

Later, the new Polish government awarded him the Polonia Restituta.

In the 73d Congress, he became the first Representative from the newly created 16th District. He's been there ever since. Last fall, his margin was 98,826 to 57,730.

His children are Mrs. John Heindenrich, the oldest, who's wife of a doctor; John A., assistant manager of one of the yards;

Mrs. Maxine Pityn; Delphine; Raymond, who's in the Army and preparing to enter West Point;

Beverly—"she's the top student in the fifth grade at St. Mary's School, Monroe, Mich."—and Edwin, the youngest, who attends kindergarten in Washington.

Lesinski's determined that labor will regain its rights in this Congress—rights which he fought so hard to preserve against impossible odds in 1947.

THE KIND of a liberal Gus Kelley is is exemplified by this story:

In his district, no paper ever supports him. One went even so far as to attack him for sending the government pamphlet, "Infant Care," to the mother of every newborn child in his district.

For Us

In addition to Reps. Lesinski and Kelley, here are the members of the House Labor Committee who cast their votes for the Thomas-Lesinski Bill:

Adama Clayton Powell, Jr. (N. Y.), John F. Kennedy (Mass.), Cleveland M. Bailey (W. Va.), Leonard Irving (Mo.), Carl D. Perkins (Ky.), Charles R. Howell (N. J.), Hugo S. Sims (S. C.), Andrew Jacobs (Ind.), Thomas H. Burke (O.), Tom Steed (Okla.), Roy W. Wier (Minn.)—all Democrats.

"Kelley's such a New Dealer that he's even trying to make New Dealers out of our babies," the paper said.

Most of the district must be New Dealers—for Kelley won last fall, 64,943 to 39,517.

Kelley owns two coal mines and a coke plant—and all of his employes are members of the Mine Workers. He's proud of his own brand of labor relations, for the UMW has backed him every time he's run for Congress—and he's won every time.

He has another interest in life besides labor legislation and raising nine children. in development of prosthetics—artificial arms and legs. He studied the problem as chairman of the House Education & Labor Committee's subcommittee on Aid to the Physically Handicapped.

Now he's a member of the Veterans Administration's Advisory Committee on Prosthetic Devices, on which he works closely with Col. Robert S. Allen, famous newspaperman, columnist and radio commentator, who lost an arm with Patton's Army.

After the war, it was discovered that American medical science was far behind in prosthetic equipment.

Kelley fought hard to eliminate employers' prejudice against hiring the physically handicapped. "A higher percentage of them are good workmen, better than you find among those with no handicaps," he says.

Miners aren't the only laborers who back Gus Kelley in the 27th of Pennsylvania, which has sent him to every Congress from the 77th on. In the district, which covers all of Westmoreland county (that's the one just east of Allegheny, of which Pittsburgh is the major city), there are Steelworkers, Rubber Workers, Glass Workers, Electrical Workers, etc.

Though the district is a right good distance from Washington, Kelley averages at least one trip a week back among his constituents.

He lives in Greensburg; his mines are at Mammoth and Acme, Pa.

He has served Greensburg on its Board of Education.

He was educated in Greensburg's schools and attended West Point. Holds a life membership in the Association of Graduates of the U. S. Military Academy. Belongs to the Army Athletic Association.

Congress has twice sent him to conference of the International Labor Organization as a delegate. In 1946, he went to Montreal; in 1947, to Geneva.

HE HAS six sons—five of whom saw military service, and three daughters.

They are:

A. Regis, the oldest and a law student at Catholic U., who was in service five years; Robert B., who followed his Marine duties by entering medical school at Georgetown U., where he is in his third year;

Richard B., late of the Army and now of Catholic U. Law School; J. Hilary, an officer in the Army Combat Engineers, who now is taking a doctorate at Penn State College, where he received his mining engineer's degree; Paul A., a West Pointer now stationed on active duty in Japan;

Marcella Marie, who attended Trinity College, Washington, and who now lives in Chicago as Mrs. H. B. Brown, Jr.; Therese Eleanor and Kathleen Ann, students at the Sisters' College, Catholic U.; James Reeves, the youngest, who's at Georgetown Prep.

Elizabeth Richards, a pretty Greensburg girl who's been Kelley's secretary for five years, says he puts all of his energy in his favorite causes.

Employer Kelley is positive he and the rest of the liberals on the House Labor Committee will wipe out the curse of the 80th Congress—the Taft-Hartley Law—stock and barrel.

Univ. Of Calif. Cancels Laski Talk

Prof. Harold J. Laski, barred recently from lecturing at the University of California at Los Angeles, has accepted invitations to speak at two other universities not on the original schedule.

Howard University, Washington, D. C., invited him to lecture in the Medical School auditorium, April 1, and Harvard University asked him to appear at the Harvard Law School Forum on April 26. His cancelled dates at ULCA had been for April 14-15.

Laski, professor of political science at the University of London, is making a lecture tour of American campuses under the auspices of the Sidney Hillman Foundation, created in memory of the former president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

Following cancellation of the lecture at UCLA, ACW Pres. Jacob Potofsky and chairman of the Foundation, announced that plans were being made for a mass meeting for Prof. Laski in Los Angeles, to which UCLA students and others will be invited.

CIO Indorses Cancer Drive

CIO Pres. Murray and CIO Secy.-Treas. Carey have indorsed the 1949 campaign of the American Cancer Society for $14,500,000.

April has been dedicated to cancer control by Act of Congress and Presidential proclamation.

The cancer society says that at least a third of the 200,000 Americans who died annually of cancer could be saved with surgery and radiation if the disease were treated in time.

Film Tells How To Bury T-H

"HOW TO BURY TAFT-HARTLEY"—a new film-strip and movie—is ready for distribution by the Film Division of the CIO Dept. of Education & Research.

The film-strip contains photos taken during Senate Labor Committee hearings on T-H repeal, and records the voice of President Truman calling for removal of Taft-Hartley at his famous Jackson-Jefferson Day speech.

The film strip, containing 46 picture frames and a 16-inch, 33⅓ RPM recording, may be obtained for $7.50.

A 16mm., one-reel sound movie, based on the same material, is available for unions which own or can rent sound movie projectors. It can be obtained for $17.50.

Orders and inquiries should be rushed to Film Division, CIO Dept. of Education & Research, 718 Jackson Place N. W., Washington 6, D. C. Be sure to specify whether you want the movie or the filmstrip of "HOW TO BURY TAFT-HARTLEY."

President's Conference Report:

'Safety is Primarily the Employer's Obligation'

A COMMITTEE of the President's Conference on Industrial Safety has gone a long way in fixing responsibility for accidents.

"Safety primarily is the legal and the moral obligation of the employer," the committee on labor-management cooperation for safety reported to the conference in Washington.

Safety regulations have been written into state laws, and ways for improving legal safety requirements were discussed at the conference. But the committee on labor-management cooperation spelled out the moral responsibility of the employer in eliminating accidents.

The report did not stop there. It continued:

"Cooperation in the safety program is the moral obligation of each individual employe . . . In unionized plants the welfare of the employe places upon the labor union a moral obligation to cooperate in accident prevention, within the framework of its agreed upon participation."

The chairman of the committee on labor-management cooperation was Harold C. Zulauf, vice-president of Alexander Smith & Son Carpet Co., Yonkers, N. Y.—which has a record of good relations with the CIO Textile Workers. Among the signers of the report was Carroll E. French, director, industrial relations division, Natl. Association of Manufacturers; Pres. Joseph A. Fisher of the CIO Utility Workers, and Harry Read, executive assistant to CIO Secy.-Treas. Carey.

Both CIO Pres. Murray and AFL Pres. Green were members of the coordinating committee of the conference. Head of this committee was William L. Connolly, director of the Bureau of Labor Standards.

CIO members serving as committee vice-chairmen were Harry Becker, director of the Auto Workers' Social Security Dept., education committee; Frank Burke, Steelworkers' safety director, laws and regulations committee, and Solomon Barkin, Textile Workers' research director, research committee.

The conference was attended by 1200 delegates representing labor, industry, the states and insurance companies. There were 75 CIO members present from international unions, state and city councils and local unions. A number of CIO representatives also served on various conference committees.

The conference approved a proposal—of the coordinating committee—that there be established a continuing national safety conference, to meet in future years.

GENERAL VIEW OF CIO DELEGATES TO THE PRESIDENT'S CONFERENCE ON INDUSTRIAL SAFETY.

A PARLEY LEADER

Harry Read, executive assistant to CIO Secy.-Treas. Carey, served as alternate to CIO Pres. Murray on the coordinating committee. He was one of the CIO members named to draft the conference report. Other committee members include Frank Fernbach of the CIO Research and Education Dept. and Frank Annunzio, Illinois Labor Commissioner and former Steelworkers district director.

CLOSE-UP OF CIO DELEGATES: Seated, Jack Owens and Herbert Sniderman, both of Electrical Workers Local 601 and Pittsburgh CIO Council; Lloyd Utter, who's with the Health and Safety Division of the Auto Workers; Pres. Karl F. Feller of the Brewery Workers; standing, Frank Burke, Steelworkers' safety dir.; John R. Kumpel, and a member of the safety conference's coordinating committee; Barney Shields, Local 1397, Steelworkers, Homstead, Pa.; William Hanscomb, Oil Workers' Washington representative; Tom Fuson, president, Local 145, Clothing Workers, Indianapolis; Max Gardner, Woodworkers.

SAFETY STORY

Martin Mahler, chairman of the N. Y. City Chapter of the American Federation of the Physically-Handicapped, told the conference that disabled workers are not only safe workers but cause other employes in a plant to be more careful. Mahler, an industrial engineer, was blinded in a plant accident.

Quick Answer

When John Lovett, head of the Michigan Manufacturers' Association, beefed about "political manipulation" of state-enacted safety codes at the President's Safety Conference at Washington, Harry Read of the CIO had a quick answer. "You can judge what a man means by an aversion to politics by how he voted Nov. 2," said Read, who is executive assistant to CIO Secy-Treas. Carey. The majority of the voters, the CIO man said, support state regulation of industrial hazards.

Merger Vote Set

The CIO Fishermen's Union is preparing to conduct a referendum on the question of merging with the Longshoremen's Union. The merger was recommended at conventions of both unions earlier this year.

The proposal would make the Fishermen's union a division of the ILWU.

Highest Inventories

Inventories in manufacturing rose by $600 million in December and at the end of the year were at the highest level in history—$31.5 billion. Widespread layoffs resulted.

UE Asks Court For Injunction Against Atomic Body, GE

CIO Electrical Workers appeared in District Court, Washington, D. C., seeking an injunction against an Atomic Energy Commission order to General Electric Corp. not to bargain with UE.

The union also asked $1,000,000 damages from AEC and GE for violating its constitutional rigths and its contract.

AEC Commissioner David E. Lilienthal last year banned UE from atomic installations, ordering General Electric not to recognize the union in its atom plant at Schnectady, N. Y. AEC's lawyer argued in court that UE officers with Communist sympathies influence the UE local in Schnectady, thus creating a dangerous situation for security reasons.

GE lawyers argued that, even if the corporation violated its contract with the union it had to carry out the orders of the Atomic Energy Commission.

Cancellation of the GE contract was a union-busting scheme, UE attorney O. John Rogge declared.

National CIO filed a brief supporting the UE position, "If they were really worried about security," said CIO assistant counsel Tom Harris, "they would just have to tell GE not to go into negotiations with people who weren't cleared."

Hits Denham

The CIO Longshoremen's Union has accused NLRB General Counsel Denham of being a "disturber of industrial peace."

ILWU accuses Denham of (1) refusing to postpone a hearing called during the union's forthcoming convention; (2) of refusing a plea from shipowners, who "asked him to withdraw unfair labor practices charges against the union so that the West Coast might swing back into the normal share of cargo tonnage."

Child Labor Violations

Hundreds of children were employed illegally on farms in New York state in 1948, a State Labor Dept. survey revealed. Of 13,817 workers covered in the study, 2,840 were under 16. Of this number, nine out of 10 had no working papers. The state agency prosecuted a number of fruit and vegetable growers and contractors who violated the child labor laws.

Some Broke Even

In 1947 about 56% of families with incomes below $1,000 and 41% of families with incomes between $1,000 and $2,000 either spent more than they earned or barely broke even.

They've Earned Better Pensions Than They Get

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

TWO fine old southern gentlemen visited National CIO headquarters in Washington recently. They weren't the kind you sometimes read about—those who sit on big white pillared porches sipping mint juleps while they complain about high taxes and lazy servants.

These two gentlemen own no plantations, have no servants, clip no coupons, control no mills. Yet as far as looks and manners go, they could hold their own with any bank president or mill owner.

And when it comes to useful achievements, they could boast plenty, if they weren't so modest.

Proud of Union

The CIO's southern visitors were two elderly ex-textile workers from Danville, Va., George F. Lewey, a weaver, 71 years old, and Elisha McKinney, 67, an oiler. They are members of the CIO Textile Workers Union and are proud of it.

Both were working until recently at the giant Dan River Cotton Mills in Danville, which employs around 10,000 production and maintenance workers. Although they were past the retirement age of 65 set by the management, Lewey and McKinney had been permitted to continue at their jobs as long as the company needed them. But when production dropped and fewer workers were needed, they were laid off.

Both Unhappy

Both Lewey and McKinney are unhappy about losing their jobs. You might think that anybody who had put in as many years of hard work as they had would be glad for a chance to get a well deserved rest and to enjoy the rest of their lives peacefully on their old age pensions.

The two men thought this idea was very funny. They looked at each other and laughed; why we'll see later, but first here's a brief sketch of their working histories:

Elisha McKinney, who was born in 1882 on a farm in Caswell County, N. C., and still has something of a farm boy's shyness about him, was 13 when he got his first job in a textile mill. It was at the old Riverside mill, which later grew into the present Dan River plant, which claims to be the world's biggest cotton mill under one roof.

And it was the same one that laid him off 54 years later.

25 Cents a Day

He recalls that he was paid 25 cents a day and that the mill had a 12-hour working day. He learned to be a doffer. McKinney worked there only a few months at this time. Some years later he again got a job as a weaver at the Danville mill for a time, and worked there on and off on several occasions, the last time from 1947 to 1949 when he was laid off from his last job.

The rest of McKinney's full working life was spent in succession of jobs in other textile mills, furniture shops, dry cleaning firms, car barns and other places where he was able to find work. When hard times came, as they did often enough to gobble up small savings, he considered himself lucky to get anything. During the last depression he lost his home.

McKinney and his wife live in Danville with their married son, daughter-in-law and 'teen-age granddaughter in a five-room house for which they pay $25 a month rent. His son is a city fireman. Another grown son works for the Dan River Mills.

Mill Romance

George Lewey's working history is easy to record, for most of it was spent in the Dan River Cotton Mills. He worked there for 43 years. His wife worked in the same mills for 45 years. They got "hooked up" in 1903, Lewey said. It was a mill romance.

Lewey, born in 1877 in Rockingham County, N. C., got his first job as a boy in the White Oak mills in Greensboro, N. C., where he worked for six years.

ELISHA McKINNEY, who is 67 years old, was 13 when he first went to work in a textile mill. Read his story on this page.

He recalls that when he went to work for Dan River Mills years ago, he was paid $10.08 a week, for a 12-hour day, six-day week. He ran four looms. When he was laid off in 1948, he ran 20 looms and was making $60 a week.

It wasn't because he loved his job that Mr. Lewey regrets being laid off. Although he still has plenty of energy and zest for life, he admits that the work went hard with him. It was the terrific heat he couldn't take in his later years. And the noise—3,000 motors roaring in the room where he was tending his looms. He remembers the time he "passed clean out" and had to be carried away.

Long sicknesses and big medical bills plagued him and his wife. Payments for these bills were taken out of their pay checks—$2 a week each, he says, or $4 for both of them. Once he was in the hospital for eight weeks. This cost him $1,500. Then there was an operation for hernia and an appendectomy together which cost him $350. Mrs. Lewey also had several serious illnesses and an expensive operation.

Mrs. Lewey's 90-year-old mother, who lives with them, often needs medical care, too.

Lewey agrees that a national health insurance program such as proposed in the Murray-Wagner-Dingell bill now before Congress, would certainly have saved the Leweys from many haunting fears.

Now that Lewey and McKinney have been declared too old to work, how are they going to manage? They must be entitled to a good Social Security pension after all their years of hard work. Can't they settle down and live in comfort on this?

Smiles Bitterly

That's the question that made them smile bitterly. Lewey receives $22.49 and his wife gets $29.60—a total of $52.09 a month.

McKinney's monthly pension is $24.94 and his wife's is $12.12—a total of $36.36.

But the Dan River Mills has a retirement plan which has been given much publicity in Danville. Don't McKinney and Lewey get anything from that? No, for neither of them qualify.

The plan, started only a year ago, was devised for workers who grow old in the future, rather than for those already at the age of retirement when the plan was introduced. There's a provision for past service benefits for those who worked for the mills before the plan went into effect, but these amount to very little for older workers.

In Lewey's and McKinney's cases they don't count at all, for both are disqualified by other rules. Employes to be eligible must be past 30 years of age and have at least five years' continuous service. This disqualified McKinney, who had only two years' continuous service at Dan River.

Disqualified

Another rule states that anyone away from the mills beyond 12 months through lay-off or leave of absence must start all over again as a new employe if he returns. This disqualified Lewey because his service record was broken by absences beyond the 12-month limit.

Under the company-instituted program, a worker making $40 a week who has 25 years' past service when he joins the plan at 55 years of age, will get about $27 a month for his 25 years past service benefits, plus the $14 he will get for the 10 years he has belonged to the plan, or a total of $41 a month.

Both the employe and the company contribute to the plan, on a sliding scale. If a worker earns $34 or less, he pays 2¼% of his wages. If he makes $35 to $57, he pays 2¼% for the first $34.61 plus 3% of all over that. Workers earning $58 or more, pay an additional 4½% of everything over $57.69.

The company claims that it adds enough to what the employe contributes to make the monthly retirement check four times as large as if the worker contributed alone.

Employe contributions range from 72c a week for a worker earning $30, to $3.38 a week for one receiving $100. If an employe leaves the company he gets back only what he has paid in.

Some Examples

Here are examples of what employes would get: A worker who earns $30 a week and has no past continuous service before 1948, will get $5 a month, if he is 60 when he joins; $19.50 if he is 45 and pays in for 20 years and $34.25 if he is 30 and pays in for 35 years.

An employe earning $60, will get $11.50 a month if he is 60 when he joins; $45.50 if he is 45, and $79.75 if he is 30. These benefits, of course, are in addition to Social Security old age payments, but these are so low that added together with with the Company pension, they bring the 60-year-old group up to only $37.50 a month for a worker earning $30 a week, and to $57.75 if he earned $60 a week.

Lewey and McKinney are the kind of American workers we like to boast about to the world. They are fine, intelligent citizens who know what the American standard of living we brag about means. They want to live within that standard.

It's plain that neither the present Federal old age pensions nor company retirements plans like Dan River's meet the problem of millions of workers who, like Lewey and McKinney, have worked hard all their lives helping produce the things which have made America the richest country in the world.

Ship Re-Elects Officers; Bars Dues Rise

By GLORIA CAPLAN

IT WAS ONE of those unusually frank and sober union conventions in which the officers laid all the cards on the table.

They met against a background of severe unemployment and layoffs in a limping industry. For the past year the union also had been suffering after-effects of the long, bitter 1947 shipbuilding strike. Internal political bickering had taken further tolls. Management resistance and Taft-Hartley had sapped still more of the union's strength. The struggles of the past year had resulted in wage gains—but it had taken a whale of a lot of money, and now the international was operating in the red.

Such was the picture within the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers when its 374 delegates packed the grand ballroom of New York City's Hotel New Yorker for the union's 14th annual convention last week.

Intl. IUMSWA Pres. John Green in his opening address, and the international officers in their report to the convention, had the unhappy task of telling delegates that to recoup losses of the past and to build a strong union it would take money—much more than the present 65c per capita payments to the international brought in.

It was the sort of hot potato a Congressman juggles when he backs a tax increase.

In his opening address Pres. Green put it to the delegates bluntly:

"Organization costs money. Education costs money. Negotiation costs money. New organization is always costly. Strikes are costly and that is where our money went . . .

"Our financial reports will show that we have cut expenses and yet tried to maintain service. They will show that we have not wasted money. They will show that we have eaten up reserves . . .

"Do not pass resolutions calling for campaigns and improvements without first passing the amendment for a higher per capita tax . . .

"No matter what you do at this convention, politically, and you can do what you want please, I plead with you, do not make this a political issue. Do not use this issue as a bargaining medium. The very life of IUMSWA, and the very future of its members are at stake . . ."

That was on Monday. On Thursday night, the administration's determined effort to increase the minimum dues to $2 and the per capita to the international to $1, failed of a ⅔ vote necessary for passage of an amendment.

Opponents of the per capita, led by John Driscoll, chairman of the Progressive Metalworkers Council, chalked up 198½ votes. Amendment supporters voted 291½ for it, but that wasn't enough.

Despite the defeat of the key to the administration's program, the three international officers were unanimously re-elected the following morning. They are: Green, president, who has headed the union since its inception in 1933; John Grogan, vice president, and Ross Blood, secretary-treasurer.

EARLIER THE convention had dispensed with other parts of its business, had heard guest speakers James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer; Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice-president and organizational director; and the Rev. Donald Harrington, national director of the Workers Defense League and executive board member of the United World Federalists.

Foreign Affairs

Focusing primarily on foreign affairs, Carey announced that a meeting between AFL, CIO and British Trades Union Congress leaders in Washington, D. C., on April 7 is planned. Purpose of such a meeting, he said, would be to discuss organization of a non-Communist international trade union organization.

The CIO secretary-treasurer loosed a bombshell when he said he had been informed that Donald Henderson, international president of the CIO Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers, was planning to attend a WFTU meeting in Paris this month in defiance of Natl. CIO policy. The CIO withdrew from the WFTU last January.

IN HIS ADDRESS, Haywood threw his support behind Green's efforts to get the union into the black—financially. He also pleaded for a cessation of political dissension within the union.

"Shipyard workers," he said, "you've got a good union. But don't think it can't be destroyed. It can be destroyed from the inside.

"The dreams of those who work without unions must not be destroyed by internal dissension. Thousands of men, women and children have died to establish these unions you now have . . ."

Much of the delegates' actions concerned national legislation on which the union's three major divisions—shipbuilding, railroad and metal working—are dependent.

Specifically, the union:

- Renewed its campaign for national legislation to insure the construction of a modern merchant marine.
- Sought legislation to assure railroad workers the same protection in their organizing efforts that other workers enjoyed under the Wagner Act.
- Urged revisions in the Railroad Retirement Act to correct certain inequities in the pension plan for railroad workers. The union charged that through their 6¼% contributions to the pension fund, railroad workers are financing the companies' past pension obligations, and are receiving only a minute share in benefits themselves.

Other convention resolutions:

Commended Natl. CIO for withdrawing from the WFTU; pledged the union to seek wage increases; made it mandatory for locals to abide by the international union's wage policy, as established by the executive board; condemned American communists and "all totalitarian groups," and instructed the union's delegates to the Natl. CIO convention this year to seek to bar Communists, Fascists, Nazis, members of the Ku Klux Klan and "all those advocating and adhering to these philosophies" from holding office in the Natl. CIO.

IUMSWA Victory

During the IUMSWA convention, delegates were cheered by the news of an NLRB election victory in the Port of New York. Balloting was among approximately 500 workers in the marine and railroad terminals. Vote was 309 for IUMSWA-CIO; 98 for the AFL and 1 for District 50, United Mine Workers.

JAMES B. CAREY

One of the main speakers at the IUMSWA convention, the CIO secretary-treasurer said "Taft-Hartley was taken from the doctrines of the Soviet Union."

JUNIOR AND HIS PA: John Green, Jr., aged 5½, got an early lesson in how unions operate when he sat through many of the sessions of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers' 14th convention. His dad, union's international president since its inception in 1933, was unanimously re-elected.

Farm Equipment Workers Defy CIO's Merger Request

THE convention of the Farm Equipment Workers at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, unanimously rejected CIO Pres. Murray's telegraphed order to merge with the Auto Workers.

As Murray said in his wire, the merger had been recommended by the CIO executive board on July 14, 1945, and was ordered last Nov. 27 during the Portland, Ore., CIO convention as the way to end the jurisdictional controversy between the two unions.

The CIO president declared that the committee he appointed last November as a result of the board's action had conducted a hearing at Chicago and was prepared to make recommendations to the next meeting.

Members of the committee are Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers, and Pres. Joseph Curran of the Natl. Maritime Union.

Instead of heeding Murray's request, the convention in a resolution asked the UAW, the Steelworkers, Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers and the Electrical Workers to assist in bringing all agricultural machinery workers into FE.

THE CONVENTION, at the suggestion of Lee Pressman, the union's attorney and former CIO general counsel, called on Murray to take the lead in getting the participation of the CIO, AFL and major independent unions in a nation-wide work holiday for the outright repeal of T-H.

The resolution embodying this recommendation also supported the T-H repeal bill introduced by Rep. Marcantonio (N. Y., ALP).

Delegates unanimously approved a resolution assessing the membership two dollars in 1949 and 1950 to finance "resistance" to UAW raids.

(In Chicago, civil suits asking damages totaling $200,000 were filed in Circuit Court by UAW Vice-Pres. John W. Livingston and the union's Region 4 Dir. Pat Greathouse against top officers and some members of FE. This action grew out of an alleged attack by FE members on UAW officers and members in East Moline, Ill., last Feb. 10, while UAW representatives were distributing literature.)

An FE resolution denounced the Marshall plan and the North Atlantic defense pact, both supported by the CIO.

After the convention rejected a proposal to increase its nine-man executive board to 15, the projected opposition to the re-election of Pres. Grant W. Oakes and Secy.-Treas. John Shaffer failed to materialize. Oakes and Shaffer were re-elected, as was Bill Smith, vice president.

A caucus had nominated Charles W. Hobbie, Cedar Rapids, for the presidency and John T. Watkins, Rock Island, Ill., for secretary-treasurer. Both are district presidents.

Hobbie said that his acceptance of the nomination was dependent on the success of the move to increase the size of the board.

Hoover For A Stronger Labor Dept

EFFORTS of organized labor and the Truman Administration to repair the damage done to the U. S. Labor Dept. by a series of Congressional "amputations" have received a big boost from the Hoover Commission.

Set up by the 80th Congress to recommend reforms in the executive branch of the government, the Hoover Commission found the Labor Dept. "has been steadily denuded of functions" and recommended the transfer of at least eight services to the Department.

The commission is known to favor returning the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service to the Labor Dept. In fact, one of its investigating groups has already made the recommendation. But in the full commission's report to Congress on the Labor Dept., no stand on the Conciliation service was taken because the issue is now under the Congressional microscope as part of the Taft-Hartley deliberations.

One of four major services given the "heave-ho" out of the Department, the Conciliation Dept. was removed by Taft-Hartley. It was made an independent agency. Also taken out of the Labor Dept. in the past few years have been the U. S. Employment Service, the Immigration & Naturalization Service and the Children's Bureau.

BECAUSE OF this steady "whittling-down" by hostile Congresses, "the Department has lost much of its significance," the Hoover Commission reported. "It should be given more essential work to do if it is to maintain a significance comparable to the other great executive departments."

The Thomas-Lesinski bill to repeal T-H would make a start in this direction by returning the Conciliation Service to the Labor Dept.

This move has the support of Pres. Truman, organized labor, Labor Secy. Maurice Tobin and even a number of officials of the Natl. Association of Manufacturers. One of the few points of agreement reached at the President's Labor-Management Conference in 1945 was a position in favor of keeping the Conciliation Service within the Labor Dept.

The argument for severing the Service used by the T-H Law's supporters was that as a unit within the Labor Dept., it could not be impartial in its treatment of both sides in a labor dispute.

But opponents of this theory have pointed out that the service 34 years ago was placed in the Labor Dept. under a Republican administration and during that time no evidence of bias appeared.

In testimony before the House sub-committee which held hearings on T-H, CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg charged that the transfer of the Conciliation Service was "part of a systematic attempt to weaken the Labor Dept. and in direct violation of the Republican Party's pledged to build the Department and to strengthen it." He said that the removal "did not result from any demonstrated defects in the functioning of the service in the Dept. of Labor."

What has struck most observers of the dispute over the Conciliation Service is the inconsistency between the Republican Party's insistence on a streamlined government, which would require consolidation of similar functions under a single command, and its steady dismembering of government departments at the same time.

In most foreign countries—Great Britain, Canada, Belgium, Greece, Italy—conciliation falls as a matter of course within the jurisdiction of the labor ministry. Most of the states in this country keep that function within the state labor department.

CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Bonacci announces that in an election at the plant of the Logan Laundry and Dry Cleaning Co., of Logan, Utah, the workers voted 29 to 8 in favor of ACW-CIO.

CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler announces that in an election held at the Nash Plant in El Segundo, Calif., the workers voted 301 for UAW-CIO to 9 for the Machinists. Intl. Rep. Gayle Collins was in charge.

Pres. Harry Sayre of the Paperworkers announces that UPA won an election at the Hawthorne Paper Co., Kalamazoo, Mich., by a vote of 79 to 30. Area Director Nicholas Vrataric and Reps. Elizie Bush and Darrell King were in charge. UPA Local 1009 won the union security election at the Gardner-Richardson Co., Lockland, Ohio, by a vote of 457 to 202, with 73 failing to vote.

SOUTHERN CAMPAIGN Van A. Bittner, National Director of the Southern Organizing Committee, has announced seven more victories for the campaign. The first of these, reported by Charles H. Gillman, Georgia State Director, was won over a bitter anti-union fight on the part of Rubin Brothers Footwear, Inc., at Waycross. There were 116 votes for the CIO Shoe Workers, two against.

North Carolina: Dir. William Smith reports victory for the Woodworkers in the Wilkesboro plant of the Oak Furniture Co., by a vote of 65 for, 52 against.

Tennessee: Dir. Paul Christopher reports his 19th straight victory. The election held for tool room employes of the International Harvester's Frayser Plant, resulted in 49 votes for UAW to 13 against.

Florida: Dir. Charles Cowl "mopped up" in the beer business with four victories. These include: Stewart Jordan Co.; Falstaff Distributors; Lee A. Holeman, and Neal Tyler & Sons, all Jacksonville.

Last week my duties took me to the anthracite region of Pennsylvania. At the invitation of CIO Reg. Dir. Joseph Walsh I addressed the Institute of Industrial Relations conducted by Scranton University. The president of this school is Rev. J. Eugene Gallery, S. J. The Institute is open to the public and many Scranton citizens attended as well as the students of the university.

VISITS MITCHELL'S MONUMENT I took the opportunity, while in Scranton, to visit with friends the monument to John Mitchell. I also visited Richard Mitchell, John's son, and his family. We chatted and reminisced about the miners of Illinois. John went into the mines at an early age and soon became most active in union affairs. At 29 he was elected president of the United Mine Workers. The great anthracite coal strike of 1902 was led by Mitchell and his influence and inspiration is still felt by all who work and live in this area.

In Wilkes Barre I held a staff meeting with the field representatives of all the national unions operating in that area. Walsh presided at the meeting. All of the staff people present participated fully and a field of cooperation was established which will result in coordinated aid coming from all unions to unions which are engaged in campaigns for new members or strikes to protect their members. Such a plan extended to every region in the country should step up the progress we are making and bring more victories to all CIO unions.

This week I addressed the convention of the Shipbuilders Union in New York City. I urged the delegates to unite their forces and use this gathering to implement a program which would finance the union sufficiently to meet all its obligations and to run its many ambitious and necessary organizing campaigns. The Shipbuilders have had a rough road to travel since the post-war decline of their industry. I have every faith in their ability to organize in all of the union's jurisdictions.

Liberal Bills Voted By States

MANY STATE legislatures are putting the national Congress to shame in progress towards adoption of liberal laws.

A survey by the U. S. Department of Labor's Bureau of Labor Standards shows that "not a single piece of anti-labor legislation has been put on the books this year, for the first time in many years."

"In fact," says Clara Beyer, associate director of the bureau, "it has been a good year for improving workmen's compensation laws," with many making "very material" improvements.

New Hampshire is the only state, however, which has repealed its "little Taft-Hartley" law, though unions have been fighting vigorously for removal of the rash of anti-labor statutes placed on the books since 1943.

ONE OF THE biggest gains has been the adoption of state anti-discrimination laws in many states.

Such local FEPC laws have been adopted in Oregon, Washington and New Mexico. Other similar statutes have already been passed in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Massachusetts, and FEPC bills have a good chance in many other states.

One of these is Ohio, where a labor-supported FEPC measure was finally passed by the state House of Representatives, by a 70-60 vote, after long debate. It is expected to have less trouble in the state Senate.

The Ohio legislature—Democrat-controlled for the first time since 1936— has also given partial o.k. to a bill to improve unemployment compensation.

The Ohio Senate voted 18-12 to extend payments from 22 to 26 weeks, to cut the waiting period from two weeks to one week, remove unfair disqualifications and lift benefits by as much as 33%. The bill is expected to be passed by the House.

In New Mexico, the workmen's compensation allowance was lifted from an old maximum of $15 a week to a top of $25. But the business lobby concentrated its fire on bills proposing a state minimum wage ranging from 50c an hour to 75c, and managed to kill all wage-hour measures.

Rhode Island's legislature has passed a number of bills liberalizing unemployment compensation provisions and fighting off efforts by corporation lobbies to get loopholes written into the statute.

D. C. Sales Tax Voted By House

The House, repudiating an earlier vote, last week gave its o. k. to a 2% sales tax for the District of Columbia. The Senate has not yet acted on the plan.

The sales tax, which would affect almost all items except food and medicines and would be levied on sales of 15c or over, was opposed both by CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan and Pres. Dillard Stokes of the D. C. CIO Council.

On the first vote, the sales tax —which has strong backing from capital business and real estate groups—was defeated 170-166. But a Dixiecrat-GOP coalition headed by Rep. Howard Smith (D., Va.), longtime foe of labor, piloted the sales tax to a 216-180 victory.

Murray And ILWU In Clash

TO CIO PRES. Philip Murray the issue was a question of CIO affiliates' loyalty to a national program adopted by a majority of CIO affiliates.

To Harry Bridges, president of the CIO Longshoremen & Warehousemen, it was a simple question of "autonomy."

That was the issue permeating the 8th biennial convention of the ILWU in San Francisco, Cal., last week.

The ILWU officers' report to the convention had given the tip-off to the tone of the convention, for the report was largely an attack upon the parent CIO body and its officers.

THE REPORT implied that Taft-Hartley Act had been fought by the ILWU and the United Mine Workers singlehandedly.

It accused the Natl. CIO of having "abused its authority," and charged the Natl. CIO Executive Board with issuing 'arbitrary orders to international unions to hand over their membership, contracts, etc., to another union."

The report stated: "The National CIO has disaffiliated from the World Federation of Trade Unions. This means that the Natl. CIO has disaffiliated the ILWU from the WFTU—if we concur in the action of Natl. CIO, and agree with the reasons given by CIO for the withdrawal."

On political action the report had justified the ILWU support for the Wallace party by attributing the Truman victory to the fact that "Wallace pointed up the issues which won for him."

In addition, rumors had circulated among the delegates that the ILWU had no access to Natl. CIO financial statements.

Unable to attend the convention himself, though invited, Murray moved to correct some of these statements. He telegraphed a message to CIO Reg. Dir. Tim Flynn in California and asked Flynn to read it to the delegates.

IN THE message Murray urged the delegates to cooperate with the CIO program "to which all affiliates stand dedicated." Then he took up the attacks on CIO.

"I know," the message said, "that you will take no notice of unwarranted rumors and unfounded reports which are being spread among you against the CIO and its politics. It has been reported to me, for example, that a statement is being circulated among you that the ILWU and its officers have never received financial statements from the Natl. CIO.

"This charge is completely without foundation. Complete and detailed financial statements of the Natl. CIO are rendered to all Executive Board members of the CIO at each and every meeting of the Board.

"There have been 15 meetings of the CIO Executive Board since Nov. 1, 1945. Unfortunately the president of the ILWU has been absent from 11 of these 15 meetings held in the past 3½ years . . . had he been present, he would have had the same complete information that the other members of the CIO Executive Board possess about its financial affairs."

The convention took no note of this explanation. The following day Murray received a telegram from the convention asking, among other question: "Will Natl. CIO make available to National unions exclusively CIO financial reports setting forth both per capita payments paid to and sums of money received from Natl. CIO by Natl. CIO unions?"

CONTINUING, Murray noted that the statement has likewise been made that the ILWU and the United Mine Workers of America are the only two labor organizations in the country fighting for Taft-Hartley repeal.

"This statement is a plain and unmitigated falsehood. The record shows that the Natl. CIO is leading the fight for Taft-Hartley repeal.

"In Washington and throughout the U. S. the entire resources of the CIO are being devoted to the urgent and immediate task of obtaining T-H repeal. In order to achieve this we require wholehearted cooperation from all of our affiliates rather than carping criticism from poorly informed or wrongly motivated individuals."

ON THE question of the WFTU, Murray said that the ILWU officers' report erred in stating the CIO had disaffiliated from the organization or that CIO officers had violated CIO policy.

"The Portland convention of the CIO by an overwhelming vote," Murray recalled, "adopted a resolution empowering CIO officers and the Executive Board to take whatever action in relation to the WFTU and the international labor agreement as would best accomplish CIO policies and objectives . . . The representatives of the CIO to the WFTU have recommended to the CIO Executive Board, for action at its next meeting, withdrawal from the WFTU. The matter of CIO withdrawal from the WFTU will be submitted to and be decided by the next Executive Board meeting . . . It is hoped that the President of the ILWU will carry out his obligations . . . and be present . . ."

"Finally," said Murray, "it is being claimed that the Natl. CIO is violating the CIO Constitution in regard to the Farm Equipment Workers Intl. Union. There is no truth in this charge.

"On the contrary, it is the Farm Workers which are refusing to follow CIO policy as formulated by the CIO Executive Board with the concurrence of Pres. Bridges of the ILWU."

THE CIO president then noted that in 1945 the CIO Board had established a Jurisdictional Committee to whose authority "virtually every CIO union" had agreed to submit, among them the ILWU. The committee awarded jurisdiction in the farm equipment field to the UAW, and when the matter was voted on by the Executive Board, Murray said, Bridges concurred.

After the FE's continued refusal to merge, Murray recalled, the Board again on Nov. 27, 1948, ordered the affiliation.

ILWU delegates did not let the FE issue rest with Murray's answer, but again brought up the subject in the telegram sent the CIO head the following day. The wire asked whether FE members would "make the final determination by their own referendum" on the merger question.

Replying to the four-point questionnaire (The last question asked whether CIO national unions would receive copies of Executive Board minutes), Murray stated:

"Deeply appreciate interest CIO policy matters. If you can exercise influence to have your president participate regularly in CIO Executive Board meetings we should experience no difficulty in having a general understanding of CIO policies.

"The president of the CIO is without power to adopt rules that are in conflict with either the constitution of the CIO or national CIO policy. Would suggest that the matters enumerated in your message be brought to the attention of the CIO Executive Board."

The exchange of telegrams had been preceded by two convention actions in support of the ILWU officers' castigation of Natl. CIO.

In the first action, delegates approved, 632½ to 11½, a statement submitted by ILWU officers in support of its "autonomy," which it resolved to protect "despite national CIO efforts to attack and penalize our union for defending its autonomy."

A second resolution, unanimously adopted, found it "most unfortunate that Pres. Murray apparently relied on incorrect report and misinformation as to the position of the union and its officers in relation to the Natl. CIO."

BUT, despite the union's attacks on the parent organization, it made clear its intention to remain affiliated.

The questionnaire wired to Murray had concluded:

"The ILWU is still a loyal member of and supporter Natl. CIO and not one single member or officer will tolerate any statements or move toward secession from CIO."

But the union also made clear that its policies in conflict with Natl. CIO policies would continue.

"We are left wing and we hope to continue that way," Bridges had said in his opening address.

The delegates backed him up in that.

Woods Decontrols 148,000 Units in 27 States In Areas Where Surveys Were 'Inconclusive'

WITH THE President's signature on the new rent control law scarcely dry, Federal Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods has rushed through a sweeping series of orders decontrolling 148,000 rental units in 27 states.

Controls were lifted in these areas even though Woods had earlier told the House Banking & Currency committee that his office had been able to decontrol only 26 areas in the country because the housing shortage in all other areas surveyed was so acute as to make decontrol impossible.

The tone of an April 2 press release issued by the Housing Expediter's office indicated that he was not sure himself that controls could safely be lifted from these areas. The release said Woods had stated that OHE surveys made recently "were inconclusive as to whether the demand for rental housing had been reasonably met in the areas or parts of areas involved in the present series of decontrol."

IMMEDIATELY after the decontrol orders began pouring out of Woods' office, Walter Reuther, CIO Housing Committee chairman, sent a wire of protest to Pres. Truman.

"I urge you to stop further decontrol action by Expediter except in strict accordance with law and to direct him to subordinate his decontrol action to action by local governments which now have the initiative in this respect," Reuther said.

"I am advised his action is contrary to law and he himself says he is 'taking a chance,'" the wire stated. "He must not be permitted to take a chance at the expense of thousands of tenants."

In its report on March 4, the House Banking & Currency Committee noted that Woods had testified that his staff had surveyed 906 counties in the nation, on the basis of which he had been able to decontrol only 26 areas. "In all other areas surveyed," said the report, "there was evidence of the continuing rental housing shortage which made decontrol impossible."

This latest protest against Woods' actions is one of a long list of complaints CIO and others seeking strong enforcement of controls have made against the Housing Expediter. As far back as last November the Natl. CIO at its Portland, Oreg., convention urged in a resolution that "an able and fearless National Rent Administrator be appointed."

Another bill of particulars against Woods was presented to the Senate on March 21 by Sen. John Sparkman (D. Ala.) during the debate on the rent control bill.

- Sparkman charged that Woods, in contrast with the old Office of Price Administration, had "made no attempt to provide Congress" with information on income of landlords.
- The Alabama Senator charged that Woods "appears to have been lax in checking the figures submitted by landlords in regard to recommendations by local advisory boards for general rent increases." He said Woods had admitted that his office had only once made a careful audit of figures submitted by landlords to support arguments for a general rent increase.
- Woods was criticized by Sparkman for approving rent increases "based on very small samples."
- "The Housing Expediter," Sparkman also charged, "has followed the practice of granting general rent increase not only on the basis of landlords' net operating return, but also solely on the basis of increases in taxes. The practice of basing general rent increases solely on rises in taxes without regard to the landlord's net operating position does not appear to be justified. I think the Housing Expediter should discontinue this practice."

"I also think," said Sparkman, "The Housing Expediter should discontinue the practice of granting rent adjustment solely on the basis of comparability."

Rule Says TWOC Can Use NLRB

THE NATL. LABOR Relations Board has ruled unanimously that the CIO's Telephone Workers' Organizing Committee may use the facilities of the board, even though top CIO officers have refused to sign non - Communist affidavits.

The decision is opposite to that rendered by the board in the Optical Workers' Organizing Committee case.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, an outspoken foe of Communists, has refused to sign the affidavit on the basis that his convictions are well known and that signing would be an invasion of his rights as a citizen.

The NLRB decision was made in the case of the Maryland Telephone Traffic Union, affiliated with TWOC, vs. the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. of Virginia. The case concerned bargaining rights.

The board first considered the precedents set in the American Optical case and in the Northern Virginia Broadcasters case.

The Optical Organizing Committee has since become an international union and its officers have signed affidavits. The broadcasters' case involved a federal union of the AFL before the federation signed affidavits.

The TWOC decision said: "In the American Optical case, the board majority found that the organizing committee was in some respects like an international union in its relationship with the CIO, but that it was different in certain other important respects, particularly in regard to the high degree of control retained by the CIO over the committee.

"Such control was shown by the fact that the CIO committee had no separate constitution or by-laws, but operated under CIO's. Also, the committee did not elect its own officers, all were appointed directly or indirectly by CIO. The Board held that the committee was not an autonomous self-governing entity."

On the other hand, the NLRB found, TWOC operates under its own rules, which only it can amend. Although the governing bodies of TWOC include representatives designated by, removable by, paid by, and beholden to CIO, such representatives are, under the TWOC rules, in the minority. The TWOC Board consists of 25, of whom 18 are elected by the membership and 7 are appointed by CIO.

"We find that there exists to a substantial degree between the TWOC and CIO that insulation which normally exists between a parent federation and a full-fledged international union."

Murray Urges Truman To Act On Unemployment

THE PRESIDENT of CIO last week called on President Truman at the White House to ask him to take steps to halt unemployment.

Pres. Murray specifically urged Truman to ask Congress in a special message to enact legislation providing for stabilization as a long-term measure and for public work projects to meet immediate needs.

The stabilization measure known as the Spence bill—already introduced in the House—would provide stand-by price controls and the allocation of scarce materials. Murray called particular attention to Title II of the bill, which would encourage expansion of industry where production is not sufficient, such as the steel industry.

THE CIO President made public his recommendations on unemployment after a 25-minute talk with President Truman. The meeting came on the first day of Pres. Murray's return to Washington after recuperating from an appendix operation in mid-winter.

Appearing fit and trim, and in good humor, Murray told White House reporters he had discussed the "gamut" of social legislation and civil rights" programs with the Chief Executive.

He said President Truman had expressed concern about the unemployment situation, and that he was extremely interested in CIO's views on the subject.

MURRAY TOLD reporters that much of the 3.2 million unemployment figure comes from "tremendous inventories in soft goods, textiles and electrical equipment"—and that these in turn have developed from the economic instability caused by record-high profits.

President Truman, Murray told the White House press corps, is standing firm on his legislative program, including civil rights. "I gave the President our complete analysis of the situation on Capitol Hill," Murray added, and "gave him all our support on Taft-Hartley repeal."

In the Senate, the CIO president commented, "there's got to be a change in attitude" if the Fair Deal program, including Taft-Hartley repeal, is to be passed.

"There are many important pieces of legislation now before the Congress. However, in our judgment, next to the Taft-Hartley Act, the most important overall problem facing us relates to the confused economic picture of the country. Unemployment in February of this year rose to a 3.2 million level which was twice the level of the year before.

"In March, unemployment dropped slightly but was still approximately twice the level of the preceding year. In addition, considerable numbers of workers are under-employed — workng only part-time. The number of underemployed workers increased slghtly from the February level even though unemployment was lower.

"A careful analysis indicates that present levels of unemployment and underemployment relate to the inability of our economy, as it is now operating, to absorb the current increment in the labor force of approximately one million new workers. This situation will pyramid from year to year.

"Therefore, if we are to maintain full employment and prevent an increase in unemployment it is crucial that we plan for the development of a full employment by:

(1) increasing the total purchasing power, that is wages and incomes of the mass of American people; and

(2) stabilizing our price structure by reducing profit margins; and

WHITE HOUSE CALLER

CIO Pres. Murray was snapped as he left the White House where he had called at the invitation of President Truman.

(3) rncreasing plant capacity in basic industries such as steel, electric power, aluminum, etc., and

(4) the Government continuing to actively engage in promotng public housing and general public works.

(5) To the extent that these necessary adjustments in the private sector of our economy are not made, it will be necessary for the Federal Government to give increasing attention to additional fiscal policy and tax matters.

"It is perfectly clear, that the present levels of unemployment have resulted from the inflation which we tried to avoid by the maintenance of controls in 1946. At that time we pointed to the fact that increasing prices and soaring profits would create the kinds of distortions in our economy whereby industry would price itself out of the market, demand would fall off, production would drop and unemployment would result.

"THEREFORE, we must be continually concerned about these factors which have given rise to the inflationary tendencies of the past three years because it has been these factors which have brought us to our present levels of falling production and employment in soft goods lines.

"While we continue to be concerned and continue to fight for the enactment of legislation which will look toward increasing production and productive capacity, we must also simultaneously be concerned about handling our current 'temporary' problems of unemployment. This means that unemployment compensation benefits must be provided for those workers becoming unemployed.

"Benefits must be increased and extended over a greater period of time. We must also plan for the relocation of certain workers who have been displaced in certain areas where reemployment opportunities have diminished. We must also be prepared to take action to engage in certain public works projects in specific geographical areas where unemployment has become chronic.

"Therefore, with these thoughts in mind we recommend that the President of the United States submit a special message to Congress. This message to be accompanied by legislation improving our present social security benefits for unemployment compensation.

"This special message ought to be divided into two parts:

(1) The calling to the attention of the American public the economic factors of the past three years which have been responsible for the current level of unemployment and the fact that industry groups in America are planning for high levels of unemployment instead of planning for full employment.

"Since it is the publicly declared policy of the United States in the Employment Act of 1946 to 'promote employment and full production,' it is as important today, if not more important, that the Congress take immediate action on the stabilization legislation which has been introduced already, with particular reference to Title II on plant expansion, and that the private sector of our economy make the necessary income distribution adjustments.

(2) The message ought to direct its attention to the immediate short-run problems of unemployment. This means, as we have already indicated above, legislation on unemployment compensation, the need for strategically located public works projects in specific geographic areas and the providing of allowances, etc., permitting workers to transfer to new areas better able to increase employment levels."

'Economic Outlook' Asserts:

Swift Corrective Action Needed To Avoid Depression

THOUGH employment in February, 1949, hit the highest level ever recorded for that month, American industry has failed to provided work for nearly 1,000,000 additional workers who have entered the the market, the CIO Economic Outlook charged in its latest issue.

The Outlook was issued a few days after Murray called at the White House at President Truman's request and urged that he take action to halt unemployment.

The CIO publication asserted that America is caught in a "kind of crazy-quilt of inflation on one side—an inflation that drains off an unfairly large share of the country's purchasing power—and deflation on the consumer goods side."

CIO hit at one of the nation's ills when it said, "With savings at an all-time peak at the end of World War II, with great backlogs of consumer demand to tap, American industry had an unparalleled opportunity to produce prosperity in the country for years to come.

"Unfortunately, in a situation which called for restraint in the levels of prices and profit markups, industry chose the path of inflation and speculative profits. It helped to smash price control and embarked on a 'grab now' policy.

"Huge backlogs of orders soon melted away as high prices quickly dissolved the savings in the hands of the bulk of the consumers. By the end of 1948, the policy of high prices had just about exhausted consumers' ability to keep up a high level of purchases in many fields.

"Within less than three years textiles, men's and women's clothing, shoes, radios, washing machines, and other industries were face to face with shrunken markets. Millions of Americans still needed more clothing, radios, washing machines, and the like—but two years and more of inflation had exhausted their savings and cut into their current incomes to a point where even essential purchases had to be trimmed.

"THE RESULT, of course, has been a definite drop of employment and production in these industries. In cases where an industry has reduced its prices, as in some branches of textiles, it is noteworthy that demand has picked up, and with it production and employment. In addition, the softening of food prices has helped restore some of the lost purchasing power of many consumers."

The CIO asserted that "workers in the soft goods industries, already experiencing lay-offs, short weeks and the like, because of the unsound price and profiteering policies hitherto pursued by their own employers, now face even more trouble because of the persistence and exaggeration of similar price and profiteering policies in the still inflationary sections of industry."

"There is need," the CIO continued, "for an increase in purchasing power in the hands of the potential consumers of the very soft goods products whose markets have been slumping. We must smash these scarcity bottlenecks which enable a few industries to milk the rest of the country through monopolistic restrictions in output and price."

ECONOMIC Outlook, which is prepared by the CIO's Department of Education and Research, noted that:

"More people were employed in February, 1949, than in all previous February in American history. A survey of the outlook for the months ahead shows that, in general, employment will continue at a high level.

"At the same time, as of the middle of February, more than 3,200,000 people were unsuccessfully seeking jobs.

"That was the highest number of unemployed workers in the United States since 1942. Moreover, although the general employment picture remains strong, serious pockets of unemployment are cropping up in a number of consumer goods industries.

"Cuts in the average length of the work week also are imposing serious burdens on hundreds of thousands of workers, in addition to those who are totally unemployed.

"This substantial increase in unemployment and the emergence of unemployment pockets in many consumer goods industries indicates the existence of certain fundamental underlying weaknesses in the American economic life.

"While the months ahead seem to promise a fairly high level of employment, the emerging weaknesses point to the need for swift corrective action if we are to avoid an eventual depression."

THE CIO goes on to say "no single simple statement about the employment situation at the present time would convey an accurate picture. The number of workers employed has remained at a record level for this time of year; but employment has also pushed on to a new record for the past six or seven years. Study of the employment and unemployment statistics published by the Federal Government helps to clarify the meaning and implications of these seemingly mixed trends.

"In the first place, there is no denying that the 57,168,000 workers engaged in civilian employment in February, 1949, were as many as had ever been employed in any February in American history. By way of comparison, in February, 1948, some 57,139,000 workers were employed; in the same month in 1947, the figure was 55,520,000, while in February, 1946, when reconversion was not complete, there were 51,240,000.

"These figures immediately, however, have a certain significance in addition to the fact that February, 1949, constituted a record. It is clear that between February, 1949, and February, 1948, there was virtually no growth in civilian employment. In contrast, February, 1948, represented an increase of better than 1,500,000 workers employed as compared to February, 1947.

"SOMETHING seems to have happened to the rate at which our economy can absorb new workers.

"This part of the picture becomes even clearer if you take some other bench-marks. July, 1948, represented an all-time peak in total civilian employment when some 61,615,000 workers were employed.

"Normally, so-called seasonal factors will bring about some decline in employment between July and the winter months of January and February."

DISGRACEFUL PERFORMANCE

Early this year Congress clipped the wings of the House Rules Committee by preventing it from permanently bottling up legislative measures.

The wisdom of this move was exemplified when the Committee held hearings on the Thomas-Lesinski Bill to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act. The hearings were a disgraceful exhibition of demagoguery.

The Rules Committee was set up originally to serve as a clearing house—a group which would determine when and how a bill would reach the floor after it had been approved by the appropriate committee.

In other words, the Committee was supposed to serve as a traffic cop.

But the present Committee got the idea that it should hold hearings all over again on a bill which was properly cleared by the House Labor Committee.

A Dixiegop coalition took control of the committee away from its chairman, venerable Rep. Adolph Sabbath (D., Ill.), insulted him, the witnesses and the nation.

Washington newsmen, who have learned to view governmental monkeyshines with unruffled calm, declared the hearings were among the noisiest, crudest they had ever witnessed.

And the Committee made it clear it had no intention of speeding up action on T-H, on which speedy action is needed.

NO COMFORT IN BEING CORRECT

This is one time when we don't like the evidence that proves CIO officials and the CIO News were correct when they made predictions many months ago as to what was likely to happen to our economic system.

We said our economy was being endangered by a bad balance between prices, profits and wages. Purchasing power, we said, was being dried up rapidly.

And we predicted the nation would run into trouble if the situation wasn't remedied.

Well, we've got real trouble now for some 3 million workers. They're unemployed. And many more are working only a part of each week.

Those out of jobs are finding unemployment compensation is inadequate because of the high cost of living. Jobless benefits should be upped to a realistic level.

Congress, however, should give as much attention to preventing unemployment as to taking care of the jobless.

We shouldn't be required to tolerate anyhting less than full employment.

TELL THEM YOUR STORY AT HOME

The Easter holidays will provide CIO members throughout most of the country an opportunity to talk with some of the men who represent them in Congress. They should take full advantage of the opportunity.

Set up meetings as soon as possible with your Congressman if you know he's going to be home for the holidays. Tell him where you stand on the Taft-Hartley and other Fair Deal measures—and find out where he stands.

Those who think T-H is just dandy—for themselves—are telling their story at every chance they get. Labor should do the same thing.

It's Costing All Of Us Money

But It Takes Money For U. S. To Assume Position Of Leadership In World

By ALLAN L. SWIM

IT'S HARD TO believe that so much has happened in a little less than 173 years—but it has.

It was back in 1776, you remember, that a weak, new nation called the United States was born. Those who founded it had the "crazy" idea that the public had enough sense to run its own affairs.

Since that time we—the public—have made many bad messes of many important things.

But, somehow or other, we kept forging ahead—and today our country finds itself in a position of world leadership.

It makes no difference whether it happened by accident or design. We're on the top of the heap. We're the leader of the non-Communist nations—the ball carrier—and, to a large degree, the banker.

We've shifted gears in our approach to world problems. Doing so already has cost a lot of money. And it's going to cost more.

WE USED to have the idea that we could sit on the sidelines and let the rest of the world go hang—if that's what it wanted to do.

The first World War convinced many of us that our isolationism was outmoded. World War II convinced all except the extreme diehards.

So, now, we're in the midst of the fray. We're internationalists. What does it mean to you and me? What's it going to cost? How will it affect our daily lives?

And what can we expect from our new foreign policy?

THE European Recovery Program is a good example of what our new approach to world problems means.

We're pouring money and material—a lot of it—into the economic machines of 19 Western European nations.

Those who favor ERP view this expenditure as an investment designed to promote peace and prosperity.

Denounced

Few U. S. moves have drawn as much bitter Russian criticism as has sponsorship of the North Atlantic Pact.

During five weeks in Europe I saw concrete examples of how ERP funds are being used. And you didn't have to look far to find them.

Smoke belched from industrial furnaces that would have been cold had there been no ERP coal. Trucks that carried merchandise on the highway would have been idle had there been no ERP gasoline.

And men, women and children were eating food—badly needed food—purchased with ECA funds.

To date this program has cost each of us in the U. S. a little less than $36, on an average.

LATEST important U. S. move in the field of foreign affairs was sponsorship of the North Atlantic Pact, violently opposed by Russia, as is ERP.

Many persons who support the Pact view it in much the same manner as they do ERP. They wish it wasn't necessary but are convinced that it is.

The Pact, which binds non-Communist nations together for mutual protection, will cost money—probably a lot of it.

The preamble of the Pact states:

"The parties to this treaty reaffirm their faith in the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and their desire to live in peace with all peoples and all governments.

"They are determined to safeguard the freedom, common heritage and civilization of their peoples, founded on the principles of democracy, individual liberty and the rule of law."

NOBODY CAN say with real certainty that our new foreign policy will achieve its goals.

Russia is throwing her weight around and she—not the U. S.—may determine the course of future world events.

But the U. S. is in there pitching. She's no longer on the sidelines. she's trying to bring order out of confusion.

Every American will feel the effects of the program. Taxes will remain high. Certain materials that could be used at home will be sent abroad. Everybody will be subjected to the Red's propaganda.

Those who doubt the wisdom of the new policies should ask themselves what would have happened if we had returned to isolationism or had depended solely on the United Nations, where the Russians work their veto power nearly to death.

Auto Prices Cuts A 'Gesture'—UAW

CIO AUTO Workers last week hailed recent small price cuts in cars as a "gesture" it was glad to see.

"The token price reductions announced by the Ford Motor Co.," said a statement by UAW Pres. Walter Reuther, "are made possible, as the company says, by savings in material costs and other economies resulting from the improved supply of materials which were in critical shortage during most of last year."

"We in the UAW-CIO," he declared, "are glad to see this gesture by the company of passing on a part of these savings to purchasers.

"But it should be clearly understood by the public that these token price reductions, as well as additional price reductions that could be made, are possible out of these economies without dipping into the lush profits the automobile industry has been and is still making."

"The present unemployment situation can be met and overcome successfully only by increasing the purchasing power of the American people by distributing a greater share of these exorbitant corporate profits to the people through price reductions, wage increases and other economic benefits to the employes in the industry.

"The time to take aggressive and effective steps to strengthen the purchasing power base of our economy is when unemployment is on the increase. Unemployment is the result of the inability of American wage earners to buy back the products of their labor. Maladjustments in the relationship between wages, prices and profits can be brought into balance only through further price reductions and substantial wage increases and other economic benefits to workers."

Ford made no price cuts on its three lowest-price models, and cut prices from $12 on 8-cylinder cars to $120 on the highest priced Lincoln and Mercury models.

Shortly after the Reuther statement, Nash announced that it is slicing $20 off its $1688 model, and $120 off its $2330 model. Price cuts by other auto manufacturers are being predicted.

Journal of Commerce, business daily, viewed the price cuts as a move in the "cold war" between Ford and UAW prior to wage negotiations May 15. "Ford price cuts," said a Journal of Commerce article, "afford the company ammunition with which to attack the union's argument that the auto firms can easily afford increased workers' benefits because of high profits." No reduction in profits has been claimed by the companies.

She Fought Union But Got Fired Anyhow

THIS IS A STORY about gratitude and appreciation—or the lack of them—and what happened to a woman who worked for a branch of the world's largest monopoly.

It illustrates the thing which sometimes happens when an employe tried to make a good thing of "company loyalty."

And it shows that fellow employes don't ordinarily try to help you out once you've let them down.

PRINCIPAL character in the story is a woman who was well known to fellow workers for her "nasty tongue" and her long record of anti-unionism.

She had been with the telephone company for many years and she had never missed an opportunity to do the "right thing" to "protect" the organization from its employes.

She frequently — and avidly — charged that unions were "no good." They were especially "no good" for telephone workers, she said.

She knew nearly every anti-union argument in the book. Her pet theme was, "Now, if you'll do your job well—really produce—you've got nothing to fear from the company."

She seemed to get real delight out of cornering new employes and urging them not to become unionists.

IT HAPPENED suddenly — without advance warning — and it left the union-hater stunned.

She received a notice saying that her services with the 'phone company were no longer required.

The following day she engaged in an argument with her immediate superior in the office—a rather noisy argument.

What she wanted to know was why she, of all people, had been given a discharge notice.

She said she just simply couldn't understand it.

"WHY, I'VE BEEN on the company's side ever since I've been here," she declared.

"I've fought the union for you. Only last year when we had the strike I crossed the picket line every day. I didn't miss a single day. I was loyal.

"Why, if it hadn't been for me and a few others like me you wouldn't have been able to provide the limited service that you did."

On and on it went—until she finally ran down. Then her "boss" said:

"Mrs. ....., I might remind you that the strike has been over for a long time. It's past history.

"We keep people here because they can do a job and give service. And that's something you're not doing.

"If you don't mind, we'll not discuss it any further!"

NONE OF THE girls at the office attempted to come to her rescue and few, if any, felt sympathy for her.

Some of them recalled her anti-union tirades. Others remembered her crossing the line while they were picketing. And some recalled she had called them "union trash" as she hurried to work while they were out on strike.

Frankly, some of the girls seemed to get a big kick out of the situation. One of them suggested that she "not lose faith in the company which always 'takes care of' its employes."

One girl who viewed the matter soberly declared, "I know now that I'm going to vote for affiliation with the CIO.

"If the company would do that to HER, there's no telling what it might do to me —and I want somebody strong to help me out if that day ever comes." A. L. S.

OUT OF BALANCE!

English Labor - Management Cooperative Increasing

The following excerpts from an article on English production written for the labor press by Herbert Tracey of the British Trades Union Congress are of particular interest at this time when the first of 50 English productivity teams is visiting the United States.

TWO IMPORTANT factors which have contributed to Britain's recovery effort find emphasis in the recently published annual report of her Chief Inspector of Factories.

Industry productivity, and in particular productivity per head of the industrially employed population, has been materially assisted, the Chief Inspector says, by improved methods and increasing mechanisation in the factories.

A fuller realization of the importance of the human factor and its bearing on output and on other aspects of management, has also had a marked influence. Welfare arrangements in the factories have also had their effect in making Britain's industry more efficient and in promoting more effective cooperation between managements and workpeople.

These aspects of Britain's industrial situation, to which the Chief of Inspector of Factories devotes so much attention in his annual report, acquire additional significance at the moment when the first of 50 productivity teams is in the United States, under the auspices of the Anglo-American Productivity Council.

The 15 members of this first team, drawn from the steel-founding industry, include five representatives of the supervisory group in this industry, five representing the technician group, and five the workshop group, with the addition of another representative in the supervisory group who acts as secretary to the team.

Their primary mission is to learn whatever United States industry can teach them about methods of improving efficiency and maximising production in the steel foundries.

THIS PRODUCTIVITY team, and the others which will follow it across the ocean, have already acquired considerable experience of the way in which mechanized handling systems and automatic methods of feeding and charging machines have been adopted in their own industry, and in the productive processes generally.

(Tracey then tells of increased mechanization in the brick and building industries and in iron founding.)

Increasing interest in industrial relationships is reflected in the Chief Inspector's references to the greater willingness of managements to regard well organized personnel arrangements as a permanent feature of their organization rather than as an expedient to solve immediate difficulties.

Considerably more than half the factories with over 250 workpeople have now at least one full time personnel officer or welfare supervisor. A surprising number of full-time appointments of specialists in welfare or personnel management have been made by smaller firms employing fewer than 250 workers.

Much attention is being focused today on joint consultation in industry. Reports from all over the country, the Chief Inspector says, testify to the growing interest in the development of joint consultation in plants of all sizes and in many different industries.

In fact, the Chief Inspector notes that there does not seem to have been any move on the part of employers to set up Joint Consultative Committees merely because they have been asked to do so: they are encouraging the establishment of these joint bodies now rather because they believe in them.

CPers Lose British Union Elections

THE COMMUNIST party's most important recent bid for power in the British trade union movement has been decisively defeated.

Ben Gardner, anti-Communist secretary of the important Amalgamated Engineering Union, was re-elected in a referendum ballot by 47,798 votes to 14,739 for his Communist opponent Reg Birch.

A few weeks ago the AEU membership retired from office a Communist who has been its national organizer for several years.

The 20,000-member Constructional Engineering Union, in recent elections in its London and Midlands areas also virtually eliminated the Communist influence that had existed in its executive board.

Meanwhile, in a special meeting, nearly 2000 members of the Transport & General Workers Union employed in London's Smithfield market, with fewer than 20 workers dissenting, endorsed the recent strongly worded anti-Communist declarations of the Trades Union Congress and T&GWU.

During Easter Recess

Congressmen To Be Told Of Perils of Dixiegopism

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

Congressmen, returning to their homes for a 10-day Easter recess, will hear insistent demands from CIO members and others that they take speedy action toward enactment of the Fair Deal program of President Truman.

Hundreds of delegations of union members will visit Congressmen in their home districts and many Congressmen will be asked about their delaying and wrecking tactics and their disregard for the wishes of the people as expressed at the polls.

Dixiecrat Congressmen will be reminded that as long as they carry the label Democrat and sit on committees as such, they should in honor adhere to the Democratic platform.

All are well aware that most Democrats in the North, East and West and some in the South are loyal to the pledges they and their party made during the campaign. They are well aware that some few Republicans spurn a coalition with the Dixiecrats.

But labor and many other groups want no part of Dixiegopism.

So, in cities and villages and farm areas, voters will visit Congressman X and tell him how they feel about the Fair Deal and what Congress is doing about it.

Meanwhile, these developments were occurring in the T-H picture:

1. The revived Dixiegop coalition was striving to marshal votes for the Wood Bill—which is far worse than T-H itself, from Labor's standpoint.

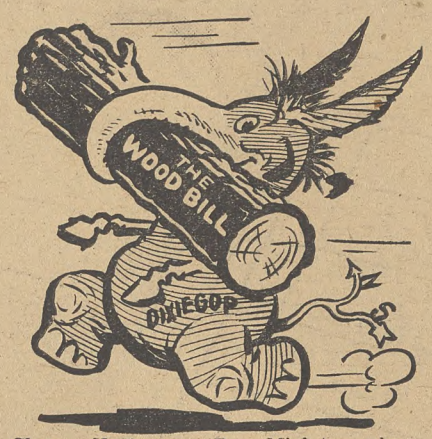
The strategy appears to be: have the Dixiegop-controlled House Rules Committee graciously give a rule to the Thomas-Lesinski Bill (HR 2032). Then as soon as 2032 becomes the order of business, Wood (or a Wood-be) will move to substitute the Wood Bill (HR 3228), hoping to kill off all amendments.

2. Many Congressmen were prepared to offer amendments, both to 2032 and 3228. And, some Senators had flocks of them ready in the Upper House, including 23 by Sen. Taft.

3. The annual conference of the Natl. Religion and Labor Foundation, meeting in Cincinnati, voted almost unanimously in favor of repeal of T-H and enactment of 2032, because that "will protect the basic rights of labor to organize and will restore equality to collective bargaining."

4. Fulton Lewis, Jr., who appears to hate even the sound of the word labor, fumbled another when he accused Rep. Andrew Jacobs (D., Ind.) of "loading" a sub-committee of the House Labor Committee. The subcommittee of five will, among other things, investigate the Shakespeare strike at Kalamazoo, Mich.

Lewis' fumble: the GOP 80th Congress really "loaded" a sub-committee to investigate the Shakespeare Situation. The sub-committee then consisted of one man and one man only—Rep.



Clare Hoffman (R., Mich.), whose thoughts on labor run parallel with Fulton Lewis'.

PRES. MURRAY has sent this letter to all International Unions, State and City Councils, Regional Directors:

"The CIO and all of its affiliates must take full advantage of the coming Easter Congressional recess to win additional and badly needed support for the Thomas-Lesinski Bill and the entire Fair Deal program.

"Every member of the House will be back in his home district by April 15 and will not be returning to Washington until Monday, April 25. Many Senators will likewise be home for at least part of the holiday period.

"During this period it is imperative that every possible step be taken to secure meetings between representatives of CIO organizations and the various Congressmen and Senators.

"They must be impressed with the fact that labor and the people in this country are dissatisfied with the record of the 81st Congress during its first three months—and they must demand immediate and positive action for passage of the Thomas-Lesinski Bill without crippling amendments; defeat of the Wood Bill or other bills similar to Taft-Hartley; passage of an effective minimum wage bill; an economic program to combat unemployment; improved social security; better housing; a sound health insurance program; civil rights; and all the other elements of the President's Fair Deal program.

"I ask that you make immediate arrangements in your community for the most effective possible meetings with your Congressmen; that telegrams be sent to them immediately in Washington requesting definite appointment dates at their home offices during the holiday recess; and that as the circumstances warrant in each district, plans be carried forth for giving appropriate publicity to these meetings.

"We must make these meetings with Congressmen a first and important order of business for all CIO organizations during the next three weeks.

"I shall appreciate a personal report on your meeting with the Congressmen relating their views and attitudes with regard to these important issues, and particularly on Taft-Hartley repeal. These reports should be in my hands at Washington no later than April 25."

IGNORING the wishes of the people as expressed Nov. 2, the Wood Bill retains much of the T-H, but adds these things:

A. Amend T-H to require a union, found guilty of mass or "coercive" picketing, to reimburse employes for back wages lost. This, coupled with the broad language of Section 8B, 1A, and with the zeal of the office of NLRB General Counsel Robert N. Denham to extend the language of 8B, 1A to its broadest possible scope, would provide a weapon for bankrupting unions.

$1s To PAC Will Hurry End Of T-Hism

B. Wood would curtail the right to strike even beyond the limits already placed upon such a fundamental right by T-H.

C. The Wood bill ignores union objections to the T-H affidavits as an invasion of an individual's rights. It provides that an employe also must sign, but then provides that virtually every officer of a union, including negotiating and grievance committees—and the union's attorney—must sign.

D. T-H would be amended so as to broaden the exclusion from coverage of agricultural labor. This hits hard at a group which is among the most exploited.

E. The "free speech" provisions of T-H would be broadened to provide that employer utterances shall not constitute an unfair labor practice (unless containing threat of reprisal or force or promise of benefit), and that they shall not be a basis for setting aside an election.

Heretofore, NLRB has sometimes set aside elections where it had decided that employer utterances had prevented a free choice by employes. The Wood Bill would deny that right.

F. The bill would bar the use of Board facilities to an uncertified union after it had struck, even though that union had complied with the affidavits and filed financial statements.

All those things above will be in the minds of labor delegations as they visit their Congressmen at home this and next week.

MEANWHILE, General Counsel Denham, who defended his pet law the length and breadth of the land before the election, was back at it again last week.

In Biloxi, Miss., Denham told an industrial conference that T-H "is no more than a code for decent living by both management and labor. I have yet to come upon a single instance where employer, employe or labor organization, conducting themselves in reasonable accord with the overall rights of society, has been injured by adhering to this code."

Editor's Note: Come on over to the CIO office and we'll show you many, many instances, General.

Then, Denham claimed he is "only an interested spectator, not a politician. I'm just an administrator who wants to see a good job done."

Maybe he was worrying about the report of the Hoover Commission, which has recommended abolition of Denham's autocratic functions.

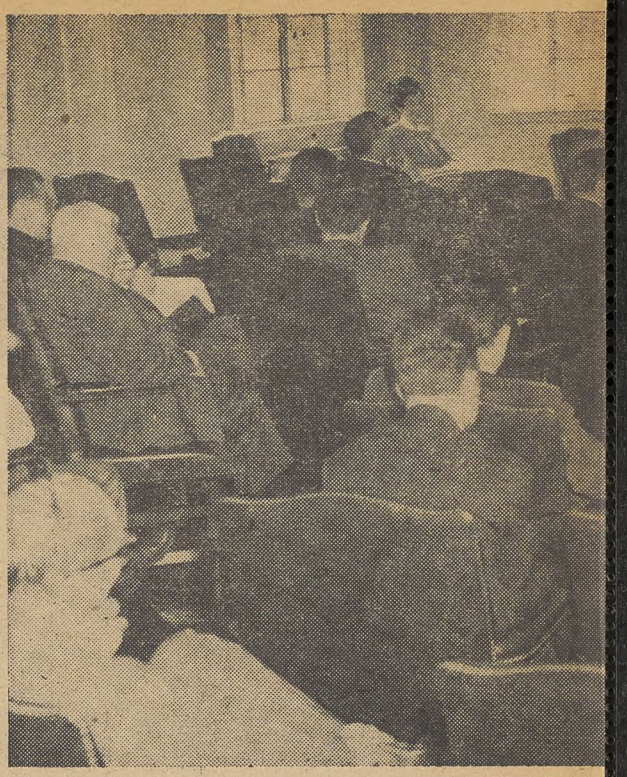
Denham also told the Biloxi audience that "trade unionism has grown into Big Business and must meet the standards and adhere to the rules that mark the place of Big Business in our existence."

CIO Films

Announcement has been made by the CIO Dept. of Research and Education that the 16-mm. sound film, "How to Bury Taft-Hartley" is now available for rental at $5 a showing.

The film was produced as part of the campaign to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act and pass the Thomas-Lesinski Bill. April is regarded as the critical month.

In writing to George T. Guernsey, CIO Film Division, CIO Dept. of Research and Education, 718 Jackson Place N. W., Washington 6, D. C., for bookings, give choice of dates for rental. The film may be purchased for $17.50, and the same production is sold in sound filmstrip form at $7.50.



PAC PARLEY: The officers and staff of PAC and P directors of the various affiliates hold a conferenc the CIO Board Room. Topic of discussion: the 521

To CIO Members

Congressmen request, in sending them wires, letters or other communications, that, in addition to signing the message, you give the name of your union (spelled out, not initials), the number of your local, the name of the firm for which you work or with which your union has a contract, and, finally, the address of your union, so that the Congressman can acknowledge your message.

If your union has no regular office, give the address of some officer of the union.

But, keep sending in these messages.

AT THE to speak PAC

St. Louis Bl

THE DEMOCRATS, strongly backed by PAC, ha regained political control of St. Louis after eig years of Republican control. It was a major victo for Pres. Truman in his home state.

The St. Louis victory included the election of Oscar Ehrhardt, secretary of the St. Louis Industrial Union Co cil, to the Board of Education. Ehrhardt, who has ne before run for public office, led the ticket for the board, r ning 6025 votes ahead of his nearest opponent, who had be on the Board before.

Elected Mayor was Joseph M. Darst, a real estate op ator.

Darst's name must be confusing to St. Louisans. Delm Garst, PAC's Midwest director, is a resident of the city; Raym W. Karst is a U. S. Representative from St. Louis. And, to c plicate matters further, another U. S. Representative from city is Frank M. Karsten.

Elected controller was Milton Carpenter, who defea Louis Nolte (R.), holder of the job for 32 years.

Democrats also won a majority of the aldermen.

EHRHARDT, FIRST to run as an official CIO candidate office in St. Louis, swept both the "silk-stocking war and "river wards" as he piled up 81,896 votes. There w nine candidates, including Ehrhardt, for the four-mem school board.

Termed a "civic as well as a union leader" by St. Lo three daily newspapers, the 45-year-old Ehrhardt also w indorsed by the St. Louis Metropolitan Church Federati AFL's Central Trades and Labor Union, the Telepho Workers' Legislative Committee, and the AFL Teache Federation.

In addition, he was backed by the Parents'-Teachers' A sociation; the School Patrons' Alliance, the School Mothe Organization, and the AFL School Custodians and Matro Union.

Ehrhardt's platform called for a merit plan for all sch employes, federal aid to education, fulfillment by the sch system of its legal requirements of equal education for gro and white students, the unit control plan of school ministration, an end to closed meetings of the Board or committees, and a four-year tax-supported city college.

He made an active campaign, often speaking at four five meetings a night.

The new Board of Education member was a charter member of Local 6, CIO Gas, Coke, and Chemical Workers, which came into being in 1935, and long has served on the local's executive board.

Prior to that time, however, he was a member of the AFL. Journeymen Plumbers' Union, leaving that organization after eight years in 1932 to go to work for the Laclede Gas Light Co., here.

Ehrhardt, who is married and has a daughter attending a public school in St. Louis, was elected executive secretary of the CIO Council in 1942 and has held the post since.

HE IS SECRETARY of the Greater St. Louis PAC, member of the board of directors of the Adult Education Council of Greater St. Louis, a member of the supervisory committee of the Citizens' Committee for Post-War Improvements and Employment in St. Louis, a member of the Board of Directors of the Community Chest, and a member of the Consumers Federation.

Ehrhardt also serves on the St. Louis Committee on Displaced Persons, the Citizens' Committee for Slum Clearance and Housing, the Minimum Wage Committee of Missouri, the Salvation Army's advisory board, the Social Planning Council, the Veterans' Advisory Council, and the Jefferson Barracks National Park Committee, and numerous other committees.

He is a native of St. Louis.

Reilly Influences NLRB For Calif. Standard Oil

OF COURSE you've heard of Gerard Denis Reilly.

You know that he was formerly a member of the Natl. Labor Relations Board. You know that he helped frame—that's the right word—the Taft-Hartley Law. You know that he's a very highly paid lobbyist in Washington for General Electric, General Motors, Inland Press, a coal company, etc.

Now, this man, who used to boast he was labor's friend, but who now is trying his hardest to shackle labor, has been revealed by the CIO Oil Workers as a company-union protector.

The details have been revealed in a letter from OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight to Sen. Elbert Thomas (D., Utah), chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, and Rep. John Lesinski (D., Mich.), chairman of the House Labor Committee:

"We have a situation growing out of our relations with the Standard Oil Company of California and involving a grossly unfair, if not a biased, interference on the part of the NLRB General Counsel, some of the NLRB members themselves, and especially former board member Reilly, which we think should be called to your attention.

"In 1934, Standard established a company-dominated union, the Standard Employes' Association. Thereafter, we filed charges before the NLRB and the board ordered this association disestablished.

"Within 30 days after the company-dominated union was disestablished another company union known as Independent Union of Petroleum Workers was established. We called upon the National Labor Relations Board to effectuate its order by disestablishing the successor company union.

"OUR GENERAL Counsel, Lindsey P. Walden, went to Washington and discussed the matter with the NLRB Field Division and was privately advised by one of the Board's personnel that Reilly had intervened and insisted that the division go no further.

"Needless to say, no further investigation was made.

"We now find that Reilly has been retained by Standard to represent them, apparently confidentially, before the board and before the remaining Board members individually.

"Within about a year after the first company-dominated union was disestablished our union was successful in winning elections at the company's El Segundo and Richmond Refineries.

"In 1947, the Machinists union filed a petition for an election at the Richmond Refinery and the successor company union intervened. This petition remained dormant in the Board approximately 14 months even though this union was anxious to get the matter out of the way in order to continue its bargaining with the company.

"In September, 1948, approximately a year after said petition was filed, the employes of this refinery, along with the employes of other companies in California, went out on strike for a wage increase.

"ALL OF THE companies, including Standard, used every method possible to break our strike. Much to our surprise while this strike was in its gravest condition the NLRB issued a direction of election on the petition which had been pending for over a year. "This threw our strike into a turmoil because, as you know, under Taft-Hartley the striking employes would not be eligible to vote.

GERARD REILLY
Standard's Errand Boy

"It is strange that the NLRB got into a sudden hurry to direct the election while the strike was in progress, but had made no effort to direct the election during the preceding 14 months.

"It is further strange that Standard always requires this union to obtain certification through the NLRB for bargaining rights while at the same time they always voluntarily recognize the company union.

"The employes had no alternative but to terminate their strike in order to vote in the election, but when they attempted to return to work the company refused to take back many of the striking employes, especially those who had been replaced by strikebreakers.

"THE COMPANY refused to bargain with us for a strike settlement agreement and advised that they could not do so because NLRB General Counsel Robert N. Denham had advised them that this would be an unfair labor practice under the Act.

"Walden talked long distance to Denham and reminded him of Section 8 (d) of the Act which requires an employer to continue to bargain until the certified union has either been superseded by a new certification or has been decertified.

"Denham did not change his interpretation and further advised that he considered it an unfair labor practice if a company laid off strikebreakers in accordance with seniority of all employes.

"In other words, he concluded that strikebreakers, even though newly hired, had more seniority than any other employes in the plant even though striking employes had worked for the company 30 years.

"The election was held and many challenged ballots were voted. In two of the units established by the Board these challenged ballots affected the determination as to which union was the collective bargaining agent. One of these undetermined units involved the company union and our union.

"The other undetermined unit involved an AFL union and our union. The original petitioner, the IAM, received only 89 votes out of a possible 2,400.

"The NLRB's past rules provided that where challenged ballots affected the outcome of an election, that the Board would pass upon the challenges before certifying any union. Because these two elections were undetermiend Reilly made many visits to the Board and pressed for certification of the company uion in the one unit where they were involved.

"OUR UNION objected and insisted upon the Board passing upon the challenged ballots before certifying any union.

"The final result was that in the one unit where the company union was involved, the NLRB held that no valid reason appears to prevent the immediate certification in the one unit where the company union was the leader on the ballot and did certify the company union as the bargaining agent even though a determination of the challenged ballots may have resulted in a bona fide union being certified.

"But, in the unit where the company union was eliminated and in which the challenged ballots would determine whether or not the AFL or our union was the bargaining agent, the Board held that a runoff election is not appropriate until such time as the eligibility of the challenged voters has been determined.

"Thus it appears definitely that Reilly was successful in convincing the NLRB that they should adopt one policy in the unit where the company's favorite was the leader on the ballot, but that in the unit where an AFL and a CIO union were involved they should not apply the same policy as the company was not anxious to have either the AFL or the CIO

"This decision is indeed strange and is a glaring example of a Board decision to protect the companies in their so-called new right to establish company-dominated unions and is a rank discrimination against both AFL and CIO Unions."

Michigan

Republican claims that their spring election victory in Michigan is a setback for PAC are contradicted by the statistics.

August Scholle, Michigan CIO president, points out that except for 1941, the spring election hasn't brought out much more than a quarter of a million for nearly 100 years. This year, due to PAC's activity, more than 800,000 took part.

Scholle denounced General Motors' charge that CIO, in running two candidates for the State Regents' Board, was trying to control education in Michigan. There are eight members of the board.

Wisconsin

Democrats won three State Senatorships in Wisconsin, one in a district which never before had gone Democratic.

PAC was active in all three elections.

Strange

Some strange people make up the pro-Taft-Hartley bloc. Rep. Sidney Yates (D., Ill.) has received this letter:

"Allow me to ask you how secure is your job after Taft-Hartley is repealed. Suppose the union heads call a meeting and decide to call a strike of all the unions, march on to the Capital and ask our present Government to step down and they will step in or the strike will continue with everything at a standstill."

So help us!

Aid Program Is Saluted By Carey, Golden

LEADERS of unions in the United States and abroad last week hailed the accomplishments of the first year of the European Recovery Program.

• CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey—a member of the Economic Cooperation Administration's public advisory committee—said events of the last 12 months "have given us tremendous encouragement that our hopes for the economic recovery of Europe are being realized."

He warned that Communists are increasing their efforts to capture the European labor movement for their own selfish purposes. "You know as well as we do that if you keep your trade unions free, you will have a free country."

Other statements issued for the ERP anniversary:

• Clinton Golden and Bert Jewell, labor advisers to ECA Chief Paul Hoffman: "The significance of labor's role in the ERP is two-fold: First, it means that our political and economic statesmen recognize the contribution labor can make to international problems . . . Secondly, the ERP has provided the medium through which the international solidarity of the free trade unions can be more effectively achieved . . ."

• Will Lawther, head of the British Trades Union Congress: "Without the tremendous help given by the ERP, there can ge no doubt that Europe could not have reached the degree of rehabilitation that she today enjoys . . . We hope that this splendid example of the spirit of helpfulness and brotherhood will continue to exist among those nations who regard the way of freedom as the way of life for mankind to pursue."

• Evert Kupers, head of The Netherlands Federation of Trade Unions: "I would like to take this opportunity to thank the organized workers of the United States for their collaboration and help in making the ERP such a successful venture."

TRANS-ATLANTIC TALK: The conversation was probably about international labor organizations when CIO Pres. Murray went into this huddle with Arthur Deakin of Great Britain, secretary of his country's powerful Transport & General Workers Union. They chatted at a trade union dinner in Washington for members of Anglo-American Productivity Council.

Murray Hails ERP Effort To Aid Workers Abroad

IN THE first year of the European Recovery Program, "we have made giant strides towards assuring the families of European workers that there will be food on their tables, and work for their breadwinners."

With this praise for U. S. aid to postwar Europe, CIO Pres. Murray last week told a meeting of British and American labor officials that one of the greatest benefits of the ERP is the "opportunity to meet people, to exchange ideas, to work out ways and means to overcome the economic problems that confront us all."

Murray spoke at a joint CIO-AFL dinner in Washington in honor of members of the Anglo-American Productivity Council. The Council is composed of British and American union and industry representatives, and fosters plans for improving production and efficiency in British plants.

Pointing to growing contacts between American workers and unions with labor in many western European countries, Murray added:

"Early in 1948 all American trade unions in the countries participating in the ERP to form the ERP Trade Union Advisory Committee.

"The work in this committee has given organizational form to the friendships that we have with trade unionists from other democratic countries.

"The CIO stands ready to participate wholeheartedly with the free and democratic trade unions of other countries, big and small, in a new organization which will give inspiration and leadership to the millions of trade unionists here and abroad who subscribe to our common heritage of freedom and democracy.

"Such an organization . . . can give expresson to our common strength and purposes. We can and will create this great body to stand as a symbol to represent real trade union principles in the councils of the world."

Congress Fails To Vote ERP New Funds

IN THEORY, the European Recovery Plan was out of existence last week.

Because of molasses-slow action in the Senate, no authorization to extend operations of the Economic Cooperation of Administration had been voted by Congress before the March 31 deadline. A bill to authorize $5.5 billion dollars for the next 15 months of ECA has been meandering through hte Congressional maze for several weeks.

Despite the Senate's slowness, ECA is not closing down, for the agency is still handling authorizations voted a year ago —and large quantities of goods and machinery for Europe are still in the "economic pipeline."

THE BILL—S. 1209—has been the subject of more than a dozen amendments in the Senate, most of them designed to limit ECA activities and expenditures. The bill under debate merely authorizes the expenditures; a definite appropriations bill will be considered as soon as the authorization bill has passed.

One amendment, sponsored by Senators Bridges (R., N. H.) and Cain (R., Wash.) would have given the Senate Appropriations Committee wide powers to slice ERP funds. But the amendment was defeated, after much debate, by a 67-15 vote.

The Senate recorded its dislike for the Dutch military action in Indonesia on a voice vote.

It voted to suspend ERP aid to the Netherlands in case the United Nations Security Council took preventive or enforcement action in support of its earlier policy statements against the Dutch campaign in Indonesia.

Belgium's Problem is To Sell Her Goods Abroad

By ALLAN L. SWIM

INVADERS fought their way into the heart of Belgium some 100 times during the hectic history of the little country.

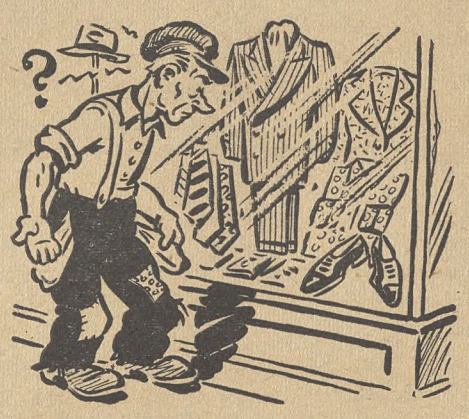
Those who came last carried the Nazi banner. When they finally left, Belgium—like her neighbors—was in bad shape.

Today as you walk along the principal streets of Brussels and look into the shop windows you get the impression that Belgium is well along the road to economic recovery.

A lot of luxury goods is on display. Food appears to be plentiful. Neon lights flash off and on. Many American-made cars move along the streets.

But Belgium, with a population of 8½ million, has some 260,000 unemployed, and many of her citizens cannot afford to buy all of the food and clothing they need.

Belgian workers tell a story similar to one heard frequently in the United States: Prices are too high and wages are too low.



THE PEOPLE of Belgium have a tough economic problem on their hands, and business and labor leaders know it.

The nation has to sell approximately half of all her goods on the export market to maintain a sound economy.

Other countries, which improved their industrial production machine while Belgium was putting much of its energy into turning out consumer goods, are beginning to cut in on what the Belgians consider as their market.

Some of the other countries also are expanding production in lines in which Belgium had long specialized.

Complicating the whole set-up is the fact that a number of Belgium's "best customers" do not have the money they need for the purchase of Belgian goods.

(I visited one large steel fabricating plant which was cutting its work force sharply because it was unable to sell the thousands of finished items stored in its warehouse. "Our big problem now is to find customers—not produce more goods," a company official said.)

UNION officials say that Belgium—unlike France and Italy—has no serious ideological problem with which to cope.

The Communists obviously have made little headway in the Belgian labor movement. Their total strength is estimated at 15,000 to 20,000, compared with approximately one million in the non-Communist labor groups.

The Reds have been unable to get themselves elected to top union positions and are in control of only a few local unions.

Leaders of FGTB (general confederation of labor) and CSC (known as the Christian or Catholic union confederation) say there is no "Commie menace" in Belgium.

These leaders also agree that Belgium would be in much worse shape than she is today were it not for the Marshall Plan.

But they are not happy over the role they are playing in the recovery program. One of them summed up what seemed to be the general attitude when he said:

"Our relations with the American ECA officials are very good, but our own government never consults us or allows us to offer advice regarding our role in connection with the Marshall Plan. We're told about decisions after—not before—they're made."

The unionists said business and industrial leaders frequently make similar complaints about the government.

"Our high governmental officials hold themselves aloof from the people—and they won't seek advice from either the employers or the workers on the ERP," a top union leader complained.

THERE IS MUCH evidence that the average unionist—as well as the union officials—has a good understanding of the Marshall Plan and supports its purposes.

But it is not difficult to obtain critical comments about the technical administration of ERP.

One criticism frequently heard in Belgium is that ECA funds are being used by certain countries to expand the production of industrial items of a type that Belgium has manufactured for years—and for which there may be a glutted market in the future.

Another is that Belgium is not getting her proportionate share of ECA aid.

It is difficult to assess these complaints because there is an understandable fear among the Belgians that the larger countries of the world may completely dominate future export markets.

This fear, in turn, results in rather strong support for the idea of creating a Western European economic union.

BELGIUM, unlike England, instituted no "austerity" program in an effort to pull herself out of the economic mire.

She has operated on a "free enterprise" principle and she has made considerable progress. However, her unemployment problem has been growing in seriousness and she is having difficulty finding customers with the kind of money needed to buy her goods.

Although there is considerable talk about the formation of a Western European economic union, there is little indication that concrete steps in this direction are being taken.

There is general agreement that Belgium has a sound currency, that she is making a real effort to solve her problems and that she has little chance of achieving recovery unless Western Europe as a whole is able to establish a sound economy.

Kroll To CIO Barbers:

'If 1950 Goes Bad,' T-H Will Seem 'Soft'

CIO Political Action director Jack Kroll told delegates to the CIO Barber and Beauty Culturists convention in New York City that the Taft-Hartley Act would look like a "soft" law "if you let 1950 go bad."

Urging increased support of CIO-PAC through voluntary dollar contributions and more block workers, Kroll noted that the effectiveness of PAC in North Carolina was responsible to some degree for the recent appointment of liberal Frank Graham as a U. S. Senator. PAC support of Kerr Scott for governor, Kroll said, was largely responsible for his election.

Kroll was one of six guest speakers to address the gathering last week.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey termed "a damnable lie" the Communists' contention that the Marshall Plan was instigated by Wall Street.

He predicted that if the CIO's legislative program fails in Congress "this generation will be condemned to another depression." He said the Wallaceites, Dixiecrats, Republicans and others are "doing great injury" to that program.

JOHN BROPHY, director of CIO councils, termed the repeal of Taft-Hartley "our major objective." Increased support of PAC and cooperation with local CIO Councils by the unions would strengthen labor's political strength, he said.

Other guest speakers were CIO Regional Director Irving Abramson; New York State Council Secy.-Treas. Harold Garno and New York City Councilman Louis B. Goldberg, the union's attorney.

Delegates—some of whom had come from as far away as Portland, Oreg., and New Orleans, La. —re-elected their top officers by acclamation. These are Ernest Hebert, president, and Lilyan Moscowitz, secretary-treasurer.

Named as first, second and third vice presidents, respectively, were John Tartamella, Brooklyn; Malvina Freedman, Bronx, and Sam Marino, Manhattan.

Resolution adopted urged repeal of Taft-Hartley, enactment of a national health insurance program, extension of social security, federal legislation for public housing and slum clearance, an improved Displaced Persons law and complete reform of the tax laws, according to CIO recommendations.

Chicago Printers Reject Offer

The 16-month old AFL Intl. Typographical Union strike against five Chicaggo daily newspapers was still in full force as the striking printers voted 1,266 to 93 to reject the publishers' latest contract proposals.

Announcement of the vote was made by Local Pres. John J. Pilch after a 3-hour meeting April 3. The proposed settlement had previously been rejected by the international union office on grounds that some of the contract terms were "contrary to ITU laws" and "would be degrading to the membership of Local 16."

The "final complete contract proposal" of the publishers, who have been getting out their papers with a photo-engraving process in the absence of the printers, held out a $10 weekly wage increase offer.

May 8 to 14:

TWUA To Celebrate 10th Anniversary

EMIL RIEVE, president of the Textile Workers, has announced that TWUA has set aside May 8 to 14 to celebrate the anniversary of the founding of the union.

Rieve said that while most of the celebration would be on the local union level there would be a coast-to-coast radio program over the American Broadcasting Co. on May 14 and a special rotogravure edition of Textile Labor, the union's semi-monthly newspaper.

TWUA's local unions are planning celebrations to coincide with the radio broadcast. Earlier in TWUA 10th Anniversary Week they will have exhibits, parades, picnics, open houses, children's parties, and other demonstrations.

TWUA, fourth largest CIO union with 450,000 members in 34 states and Canada, was founded May 15, 1939 in Philadelphia. It was a consolidation of the old United Textile Workers Union of America, and the CIO's youthful Textile Workers Organizing Committee.

Rieve, in announcing the celebration, said textile workers have cause to celebrate because they now have a large, permanent union for the first time in history.

"There is no doubt," he said, "that valiant efforts were made before TWUA to form a union of textile workers, but these were all unsuccessful efforts.

"Now, in 10 short years, we have raised wages so that we are no longer the poorest paid of all workers. The textile industry, oldest in this country, now pays something like a living wage thanks to TWUA.

"Wages have risen from an average of 46c an hour in 1939 to $1.20 today for the entire industry. Many workers, particularly those in carpet, wool, and rayon mills, average more than $1.50 an hour.

"Our gains have not been confined to wages alone. Things which were mere dreams to old textile workers are realities today."

CIO Committee Urges Publicity on Vote To Limit Filibuster

THE CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination at a meeting in Washington, D. C., last week recommended that the voting record of Senators on over-riding Vice Pres. Barkley on limiting the filibuster be fully publicized in their states.

The committee urged all international affiliates and state and city CIO councils join in this campaign.

Barkley had ruled that cloture petitions to end filibusters could be entertained on any motion before the Senate. Some Republicans joined with Dixiecrats to override the ruling by a vote of 46 to 41.

A large part of the report of George L-P Weaver, director of the CIO committee, which was approved by the group, was devoted to a discussion of the historic filibuster fight.

It was stressed because an affirmative vote would have paved the way for favorable action of the President's civil right program.

The committee also recommended that CIO-PAC support Sen. Claude Pepper (D., Fla.) for re-election in 1950 because of his strong stand for the President's Civil Rights program and the fight he made in behalf of the Barkley ruling.

Weaver said that prospects are favorable for passage of FEPC legislation in Illinois and Pennsylvania. Washington, Oregon, New Mexico and Rhode Island have passed FEPC acts during the 1949 sessions.

OTHER legislature curbs on discrimination include laws enacted in New York and Connecticut to end segregation in the National Guard. The New Jersey legislature took steps to wipe out segregation in education recreation and public places, and set up inforcement machinery, Weaver also reported.

Among the more recent development, he said, was the action of the lower House of the Missouri legislature in voting to end segregation at the University of Missouri.

The Indiana legislature outlawed segregation in public schools and in transporting children to and from school, he said.

"The contribution of the CIO, both morally and financially, toward the realization of this program in the various states has been considerable, Weaver reported.

"The achievement of full civil rights in law will do as much to end prejudices as the end of prejudice may do to achieve full civil rights. The fewer the opportunities there are to use inequality of the law as a reinforcement of prejudice, the sooner prejudice will vanish . . .

"One of the most effective techniques devised to dramatize sharply the corroding effects of prejudice is the full utilization of our legislative process—the public debate and agitation that flows from our legislative process serves to pointedly drive home the present inequities in our society.

"All of our governments, federal, state and local, must be the uncompromising enemies of discrimination, which is prejudice come to life.

"In turn, they must be inforced by education — education through carefully planned experience, to break down the fears of groups; education — such as the CIO and other groups promote— through information to dispel ignorance about our heritage and our civil rights.

"There is no need to choose between these approaches. Neither one is adequate for the complete securing of our rights, both are indispensable to it. As we review the progress that has been made in the several states this year, it can serve to reaffirm and strengthen our ideals and methods for the long struggle to realize our American heritage."

Reporting on the committee-approved program for the development of the education project based on the President's Committee on Civil Rights, Weaver said that over 7000 copies of the poster "Wipe out discrimination"—which won the Annual Award of Distinctive Merit of the Art Directors Club in New York City—have been distributed. A distribution of 170,000 copies of the new pamphlet "CIO Wants FEPC" has been obtained.

THE CIO LEGAL department, Weaver announced, has agreed to file amicus curiae briefs in two educational cases, which are being fought in the courts by the Natl. Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

One is the case of Herman Sweatt, involving a segregation law school for Negroes in Texas, and the other is that of Prof. G. M. McLaurin, who although admitted to the University of Oklahoma was forced to participate in the class from an alcove through an open door.

Weaver also reported that the Committee on Equality of Treatment and Opportunity in the Armed Services—set up by President Truman as a result of appeal from Negro leaders—"has made decided progress toward eliminating segregation and discrimination in the armed services":

- Secy. Symington has told the President's Committee that segregation is being ended in the Air Force.
- Secy. Royall has indicated that the Army is re-examining the report of the Gillem Board—a post-war board which laid down personnel policies on racial problems.

"The lag in the Army and the Marine Corps in this area is worse than the other two branches," Weaver said. "The Navy's policy of integration is proceeding much more rapidly and satisfactorily than in any other branch of the services."

MAP PROGRAM: The CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination charts its work. Standing, Philip Weightman, CIO representative, St. Louis; Reg. Dir. James Leary, Kansas City; Harry Read, executive assistant to CIO Secy-Treas. James B. Carey; Richard Carter, executive board members, Marine & Shipbuilding Workers; Boyd Wilson, Steelworkers representative; seated; Maren Lindberg, secretary to George L-P Weaver, director of the committee; Mrs. Sidney Hillman, vice-president of the Clothing Workers; CIO Secy.-Treas. Carey, Weaver and Pres. Morris Pizer of the Furniture Workers.

Court Orders School To Admit Negroes

Federal Dist. Judge Ford at Lexington, Ky., has ruled that the University of Kentucky graduate school must admit Negroes on the same basis as white students.

Ford acted in a suit filed by Lyman Johnson, Louisville Negro high school teacher. Johnson had been denied entrance to the university's graduate school to study for a degree of doctor of philosophy.

The judge's oral opinion said Johnson must be enrolled at the University of Kentucky until the state provides "substantially equal" facilities elsewhere. He said such facilities are not available at Kentucky State College for Negroes at Frankfort.

Utah, Rhode Island Pass Benefit Bills

LABOR-BACKED laws have been enacted by the Utah and the Rhode Island legislatures.

In Rhode Island an amendment to the cash sickness benefit law raised benefits from $18 to $25 a week for 26 instead of 20 weeks.

The House Labor Committee in that state has voted favorably on a CIO-sponsored bill that would fix a 75c minimum hourly wage on employes not covered by Federal law. The measure was introduced in anticipation of action in Congress raising the national minimum from 40 to 75c.

Supported by the CIO for ten years, the Rhode Island legislature has passed an FEPC bill.

The new plan, which prohibits discrimination on account of race, color, creed or national origin will go into effect on July 1. The law will be administered by a commission of five members to be appointed by the Governor and to be confirmed by the State Senate. Labor hopes for at least one of the five appointments.

The Workmen's Compensation law, as amended by the Utah legislature, increases the weekly benefit from $22.50 to $25 a week, and provides a maximum payment of $31.25 a week. Five per cent additional payment is allowed for each dependent child under 18 years of age up to five children.

The Occupational Disease Compensation act was amended by the Utah legislature to increase the weekly benefits from $16 to $25 a week. The maximum payment is now $31.25 a week in a case of five dependents, a 5% increase being allowed for each dependent child up to five as in the case of the new compensation law. The CIO supported both measures.

Rhode Island's Gov. John O. Pastore has appointed Pres. Frank J. Benti, of the R. I. CIO Council, to represent all the working people of Rhode Island on the Employment Security Board which will define administrative policy for both the unemployment compensation and cash sickness laws.

He will serve with Mrs. Margaret M. Sullivan, representing the public, and former State Sen., Fred C. Broomhead of Barrington, representing industry. Assisting will be advisory councils for both unemployment and cash sickness, with the CIO assured of representation on each of the boards. Victor J. Canzano, with Benti, represented CIO on the old board, which has agreed on several changes in the law which are now pending before the General Assembly.

Herbie

Rep. Cleveland Bailey (D., W. Va.) was questioning a Chamber of Commerce witness who wanted the Conciliation Service to stay independent of the Labor Dept.

"You've heard that the Hoover commission wants to merge departments with like functions, haven't you? Well, I can't conceive of a group such as you represent ever disagreeing with Herbie Hoover."

New Plan: Let'EmPay For Aid

A MOVE TO make farm employes and domestics bear the entire burden of social security taxation, if they are included under old age insurance and unemployment benefits, came into the open in Washington last week.

Chairman Robert L. Doughton (D., N.C.) of the House Ways and Means Committee made the suggestion in questioning representatives of big insurance companies who were testifying on the administrative program to broaden the social security plan by including 20 million workers not now covered.

"In this administration bill," Doughton said, "self-employed persons are covered by payment of a single 1½% tax by themselves. Why couldn't that work with domestics, agricultural workers and other groups where administration is difficult?"

Ray D. Murphy, actuary for the Equitable Life Assurance Co. of America, who was on the stand, declined to give a positive answer but said the subject "though novel" is worth study.

Murphy and other witnesses suggested that it might be possible to broaden the social security benefits without increasing the tax to more than a total of 3% from employers and employes. This would mean an increase of ½ to 1% from each. The plan couldn't work indefinitely, he said, but might be tried out until the present huge reserve is exhausted.

The administration plan calls for the increase to 3% by Jan. 1, 1950, and a further climb to 4% a year later.

WELCOME: Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson (l.), president of Howard University, Washington, D. C., greets Dr. Harold J. Laski, executive committee member of the British Labor Party. A capacity audience heard Dr. Laski, who is lecturing under the auspices of the Sidney Hillman Foundation, established by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers in honor of its first president. The University of California invited Laski to speak but later cancelled the lecture.

Church Body Scans Stand

A THREE-YEAR study of church-industrial relationships all over the world is being planned by the World Council of Churches, an organization formed in 1948 in Amsterdam, Holland, by Protestant groups in 44 countries.

Member churches in the U. S. A. have been asked to take part in the study by conducting an 18-month fact-finding mission as to the success or failure of evangelistic campaigns in industrial communities. The study is expected to be finished in 1952 and will be presented to the conference of U. S. A. member churches.

The study of the church in an industrial society follows in the wake of a report at the Amsterdam Assembly which stated that the concept of the church today has "largely lost touch with the dominant realities of modern life," and still tries to meet the modern world "with a language and a technique that may have been appropriate 200 years ago."

The Rev. Robert S. Bilheimer, who will conduct the study of industrial evangelism, said that research will start in the fall. A panel of ministers and labor leaders will be set up to supervise the study in this country.

Mass. Hall Bars Laski

RENOWNED British political scientist Dr. Harold J. Laski last week had another American door slammed in his face, and was the recipient of such epithets as "pro-Communist, anti-Catholic and anti-religious."

Although the British Labor Party official and University of London professor was chairman of a Labor Party conference which amended its constitution to bar Communists for all time, authored an anti-Communist pamphlet, "The Secret Battalion," and has led the party's fight against Communism, he was barred from speaking in a public school hall in Cambridge, Mass., by the town's School Committee. The epithets were hurled by Cambridge Mayor Michael J. Neville.

Laski's lecture tour in this country is being sponsored by the CIO Clothing Workers and the Sidney Hillman Memorial Foundation. Barred from speaking at the University of California at Los Angeles, Laski will use the Philharmonic Auditorium for his lecture in that city on April 19.

As soon as UCLA cancelled the scheduled lecture, the Harvard Law School Forum offered the British professor a forum. It was the Forum's request for use of the Cambridge public school hall that was turned down. The group said it would attempt to obtain Sanders Theater at Harvard as a substitute.

DR. LASKI has already lectured at the Univ. of North Carolina, Howard University and Roosevelt University. He is scheduled to speak at the University of Denver on April 20 and at the New School for Social Research, New York City, April 26.

In his addresses, Dr. Laski has stressed the importance of labor participation in politics. "A political party built around the trade unions," he said, "would make great numbers of them (workers), at every level, pass from the role of spectator to the role of actor. That transition is an urgent need."

Laski also emphasized the need for greater individual participation in union, community and politicial affairs. "The need we all confront is to make democracy democratic," he said.

C. of C. Told Of CIO View

PROOF OF labor's charge that organized employers' major interest in unemployment insurance is to "toughen up" requirements was seen at a one-day conference held at Washington, D. C., by the U. S. Chamber of Commerce.

First speaker before several hundred industrialists was John Edelman, Washington representative of the CIO Textile Workers, who cheerfully agreed that he'd been set up as the "whipping boy" and who predicted that the conference would center on the "toughening up" of the unemployment insurance program.

He termed industrial management's view on jobless benefits one of "seeing to it that fewer people get benefits in lesser amounts for shorter duration."

"Will it take another equivalent of an economic atomic bomb," Edelman asked, "to awaken the employer groups in this country to the fact that our free enterprise system will not and cannot survive unless we speedily and courageously enact and honestly apply a comprehensive federal social security system which fulfills in fact the promise that the name implies."

The CIO man explained to the industrialists that labor's primary goal is to obtain a uniform nationwide federal system of jobless benefits, though meanwhile it is concentrating on getting increased coverage and benefits and fairer qualification requirements under the present federal-state system.

Edelman was followed by the leading proponents of states-rights in this field, and a spokesman for General Motors Corp. who argued that because Congress "seems reluctant" to approve a 75 cent minimum wage state legislatures certainly shouldn't be approving jobless benefits of $30 a week.

Strike Shuts Breweries

MOST OF New York City's brewery industry was shut down last week when 7,000 CIO Brewery Workers walked out to enforce demands for increased wages, a shorter work week, safety measures, pension and welfare plans.

A small segment of the industry, employing about 250 employes, went back into operation on the fourth day of the strike after these companies granted union demands for a 35-hour week, agreed to place two men on each truck and promised to adopt any other improvements strikers may eventually win from the big brewers.

Chief complaint of the union involved speedup in the plants and operation of trucks with only one man. The union's attorney, Paul O'Dwyer, charged that bottling and racking machines have been speeded up to three times their former rate.

The accident rate in the industry, he said, is second highest in the country. Most of the mishaps occur during the last two hours of the working day as a result of fatigue, he explained.

In addition to a reduction in the present 40-hour work week to 35 hours, the union is asking that two men be placed on each truck. Each man on a solo truck lifts twelve tons a day, O'Dwyer said. The union suggested this added expense could be offset by increasing the truck load.

So far the union's demand for an $8.50 weekly increase has been met with the companies' offer of $2.

A number of AFL craft unions working in the industry and in firms which supply it have agreed to support the strikers by refusing to cross picket lines.

UN To Study Co-ops

The United Nations will make an official study of cooperatives as an integral part of the program for aiding underdeveloped areas throughout the world.

Picketing Causes Scab-Made Exhibits to Close Down

CIO STEELWORKERS' picketing of sports shows has hit pay dirt.

Shows which refused to withdraw exhibits of scab-made Shakespeare Co. products were picketed and suffered loss of business.

Managers of the big Chicago Outdoor Sport Show, after listening to protests from the steel union before the show opened, ordered the Shakespeare exhibit removed. Similar exhibits were dropped in Detroit and Florida.

Union carpenters, assigned to crate Shakespeare paraphernalia refused to do so.

Local 3619 of the Steel Union has been on strike against Shakespeare, which has refused to negotiate, mediate or arbitrate on wages, improved grievance procedure and shorter probationary period.

15 Discharged NLRB Aides Can Appeal

FIFTEEN Labor Board trial examiners, who have been ordered dismissed from their jobs by the U. S. Civil Service Commission, will have a chance to appeal their cases.

Of the NLRB examiners who had been "tested" by a Commission advisory group, 14 of those ordered fired were men who have been with the NLRB since pre-Taft-Hartley days. On the other hand, only one examiner appointed since Taft-Hartley was found disqualified.

Many of the NLRB trial examiners affected by the ruling are highly experienced officials of high reputation. Many of them are men whose reports have cracked down on NLRB Gen. Counsel Robert Denham's efforts to broaden every aspect of T-H.

The committee named by the Civil Service Commission to study the case histories of the trial examiners from the NLRB and other federal agencies, was heavily loaded with representatives of the conservative Bar Association—including two former presidents of that organization.

The examiners will be allowed to appeal their cases to the Commission and then to its special board of appeals and review.

POLIO VICTIMS AIDED: Region 1 Educational Conference of the CIO Auto Workers bought mats and slip covers for children in the polio ward of Herman Kiefer Hospital, Detroit, Mich. Mats provide a safe way for the children to exercise and strengthen their muscles. Presenting the Mats are Michael Lacey, co-director, Region 1; O. M. Hawkins, representing Norman Matthews, co-director; Ed Lee, Detroit education representative, and John Harden, president of Local 783, UAW, whose daughter, Jean, (second from the right) is a polio victim.

CIO Leaders Will Visit Israel

THE CIO has accepted an invitation from Histadruth, the General Federation of Jewish Workers, to send a committee of union leaders to visit Israel and study conditions in the new Jewish State.

Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America will head the Committee, CIO Pres. Murray announced. He will be accompanied by Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union. Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers International Union, who had also been designated as a member of the Committee, will be unable to make the trip because of forthcoming important negotiations on the West Coast.

Potofsky and Curran will leave New York by ship later this month, and they will be in Israel during the first anniversary celebration of the creation of the state of Israel. En route to Israel, they will visit union leaders in Great Britain, France and Italy.

IN making the announcement, Pres. Murray declared:

"The CIO is gratified by this opportunity to develop still further our close fraternal relations with Histadruth, the General Federation of Jewish Workers, and with all the people of the democratic Jewish state.

"American workers generally, and the CIO in particular, have extended at all times their strong cooperation to the people of Israel in their struggle for independence and for the development of a high standard of living for the people not only of their own country but of all the Middle East.

"We have long been impressed with the manifold activities of the Histadruth, not only in the realm of collective bargaining, but in such related fields as health and welfare programs, agricultural development and establishment of producers' and consumers' cooperatives.

"We look forward to hearing a detailed report on labor and governmental progress in Israel. In addition, I am asking Mr. Potofsky and Mr. Curran to convey the most cordial greetings of the CIO to the members of Histadruth and to the people of the independent state of Israel."

CIO Miners Fined $2600

A ban on all picketing at the strikebound American Zinc Oxide plant at Columbus, Ohio, and fines totaling $2,600 imposed on 16 strike leaders were denounced as "vicious persecution of labor under the Taft-Hartley law" by Pres. John Clark of the CIO Mine Mill & Smelter Workers.

The picketing ban and fines were ordered by Common Pleas Judge Dana F. Reynolds in connection with a mass picketing demonstration at the struck plant. Attorneys for IUMMSW Local 536 are appealing the verdict. Accusing the judge of perverting justice, Clark said:

"The very basis of the oppressive order, issued as it was on the contention of company lawyers that no strike exists simply because the company had announced its recognition of a scab-herding AFL chemical workers' union in Columbus, is fantastic and ridiculous."

Asserting that the AFL union had been defeated 3 to 1 in an NLRB election three months after the strike started, Clark said his union had signed contracts with the company for the past seven years.

Dutch Thank CIO For CARE Coal Gifts

CIO donations of CARE coal packages to Dutch unionists have received warm expression of thanks from E. Kupers, head of the Dutch labor organization.

In a letter to the CIO Community Services Committee, Kupers said the packages "constituted a very welcome addition to the Dutch coal rations, for the economic position of our country does not allow supplying more than 450 pounds of coal per family."

"We most cordially thank you for the friendly deed," Kupers wrote to the CIO, "and I assure you that the packages will be fairly distributed to needy families."

Murray Gets Polio Foundation Post

Pres. Murray has been named CIO Chairman of the Labor Division of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis.

A certificate of appointment signed by Basil O'Connor, head of the Foundation, declared:

"Through your determined efforts—and the devotion of all who have dedicated themselves to the conquest of disease—we look to the future with faith and confidence that our children will some day be free from the threat of infantile paralysis."

Steel Union Aide On School Board

William J. Hart, CIO Steelworkers' director for District 19, has been appointed by a committee of Allegheny County (Pittsburgh), Pa., judges to fill a vacancy on the Board of Education.

Hart joined the union's staff in 1938. In 1940, he was appointed director of District 19, with headquarters at suburban Tarentum, Pa., and has been reelected every referendum since then.

Union Wins Amputees Parking Privilege

Your union can accomplish much for the civic interest.

In Steubenville, O., the Veterans' Committee of Local 1190, CIO Steelworkers, won special parking privileges for amputee veterans. Jack Moody, chairman of the local's grievance committee, made a personal appeal to City Council. That body then authorized issuance of official cards to all amputee vets, granting special parking privileges and a windshield sticker.

Organizationally Speaking

Allan S. Haywood

CIO Reg. Dir. Anthony Federoff, Pittsburgh, Pa., reports that the CIO Paperworkers defeated an AFL union in an NLRB election by a vote of 127 to 67 at the Pittsburgh plant of Paperkraft, Inc. Federoff also reports that a local union of taxicab drivers has been chartered in Washington, Pa., by the Transport Workers Union. This local recently won a four-week strike which was financed and supported by the Steel City Industrial Union Council.

CIO Reg. Dir. Hugh Thompson, Buffalo, N. Y., reports an NLRB victory for the Paperworkers among employes of the Metaloy Corp. CIO Field Rep. Joseph L. Lovas conducted the drive.

George Brown, CIO Woodworkers' Director of Organization, reports the employes at the Western Logging Co., Independence, Ore., voted unanimously for the union shop.

CIO Reg. Dir. Sylvester Graham, Billings, Mont., reports a unanimous vote for the union shop among employes at the Farmer's Union Refinery, Laurel, Mont. Graham credits the officers of the Oil Workers, Local 443, with the splendid results in this election.

Congress has adjourned for Easter. The Dixiecrats and Republican reactionaries are conducting their campaign of resisting President Truman's program; the program desired by the people of the United States.

Tell your Congressman while he is at home over Easter what you think about it and demand that he measure up to the program of repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, the raising of the minimum wage, increased pensions and unemployment benefits.

Now is the time for everyone to get their shoulder to the wheel. Find out your Congressman's telephone number and address; call him, write to him. This battle against the special interests can be won if the people rally now. Remember, your Congressman is your servant. Act now! All Regional Directors, councils and international unions are called upon to intensify this campaign immediately.

Our Regional Directors are in Washington this week contacting their Congressmen. PAC is on the job. President Murray is back at his desk and he has met with President Truman, who is desirous of having his program supported and enacted. Tell your Congressmen to vote for House Bill HR 2032 and Senate Bill S249 without any amendments, in order to repeal Taft-Hartley and restore the Wagner Act.

During the week President Murray, other officers of CIO, and I lunched with British Foreign Minister Ernest Bevin. Foreign Minister Bevin came to government by way of his leadership in the Transport and General Workers Union of Great Britain. We discussed matters of common interest to people everywhere.

Rail Unions Sign Agreement To Merge

Two of the country's independent railroad brotherhoods have signed an agreement to merge. The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, with a combined membership of 190,000, have signed a merger pact, which now requires approval by members of the two unions.

Organizing Technique

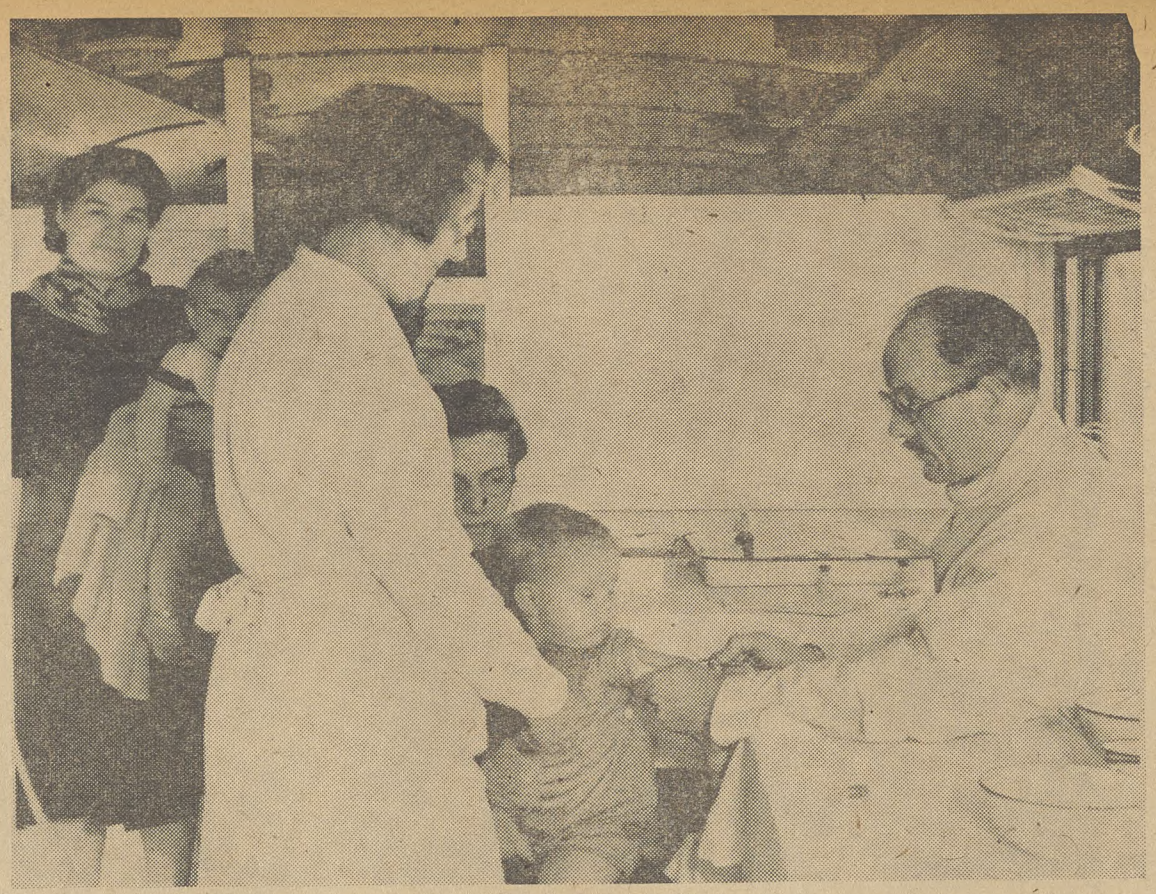
Virginia CIO Dir. Ernest Pugh has found an effective way of contacting prospective members who drive rapidly from company parking lots. He merely has his assistants jot down the license numbers of the cars and then query the license bureau. And then, with name and address of the prospects in hand, the organizing staff pays friendly calls to homes.

English Tories For HealthPlan

IT'S ONLY a small brown card, but it's almost like a special service Aladdin's lamp to the British citizen who carries it. The card brings to its owners the aid of doctors, dentists, hospitals, and obtains medicines, eyeglasses, or anything else in the way of medical care that he may need.

Any Britisher may have one of these magic brown cards for the asking, entitling him to all the benefits of Great Britain's universal free medical service. Around 93% of the 48 million people in England, Wales and Scotland already are enrolled in the British government's medical program which has now been in operation for nine months. A foreigner visiting the country may also receive free medical care.

Dr. Morris Fishbein, loudspeaker for the American Medical Assn., bitter opponent of the Natl. Health Insurance Bill now before the U. S. Congress, has been overtaxing his lung power telling people in the USA that the British program is a flop. It's a rare week when his voice is not heard over the radio denouncing the U. S. health insurance proposal and referring to the "failure" of the British plan.



CLINIC IN BUS: A British doctor immunizes children against diphtheria in a bus which has be turned into a mobile clinic. About 80 children were immunized during three hours on the day this picture was taken. It's part of the Health Plan.

SOME MINOR gripes Dr. Fishbein picked up during a few days' visit to England last fall when the program had been in operation less than two months, seem to be the main basis for his charges against what he calls "the assembly line medicine" of the British program. This is also his favorite term in opposing the U. S. health insurance plan.

Attempts of Dr. Fishbein and the AMA to smear the British health system in the course of attacks on the U. S. Health Insurance Bill are being stymied, however, by news dispatches from England reporting on the tremendous popularly of Britain's program.

The New York Times London correspondent in a recent dispatch reported that "there is no substantial political or professional group in the country that proposes to abandon the service, fundamentally alter its character or drastically cut its costs."

An article in the U. S. News & World Report states that the Conservatives in the 1950 political campaign "will not ask that the National Health Plan be dropped," because they know such a proposal would be "political suicide."

THE BRITISH health plan functions simply and is comprehensive in its scope. Literally every man, woman and child in the country can get medical, dental, and hospital care under it, merely by registering and getting his brown card. Those with jobs pay a small weekly contribution to the service along with payments to other social security benefits. The rest of the costs are paid out of regular taxes.

Patients can choose their own doctors, and doctors have a right to accept or reject patients. General practitioners are paid by the government on the basis of an annual fee for each of his patients.

If a person needs glasses or dental care, all he has to do is to go to the nearest qualified optician or dentist.

Doctors, dentists and opticians are free to sign up for the program if they choose. The large part of them have done so. About 20,000 of Great Britain's 21,000 general practitioners, and nearly all of the 14,000 dentists, 10,000 druggists, and 7,000 opticians have joined in the government's plan to keep the British people healthy from birth to old age.

No 'Oaths' In Britain

Prime Minister Clement R. Attlee of Great Britain has rejected a suggestion by Conservatives that loyalty oaths be required of all civil servants. Pointing out that such oaths do not protect the nation. Attlee told the House of Commons that "I should not have thought myself that a person who was preparing to engage in treason would boggle at an oath or two."

Boycott Ban In T-H Tightened

CIO, AFL AND independent unions have been hit by the NLRB in its campaign to tighten up enforcement of Taft-Hartley's anti-secondary boycott provisions.

The CIO Natl. Union of Marine Cooks & Stewards, and the independent Pacific Coast Fireman & Oilers were ordered by a trial examiner to stop picketing Gulf coast shipyards of companies affiliated with the Pacific-American Shipping Association against which a strike was being conducted on the west coast.

Brushing aside the unions' contention that the picketing was designed to prevent the ships from sailing with scab crews during the strike. Examiner Charles Ferguson said it was a secondary boycott aimed at forcing the west coast operators to settle the strike.

IN ANOTHER case, involving a non-union subcontractor Local 498 of AFL the Plumbers Union, in Gadsden, Ala., was found guilty of conducting a secondary boycott, because it picketed a construction site.

Then the five-man NLRB itself overruled a trial examiner and said that an AFL federal local violated Taft-Hartley by sending its pickets to the platforms of a trucking company which was handling paper food containers made by a strike-bound company.

In a departure from some of its recent decisions, the board refused to upset the decision of a trial examiner who maintained that the complaint of Walter J. Mentzer, Pittsburgh, Pa., plastering contractor, against the AFL Plasterers Union has nothing to do with interstate commerce.

The board declined to hear the case, which Mentzer brought because he said he was forced to discharge an employe under the closed-shop contract with the union.

Co-op League Sponsors Parley

Representatives of labor, farm and cooperative organizations from all sections of the country will attend an Economic Action Conference scheduled to open in Washington April 10. The three-day conference, sponsored by the Cooperative League, will seek to find "common ground" for an economic program to meet the problems facing America today.

Featured speakers include Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin, Secy. of Agriculture Charles Brannan, Sens. Joseph O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.), George D. Aiken (R., Vt.), and Hubert Humphrey (D., Minn.), and Rep. Wright Patman (D., Tex.).

Kansas Loyalty Vow

All public employes, teachers and legislators must sign a loyalty oath under terms of a law enacted by the Kansas Legislature and signed by the governor. Refusal to sign the oath affirming non-membership in any organization or party which advocates overthrow of the government by violence will bring dismissal from office or position. The law also bans teaching, writing or urging overthrow of the government by violence under penalty of a fine up to $10,000.

EXECUTIVE 5581

TO ALL CIO AFFILIATES:

Every member of the House of Representatives will be back in his home district by April 15th and will not be returning to Washington until Monday, April 25th. Many Senators will likewise be home for at least part of the holiday period. During this period it is imperative that every possible step be taken to secure meetings between representatives of CIO organizations and the various Congressmen and Senators. They must be impressed with the fact that labor and the people in this country are dissatisfied with the record of the 81st Congress during its first three months.

Fraternally yours,

Philip Murray

NO RECESS ON T-H: This week, delegations of CIO members throughout the U. S. are calling on their Congressmen, telling them their views on the Fair Deal, particularly Taft-Hartley repeal. The Congressmen have travelled home for a 10-day recess. Below, part of Pres. Philip Murray's letter urging the visits. See Page 3 for more on T-H.

CIO Plans Action To Aid Jobless

CIO UNIONS have been advised to take quick action to set up special services for unemployed members.

The suggestion for meeting unemployment problems with a well-rounded program was sent to all industrial union councils by John Brophy, CIO councils director, and Leo Perlis, director of the CIO Community Services Committee.

"It is an important principle of sound trade unionism that the union is responsible for the welfare of the unemployed member as much as it is for the welfare of the employed member," the letter said.

"TO MEET this responsibility, we suggest that industrial union councils take steps to establish functioning Community Services Committees."

These committees, the Brophy-Perlis letter pointed out, can work together with other community groups to initiate programs to meet the "personal health and welfare needs of CIO members. The promotion and development of union counselling programs will help in this respect."

Recommended to the councils as a course of action to help jobless CIO members:

- Special attention to campaigns to improve unemployment compensation laws, relief rules, and granting of emergency or supplementary relief payments.
- Establishment by city authorities of labor-management-public committees to survey community needs, provide funds for emergency needs.
- Promotion of the CIO political action and legislative programs in Congress and state legislatures.

The national CIO Community Services Committee, 1776 Broadway, New York 19, is offering further information and staff assistance on unemployment problems to all CIO councils.

MEANWHILE, continued unemployment is reported from widely scattered sections of the country.

At Cincinnati the employment service office reported 16,839 job seekers registered April 1—a reduction of 2.9% from February figures, but 100% above the corresponding period last year.

Of an estimated 80,000 out of work throughout the state, 67,974 applied for benefits. This was nearly triple the number who received benefits in the similar week of 1948 and the largest number of claimants in the 11 years that the state has paid benefits.

The Connecticut CIO Council several weeks ago held a conference which called for action on a program including liberalized unemployment compensation and state public works.

At Chicago, the CIO Steelworkers reported that 4480 of its members have been laid off in that area since Jan. 1 because of a slump in production.

In Oregon, unemployed workers who have exhausted their jobless insurance and other recipients of general assistance face a grim future.

Requisitions have been slashed below social security program standards in 11 counties, it was reported.

Missouri Should Elect Two New Senators, Declares St. Louis Post-Dispatch Editorial

The following editorial, "Needed: Two New Senators," is from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch:

Missouri's two Senators—Forrest Donnell and James Kem—must have Washington wondering these days. Washington must wonder if they really represent Missouri sentiment or if they merely are somewhat eccentric individualists. This Missouri newspaper belongs to the latter school of thought.

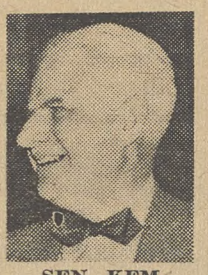
$1s To PAC Can Beat Kem and Donnell

Sen. Donnell has decided that the Atlantic Pact is illegal and unconstitutional, and is evidently thinking of making a major fight against ratification. In discussing the Senator the other day, the Alsop brothers said: "His life has been passed among law books, and the letter of the law is very sacred to him." As all Missouri knows, this is understatement. Actually, Sen. Donnell is the most tireless quibbler that ever served the state in public life.

Sen. Kem has a quirk of a different kind. His homesickness for the political and economic climate of the nineteenth century is so strong that he is a senatorial anachronism. He should have served wih James G. Blaine and William McKinley, though they probably would have looked progressive by comparison. Sen. Kem is not only a reactionary in domestic politics, but he instinctively hides his head in the sand where foreign policy is concerned, as his record clearly shows.

Both these tendencies were amazingly combined in an amendment offered by the junior Senator to the ECA bill. The Kem amendment would have prohibited use of European aid funds for nationalization or socialization of European industries. The Senator argued that Socialism was linked with Communism and made it plain his amendment was aimed at policies of the British Government.

The Senate made short shrift of this arrogant attempt to tell the British how they should govern themselves. It turned back the Kem amendment, 62 to 20, after Sen. Connally said Kem's idea would be "impossible to administer," and Paul Hoffman said the restriction "would undermine the entire recovery program" and be used to bolster Communist propaganda that the United States is trying to dominate Europe.



SEN. KEM

In the end, Sen. Kem was one of the seven who voted against continuation of funds for the Marshall plan.

As for Sen. Kem's attempt to link British Socialism with Communism—to link the policies of men like Clement Attlee and Ernest Bevin with the policies of Stalin and Molotov—it is humiliating to Missouri that one of its Senators should make so grotesque a display of political illiteracy. There is a vast difference between the Fabian Socialism of Britain and the revolutionary character of Marxism. There is even a greater difference between Fabian Socialism and Marxism as perverted by Stalinism.

But whereas Sen. Kem is a kind of meat ax performer, Sen. Donnell, once he embarks on a course, is inclined to be persistence personified. He is inclined to argue endlessly to support his super-legalistic points. Therefore, he may cause delay and trouble when the Atlantic Pact debate gets under way. He may try to do in his way to the Atlantic Pact what James A. Reed did in another way to the League of Nations.

Missouri needs two new Senators more attuned to the spirit of the mid-twentieth century .

Minimum Wage Rise Asked

FOR THE 10th time in recent years, the CIO appeared last week before a Congressional Committee to ask drastic improvements in the Wage-Hour law.

Appearing before a Senate subcommittee, Sol Barkin, research director of the Textile Workers, described the present 40c minimum as obsolete, and demanded that it be increased to at least 75c.

A witness for the national CIO, Barkin said a 75c minimum would be "an intermediate step toward the establishment of a minimum living wage."

He testified in support of S. 653, now under consideration by the Labor Committee, as a companion measure to the Lesinski Bill, already approved by the House Labor Committee.

In his testimony Barkin lashed out at employer proposals to make the minimum wage a flexible level, moving up and down with the price index.

"To reduce the inadequate legal minimum with each drop of a point or two in the cost of consumer goods would be to condemn workers at the minimum level to permanent sub-standards of living," the CIO witness charged.

"A fluctuating minimum is economically impractical and would create unrest; it would serve only the unscrupulous employer. It provides government sanction to wage cutting and the wholesale collapse of our economy."

BARKIN also hit proposals for a Southern regional differential to provide a lower minimum wage in that area.

Such differentials are "unjustified," he said, since "there are no distinct differences in living costs by regions or size of community.

"The differences in the costs of living among cities in the same regions are greater, or as great, as differences among regions. A national minimum will not impede the development of the South or of smaller communities."

Many industrialists do not welcome the proposals for lower minimum rates in the South, Barkin told the Senators. "They create unfair competition and are impossible to administer."

OTHER CIO witnesses joined with Barkin urging extension of wage-hour coverage as well as lifting of the minimum pay rate. They were Mrs. Helen Blanchard of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers department store organizing committee; and Dolly Lowther of the ACW Laundry Workers Union.

The CIO urged nine changes in the present law to close loopholes on exemptions from wage-hour provisions, and to add coverage among workers not now protected by the law. The changes recommended:

1. Coverage for all employes engaged in interstate commerce or in the production of goods for interstate commerce.
2. Coverage for retail and service firms with four or more establishments and an annual sales volume of a half-million dollars; and coverage for workers in firms which derive more than 25% from activities other than retailing.

(Barkin estimated these changes would bring an additional 3¼ million workers under the law—of whom more than 600,000 now are paid less than 75c an hour.)

3. Ending exemptions from wage provisions for transport company workers.
4. Application of the 40-hour overtime provisions to seamen in the merchant marine.
5. Ending of exemptions for workers in the fish processing industry.
6. Ending of exemptions on minimum wages for workers in large industrialized farm operations.
7. Ending of the exemption from the hours provisions of workers who process agricultural products.
8. Ending of a provision by which the Secretary of Labor can exempt employers in seasonal and agricultural processing industries from overtime pay provisions for a 14-week period.
9. Ending of exemptions for switchboard operators in public telephone exchanges having less than 500 phone connections.

Barkin pointed out that all political parties have agreed that the 40-cent minimum is outmoded.

The 75c minimum—with provision for increases in specified industries up to $1 an hour—would prevent workers from being victimized, he said.

$1.05 Minimum Set By Tobin

A minimum wage of $1.05 an hour for all employes of woolen and worsted firms working on government contracts has been set by Sec. of Labor Tobin.

The action was based on a petition filed by the CIO Textile Workers. The new minimum —amounting to $42 for a 40-hour week—was set under terms of the Walsh-Healey Act, which covers minimum pay rates for public contractors.

Some 150,000 workers, principally in the New England and Middle Atlantic states, will benefit from Tobin's order, which goes into effect May 14.

Woods Lifts Controls In Boston

By GLORIA CAPLAN

IN WHAT is regarded by CIO legislative representatives as a violation of the Federal rent law, Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods has ordered a general rent increase for Greater Boston and 75 surrounding Massachusetts towns.

The boosts, ranging from 2 to 17%, follow close on the heels of a series of broad decontrol action by Woods in which ceilings were lifted from 148,000 rental units—mostly rural. Boston is the first large city to have received a general boost. Some 275,000 housing units will be affected.

CIO Housing Committee Director Leo Goodman branded Woods' action a "specific violation of the law." He said that rent increases, based solely on higher taxes, were specifically forbidden by Congress. The CIO, he said, will take "whatever steps are necessary" to see that the order is withdrawn.

BEFORE THE order was made public, CIO Assistant Legislative Director William Lavelle, Don Montgomery, Auto Workers legislative representative, and Goodman met with Woods to protest the forthcoming order.

The CIO delegation, he said, pointed out that under the new law, such increases based solely on tax increases could no longer be ordered.

According to Goodman, Woods agreed to that interpretation of the law, but said, "I am going to let this one go through because it was in the works before the law went into effect."

Mounting resentment in the affected Massachusetts area last week appeared ready to give rise to a mass protest meeting and a court battle to throw off the rent rise.

Meanwhile, in the Senate, the bill which is expected ultimately to eliminate the housing shortage and with it rent crises, hit the floor.

Backed by 11 Democrats and 11 Republicans, it would provide for the construction of 810,000 public housing units over a six-year period. Included also are a slum clearance program, farm housing and a federal building methods research program.

IN AN effort to kill the bill, Republicans John Bricker and Harry Cain hurried to introduce an amendment barring segregation in public housing. It appeared, however, that the sincere foes of segregation in the Upper House would not fall for the more liberal Senators Douglas, Humphrey and Taylor have promised to fight it, insisting that civil rights guarantees should be handled in separate legislation.

Neither were many Negro organizations sucked in by the maneuver. Said the Natl. Council of Negro Women: "Despite all that we have at stake in S. 1070, the enemies of public housing are trying to use us to kill the bill through the Cain-Bricker anti-segregation amendment!

"This is the Cain who introduced an anti-segregation amendment one day and helped the Southerners' anti-civil rights filibuster a few days later!

Folks At Home See Congressmen; Debate On T-H Opens April 26

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

HOUSE debate on the Thomas-Lesinski Bill has been scheduled at long last, amid indications that it will pass without crippling amendments.

Rep. John A. Lesinski (D., Mich.), chairman of the House Labor Committee, which had approved the bill (HR 2032) by a 13-10 vote, originally asked the Rules group for a "closed" rule, but withdrew that request. Labor Secy. Tobin and Lesinski are confident the House will pass the bill in toto.

Under a closed rule, no amendments can be offered; the House must either vote to accept or reject the entire bill. Under an open rule, amendments may be offered.

There were these other bits of news about Thomas-Lesinski, which repeals T-H and reenacts the Wagner Act with certain revisions:

(1) Rep. Charles Howell (D., N. J.) reported that a survey of his district, conducted through an unloaded questionnaire, had indicated that his constituents are overwhelmingly for most of the Fair Deal, including the abolition of T-H.

(2) Many Representatives, at home for the 10-day Easter recess, were being visited by CIO delegations, in line with CIO Pres. Philip Murray's appeal that "it is imperative that every possible step be taken to secure" these meetings.

(3) In an effort to capture unwary middle of the road Congressmen's votes, Rep. John Wood (D., Ga.) made a last-minute switch last week. He offered a substitute for his original Wood Bill.

The substitute eliminated a few of the restrictive features of the former Wood Bill and of T-H, but retains many of the inequitable portions of T-H. It is similar in almost every detail to the amendments Sen. Taft has indicated he will offer.

One labor leader said it was like offering only aspirin to a man who has had his leg shot off.

Chairman Adolph J. Sabath (D., Ill.), venerable chairman of the Rules Committee, predicted that the House will take a final vote four or five days after debate opens. However, since each member has a right to speak five minutes on any amendment — of which there are expected to be many—most observers expect it will take longer than that. There will be eight hours of general debate.

Note to CIO members: One way to hurry up action is to visit your Congressman in your district during the recess and urge speed. Another way is to write or wire him.

IN THE Senate, meanwhile, the Taft-Ives version of a labor law seemed about to be unveiled, after weeks of rumors and counter-rumors.

The T-I plan may be offered as a minority report of the Senate Labor Committee and would in that event probably be signed by Taft, Sen. H. Alexander Smith (R., N. J.), and Sen. Forrest Donnell (R., Mo.) and possibly by Sen. George Aiken (R., Vt.). Sen. Wayne Morse (R., Ore.) is reported opposed to the T-I plan, because it contains injunction features, to which he objects strenuously. Ives is not a member of the committee.

Wrong

Rep. George C. Sadowski (D., Mich.) in the House:

"What is wrong with the Taft-Hartley Act?"

"It was wrong in its motives, which were revenge and punishment, not justice. It was wrong in its draftsmanship, which was perpetrated in secret by a lawyer who was paid $7,500 by the Republican Natl. Committee.

"It was wrong in its provisions which were loaded against labor and in favor of employers. It has been wrong in its administration, which, in the person of General Counsel Denham, has been brazenly anti-labor in dozens of instances."

Rep. Howell's questionnaire contained 18 queries. Approximately 6000 were sent out to names from the mailing list in his office. That list is a cross-section, since it contains, in addition to pro-Fair Dealers, the names of persons who answered the Fulton Lewis and General Electric questionnaires.

Howell's District, the 4th, consists of Mercer and Burlington Counties. Mercer, chief city of which is Trenton, has a lot of industry (steel, textiles, etc.) but also has numerous farms, mostly potato. Princeton University is in Mercer.

Burlington is predominantly agricultural, with many beautiful fruit farms. There is a fair amount of industry mostly steel, along the Delaware River, which forms the western border of both counties

Howell's office has made a spot check of the first 1000 questionnaires returned (nearly 4000 have come back, a rather high average.)

The results are extremely interesting. While such polls are not necessarily conclusive, Howel's questions were so unloaded that much credence must be given them.

Major Fair Deal objectives with which a majority of the answers agreed included opposition to Taft-Hartley, extension of rent control, extension of coverage of minimum wage law, extension of social security, the President's civil rights program.

Two major Fair Deal objectives opposed by the replies were the health program and price controls.

REP. HOWELL

Howell feels the first was opposed because he probably was a little too objective in his questions. The voters were given the choice between "compulsory health insurance" and a "voluntary health insurance."

"The average American shies from compulsion, "Howell remarked. "But, a vast majority favored extension of social security which is also 'compulsory.'"

On price controls, Howell says the recent decline in food and clothing prices seemed to be the major factor, judging by the remarks which appeared on many of the replies.

ON Taft-Hartley, the question was "What do you think Congress should do about the act? Should it be repealed? Let alone? Amended?

The results:

Repeal, 292; let alone, 291; amend, 243.

Since most of the persons who voted for "amend" also favored almost every other liberal provision, Howell's office gathered that they, too, favored the general direction of the Thomas-Lesinski Law. There was also a possibility that some thought repeal might mean abolishing T-H with no new law.

The civil liberties question proved significant in the light of the recent action of the New Jersey legislature in adopting a strong rights program.

Howell's questionnaire asked voters how they stood on four aspects of the Truman program. Here are the answers:

Anti-lynching law, for, 856; against, 149.

Anti-poll tax law, 813 for; 186 against.

Anti-segregation in public facilities, 696 for; 320 against.

Removal of segregation from armed forces, 646 for; 360 against.

Some of the newspapers in the district carried the questionnaire, but most of the replies came on the forms mailed out by Howell's office.

Shameful

Rep. Stephen M. Young (D., O.) to his colleagues:

"T-H represents the first shameful ugly step toward Fascism in this country. If I were a laboring man, instead of a professional, I would belong to the union of my craft and sit in the front row.

"Labor unions and members have helped to maintain the American way of life, and those who would, by restrictive enactment, destroy unions would destroy one of the most dynamic and vital forces of our democracy."

ON Capitol Hill last week a number of Congressmen received requests for meetings in their home districts. Many Congressmen also have been inserting communications in the Record—communications demanding end of T-H.

Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D., Minn.) read to his colleagues a resolution adopted by the municipal council of Coleraine, Minn., which denounced T-H as "anti-labor legislation which aims at the defeat of organized labor."

The resolution called for adoption of the Thomas-Lesinski bill.

Sen. Leverett Saltonstall and Henry Cabot Lodge (both R., Mass.) read a resolution from the Board of Aldermen of Holyoke, Mass. (pop. nearly 60,000) which declared that under T-H collective bargaining has been made more difficult. The act in its entirety is an insult to the working people."

It noted that "thousands of labor contracts are presently expiring and that labor and employers cannot negotiate with any degree of confidence, thus creating an air of uncertainty.

"The Aldermen go on record for the immediate and unqualified repeal of T-H."

Rep. Stephen Young (D., O.), told his colleagues that "there is every reason for liberal, progressive, forward-looking people to have hope and confidence that this Congress will make a noteworthy record for the progress and welfare of the American people and the peace of the world.

"I propose to vote for the repeal of T-H and restore the Wagner Act plus pending amendments."

Rep. Raymond Madden (D., Ind.), reminding his colleagues that the AFL Typographical Union has been on strike since November, 1947, against Chicago's major newspapers, declared "the act has promoted untold chaos and bitterness in labor-management relations as it pertains to the newspaper business."

He recalled that even the Chicago Tribune had declared on Nov. 22, 1947, that "when the law was under discussion in Congress, we advised against outlawing the closed shop, because we knew that the closed shop worked well in our plant for half a century or more."

IN a radio debate with Sen. Humphrey, Sen. Donnell insisted that an injunctive process must remain in a new labor law.

He read from a report by the Natl. Mediation (Railway) Board which declared that only issuance of an injunction halted a possible strike last year of railway workers.

Asked Humphrey: "Is there an injunction process in the Railway Mediation Act?"

"Why, no," fumbled Donnell.

Dear Mr. Congressman:

INTERESTING remarks on questionnaires sent by Rep. Charles Howell (D., N. J.) to his constituents:

One big hotel executive favored rent control—yes he did! Also for T-H repeal; 75c minimum.

A Princeton student wrote "regards to Mrs. Howell" and declared that health insurance was "most important."

A constituent: "You are the only member of Congress ever to give me a chance to express my views."

* * *

Another: "I think this is a wonderful idea. I wish there were more in Congress who really cared what we at home think."

Another: "Regards to Mrs. Congressman."

Still another: "You are on the right track, keep it up."

Guild Pact In Toronto

THE TORONTO Newspaper Guild, CIO, has just signed a contract with Canada's largest newspaper enterprise, the Toronto Star Ltd., which sets a Canadian precedent in establishing the principle of paid overtime in editorial jobs.

This is the first contract the Guild has closed in Canada, where there is no counterpart of the U. S. Wage-Hour Law, and regular pay for overtime without extra compensation has been commonplace in news offices.

Although pay levels at the Star equaled the best paid in the industry in Canada, the new agreement adds an estimated $110,000 annually to the editorial payrolls, or an average of nearly $12 a week for the 182 employes affected. The agreement provides that all present employes shall join the Guild, and that at least nine of each 10 new employes shall become members of the union.

The right of the Guild to bargain for the Star editorial employes was established through a cross card-checked procedure, usual under Canadian labor legislation where a strong majority is evident.

The Guild negotiating committee was headed by Charles E. Crissey, Guild international representative.

$79 A Week Needed

Latest standard budget for a wage earner's family of four released by the Heller Committee requires the breadwinner to bring home $79 a week.

Spending Fails

Consumer spending dropped from 76% of total output in 1929 and 75% in 1939 to only 70% in 1948.

MEAN OLD MARXISTS!

We're really bad boys, intent upon upsetting the old apple-cart and giving the theories of Karl Marx a boost—and if you don't believe it just read the March issue of "Economic Intelligence."

Yes, sir, we're pushing the class struggle and we're fostering hatred toward employers and toward our economic system, says the "Intelligence" bulletin, published by the U. S. Chamber of Commerce.

The bulletin says:

"CIO pamphlets, the Economic Outlook and the CIO News regularly carry a heavy cargo of hates and slurs toward employers, toward our way of life, in the form of words and cartoons.

"Hour after hour, day after day, and week upon week, this literature is poured into the American home for men, women and children to see and have their minds and outlooks shaped by it.

"CIO leaders, while not Communists themselves, are continuing the Marxist ideology. Profits and profit motives are under constant attack in the CIO literature, while the wage motive is indorsed.

"If wage rates are considered insufficient, would it not be logical if our schools and labor leaders encouraged more people to become job-makers so as to increase the demand for the services of labor?

". . . If employers are too few or make too much money and wages are too low, the cure need not be the destruction of employers, but the encouragement of a political and economic climate more favorable to job-making."

To put it bluntly, if that stuff is "Economic Intelligence" then you can give us gobbledygook!

ENTIRELY PHONY BUT IMPORTANT

The accusations made by the C. of C. bulletin—that we're peddling Marxist doctrine although we're not communists—are completely false, but they're important. They follow the Big Business line of putting unsavory tags on CIO proposals instead of considering the proposals on their merits alone.

CIO officials and the CIO News have frequently attacked what we considered to be outrageously high profits. The C. of C. obviously considers this an attack on the profit system.

We have complained loudly and frequently about employers who exploited their workers and about employers who, in violation of the law, have interfered with the right of workers to organize and bargain collectively. Apparently the C. of C. considers this as "fostering hatred toward employers."

We've said time and again that our economic system is far from perfect, that it could and should be improved and that we must do everything we can to make it better. Perhaps this—in C. of C. thinking— constitutes our "hatred" of the economic system.

We've said on many occasions that those on the bottom of the economic heap should have a much better standard of living and that those on the top of the heap should use their wealth and power to help them achieve it. If this is the "class struggle" to which the C. of C. bulletin refers, then we're going to continue to push the class struggle.

We hope, sincerely, that the C. of C. will drop the phony line that was reeled out in the March issue of "Economic Intelligence." Such a line will contribute nothing to the solution of our pressing problems.

It will merely generate more confusion—and we have too much of that already.

'Commie Fighters' Often Stupid

Put Faith in Loyalty Oaths But Unwilling To Tackle The Real Problems

By ALLAN L. SWIM

TO PUT it bluntly, and perhaps crudely, some of our country's noisiest "Communist fighters" should have their heads examined!

Inside, undoubtedly, you would find the type of mind which would excitedly approve—on the spur of the moment—the idea of tossing gasoline on a spreading fire merely because it's wet.

There's no question about the sincerity of many of these people. Neither their patriotism nor intentions are in doubt.

But their tactics frequently range from ineffective to downright stupid. And many of them are not willing to pay the price of effectively combatting what they love to term the "Red menace."

POOR economic conditions provide the best breeding ground for the seeds of Communism. Discontent and confusion serve as effective fertilizer.

Or, to put it in more simple terms, the Commies can't get a solid foothold where there's real prosperity, satisfaction and calmness.

And, to state another point bluntly, fat corporation profits do not keep men and women from following the Stalinist line. Neither do outrageously high prices.

Furthermore, all of the loyalty oaths in the world and all of the legislation against subversive thinking that could be enacted in 10 years would make no real change in the basic Communist strength in this country—or elsewhere.

ANY MAN who would do a dirty sabotage job for the Commies—or for any other group—would swear on a stack of Bibles that he was not a member of a subversive organization.

Any man who would plot the overthrow of our Government would lie about his intentions regardless of any oath he might be required to take.

Let's try to be realistic about it.

Too many of our "Commie fighters" have behaved like the man who refused to pay $20 for a badly needed pair of eyeglasses but spent $50 buying medicine to combat the resulting headaches.

With oratory and legislative proposals they've tried to combat the manifestations of Communism without making any effort to root out its causes.

TODAY THERE are more than 3 million unemployed in our country and thousands more are working only part time.

Many persons who shudder at the thought of the Russians having an atom bomb take a "well, so what?" attitude toward current joblessness—one of the most potent weapons that could be handed to the Commies.

But you know how it is with some of the "big boys." They think the CIO's full employment program is ridiculous and that it's good for the country to have a "free labor market."

And using all of the facilities at our command to provide work for those who need it is "dangerous economic planning" or "socialistic experimentation."

Poppycock!

Some of our "great patriots" are even opposed to the payment of decent unemployment benefits to those who are out of work.

THE UNITED States will never have any real trouble from the Commies at home unless a large segment of the population gets completely fed up with life under our present system.

Congress could render a real service by taking action to make the system work better—not just better for those near the top of the economic heap, but better for the bulk of the people.

A realistic minimum wage would help. So would improved social security, strengthened civil rights, a workable health insurance program, a labor law that's fair to the workers, a housing program that brought results.

THERE ARE always a certain number of persons in Congress who seem to think that they can cure anything if they talk loud enough and long enough about "preserving the free enterprise system" and shout frequently that "we've got to save America from the Reds."

But, thank Heaven, there are many lawmakers who realize that words won't substitute for deeds.

These men deserve the wholehearted support of Americans who are sincerely interested in the country's welfare.

Those who just talk, talk, talk and propose restrictive legislation should be reminded frequently—and sharply—that they're playing into the hands of those they profess to hate.

Local Fires Lawyer, But He Wins Case

WHEN A corporation settles with a union for $234,000 after the union's case has been thrown out of Federal Court, that's news.

The corporation is the New York Shipbuilding Corp., and the union is the CIO Marine and Shipbuilding Workers.

Early in 1946, the union's general counsel, M. H. Goldstein of Philadelphia, sent the national office of the union an opinion as to methods of calculating overtime pay for those workers paid under an incentive rate.

The National sent the information to its locals, and Local 1, of Camden, N. J., asked its employer, New York Ship, to change its practice, and write the change into the contract. The corporation refused.

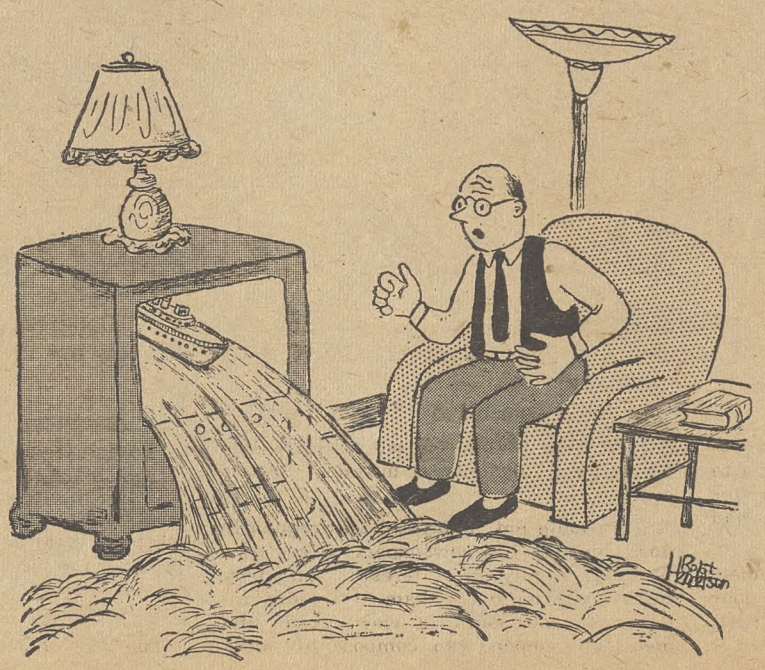
Goldstein, also the local's counsel, advised the local to sign the contract nevertheless, but gave notice it was not waiving its claims, and that it would sue. The corporation sneered. The local then asked its members to authorize Goldstein and the local to sue, and 1560 workers signed authorizations.

Suit was filed in the U. S. District Court of New Jersey Dec. 20, 1946, asking for records and an accounting. May, 1947, brought the legislation outlawing portal-to-portal suits and limiting other types of suits. Thereupon, the corporation moved for dismissal of the IUMSWA suit, and the court did so. Goldstein promptly filed notice of appeal.

After 10 weeks of conferences, Goldstein finally settled for the $234,000.

Meanwhile, Local 1 had disaffiliated from the international union. Since Goldstein was the international's attorney, the local dismissed him.

But 1560 workers will share in the $234,000 because the international union had a policy of watching decisions and rulings, and guiding its locals.



Murray Rejects Soviet Bid

Pres. Philip Murray has turned down a Russian invitation to send two CIO fraternal delegates to the forthcoming convention of the Soviet trade unions.

"I have to inform you on behalf of the CIO that we believe that in view of recent developments in the world organization to which we both belonged (the World Federation of Trade Unions), it is not appropriate to send fraternal delegates to your Tenth Congress," Murray said in his cabled reply.

The invitation was sent by Vassilli Kuznetsov, head of the Soviet All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions. The convention—the first since before the war—opens in Moscow April 19, and will bring together delegates from a claimed membership of over 25 million workers.

The Soviet labor organizations have been under increasing criticism from leaders of free unions throughout the world as dominated by both the government and the Communist party of the Soviet Union.

'I Shall Pick For You Beautiful Flowers'

THIS IS a story about a newspaper columnist, a poor Frenchwoman, a group of CIO members, a shipment of food and a garden that grows beautiful flowers.

The columnist is Drew Pearson, who often is pictured as a hardboiled guy who sinks barbs deep into those whose actions displease him.

The Frenchwoman is a Madame Allain of Anjou.

The CIO members are delegates to the Columbus, Ohio, CIO Council.

The food was sent by generous Americans to France.

And the flowers grow in an Anjou garden.

THE FIRST chapter of the story was written back in 1947 when Pearson "dreamed up" the idea of sending a Friendship Train of badly needed food to the French.

His idea caught on, and Americans in all walks of life— including many in the CIO —supported his project.

Nearly 700 carloads of food were contributed and the last of it was unloaded in France about Christmas of 1947.

It arrived at a time when the French food situation was desperate.

Among those who appreciated the Friendship Train was Madame Allain, a woman of meager means.

THE NEXT chapter in the story was written by French men and women who wanted to say "merci" (thank you) to those responsible for the Friendship Train.

Into their tiny and somewhat ancient boxcars they loaded art treasures, souvenirs and gifts of all kinds for the Americans.

When Ohio's boxcar arrived, its contents were unpacked and placed on display in the rotunda of the State Capitol at Columbus.

A simple letter was tacked on the wall nearby. It was from Madame Allain, who said she is "too poor to offer you the kind of souvenir I would like to send."

But she asked that her American friends "accept this humble sheet of paper expressing my heartfelt thanks."

MADAME ALLAIN, however, didn't merely say "merci" and let it go at that. She offered to share one of her prized possessions.

"I am fortunate enough to live in one of the most beautiful regions of France," Madame Allain said in her letter.

"I invite you to come and admire it, with its rich history, and when you pass this way I would be greatly honored if you would enter my humble home.

"I will pick for you the most beautiful flowers in my own garden for you to carry away as a souvenir."

George DeNucci, CIO regional director in Ohio, saw the letter in the Capital rotunda, and it gave him an idea.

THE LATEST—but perhaps not the last —chapter in the story was written recently at a meeting of the Columbus CIO Council.

Although delegates had their own problems—such as the Taft-Hartley Act—to discuss, they provided time for DeNucci to tell the story of Madame Allain's letter and the Gratitude Train gifts which had come from France.

And, being practical men and women, they voted to say "thank you" to the poor Frenchwoman by sending her a CARE package.—A.L.S.

Editor, Guild Official Agree The Press Is Not Keeping Faith

EDITOR LOUIS B. Seltzer of the Cleveland Press and Executive Vice Pres. Sam B. Eubanks of the CIO Newspaper Guild agree that the free press is not keeping faith with the public. They shared a platform in a Cleveland town meeting session.

Selzer said that "newspapers are neither as good or as faith-keeping with the public as they will be when the publishers and the editors realize the necessity of a "state of mind" which encompasses the needs, the hopes and the aspirations of every member of the community from the least fortunate to the most fortunate.

He said, however, that today's newspapers are the best America ever had and called them freer than the newspapers of the past.

SELTZER also hit at those editors and publishers who live in ivory towers and urged them to move about their communities and county and world as widely as their own physical and intellectual reservoirs make possible.

"He should not, as so many still do, live in the traditional ivory tower. He should not, as so many still do, pivot about in a small and selected group of friends and acquaintances on his approximate economic or intellectual level—if he fixes such levels for himself, which I also believe is a fundamental mistake," Seltzer said.

"He should not, as he still too frequently does, harness his newspapers to his own personal family of interests, and deny his reader the full stream of talents, intelligence and points of view of the fine men and women who compose his staff.

Preaches, Practices

Executive Vice Pres. Sam B. Eubanks of the CIO Newspaper Guild referred to Editor Louis B. Seltzer of the Cleveland Press—who are both quoted in the accompanying article—as one of the greatest editors of the nation—a man who practices what he preaches.

"He should not . . . assume that he alone of all men on his newspaper has been singled out by divine providence and anointed with the omniscience from which flows the indisputably correct answer or position on each and every major question or problem which inevitably arises in the operation of a paper in any community across the country.

"He should not, as still too frequently happens, arrogate unto himself the right to speak for the entire community, unless and until he has lifted his physical weight from his editorial chair and moved it around the community to be reasonably sure that he knows what he is talking about when he does speak."

"EVERYBODY appears concerned about the papers except the publishers," he asserted. "They alone seem smugly satisfied with the performance of the properties they own. Their chief concern with the editorial content seems to be what it costs. And when profit margins get thin, that is where they first endeavor to cut expenses."

Eubanks said that the reason that newspapers failed to predict the outcome of last November's election was that they relied on public opinion polls and did not do a job of good reporting.

"That failure was dramatic," he added. "But that single failure was not nearly so important as the failure to do a good job of news reporting. Today few newspapers have a large enough staff of trained newspapermen, or allow enough space to the editor to provide consistently good coverage. The cumulative failures as a result eventually may add up to a disaster."

Eubanks recommended that readers demand of publishers "the same kind of accounting of the stewardship that you demand from the officials you elect to operate your schools."

Anti-Labor Law Repealers Lose In Oregon

A majority in the Oregon legislature has managed to kill repeal bills aimed at two anti-labor laws enacted at the 1947 session.

One of the laws bans the secondary boycott and hot cargo actions as union weapons against employers. The other provides for secret elections to "determine" existence of labor disputes in businesses not covered by the Taft-Hartley law.

The AFL and CIO belief that the laws are unconstitutional has been upheld by three circuit court decisions. In one instance involving the Whistlin' Pig restaurant in Portland, a circuit court judge ruled that both laws were constitutional. As a result, Local 305, AFL Hotel & Restaurant Employes, now has a contract with management after more than two years of picketing.

German Unionists Complain About U.S. Military

By ALLAN S. SWIM

A DAZED NAZI soldier standing on the steps of the famous cathedral at Cologne, in the Ruhr, as the Americans came in told a friend of mine:

"Well, we asked for war—and, by God, we got it!"

He pointed toward the shattered buildings and the heaps of rubble near him.

Many of the shattered buildings are still standing and much of the rubble is still in the streets.

You find similar conditions in Essen, Dusseldorf, Frankfort and other cities which felt the weight of Allied bombs and shells.

Living amidst the ruins today are millions of persons who are trying to recover from the effects of a mighty war which many of them helped create.

And the United States—through military government and Economic Cooperation Administration funds—is giving them a helping hand.

The theory is that a democratic, reasonably prosperous Western Germany must be created if there is to be economic recovery in Western Europe.

It's one of the toughest, most thankless jobs the U. S. has undertaken abroad.

GERMANY WAS split up into four zones at the end of the war. Russia controls the eastern zone. The Western zones are controlled by the U. S., Great Britain and France.

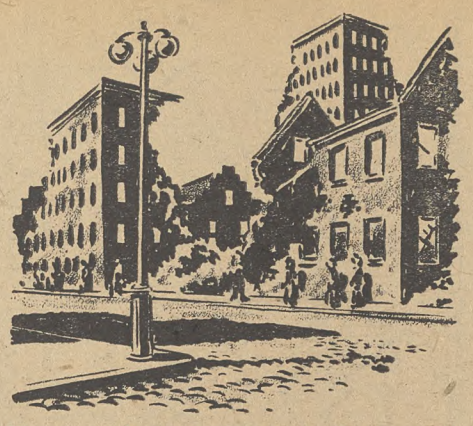
The U. S. and Britain work closely together on the task of rebuilding their zones, in which a major portion of the people of Western Germany live. Their area usually is referred to as Bizonia.

Population of Bizonia is about 44 millions. Nearly a million in the area are unemployed— and joblessness has been on the increase lately.

The housing shortage is critical. In many regions the people can neither afford to remove the rubble nor erect new buildings.

Replacements

German workers who can afford it are spending a surprisingly large portion of their incomes for household goods and furniture—to replace materials destroyed during the war.



Housing shortage is acute because of war damage.

The Bizone standard of living is at least 25% lower than the average for the rest of Western Europe (which is low in comparison with U. S. standards.)

Many of Germany's industrial production managers were killed during the war or were jailed as Nazi leaders. Finding new managers has been a serious problem.

Despite these handicaps, industrial production in Bizonia has increased nearly 60% since last July, according to Army statistics.

THE MILITARY is still firmly in the saddle in the Bizone although many controls and restrictions have been removed in recent months and more and more authority has been given to the German government.

This means that the Economic Cooperation Administration—the Marshall Plan agency—is playing second fiddle in Germany.

ECA has a small mission at Frankfort—and many Germans think of ECA as being a branch of the military.

This mission was not provided with a full-time labor adviser although military and civilian leaders say frankly that the German trade union movement is the strongest force for democracy in Bizonia.

There is much evidence that military authorities have not given real support to the trade unions, although they helped establish them soon after the war ended.

There is also considerable evidence that workers in the British zone have a better understanding of the Marshall Plan than do those in the American zone.

Trade union leaders with long anti-Nazi backgrounds complain privately that the military has biven too much support to former "small fry" Hitler followers in an effort to restore industrial production and too little support to the unions in their fight to build a democracy and combat Communism.

THE PROBLEM in Western Germany is not merely one of restoring a badly damager economy and rebuilding a bomb-shattered region.

Germany must not be allowed—in her rebuilding—to create another war machine. The Nazis must not be permitted to rise to power again. The Communists must not be permitted to take over. On these points the U. S. and British authorities and the free German trade union leaders agree.

There is disagreement, however, regarding how these things can be accomplished.

One of the top U. S. military men said privately: "We have been able to put a thin veneer of democracy on the people of Western Germany—just a thin veneer. It won't be very thick by the time the German government takes over control of the region. Our hope lies in encouraging those who really believe in democracy and in bringing up a new generation that knows little of Hitlerism."

Some of the Allied leaders in Western Germany are trying to encourage the creation of a "free enterprise" economy similar to that of the U. S. Others favor a modified form of socialism, with the trade unions playing a important role.

Gen. Lucius B. Clay, toy U. S. military man in the area, is a "free enterprise" advocate.

Prices Up 80 Percent

According to trade union statistics, prices in the Bizone of Germany are now 80% higher than they were in 1938 but wages have increased only 28% during the past 10 years.

N. H. COLLISON, head of the ECA mission in Germany, said the trade unions in the Bizone "have taken a magnificent stand" regarding the European recovery program.

The unions, he said, are represented on the ERP Trade Union Advisory Committee.

One of the top union leaders of the region revealed plans for closer cooperation with ECA.

"We are gonng to set up what you might call a 'little brain trust' of our own—composed of some of our best men—to work with the ERP in Germany and with other union groups in Europe," he said.

The military is still in the saddle in Germany.

Wage Raises Sought

Until recently, the German unions placed strong emphasis on the need for lower prices—but prices did not come down. Now some of the labor groups are conducting a campaign for wage increases.

"One thing that would be of much help to us would be the appointment of a full-time ECA labor adviser in Germany who is completely free of the military."

Collison recently requested that such an adviser be attached to his mission.

There is general agreement among non-Communist groups that the Reds have lost strength in Bizonia during recent months. This is due, they say, largely to the Russian efforts to blockade Berlin and to the stories told by Germans who escape from behind the Iron Curtain to the British and American Zones

The extreme rightists and nationalist groups obviously have gained little if any strength.

But it's not hard to get the feeling after spending a short time in Germany that both the political and economic tides of the region could shift rapidly—in either direction—in a short time.

A lot of hard work and careful planning will be required before Germany can become a real part of the family of democratic nations.

NLRB Decision Requires 5 Years

It took the NLRB nearly five years to decide that Kenneth Collins was unfairly discharged for union activity by the Agar Packing Co., Chicago. Collins, formerly president of Local 24, CIO Packinghouse Workers, was fired by the company September, 1944. The NLRB began processing the case shortly thereafter.

'CIO' is Her Nickname

Charles Greenhill is proud of his union, the Steelworkers, and is proud that the union is a member of CIO.

So, in naming his daughter, he chose the names Catherine Irene Omo. Her classmates in New Boston, O., have nicknamed her "CIO." Dad works for Portsmouth Steel.

Union Provides X-Ray

Hundreds of CIO Furniture Workers and their families went to 13 Astor Place, N. Y. City, to avail themselves of the free chest X-ray service provided for them by the union's insurance fund through arrangements made with the New York City Health Department.

Congressional Award For pegler Proposed

COLUMNIST westbrook pegler's long-time vitriolic attacks on unions, the Roosevelts, Philip Murray, the New Deal, the Fair Deal and numerous other liberal advocates and measures will win a Congressional Award if Rep. Arthur Klein (D., N.Y.) has his way.

westbrook pegler

The New York Congressman has introduced Resolution 43 in the House which would set up a "Joint Commission on the westbrook pegler Annual Award of Journalistic Infamy."

The commission would meet annually on April 1 "in that part of the Capitol known as the crypt" to choose that year's recipient of the Award of Journalistic Infamy." Winner for 1949 would be pegler.

THE POUNDMASTER and chief plumbing inspector of the District of Columbia, the chairmen of the House and Senate Rules committees and chairmen of the House and Senate committees of the Press, Radio and Periodical Galleries would comprise the commission. The plumbing inspector would serve as ex-officio secretary of the group.

Rep. Arthur Klein

The award would consist of a plaque, and Rep. Klein suggests a design: "a rectangular shield transversed by a double cross, surmounted by a turkey buzzard rampant on a field of ord, with jackal couchant in the left upper quarter and symbolic figures of Truth and Decency Outraged supine in the lower right quarter."

Penna. CIO Asks Fairer Utility

Pennsylvania State CIO Pres. Harry Boyer has written to Chm. Kenneth H. Wagner of the House Public Utilities Committee and Chm. Charles R. Mallery of the Senate Corporation Committee to act favorably on bills to amend the public utility law by further defining "fair value" on which the Public Utility Commission is to determine "just and reasonable rates."

'Free' Press

Rep. Ralph W. Gwinn (R., N. Y.), darling of the landlords' lobby, is now a newspaper columnist.

His client: Frank Gannett's anti-Fair Deal Committee for Constitutional Government, Inc. Gwinn is an anti-labor member of the House Labor Committee. His column, which will appear in whatever papers buy it and which will be sent to Congressmen, will be distributed by Features for America's Future.

Change of Mind?

Of the employes of the Sinclair Bulk Oil Plant in Norfolk, Va., all but one was eager about the CIO. This one man joined up but grumbled that the union could not help. Just before the election, fellow workers told the grumbler that if there were one vote against the union they'd know who cast it. CIO won by 100%.

States vs. Strikes

Picketing and other strike activities are restricted by law in Arizona, Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Idaho, Michigan, Missouri, North Dakota, South Dakota, Texas and Utah.

Witness for Better Security Benefits:

'Six Of Us Are Expected To Exist On $130 A Month'

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

USUALLY it's dull business listening to committee hearings on bills pending before Congress. Exceptions are most likely to be those at which CIO witnesses testify.

That's not just CIO boasting either. They'll tell you at the press table that when CIO witnesses testify, the proceedings get lively.

Such was the case last week at the hearings held before the House Ways and Means Committee on HR. 2893, the bill endorsed by the CIO which would extend and improve old age insurance and add protection against disability by amending the Social Security Act.

The testimony given by a dozen or so CIO witnesses was full of vital information about conditions of workers throughout the country that should be widely known—and isn't.

The CIO representatives had nearly a whole day to present their testimony. CIO Asst. Research Director Katherine Ellickson started it off by reading Pres. Philip Murray's statement urging support for HR. 2893 and calling attention to the "shockingly inadequate" provisions of the present old age and survivors' insurance section of the social security program.

PENSIONERS: Three CIO members from Ohio who have been retired on small Social Security benefits talk over their problems with CIO officials. Seated, (l. to r.) they are James Souers, 68, and Arthur Emerick, 67, both of the CIO Rubber Workers from Akron; Thomas Heathcote, 79, Steel Workers Union, Canton; and Orville Jones, Ohio CIO Council education director, who brought the three men to Washington. Standing is Tom Owens, Rubber Workers legislative representative. The pensioners urged Congressmen to raise old age benefits.

20 Million Uncovered

Murray pointed out that more than 20 million persons are not covered at all, and that others lose a substantial amount of protection because they work part of the time in uncovered occupations.

He emphasized the importance of considering other legislation along with social security. "We favor measures to maintain full employment, to increase production, and to remove such causes of poverty as sweat-shop wages, sickness, accidents and premature death," he said.

"Our legislative program includes many measures of this kind. The better success we achieve with these measures, the fewer the number of people who will have to draw social insurance benefits and the lower the cost of the program."

Nation Can Afford It

Declaring that the nation can well afford an adequate social security program, Murray said that "we have tremendous natural, industrial and human resources capable of meeting the needs of our people if we will see that employment and production are maintained at high levels."

In answer to the argument often given in opposing increases in benefits—that workers should save money themselves for their old age—Murray declared that "the experience of our own members bears out the findings of this study that individual thrift can provide only meager protection for old age. Many wage earners usually receive wages too low to do more than stretch over essential daily expenses."

Murray said pension plans launched by some companies "are by no means a substitute for basic social insurance, and most such plans are wholly inadequate for production workers, even if they are generous to executives."

Highlights

Here are some of the highlights of testimony of CIO witnesses from various states which followed presentation of Pres. Murray's statement:

Harry Kranz, legislative director, New Jersey CIO Council, told the story of a current scandal involving administration of the New Jersey state program of temporary disability benefits started less than a year ago. He cited the case as an instance of the sort of thing that might happen under state administration of such programs.

Ugly rumors were circulating in New Jersey, Kranz said, concerning the handling of a $50 million fund obtained from the Federal Treasury under the 1946 Knowland Act to start the state program.

The Governor ordered the new State Treasurer to make an investigation. The treasurer reported that the five public officials who had been appointed as trustees of the fund, had purchased about $5,000,000 worth of bonds from two brokers who made profits in excess of $200,000 on the sale.

Facts Of Life

Albert E. Lobley, 70-year-old tool maker, told House Ways and Means Committee, the facts of life from the standpoint of one who receives $48.81 monthly in social security benefits.

Lobley, who is married, said that he retired five years ago at the age of 65. He then had $300 in savings, but medical and other expenses soon exhausted this, and he was forced to mortgage his home.

"Although the state legislature has just voted to appoint three industrialists to investigate this bond transaction," Kranz declared, "we are apprehensive about its results, since no representative of the working men and women of our state whose funds have been so flagrantly dissipated, was placed on the investigatory body." He urged the House Committee to look into the matter.

Ineligible

A New Jersey witness introduced by Kranz gave testimony packed with human interest.

Mrs. Iuna Evans, a social worker, read the statement of Mrs. Helen McCann, of Camden, N. J., a disabled widow with four children and a mother to support. She had been left destitute because her late husband, a self-employed carpenter, and his survivors were not eligible for social security benefits.

A social service agency in Camden, maintained by organized labor, Mrs. McCann said, finally succeeded in getting financial aid for her and her family through the State Board of Child Welfare, and she now receives $130 a month.

"On this amount, gentlemen," stated Mrs. McCann, "six of us are expected to survive."

She explained that her mother, who is 61 years old, is "four years 'too young' for old-age assistance."

UAW Witness

Paul Sifton, Auto Workers legislative representative, contrasted the salaries and pensions for executives in the auto industry with the wages and Social Security benefits for the average auto worker. General Motors Pres. C. E. Wilson, who made $446,099 in 1947, will get $25,000 when he retires, and many other executives are in a similar category, Sifton stated.

But the average Detroit auto worker, whose yearly income is $2,864, will receive $312 a year in Social Security pension benefits.

Textiles Case

Sol Barkin, Textile Workers research director, gave the House Committee a detailed analysis of factors in the textile industry bearing upon the need for adequate Federal old age pension and disability benefits. Among other things, he pointed out that:

- Company-sponsored pensions in the textile industry now cover only about 80,000 employes, or 7% of the total number of workers in the industry.
- Less than 1% of all textile workers are covered by pension systems worked out jointly by union and management and guaranteed by union contract.
- Some 350,000 workers, or about 78% of the union's entire membership, however, are covered by plans providing sickness, accident, hospitalization and life insurance benefits, obtained through collective bargaining. Benefits usually range from $15 to $25 a week.
- Southern textile employers have been very backward in accepting such welfare plans, the large part of them being in Northern mills.

The union's extensive experience with these programs since 1943 has led to the conclusion, Barkin stated, that they are inadequate, and no substitute for a Federal system of disability insurance. He pointed out that they are costly; frequently leave workers without protection when they need it most, particularly during periods of unemployment; benefits vary greatly and are inadequate, and they work against those who are forced to change their jobs.

Achievements Told

A statement filed for Exec. Vice Pres. Hyman Blumberg of the Clothing Workers described the union's achievements in the field of social insurance since the first ACW unemployment insurance fund was launched in Chicago in 1923.

After the Social Security Act was passed in 1935, this fund was converted into a life and health insurance fund, forerunner of the widespread program of employer-paid social insurance which went into effect in 1940.

At present, Blumberg stated, Amalgamated members in the men's clothing, cotton garment and allied industries are protected with life insurance, sickness and accident benefits, hospitalization and surgical allownaces.

Blumberg said he did not think there was any chance of such plans being developed to any extent among the millions of workers in the country, and that his union, therefore, strongly supported the legislation proposed in HR. 2893.

Speedup Result

Industrial engineers estimate that an increase in speedup of 5% would throw three million workers out of their jobs throughout the nation.

What HR 2893 Would Do

The old-age and disability insurance bill (HR 2893) now in the hands of the House Ways and Means Committee would:

- Extend coverage of the federal old-age and survivors' insurance system to some 20 million additional persons. These include farm workers, domestic servants, self-employed persons, Federal employes not covered by a Federal retirement system, active members of the armed forces, employes of non-profit organizations, and state and local government employes.
- Increase the maximum monthly insurance benefit from $85 to $150.
- Liberalize the monthly insurance benefit formula. (For example, a couple now receiving $42 monthly would receive $69.30; a couple now receiving $58.80 would get $94.50.)
- Reduce the retirement age for women from 65 to 60 years.
- Increase from $19.99 to $50 per month the amount of earnings a beneficiary may receive and still draw his insurance benefit.
- Liberalize eligibility requirements. Under the present law a person retiring in 1950 would need 26 quarters of coverage; under the proposed law he would need only 13 quarters.
- Establish a Federal disability insurance program providing for benefit payments for sickness up to 26 weeks, with a maximum weekly payment of $30 to a single person and $45 to a person with three or more dependents.
- Increase the contribution rate for employers and employes from 1% to 1½% beginning July 1, 1949, when liberalized benefits would go into effect, and to 2% on Jan. 1, 1950, when the disability insurance program would become effective.

Oil Firms' 'Take' Increases 969%, Men's Wages Only 83% Since 1939

Profits Exceed Entire Payroll

The average oil refinery worker, in 1948, pocketed $1.78 every time he did an hour's work.

When he pocketed that money, how much did the company soak away in the bank as clear profit?

The figures below give the answer for 14 miscellaneous oil companies.

On the average, the company in 1948 made $2.69 in clear profit every time the worker made $1.78 in wages.

Here are the figures for typical companies:

Company	Net profit per man-hour
Atlantic Refining	$ .96
Continental	3.56
Lion Oil	2.80
Ohio Oil	3.92
Phillips Petroleum	2.14
Pure Oil	2.11
Shell Union	1.74
Skelly Oil	4.45
Socony-Vacuum	1.47
Standard of Indiana	1.46
Standard of Ohio	1.14
Sunray Oil	8.12
Texas Co.	2.03
Union Oil	1.85
AVERAGE	$2.69

By RAY DAVIDSON

NO WONDER they call it black gold!

Statistics published by the CIO Oil Worker reveal that the oil industry showed a profit increase of 969% between 1939 and 1948, with a 70% rise in 1948 over 1947.

Every time the industry pays its workers the average rate of $1.78 an hour, it makes a profit of $2.69 an hour.

Further industry in 1948 made an average of 26.4% net return on investment, after setting aside a few billions in reserves of one sort and another.

These figures were collected by E. E. Phelps, research and education director of the CIO Oil Workers. They are based on the financial reports of 15 typical oil companies, some large and some small. They represent a random selection from companies which have reported so far, no attempt being made to sort out either the most- or least-profitable.

Some of the biggest profit makers, notably Standard (New Jersey) and Sinclair, had not reported when the analysis was made.

The huge Shell Union Oil is near the median point. Its profits have increased 842% since 1939, with a return of 36.4% on its investment. When a Shell employe does an hour's work, however, he makes around $1.78 on the average while the company puts away only $1.74 in profits.

OHIO OIL, a smaller company, has shown more growth. In 1948 its profits were 32 times as great as in 1939, it was earning 35% on the investment and making $3.92 in profits for every hour of labor employed.

Sunray is another champion profit maker. It is doing 2480% better than in 1939, made 25% on its investment in 1948, and banks $8.12 in profits for every hour of labor it hires.

The 15 companies averaged by Phelps include these three, plus Atlantic, Continental, Lion, Phillips, Skelly, Socony - Vacuum, Standard of Indiana, Standard of Ohio, Texas Co., Texas Pacific Coal & Oil and Union Oil.

Typical Profits

Here's how much oil company profits have increased, percentage-wise, during the past few years, using 1939 as the base year. The 15 companies for which figures are listed below are neither the richest nor the poorest in the industry. Rather they are typical companies picked at random. Also shown is the percent return on investment.

WHILE petroleum profits were mounting, how was the oil worker faring?

Here are official government statistics on average hourly earnings in the petroleum refining industry. Compare them to the profit figures shown above.

In 1946, he earned $1.43 an hour —an increase of 48% over 1939. (During the same period, industry profits went up 256%—nearly five times as much,)

In 1947, he earned $1.545 an hour, an increase of 59% over 1939. (During the same period, oil industry profits went up 545% —about 10 times as much.)

In 1948, the average worker earned $1.78 an hour, an increase of 83% over 1939. (During the same period, the industry's profits went up 959%—more than ten times as much increase as the worker enjoyed.)

Oil industry profits in 1948 were 70% greater than in 1947. During the same year, the workers' wages went up only 15%—from $1.545 to $1.78 an hour.

Cleaners Get Rise

Cleaners and Dyers Local 239, CIO Clothing Workers, obtained wage increases for 4000 cleaners and dyers employed in the New York metropolitan area.

According to Jack Cohen, Local 239 manager, the Empire State Chain Association agreed to a five-cent hourly increase for inside workers who were earning up to and including $1 an hour. All those earning $1.01 an hour are to receive four cents an hour more, and those earning $1.20 an hour and more will receive a three-cent hourly increase. Inside weekly workers, Cohen said, will receive a $2 weekly increase, as will drivers. Store clerks obtained a four-cent hourly increase.

All increases are effective as of April 4.

Plan NYC Council

Representatives of nearly 300,000 CIO members will meet April 25 to organize formally a successor to the Greater New York CIO Council, which was dissolved on grounds that it did not adhere to national CIO policy.

Call for the April 25 meeting was sent out by Pres. Louis Hollander of the New York State CIO, who said the new council would "promote and protect the interests of CIO unions in this city, free from allegiance to any 'party line.'"

Profits Up 22% in '48 Above '47

CONFIRMING American labor's charge that industry can afford wage increases out of its mammouth profits, an annual survey just released by the Natl. City Bank, New York City, discloses a 22% leap in 1948 profits of 3262 corporations.

Results of the survey, reported in the New York bank's April newsletter, show that the corporations made profits after taxes of about $11.7 billion in 1948, compared with $9.5 billion in 1947.

The corporations covered by the bank's survey account for a little more than half of total 1948 profits. Industry as a whole reached an all-time peak of $21.7 billion in profits after taxes last year.

BIGGEST PROFIT gains were made in the petroleum, steel, auto and aircraft industries, while setbacks were felt in some consumer goods industries where high prices forced would-be purchasers out of the market.

Most spectacular gain was scored by the aircraft industry which, due to heavy government expenditures, soared from a loss of over $35 million in 1947 to a profit in 1947 to a $10,483,000 profit.

Shipbuilding more than doubled its profits, going from a $4,868,000 profit in 1948 to a $10,483,000 profit last year.

THE agricultural implement industry raised its profits by 44.3%, while the auto and truck industry showed a 41.4% advance.

Other increases were: iron and steel, 31.5%; cement, 52.2%; tobacco, 22.1%; machinery, 25.3%; building equipment, 22.2% and household appliances 25.3%.

The textile industry, whose workers were denied wage increases late in 1948 on grounds that business was bad, came through the year with tidy profits. Silk and rayon showed a 34.8% increase, woolen goods came out 13.4% ahead, hosiery and knitted goods increased profits 11.7%, cotton goods profits were up 10% and other textile products showed a gain of 14.2%.

Alabama CIO Urged To Join With Others To Back Liberals

ALABAMA CIO members, assembled in Birmingham for their tenth annual convention last week, were warned that they must go to elect liberals to Congress, if they do not want progressive legislation forever blocked by the open alignment of Northern Republicans and some Southern Democrats.

Tilford Dudley, assistant to CIO-PAC Director Jack Kroll, and Al Barkan, Textile Workers PAC director, said many Democratic Congressmen are "really" Republicans. Southern CIO members must join with other liberal groups to defeat these "Dixiegops," they asserted, in order to give the Democratic Party more than a paper majority in Congress.

From John Brophy, CIO Councils director, came the declaration that "if a million more workers were organized in the great Southern states, it would change the whole economic climate."

Congress should raise the present minimum wage of 40c an hour to 75c and ultimately to $1, Brophy said.

Alabama Gov. James E. Folsom appeared before the convention to appeal for CIO members' support of his program to develop Alabama and provide more welfare services for the people. He told delegates he favored repeal of Taft-Hartley.

Carey E. Haigler, council president since 1944, did not seek re-election, retiring from the office to devote full time to his duties as Alabama director of the CIO Organizing Committee. John J. Playfair, Mobile, was elected his successor, and Eugene M. Wells, Birmingham, was re-elected secretary-treasurer. Playfair is a field representative of the CIO Steelworkers.

Senate Unit Studies Oleo Tax Removal

A proposal to remove the numerous taxes on oleomargarine is now under study in the Senate Finance Committee.

Under consideration is the Poage Bill (HR 2023) which would remove taxes on oleo—both colored and white—as well as numerous license fees levied on manufactures, distributors and retailers. The bill has already been passed in the House.

Present taxes are half-a-cent-a pound on white oleo and 10c a pound on colored oleo. CIO has urged removal of the taxes.

Much of the legislative debate has been carried on by Congressmen from the cotton states, which produce oleomargarine, and representatives from the dairy states. The dairy lobby has long sought to hinder sales of margarine as a competitor to butter, and was responsible for the taxes in the first place.

"I can deposit only $2000 today—business is not so good."

CIO Leaders Help ADA Plan For 1950; Carey Hits Left-Right Reaction

By BOB SENSER

SOME 600 delegates to the annual convention of the American for Democratic Action — including many from CIO and other labor groups — last week solemnly dedicated themselves to a drive to obtain the Fair Deal from Congress.

ADA, an outfit of non-Communist liberals, had delegates from 40 states.

Its Chicago convention said, in an effect, that ADA still expects a winning team in Congress this year—or else back to the bush leagues for many Congressmen in the 1950 elections. Now ADA delegates are carrying the same cry back to their own home communities. All this noise, ADA hopes, will soon catch the ears of Senators and Representatives in Washington.

Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D., Minn.), national ADA chairman, explained what had happened in previous weeks:

"There's been an air of defeatism, a certain synicism taking over liberal quarters. Even liberals think that we haven't got a chance to put across the Fair Deal program—that we've dropped civil rights especially."

"But let me tell you this. Our Democratic civil rights platform was written in the summer heat of Philadelphia last year—and many of my colleagues and I are perfectly willing to sit out this hot summer in Washington to pass civil rights laws and other social legislation."

SEN. PAUL DOUGLAS (D., Ill.) seconded Humphrey. "We have not given up that fight," Douglas insisted. "We have merely adjourned the battle and we are coming back to it."

One obstacle in the way, Douglas pointed out, was the Wherry amendment to the Senate rules. "Under this amendment a minority of a minority runs the Senate, and we're going to do all in our power to get this rule changed."

Some others who spoke on the program were Gov. William H. Hastie, Virgin Islands; Gov. Chester Bowles, Connecticut; Sen. James Murray (D., Mont.), James B. Carey, CIO Secretary-Treasurer, and Dr. Reinhold Niebuhr.

Carey, speaking on the same program with AFL Pres. William Green on the last day of the convention, told the delegates about the policies adopted at the CIO convention in Portland.

"We of the CIO, like the ADA," Carey said, "are opposed to both the reactionaries of Wall St. and the reactionaries of the Kremlin. In fact, in some ways the Commies are more reactionary than the Republicans of Wall St. The old-guard GOP just wants to go back to 1929. The Commies want to go back to 1848 to ideas that Karl Marx wrote about in his Manifesto."

"Best wishes" messages poured in from Pres. Truman, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Secretary of State Dean Acheson, Philip Murray, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., and many others.

A BIG ISSUE before the convention was the question of exactly how it should mobilize its forces. CIO Auto Workers' Pres. Walter Reuther said that ADA, like the CIO, should not be tied to the apronstrings of either the Republicans or the Democrats.

In Reuther's view it is up to the two parties to give voters a clear-cut choice between reaction and liberalism. "Some Southerners should join up with the Republicans," he said. "Liberal Republicans should gravitate toward the Democratic party."

Both Humphrey and Douglas warned the convention that liberal Republicans must be judged by their principles rather than by their labels. "Some liberals of the Republican party are as deserving of our support as anyone here today," Douglas said. "As the reactionary coalition forms in Congress, let us meet it with a coalition of liberals."

SOME DELEGATES opposed any mention of the Democratic party in the ADA's "statement of policy on political action." But after much debate, both in committee and on the floor, the convention adopted this paragraph:

"We recognize that cooperation with the Fair Deal elements of the Democratic party offers the best opportunity on the national level for the achievement of liberal purposes. This recognition by no means indicates support for all Democratic party policies . . ."

Emil Rieve, president of the CIO Textile Workers, was a member of the commission which prepared the political policy draft.

"We can't make the mistake of waiting until 1950 before we start our political action," Rieve said. "We've got to start right now."

As a way to spread its political influence, ADA aimed its sights at organizing more ADA chapters in the South and getting more farmers, "independent" liberals, small businessmen and professional people within its fold.

The convention voted to continue "the successful cooperation in the 1948 elections at both national and local levels between ADA and the political arms of labor."

ADA's domestic policy put civil rights as No. 1 on its "must" list. Specifically, the convention asked for state and national FEPC laws, anti-lynch laws, an end to segregation in the armed forces, and homerule for Washington, D. C.

Delegates argued for hours on what it did or did not constitute free speech. After heated discussion, they approved sentences such as: "We deplore increasing restrictions upon teachers and students because of their opinions on public questions or political affiliations."

In its foreign policy statement, ADA approved the North Atlantic Pact as a short-range objective, and, as a long-range objective, urged the "establishment of a world government with powers adequate to prevent war."

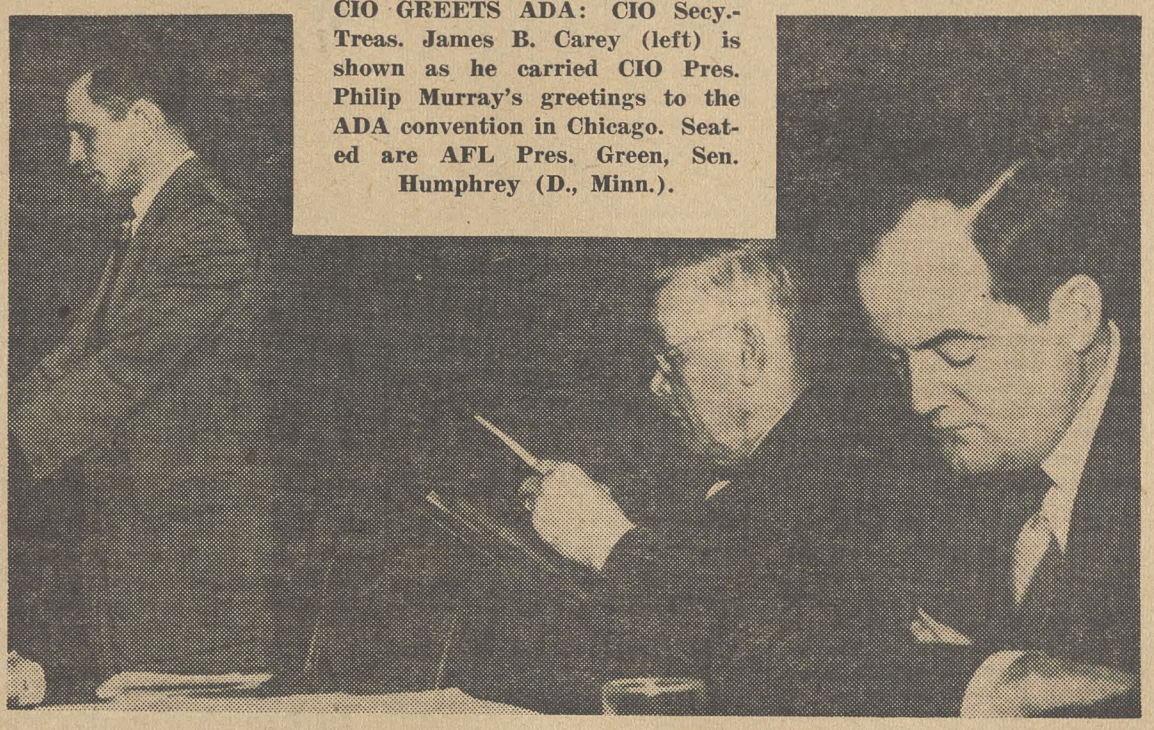
ADA, on Russian aggression, said: "The free world continues to face its most massive external challenge from the Soviet Union and its international Communist instrumentalities." At the same time it added, "We do not despair of the possibility of existing peaceably in the same world with the USSR."

Humphrey estimated that ADA had about 30,000 members at present—and that it would grow to at least 100,000 by the time the 1950 elections roll around.

HUMPHREY, who had been acting chairman of ADA for the past few months, was named regular national chairman by acclamation.

Six CIO leaders were named to the board: Carey, Vice Pres. and Dir. of Organization Allan S. Haywood; Reuther, Rieve, Pres. A. S. Buchmaster, Rubber Workers, and Pres. John Green, Shipbuilders.

A seventh CIO nominee will be named soon by the CIO, for approval by ADA's board.



CIO GREETS ADA: CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey (left) is shown as he carried CIO Pres. Philip Murray's greetings to the ADA convention in Chicago. Seated are AFL Pres. Green, Sen. Humphrey (D., Minn.).

Insured?

U. S. insurance comparines are holding $37 billion of the people's money — but the people have little or nothing to say about how this money is used.

This was pointed out to the ADA convention by Murray D. Lincoln, president of the Cooperative League of the U. S. A.

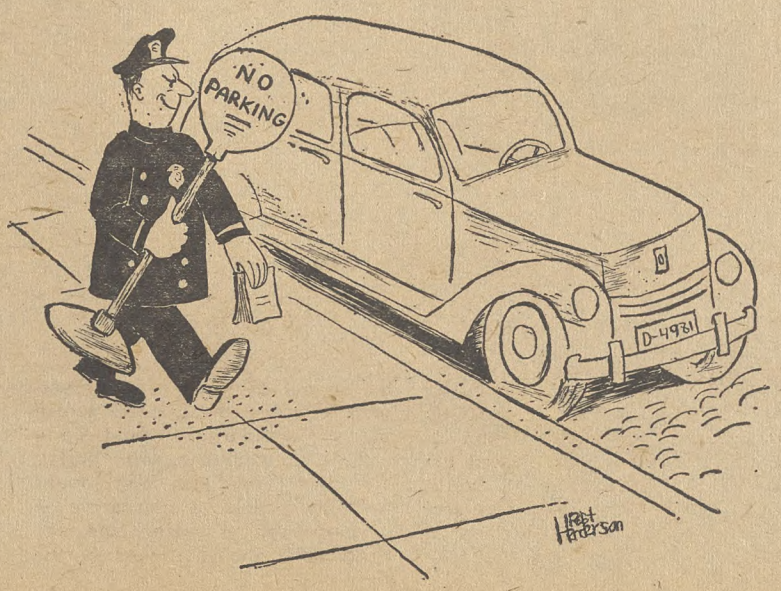
"I've got money in insurance too," Lincoln said, "and my company can invest this money in Indonesia or somewhere to support something I entirely disagree with. Yet I have no control over such action. This control is in the hands of men who don't even own the money."

1872 FEPC

The idea for fair employment practices isn't exclusively a damnyankee idea. It came from the deep South way back in 1872; from Louisiana, to be exact.

Sen. Humphrey chuckled when he learned this at the ADA convention. "Boy, oh, boy, am I going to tell them when somebody claims that Northerners are the ones coming up with these 'radical ideas.'"

Gov. William H. Hastie of the Virgin Islands told the convention that in 1872 the Reform Party of Louisiana—headed by a Confederate general and other Southern war veterans — urged not only unsegregated schools but also "no distinction between the two races" in employment.



Beer Union Rejects $3 Rise Offer

STRIKING CIO Brewery Workers in New York City have turned down the employers' offer of a $3 raise, and are continuing the walkout with the full support of the Natl. CIO.

According to the union's attorney, Paul O'Dwyer, the employers, who are the city's major brewers, "have refused to bargain with us on the basic issues of safety and job security." The 7,000 employes walked out two weeks ago.

The union is demanding that two men be placed on each truck, instead of one. The industry has the highest of ruptures of any occupation in the state, according to the union, because one man is forced to handle the 213-pound beer kegs alone.

Another key issue is speedup in the plants, which union spokesmen say has reached such a point that the sound of bursting bottles "reminds you of the 4th of July."

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and organizational director, has wired the strikers that "the Natl. CIO stands solidly with you in support of your strike and will lend all possible support in your struggle to achieve a fair and reasonable contract."

ECA Is OK'd By Congress

OVERCOMING a noisy vocal opposition, particularly in the Senate, Congress has come to an agreement on a $5 billion, $430 million appropriation authorization for the second year of the Economic Cooperation Administration.

The final agreement came in a conference, which restored the bill to the full amount asked by the ECA. The House had reduced the fund by $200 million.

The action was praised by Paul Hoffman, ECA administrator.

The Marshall plan has only one hurdle left before it can push through its program of rehabilitation of the economy of Europe and other war-torn areas.

The final hurdle is a serious one. It will be in the fight over channeling of the fund by an appropriations bill. The opponents to ECA and the so-called economy bloc hope to cut the appropriations. However, the same plan was tried in the 80th Congress, but failed.

PAC Will Move To Dewey Quarters

The national PAC office in Washington, D. C. will be moved April 21 from 728 17th St., N. W., to the fifth floor, 1346 Connecticut Ave. N. W., which was formerly occupied by the Dewey-Warren organization.

The Dewey-Warren group, which failed to take up its four-year option on the quarters, formerly occupied two floors in the building. PAC will have only one floor but it will include the space formerly occupied by Rep. Hugh Scott, Republican national chairman.

PAC's new telephone number will be ADams 0832.

Strike Follows Firings To Pay Firm's Litigation

CIO OPTICAL Workers at the Riggs Optical Co. in St. Louis, Mo., don't believe workers should have to pay for a company's violation of federal laws. So they've been on strike since March 5.

Recently the company, which has 35 branches from Minneapolis, Minn., to Los Angeles, Calif., has been involved in several suits, in which it and a number of other companies are charged with violating federal laws. Previous court actions had already cost the company a good bit of money in fines.

To offset the cost of the legal expenses, according to the union's president, Thomas E. Andert, Riggs fired two employes in St. Louis. Immediately the St. Louis Local walked out. These dismissals were to have been followed by similar action in Milwaukee, Wis., and Kansas City, Mo., Andert said.

SO FAR the strike has been successful in staving off the layoffs planned for Milwaukee and Kansas City. But the strikers have been less successful in their own behalf.

Efforts to obtain the assistance of optometrists and opticians, as well as help from fellow unionists have collided with the strong arm of Taft-Hartley.

As Andert described the strikers' tangle with Taft-Hartley:

"It is difficult to keep these doctors and optometrists from sending their work to Riggs for manufacture. Therefore, we have had to picket some of these doctors. The action constituted a secondary boycott under the infamous T-H Law. In fact, if the other unionized optical companies were to demand that their workers do the work for Riggs, these union workers would also be guilty of a secondary boycott if they refused to help break their own strike."

THE NLRB, Andert said, was quick to jump into the picture, and the union has had to sign a pledge to refrain from asking other unions to refuse to handle, buy or wear products bearing the Bausch & Lomb Optical Co. name.

(Bausch & Lomb, which was accused of participating in a cartel agreement with the German Zeiss Optical Co. during the war, owns controlling stock in the Riggs Co. Riggs distributes Bausch & Lomb products.)

Steals Turkey, Gets 15 Years In Jail

The high cost of living was the difference between a year in jail and a 15-year sentence for a man in Spokane, Wash., who stole a turkey.

It seems the fellow made the mistake of stealing a turkey that sells at inflated prices. The judge decided that since the turkey cost so much, the charge should be grand — not petty —larceny.

Under a grand larceny charge the man could get 15 years in prison—and did. If the charge had been petty larceny, the highest sentence would have been one year.

The Kitchen Range, Local 89, AFL Hotel & Restaurant Employes newspaper, which related the story, commented: "Fifteen years' imprisonment is pretty rough for wanting a turkey dinner. But then, most restaurant workers have known all along that the price of some restaurant dishes was grand larceny."

Bonine-Tripp Bill Up Again In Mich.

A revised Bonine-Tripp bill has been thrown into the Michigan legislative hopper.

The bill, co-authored by the Republican Senatorial team of G. Elwood Bonine of Vandalia and Harolrd D. Tripp of Allegan, attempts to reinstate most of the provisions of the 1947 measure, declared invalid by the Supreme Court.

Democrats have introduced two labor bills now gathering dust in both chambers. These bills would repeal Bonine-Tripp, strengthen the mediation act and enact a Baby Wagner Act.

Murray Attacks Bias Of Bowling Congress

A STRONG protest against the discriminatory policies of the American Bowling Congress was made in a letter written by CIO Pres. Philip Murray to Secy. E. H. Baumgarten of the bowling organization.

The CIO Steelworkers had obtained an ABC moral support sanction for its tournament, held April 10 at McKees Rock, Pa. When officials of the Pittsburgh Ten-Pin Bowling Association learned that there would be a Negro on the team of Local 1010 at East Chicago, Ill., they said that either the Negro would be excluded from the tournament or the ABC sanction would be lifted.

The steel union decided to give up the sanction, but Pres. Philip Masley of the Pittsburgh association nonetheless threatened ABC members of the steelworkers teams with ineligibility to participate in ABC events.

"This incident points up once again the racial discriminatory constitutional provisions of the ABC," Murray wrote Baumgarten. "We strongly condemn the reactionary short-sighted attitude of ABC in failing to revise its constitution in line with public demand. We assert such an attitude is wholly un-American."

United Labor Group In Lehigh County, Pa.

A new group, Labor's Educational and Legislative Committee of Lehigh County, has been formed in the Allentown, Pa., section.

The committee will press labor and liberal legislation and will attempt to increase registration. Fred Bing, Brotherhood of Firemen and Engineers, is chairman; Douglas Kichline, Lehigh Valley CIO, is secretary, and Horace Geary, AFL Teamsters, is vice chairman.

Barbers Bar Red Officers

A RESOLUTION barring Communists from holding office in the Barbers and Beauty Culturists Union of America was adopted during the final session of the union's convention at New York.

A second resolution, calling upon the union's national officers to sign the Taft-Hartley non-Communist affidavits, was defeated after considerable debate.

Defeat of the non-Communist affidavit resolution came after many convention delegates argued that complying would "serve only to dignify the Taft-Hartley Law." It was also pointed out that the union's activities do not come under jurisdiction of the Taft-Hartley Law and that to comply with any of its provisions at the present time would hinder the efforts of labor to have the law repealed.

The resolution barring Communists follows:

"The labor movement is seriously concerned with the problem of Communism, both within its own ranks and within the country generally. This concern has also been expressed within many international unions which have been torn by dissension as a result of Communist control, and within some state and local councils of the CIO, which Communists have tried to lead away from CIO policy. This concern has also been felt by our National Organization, where in our endeavors to organize, we have been stymied because of propaganda having been spread that we are dominated by Communists."

In his opening remarks to the delegates, Natl. Pres. Ernest Hebert had asked for a decisive anti-Communist stand in order to combat an "AFL whisper campaign of lies" which, he said, was seriously hampering the union's efforts to organize in the field.

The union's five national officers, and six National Executive Board members, were installed by Irving Abramson, CIO Eastern Area Director.

Affidavit Ruling Delayed By Court

A Supreme Court hearing on the constitutionality of the Taft-Hartley affidavit provision has been postponed until next fall.

Two CIO unions—the Steelworkers and the Communications Association—have cases pending before the court on the affidavit issue. Hearings were first postponed until April 28, and now until the autumn term of the court.

The Steel union case involves a demand upon Inland Steel, Indiana Harbor, Ind., that it bargain with the union on a pension program. The company refused, partly on grounds that Pres. Philip Murray and other USA-CIO officers had not signed the affidavits. The union is appealing from a circuit court decision upholding the affidavits.

The communications union case grew out of negotiations with a New York cable company.

Sears' Profits High

Sales and net profits of the Sears Roebuck & Co. mail order firm set a new high in 1948. Sales topped the $2 billion mark for the first time. Net profit was equal to $5.80 a share, compared with $4.56 the previous year.

Scholarships Granted Under Hillman Fund

Scholarship grants made available to the New School for Social Research, New York City, by the Sidney Hillman Foundation have been announced by Dr. Bryn J. Hovde, president of the school. Awards were made to four students, three of whom are working for graduate degrees and one student for his Bachelor's degree.

The Hillman Foundation was established by the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers in honor of the union's first president.

The students are Clark H. Bouwman, Flushing, N. Y.; Harry P. Cohany and Lee Greenbaum, Jr., both of New York City; and Leonard J. Hansen, Englewood, N. J.

Candidates at the New School are selected on the basis of scholarship standing. Interest in serving such objectives as world peace, improved race relations and a strengthened labor movement, and need for scholarship assistance.

Organizationally Speaking

Allan S. Haywood

"Step by step the longest march can be won, can be won;
Single stones will form an arch one by one, one by one.
And by union that we will can all be accomplished still.
Drops of water turn a mill, singly none, singly none."

* * *

In 1860 a call for the first national union in the United States went out from Daniel Weaver to coal miners everywhere. It contained this bit of verse, part of an old British workers' song which the miners had brought with them from their homes across the sea. Its application to the history of all of our unions is a very true one. Today it could well be the anthem of the CIO United Packinghouse Workers.

Last year the union was subjected to great struggles and trials and even the murder of a number of its members. Those who remained were determined to resist successfully any attempts to destroy their organization. The Packinghouse Workers have had a splendid growth since its founding. The workers in that industry still continue their gallant march forward, demonstrating by overwhelming majorities everywhere that they want the CIO. Hardly a week has gone by without this column reporting some victory for this union.

This week A. T. Stephens, UPWA Director of Organization, again reports important gains. By 10 to 1 and 8 to 1, respectively, elections in Wilson & Company plants in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and Albert Lea, Minn., were won by the union. In Albert Lea the vote was 808 to 121, and in Cedar Rapids it was 1389 to 234. Employes of Fairmount Foods, Giddings, Texas, voted overwhelmingly to have the UPWA as their union.

Textile Workers Reg. Dir. Harry Stillman reports an election victory at the Chase Bag Co., of Los Angeles. The workers voted better than 2 to 1 for CIO. CIO Field Reps. Howard Riser and Tony Ramuglia assisted in the campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. Fullerton Fulton of Minnesota reports that the employes of the Minnesota Mining plant in Hastings voted 138 to 10 to be represented by the Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers.

Delaware Reg. Dir. E. D. Hodson reports that the Newark, Del., Chrysler plant has gone CIO by an NLRB vote of 148 to 19.

George Brown, Director of Organization of the International Woodworkers of America, reports that the employes of the W. L. Smith Lumber Co., Anderson, Cal., voted 201 to 83 for the CIO.

CIO Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland, Tennessee, reports the United Paperworkers won an election at the Volney Felt Co., Memphis.

At a time when the AFL is attempting to invade hotels which are under contract to CIO unions, Local 356 of RWDSU, CIO, negotiated a contract at the Warwick Hotel, Philadelphia, securing substantial increases and many other new benefits for its members. The increases which ranged up to $7 per week proved the AFL's ineffectiveness, since hotels under AFL contracts had accepted a wage-freezing formula submitted by the Employers' Association. According to Abe Weiss of the RWDSU, the Warwick employes were unanimous in making the statement, "The CIO is the way to higher wages and to better conditions."

Four years ago a great friend of workers and of humanity everywhere passed away. The spirit of Franklin D. Roosevelt still lives on. The last election demonstrated clearly that the workers of the Nation understand and stand for the ideals which he projected. F. D. R.'s mark in the history of the Nation and of the world is assured and he will live on in the minds and hearts of men for generations to come.

Injunction Asked Against Prudential

A request for a Federal court injunction to restrain the management of Prudential Insurance Co. from "continued unfair labor practices" against its insurance agents has been filed with the NLRB by the CIO Office and Professional Workers.

The union charged that the company through its home office representatives, district managers, assistant managers and other supervisory employes directly attempted to influence its employes to vote against UOPWA.

Pending action on the request for an injunction, the NLRB postponed a conference on arrangements for a run-off election between UOPWA and the AFL.

Bill on DPs Takes Out Bias Clause

ONE OF the Truman Administration's top legislative goals received a shot in the arm last week as the House Sub-Committee on Immigration approved a Displaced Persons bill which knocks out the discriminatory provisions of the present law.

Although the measure fails in some respects to meet recommendations of the CIO and the President, Rep. Francis Walter (D. Pa.), subcommittee chairman, predicted it would get Presidential approval.

The bill would permit 300,000 DPs to enter this country by June 30, 1952, but the President could increase the number by 100,000 if other countries had admitted a relative number, and if he considered the economic condition of the country would warrant it. The President has repeatedly recommended that 400,000 be allowed to enter. Only 205,000 are allowed under the 1948 law.

Three provisions of the present law which were widely criticized as discriminatory against Jews, Catholics and certain nationalities would be eliminated by the bill. These are:

1) The "cut-off" date of Dec. 22, 1945, which excluded persons who entered DP camps after that date from eligibility. Many Jews and Catholics, as well as refugees from new Communist regimes, fled their homelands after this date. The proposed bill would move the "cut-off" date up to Jan. 1, 1949.

2) The provision which admits DPs according to nationality and religion; and

3) The preference that had been given farmers.

Less satisfactory to proponents of a liberalized law was the bill's continuation of the "mortgaging" concept contained in the present law. Under it, nations are required to "pay back" quotas absorbed by DPs. This is done by reducing the country's regular immigration quota annually until the number withheld equal the number of DPs admitted from that country.

The sub-committee's bill would mortgage up to 25% of the quotas for the first five years, and 50% after July 1, 1954. The present law mortgages 50% of the quotas.

Oregon Journal For Hiring Hall

"In Victor Hugo's 'Les Miserables' is an officer named Javert who pursues the morally innocent Jean Valjean relentlessly, inexorably and irrationally to his own destruction. That would be an unhappy role for Mr. Denham."

* * *

WITH these words the Oregon Journal (Portland, Ore.) attacked NLRB's General Counsel Robert N. Denham for his decision to bring charges of an unfair labor practice against the CIO Longshoremen and Warehousemen because of their use of the hiring hall.

The hiring hall replaced the "shape-up" which encouraged bribery of foremen by maritime workers to get jobs.

The complaint against the hiring hall was made originally by the Waterfront Employers Association of the Pacific Coast, but that group joined with the union in asking Denham to dismiss the complaint. However, he was determined to go ahead with charges.

Management and union representatives even came to Washington from the West Coast to get Denham to change his mind.

A hearing has been set before the Full Board, in the Capital on April 21.

The Oregon Journal was led to write the editorial by a letter received by Francis J. Murnane, a member of Local 8, ILWU. The newspaper said:

"Specifically, says Mr. Murnane, the waterfront employers have been asked that a case against the longshore hiring hall be dismissed. It appears, in fact, that the hiring hall is now jointly operated, and to satisfaction on both sides, by the employers and the workers.

"This comment is not directed toward purely legal aspects under the Taft-Hartley law. We are far more interested in the fact that waterfront workers and employers are, at last, trying to build up ship movement and cargo handling valuable not only to them but to the community."

Bridges Will Face Opposition

PRES. HARRY Bridges of the CIO Longshoremen & Warehousemen will face his first opposition in eight years when the union elects its officers by referendum.

Thomas George, president of Local 8 in Portland, Ore., will head an anti-administration slate of candidates on the ballot. Two candidates were named to oppose J. R. Robertson, first vice president, whom Bridges described as "a man as able as I am." These are W. S. Lawrence, southern California ILWU director, and Lloyd Seeliger, Local 26, Los Angeles.

In the closing days of the five-day convention in San Francisco, delegates approved, 564 to 58, an administration-sponsored resolution supporting the World Federation of Trade Unions and calling for a referendum among all CIO affiliates on the question of withdrawal from the organization. In the absence of any such vote, which is more than likely, the ILWU will conduct one among its own members.

(The CIO executive board is expected to act on a recommendation for withdrawal from the WFTU at its next meeting.)

OTHER resolutions supported non-partisan political action, but made no mention of the CIO-PAC; pledged to fight re-election of Sen. Robert Taft (R. O.) and Sen. Harry P. Cain (R. Wash.); condemned raiding of unions; sought the ouster of NLRB General Counsel Robert N. Denham; urged statehood for Hawaii; enforsed affiliation of the CIO Fishermen with the ILWU.

In reply to CIO Pres. Philip Murray's telegraphed charge that "unwarranted rumors" had been circulated at the convention, delegates adopted a resolution finding it "most unfortunate that Pres. Murray apparently relied on incorrect reports and misinformation as to the position of this union and its officers in relation to Natl. CIO."

The resolution stated that the union and Natl. CIO are in agreement in 90% of their relations and thanked the CIO chief for his "able assistance and efforts in our behalf—particularly for his assistance in the aid of the Natl. CIO during the recent maritime strike."

Imports of Czech Jewelry Blamed for U. S. Layoffs

PROTEST against the continued extension of reciprocal trade agreement advantages to Soviet-dominated Czechoslovakia has been lodged with the State Department by the CIO Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers.

In a letter to Secretary of State Dean Acheson, PJNW Pres. Anthony Esposito called attention to the fact that heavy jewelry imports from Czechoslovakia, particularly inexpensive jewelry and many religious articles, have been an important factor in bringing about mass lay-offs of American jewelry workers.

"Ever since Czechoslovakia was coerced into the Soviet system," Esposito wrote, "labor conditions have deteriorated. What we must cope with is not the fair competition between free workers, but the unfair competition between our citizens and Soviet-enslaved labor."

Esposito also wrote Francis Cardinal Spellman, Archbishop of New York, to call to his attention the American purchase of religious jewelry from Czechoslovakia both as an economic threat to American jewelry workers and an unwarranted sanction of a Communist government.

Asks Election Holiday

Rep. Raymond Madden (D., Ind.) has introduced a bill to make Election Day in even numbered years a holiday, to be known as National Election Day.

Local 210, CIO Oil Workers, which is situated in Madden's district, has advocated such a move.

Clare Hoffman Franks A Blast Against CIO

Rep. Clare Hoffman (R., Mich.) used his congressional free mailing privilege to distribute 83,000 political letters charging the CIO with attempting to take control of the State government.

Hoffman mailed an excerpt from the Congressional Record in which he urged opposition to CIO-backed candidates in the April 4 election.

By using the Congressional franking privilege, Hoffman saved $2580 in postage.

Hicks Griffiths, chairman of the Michigan Democratic Central Committee, said that Hoffman unlawfully used the taxpayers money and violated the "standard of decency and fair play."

Retraction By Hebert Asked By NAACP

A demand that Rep. F. Edward Hebert (D., La.) retract his "gross misstatement of facts" about the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has been made by Walter White, NAACP secretary.

Herbert had asserted that the NAACP "defies the authority of the government . . . and says it will not serve in the armed forces . . . unless certain conditions of its own terms are met."

"That is an absolute falsehood," White wrote Hebert, demanding that the Louisiana lawmaker "do the decent thing" by retracting his statement.

"Had you manifested the slightest desire to find the truth," White continued, "you would have found ample testimony in the press and elsewhere that this Association . . . opposed the so-called civil disobedience campaign which was advocated by others."

Offer Accepted

Some 100 CIO Chemical Workers at the Lever Brothers plant at Hammond, Ind., "reluctantly accepted" an offer of company-paid hospitalization for all employes and their families without a wage increase, after AFL locals in four other Lever plants took the package, the CIO union reported.

HST Plan For CVA Is Praised

THE CIO last week hailed Pres. Truman's recommendation for a Columbia Valley authority patterned along the lines of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray sent the following message to the President:

"Congratulations on your message. The well-rounded planning of this great region and the development of its resources in the interest of all its people must necessarily be part of any genuine progressive program in America during the years ahead. The purposes can be accomplished only through a single Federal Authority located in the Columbia Valley."

Truman proposed that CVA take over building and operations of conservation, water and power facilities in the Columbia Valley. At present the operations are maintained separately by the Reclamation Bureau and the Bonneville Power Administration, both under the Interior Dept., and by the Army Engineer Corps.

In a message to Congress, Truman said CVA would "provide not only for a balanced program of constructing dams, irrigation works, power transmission lines and other facilities, but also for a workable operation plan for using these facilities simultaneously for flood control, navigation, power generation and transmission, fish protection and other purposes."

MEANWHILE, the Senate approved a $542 million deficiency bill, including $2,500,000 to start on the TVA's new Johnsonville, Tenn., steam plant. The CIO supported the steam plant.

The House has already approved the steam plant provision. However. its bill and the Senate's differ over the amount of money in the appropriation. A conference is expected to iron that out shortly.

Sen. Styles Bridges (R., N. H.) tried to strike out the plant provision, but lost 30 to 55.

H. I. Kaplan Dies

Herbert I. Kaplan, member of the executive board of the CIO Transport Workers, is dead after a brief illness. Kaplan also was vice president of TWU Local 234, Philadelphia.

Kaplan, one of the founders of Local 234 and a veteran of its two major strikes, had been a traction operator for 22 years. He was a delegate to the IUC and director of Local 234's PAC.

He was also a leader with TWU Pres. Michael Quill in the campaign which ousted left-wing elements from offices in the international. Quill led the mourners at his funeral. During the Philadelphia strike last month, Kaplan worked 18 and 20 hours a day. He is survived by the widow, Mrs. Beatrice Kaplan, and a daughter, Yvette.

Carey Says GE Aide Abets Reds

JAMES B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer, charged last week that M. V. Merrihue, manager of Employee and Community Relations of General Electric Co., aided and abetted the Communist Party.

At a meeting of the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Personnel Association April 14, Merrihue declared that Carey had sought the help of GE last year in combatting Communist influence in the CIO Electrical Workers. He was quoted as follows:

"Jim Carey, secretary-treasurer of the UE, came to us before the last UE convention. He apparently wanted to get our help in breaking the Commie hold on the union. But we didn't confer with him. We don't meddle in internal affairs of the union. We don't want the employes to think we want to break up their unions. If unions went out, abuses would creep back because management is too busy with production. Unions are here to stay."

Carey denied he made any such appeal to GE or any of its officers.

"I have suggested repeatedly that these large manufacturers keep their hands off, and especially that they stop giving aid and comfort to the Communist Party by discharging vigorous anti-Communist members of UE, thus aiding the Communists," said Carey.

"NOW WE have Mr. Merrihue trying to make it appear that I expect GE to interfere in the affairs of the UE. When he makes that statement or even intimates that, he is helping the interests of the American Communist Party. It is high time that industrial managements, not only in the electrical industry but in other industries, stop this sort of vicious propaganda.

"These sanctimonious statements about meddling in the internal affairs of the union do not hold water when they are interpreted in the light of experience. GE specifically has had to be restrained any number of times by the Federal Government from interfering in the affairs of the union. Every union member knows that.

"The officials of GE, among others, do not know anything about Communism or the activities of Communists. They simply pick up that issue to try to make it appear that the whole American labor movement is Communist dominated. The apparent fact is that they would rather do business with Communists than with bona fide militant American labor leaders. They know that the Communists are far less aggressive and more reactionary than democratic American trade union leaders. They can make a better money deal with the Communists and they know it.

"The general tenor of Mr. Merrihue's speech in Pittsburgh was that the Taft-Hartley Law is an excellent protective measure for union members. The people of the U. S. rejected that view last November 2nd."

Highest Inventories

Inventories at the end of January, 1949, were the highest on record. Manufacturers' stocks went up $230 million in January, on top of a $540 million increase in December.

Vol. XII WASHINGTON, D. C., APRIL 25, 1949 82 No. 16

SLUMS LIKE THESE, in a stone's throw of the Capitol and in "the most beautiful city in the world," breed disease and crime. Faced with this challenging fact, the Senate has passed, by a large majority, a housing bill aimed at ending such conditions. Next action is up to the House See picture story on Page 8.

"Remember November! Keep Punching in '49! And Get Ready for '50!" That's the message going to CIO-PAC Blockworkers at the Nation's Grassroots. Their Drive Needs Your Dollars!

'49 No 'Off Year' for PAC Workers

Kroll Says Give Now To PAC

By JACK KROLL
National PAC Director

WE HAVE no "quota" in our Dollars for PAC drive.

We have a goal, which is the same in 1949 as it was in 1948, and will be in 1950.

Our goal is that every CIO member shall have an opportunity to give a Dollar to PAC.

As our local and regional CIO agencies reach this goal, as their committees see to it that every CIO member is asked to back up political action with his money, we shall measure the success of our drive and of our whole effort.

For the record proves beyond a shadow of a doubt that the people know what they want, and they know it takes political action to get it. They're willing to pay for political action.

THAT'S WHY the Dollar Drive sets no quotas. PAC belongs to the people of the CIO, and they will set their own quotas.

CIO members are asked to give —and they do give—money to many worthy causes. But CIO members who put money into their PAC are not "giving" money at all. They are carrying a share of the load in our common effort for the common welfare.

Last year this truth was manifest. It hit us all between the eyes. We were fighting for the lives of our unions, with political action.

We won that battle, but the war goes on.

THIS YEAR we need no less political action; we need more. For no political victory stays won. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. And constant action is the price of security. There are campaigns going on now, and next year the whole social welfare program of the country will face a major test, in the Congressional elections.

The CIO-PAC is getting ready for that, and will be prepared to serve the CIO when the issues arise.

Your Dollar to PAC will help.

PAC'S OFFICE STAFF comes through first with its "Dollars to PAC" and, natch, they're pleased about it. Here are Doris Schwartz, Becky Best and Patricia Maloney getting the regular receipts from PAC Comptroller George Rettinger. On the wall is a picture of Sidney Hillman, first director of PAC.

Success of $1 Drive Up to Locals' Officers

CIO LOCAL and regional organizations have worked out effective Dollar Drive methods for raising funds for local and national political action.

Several years of practical experience have formed the basis for program which fall into very similar patterns. A survey of methods being widely used this year shows that PAC efforts depend most of all on local officers and shop stewards.

"Dollars for PAC" campaigns are being scheduled to run two weeks or a month, timed as far as possible so as not to conflict with other appeals for funds.

REPORTS TO CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll show that labor editors have been widely helpful, by publishing advertisements, news stories and editorials about the campaigns.

Local officers pave the way for their campaigns with meetings of collectors, union officers, shop stewards and others who are interested. These are followed up by meetings of shop units, locals and other union groups, where drive officials and collectors report to the membership on campaign plans and answer questions. Pledge sheets passed around at these meetings, and later posted on bulletin boards are reported to have shown good results.

The basis of collection differs widely according to local conditions. Some CIO groups have found shop units best suited to the job, others work on a neighborhood basis.

The goal of every method is that every single CIO member will be approached by a collector, and that none will be neglected. Light work loads—about 25 persons to a collector—have proved most effective.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray regards the PAC Dollar Drive as far more than an effort to raise money for political action.

Addressing the recent PAC conference in Washington, Murray declared political action one of the most important fields of CIO activity. The Dollar Drive, he said, is part of our common effort for the common welfare.

600 Attend Kickoff

Everybody in Trumbull County, O., is talking about the PAC's first annual kickoff dinner.

More than 600 attended the affair, in Niles, and heard of PAC's 1949 fund-raising. Speakers included CIO Steelworkers' Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald; Steel Dist. 26 Dir. James J. Griffin (Dist. 26 includes Trumbull County) and Jack Thornton, the District's PAC director. Officers of Trumbull PAC include: W. J. Anderson, chairman; Vice Chm. Jack Corcoran; Secy. Olive McCann and Treas. James O'Day.

500 Offices At Stake In 1949 Elections

OVER 500 CITY, county and state elections provide labor's political organizations an opportunity to elect friendly local officials this year and to test their strength for future battles, a compilation prepared by the CIO-PAC Research Dept. shows.

The PAC's data, which has been copied by numerous other political organizations, shows that in most places in which crucial battles are to be fought in 1950, local elections in 1949 provide a preliminary testing ground.

Offices at stake in this year's election range from mayor to dogcatcher and, in many instances, it was reported, CIO members are running for these and other offices.

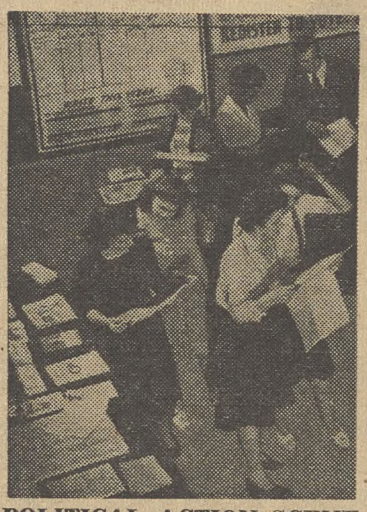
One of the major elections on which attention is centered is the gubernatorial race in Virginia where, according to PAC representatives, there is a chance of defeating the notorious Byrd machine which has long ruled the state.

'44 Figures Show Need Of Voting

REGISTRATION and voting by every CIO member and his family remain the most important job of CIO-PAC, according to PAC Dir. Jack Kroll.

"It is an unfortunate fact," said Kroll, "that members of organized labor have lagged behind the rest of the community in exercising their right to vote and that Americans as a whole seem inclined to treat lightly the privilege of participating in their government."

Registration techniques and plans for making sure that the maximum number of registered voters get to the polls on election day have been worked out by PAC and are being circulated to state and local PAC's.



POLITICAL ACTION SCENE

Effective work in this field is expected to show up in the 1950 elections.

Senators who must stand for re-election next year and the percentage of the potential vote by which they won their seats in 1944, are as follows:

Lister Hill (D., Ala.), 7%.
Carl Hayden (D., Ariz.), 20%.
J. William Fulbright (D., Ark.), 12%.
Sheridan Downey (D., Calif.), 26%.
Eugene D. Millikin (R., Colo.), 35%.
Brien McMahon (D., Conn.), 33%.
Claude Pepper (D., Fla.), 12%.
Walter F. George (D., Ga.), 4½%; Glen H. Taylor (D., Ida.), 30%; Scott W. Lucas (D., Ill.), 37%; Homer E. Capehart (R., Ind.), 38%; Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R., Ia.), 33%.
Clyde M. Reed (R., Kan.), 32%; Garret Withers (D., Ky.), (appointed); Russell Long (D., La.), 17% (1948); Millard E. Tydings (D., Md.), 22%; Forrest C. Donnell (R., Mo.), 31%.
Pat McCarran (D., Nev.), 27%; Charles W. Tobey (R., N. H.), 34½%; Robert F. Wagner (D., N. Y.), 40%; Clyde R. Hoey (D., N. C.), 8½%; Frank P. Graham (D., N. C.), appointed.

'Wood Bill is T-H Plus More Anti-Labor Provisions'

THE Taft-Hartley repeal bill of Rep. Wood (D., Ga.) is in some respects "even more objectionable to labor" than the T-H measure itself.

This charge is made in an analysis of the Wood Bill prepared by the CIO Legal Dept.

"Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO branded the original Wood Bill as being more viciously repressive of labor's basic rights than the Taft-Hartley Act," the analysis says.

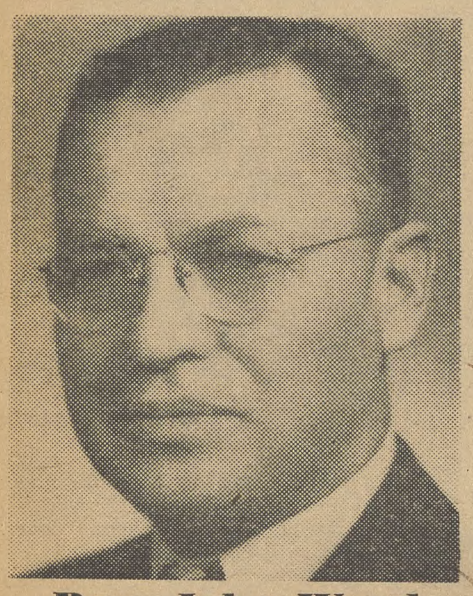
"Congressman Wood has now revised his original bill purportedly to meet some of the objections of labor to the original draft.

"Our analysis of the revised bill, however, demonstrates that the present Wood Bill (H. R. 4290) still re-enacts most of the substantive provisions of the T-H Act and in several important particulars strengthens T-H provisions to make them even more objectionable to labor.

"No one who reads the Wood Bill will be deceived by the language which purports to repeal the T-H Act. This statement in the bill is mere sophistry.

"The Wood Bill is the T-H Act plus additional anti-labor prohibitions. The few concessions in the Wood Bill purporting to eliminate or change T-H provisions are inconsequential and insubstantial. They constitute window dressing which will deceive no one.

"The CIO regards any vote that may be cast for the Wood Bill as a vote against labor and against the public interest. The CIO calls upon the Congress to pass the Thomas-Lesinski Bill which is truly a T-H repeal bill."



Rep. John Wood
His Bill is Chip Off T-H Block

Quick Injunctions

The analysis shows:

The discretionary right of the NLRB General Counsel to obtain injunctions is enlarged by permitting injunctions to issue merely upon a filing of charges that an unfair labor practice has been committed and without investigation, proof or hearings.

The disenfranchisement of economic strikers imposed by T-H and conceded even by Senator Taft to be unjust, is substantially retained through the device of permitting economic strikers to vote only if they are not replaced 90 days or more before the election.

The T-H Act language which has been interpreted to prevent peaceful picketing by labor unions is retained.

The ban on secondary boycotts provided in T-H is modified only to a very limited extent. A union, if its collective agreement so provides, may refuse to work on struck goods where the striking employes are members of the same union.

Unions continue to be subject to unwarranted law suits in the federal courts, as permitted by T-H.

The checkoff provisions of T-H are made more restrictive by making it necessary to procure new checkoff authorization cards each year.

While the Wood Bill purports to eliminate T-H requirement for a union shop authorization election it provides that 30% of the employes can petition for an election to prohibit a union shop and retains most of the other complicated T-H election procedures, including employer election petitions and decertification provisions.

T-H permits permits discharge for nonmembership in a union under a union shop agreement only if the employe was discharged from a union because of failure to pay dues. The Wood Bill, while permitting discharge also for expulsion because of Communist affiliation or participating in a strike in violation of a contract, would not permit discharge for expulsion from the union because of anti-union activity, embezzlement of union funds, or other recognized intolerable practices.

State Laws Protected

The T-H provision making more restrictive state laws against union security superior to the federal law is retained.

The Wood Bill would make illegal closed or union shop agreements entered into prior to T-H and continuing for a term of years. Such agreements were preserved by T-H. The general prohibitions against closed shop contracts is retained although it is declared not to be an unfair labor practice for an employer "merely to notify a union of opportunities for employment."

T-H restrictions on collective bargaining in relation to welfare funds are preserved.

The government's power to seek injunctions in national "emergency strikes" is broadened.

The agency definition of T-H under which international and local unions have been held responsible for acts not actually authorized or ratified is retained.

The T-H restriction on political contributions and expenditures by labor unions is retained.

The so-called free speech provision of T-H which goes far beyond the legitimate protection of the constitutional right of employers to free speech is retained.

Labor Not Amused
Look Who Pulls the Strings

'Labor Czar' Retained

The Wood Bill would preserve the NLRB General Counsel of the NLRB as a "labor czar."

The Wood Bill provides for a separate conciliation service rather than for the return of the conciliation service to the Dept. of Labor.

Numerous other provisions of the Wood Bill are T-H provisions like the individual grievance clause, the exclusion of supervisors from the protection of the Act, the jurisdictional dispute section which is made more unworkable by limiting the opportunities for parties to settle their own disputes and the non-Communist affidavit requirement which is enlarged to require such affidavits by employers as well as unions.

Carson to FTC Upsets Big Biz

PRESIDENT Truman stirred up a GOP-NAM hornet's nest when he nominated John Carson to the Federal Trade Commission.

All of the buzzing and stinging comment from the "die-hards" that followed resulted from the fact that Carson is the Washington representative of the American co-operative movement and is known as a friend of organized labor.

Fulton Lewis, Jr., who usually peddles a Big Business line in his Mutual network commentary, began conducting an anti-Carson campaign.

NAM has been putting in its nickel's worth, too.

As a result, business men who know nothing about Carson except what they've heard from Lewis and NAM are sending many anti-Carson letters to Senators.

It used to be said around Washington that "John Carson is more potent than a half dozen ordinary Senators." He served for 12 years as secretary to James Couzens (R., Mich.).

Carson, a former newspaper man, served as a Roosevelt appointee and consumers' representative on the Coal Board. For years he has been Washington representative of the Co-operative League of the USA.

Friends of Carson predict a "wide-open fight" when he comes up for Senate confirmation. They say the battle will revolve around two subjects President Truman mentioned when he nominated Carson—Carson's friendship to labor and his connection with co-ops.

Carson's appointment has been indorsed by CIO Pres. Philip Murray and AFL Pres. William Green. The railroad unions have given him their support. So have a number of religious organizations.

Safety Drive In USA

A PAMPHLET, "Sure We Believe in Safety! Do You?" has been issued by the CIO Steelworkers as part of that union's drive to provide more security—physically, socially, on the job and union-wise—for its members.

The pamphlet came out at about the same time that the U. S. Public Health Service issued a report showing the reason why four workers were killed and 19 hospitalized last Jan. 5 at Whiting, Ind. All victims were or are members of District 31 of the union.

Frank Burke, safety and health chairman of the Steelworkers, tells the story this way:

"On Jan. 5, old oil drums loaded with dross in two box cars were shipped from Granite City, Ill., to Whiting. The drums were sampled inside the plant and dust respirators issued to the workers.

"About noon, the workers noted a white foam coming from the sampling piles."

AFTER THE deaths and injuries, Burke continues: "Samples of the dross were sent to the Health Service. Spectographic analysis reports the following materials were present in the dross: lead, tin, copper, arsenic, aluminum, antimony, sodium and magnesium. (In trace quantities, zinc, calcium, silver and manganese also were present.)

"The Service further did some X-ray diffraction and showed the presence of lines for aluminum arsenide. This compound is quite unstable in the presence of moisture and in contact with moisture will hydrolize to form aluminum hydroxide and arsine. The mixing of the dry and damp dross created the exothermic reaction, which explains the white fume the workers witnessed.

(The shipper was the Hoyt Plant, Natl. Lead Co., Granite City; the receiver was the Federated Metals Division, American Smelting and Refining Co., Whiting.)

"It must be understood that both of these companies have modern laboratories and capable hygienists who should have known the dangers surrounding their type of operations, also having the knowledge of the various chemical reactions."

RABBI WISE

Rabbi Wise Is Mourned

CIO PRES. Philip Murray has sent the following telegram to James Waterman Wise and Justice Justine Wise Polier of New York City, children of Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, who died April 19:

"It is with a profound sense of personal loss that I convey to you on behalf of the entire CIO our deepest sympathy upon the occasion of the death of your distinguished father and my long time friend, Rabbi Stephen S. Wise. I know of no man in our life time who devoted more of his energies toward the upbuilding of better America than your distinguished father.

"Throughout his long career he gave freely of his time and energy to bring about the realization of higher living standards and better working conditions for the common man.

"All of us can remember the inspiring address he delivered to the Eighth Constitutional Convention of the CIO in Atlantic City, N. J., in 1946 which by the unanimous vote of the Convention was ordered printed in a special pamphlet and widely distributed among all of our affiliated unions.

"We also know at first hand of the great leadership he gave as President of the American Jewish Congress and head of the World Jewish Congress in seeking to eliminate all forms of discrimination among all minority groups. In his passing America has lost a great son and the world a champion of universal peace and universal democracy."

BUT IN NAME ONLY

Senator Taft of Ohio, who helped sire the Taft-Hartley Act, recently engaged in as neat a bit of double-talk as we've heard in years.

He said he was willing for Congress to repeal his pet anti-union measure—but in name only.

Said Taft: "I can see no objection to nominal repeal of the present law, so long as the basic principles are preserved in the new legislation."

The Senator could have said the same thing more bluntly if he'd put it this way: "I don't care if my name comes off the measure just as long as the principles of T-H remain."

(Perhaps we should mention parenthetically that Taft comes up for re-election in 1950.)

Just what are the "basic principles" of T-H?

The No. 1 principle is that the law must be loaded in favor of employers. That's basic. Yes, sir!

The principle of government by injunction must be preserved in dealing with unions. Absolutely!

And, of course, there must be some provisions which will enable strikebreakers to vote a union out of existence while members are out pounding the bricks, fighting for their rights. Unquestionably!

In case the Senator's interested, let's make one thing crystal clear. Labor doesn't give a darn what the new law's called. It doesn't care whether Taft's name is on it or not.

But the unfair "basic principles" of T-H must go. They must go completely, not just "nominally."

NOBODY LIKES WOOD'S BILL?

We thought our office wag had turned a neat phrase when he referred to the Wood Bill as a "chip off the old T-H block," but we're not so sure he won't have to bow to the headline writer for the NAM News.

The News (the NAM one; not the CIO) referred to the latest T-H repealer as the "Denatured Wood Bill."

Our wag said what he did because he considered the Wood proposal a poor substitute for the Thomas-Lesinski Bill.

The NAM headliner said what he did because he considered Wood's measure as a poor substitute for the Taft-Hartley Act.

Well, it wasn't the first time the CIO and NAM were miles apart.

And the fact that the NAM doesn't like the Wood Bill doesn't make us like it any better.

It's merely a poor substitute for a bad law. ★ ★ ★

MOVE OVER, WESTBROOK!

For years it's been possible for a speaker to get a good round of applause at a labor meeting merely by saying something nasty about Westbrook Pegler, who acts as if vinegar had been substituted for the milk of human kindness.

While Westbrook was going his unmerry way, a new star was slowly rising on the horizon of reaction. Now he is really up there, floating around in the NAM firmament.

He's a fellow known as Fulton Lewis Jr., and he's rapidly replacing Pegler as the "pet peeve" of the common man, whom both profess to love dearly.

Although his unfair tactics irk us, Lewis often serves us well. By the simple process of listening to him we can tell what Big Business is thinking.

However, we wish he'd quit pretending to be unbiased.

To Heck With The 'Good Old Days'

Nobody Really Wants Them Because It's The Future That Really Counts

By ALLAN L. SWIM

A LOT of us who think the U. S. is a darn good place in which to live are getting fed up with those loud-voiced gentlemen whose chief contribution to progress consists of making dull, pious speeches about "preserving the American way of life."

Perhaps we're fed up because we know they don't mean what they say, although they sometimes say it so beautifully—so patriotically.

You know the kind of fellows I mean—those who talk about "free enterprise" when they actually mean "monopoly" and those who verbally yearn for the "good old days" but wouldn't return to them for a million bucks.

They're the guys who advocate the status quo and the "American system" and speak of them as if they were one and the same, which they aren't.

OUR EARLY "American way of life" was pretty darn primitive, if you can believe what you read in the history books.

Each man was nearly a law unto himself, nobody gambled on the stock exchange and the plumbing in the log cabins was terrible.

Our early leaders were men who got together and plotted a revolution. They, by overthrowing a form of government, wrote a glorious chapter in the history of mankind—but the chapter wasn't called "Maintaining the Status Quo."

Remember those bad "good old days" of 1861 and thereabouts, when American fought American and brother sometimes lined up against brother in bloody warfare?

And how about those "good old days" that followed the stock market crash, when some of the "status quo" boys of the 1920's jumped from windows rather than face the future?

THERE, OF course, is "an American way of life." It's a darn good way and no other nation has anything to equal it.

But it's not the way of those loud-voiced gentlemen referred to earlier.

It consists largely of clinging to certain democratic fundamentals and changing anything or everything else that doesn't suit us.

You could almost say that "change" has been our middle name. We've discarded the old for the new with such rapidity that it has startled the rest of the world.

In the span of one lifetime we've progressed from the horse and buggy era to ero of the and buggy era to the era of

We were the world's youngest nation only 173 years ago. Today we're the world's most powerful nation.

We didn't get where we are by maintaining the status quo.

THE ONE certain way to destroy the real American way of life is to block the changes which a majority of the people want.

This is true of changes in the social and economic fields as well as the field of industrial production.

Being against Communism, or against Fascism, or against poverty, or against disease simply isn't enough.

We've got to be "for" something if we're going to progress. And being "for" something good that we had yesterday in preference to advocating something better for tomorrow just doesn't make sense.

Furthermore, it's ridiculous to say we wouldn't try something merely because Grandfather never heard of it or because we never tried it before.

YES, A lot of people are fed up with the loud-voiced gentlemen—in Congress and out—who make dull, pious speeches about "preserving the American way of life" when that's not what they mean at all.

We're fed up because we believe they're blocking progress—because we believe they're making no real effort to use our resources more wisely, to produce more efficiently, to distribute more equitably, to make our democracy function more effectively.

What we need—and need badly—is a positive and dynamic philosophy based on democratic principles, coupled with a program of action in the social and economic fields that will make the cockeyed isms from overseas die of their own ineffectiveness and lack of appeal.

But the job can't be done if we follow those who say "no" to every plan for improving our society.

British Labor Sets Sights On '50

THE NEED for still more production and export to support Britain's new social legislation—together with promises of still more services for the people—is the keynote to the draft program for the British Labor party's 1950 campaign.

This tentative platform was issued early to afford ample time for trade unionists and local Labor party members to debate it and propose amendments before the annual party convention in June.

The draft was approved not only by the Labor party executive committee, a majority of whose members are union men, but also by the leading cabinet members of the Labor government and an additional group of trade union representatives who were called in for consultation.

In the foreign policy section of the platform, which pledges continued support to the European recovery program, tribute is paid to the part that U. S. unions have played in getting the Marshall Plan under way.

"Much of the progress that has been made in European recovery would have been impossible without American aid," the party leaders acknowledge. "The British government made it clear that it would accept no condition which undermined our freedom to select our own course, and no such condition was demanded by the U. S."

"Much of the credit for this wise and magnanimous outlook on the part of the American people must go to the American trade unions and the work of their representatives on the various bodies concerned with European aid. And this is only one of the recent and dramatic examples of the growing power and influence of American trade unionism and American Labor."

No immediate relief from "austerity" is promised the British people. Improved food standards depend largely upon increased domestic food production, says the platform, which devotes considerable space to agricultural policy. Continued food subsidies to hold down consumer costs are pledged, as is the improvement in the system of food distribution.

The Labor party promises to maintain full employment. Increased public investment will be resorted to if any threat of unemployment looms, the party platform declares.

Proud of its nationalization of coal, power, transport and the pending socialization of the steel industry, the Labor party points to the government's ability to expand the operation of these industries as proof of its ability to keep full employment.

"I SWORE I'd beat those union wage scales."

There Was Spirit But Not Much More

THEY CLIMBED the steep, narrow stairs in the semi-darkness, feeling their way along carefully so they woudn't stumble.

At the top they crowded into a poorly furnished room—a dingy room that contained little more than chairs—and one of the Frenchmen switched on a dim overhead light.

The tiny, unshaded bulb gave off a flickering light but provided only meager illumination.

One of the Americans pulled out a fresh pack of cigarets and passed it around. Each Frenchmen took a "smoke"—eagerly.

After everybody was seated the interpreter began speaking.

THE AMERICANS, the interpreter explained, were newspaper men representing the labor press. They were in France to study economic conditions and the operation of the Marshall Plan.

They had traveled to the north of France —near the Belgian border—because they wanted to talk with miners in the heart of the coal belt.

The miners, members of the non-Communist Force Ouvriere, said they'd be glad to talk with their "brothers from America."

The European Recovery Program, they agreed, was a good thing—and there was considerable evidence that it already had helped the French people considerably.

But things were tough, really tough, in the coal region.

ONE OF THE miners said, sadly, that he and his fellow unionists had hoped for lowered prices, but had hoped in vain.

The men were working 48 hours a week instead of the pre-war 40, but that didn't help much either.

Before the Nazis came, an average miner earned enough in two weeks to buy a fairly good suit of clothes, but now it took the pay from five week's work to buy an inferior suit.

The work clothing situation was bad, too, one of them said. A miner had to work 2½ days to buy a pair of overalls—and an unskilled worker earned about enough in four days to buy a shirt.

Yes, sir, things were tough, but the miners said France would pull herself out of the hole with help from the U. S.

HOUSING CONDITIONS in the area were terrible, the Frenchmen said. Sometimes as many as seven persons lived in one room.

The unions weren't doing too well, either, because only about half the miners in the region were organized.

Force Ouvriere was gaining strength, but slowly. There was very little money with which to pay organizers and there often wasn't enough in the "kitty" to pay bus fare so union leaders could travel from town to town.

They said there was little money to "make propaganda" of the kind needed to fight the Communists and to expand their own organization.

They wondered if, perhaps, there were some union groups in the U. S. which might give them a helping hand.

THE CONVERSATION went on for a long time, with the Americans and Frenchmen taking turns asking each other questions.

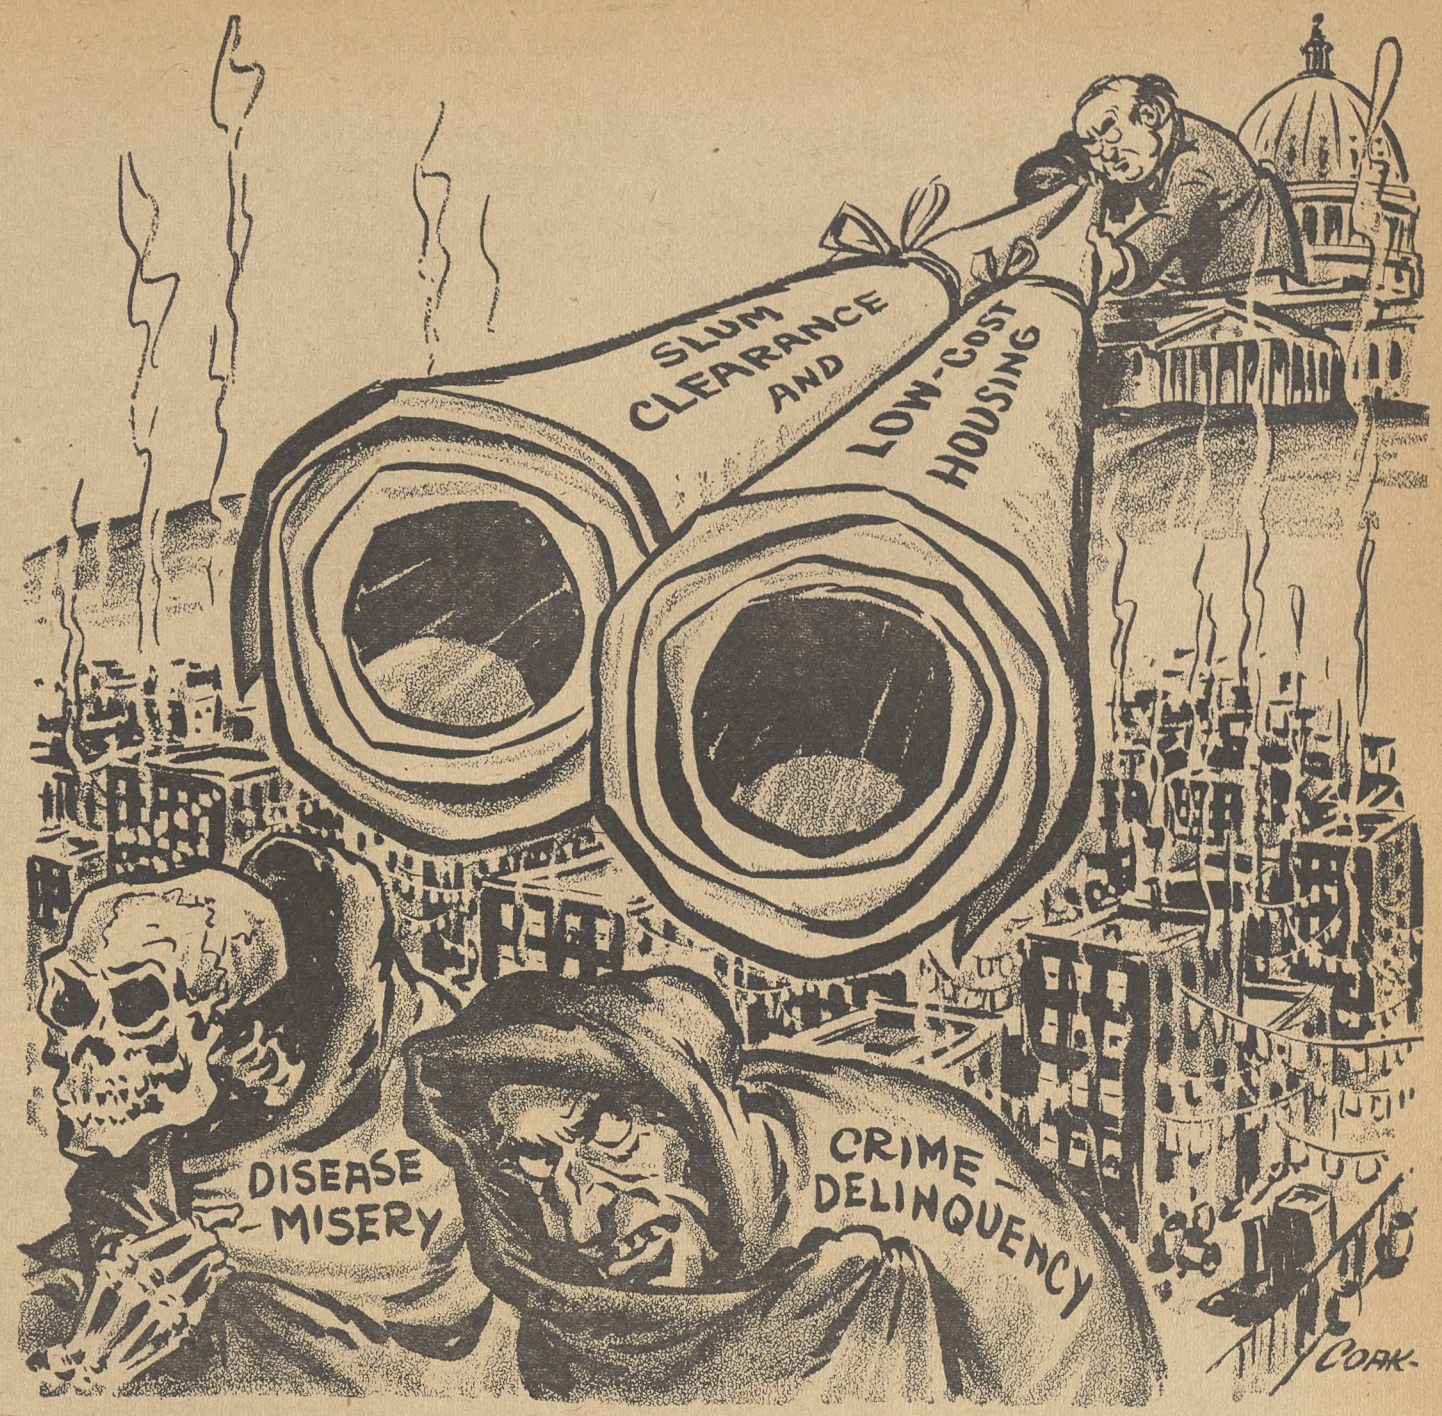
The miners wanted to know about conditions in the U. S. and the possibility of a new worldwide non-Communist labor organization.

The session wasn't a grim one. The Frenchmen were surprisingly cheery and they were hopeful of the future.

Finally, the Americans left and as they reached the street one of them said, "They have spirit, but not much more. B-r-r-r! I'm nearly frozen."

Although it was in the middle of winter there had been no heat in the miners' union headquarters in the heart of the coal district!

GIVE 'EM BOTH BARRELS!



AMA Accused Of Sabotaging Its Own Proposals

THE AMERICAN Medical Association, standard bearer for the forces opposing the National Health Insurance Bill endorsed by the CIO, is slyly preaching one thing and practicing another, according to the Committee for the Nation's Health.

The Committee charges that the AMA, while expressing hearty support for "voluntary" health plans, is actually using monopolistic practices to block voluntary health insurance plans unless they are controlled by the AMA.

The charges were made in a report entitled "Restrictions on Free Enterprize in Medicine," prepared by the Committee on Research in Medical Economics, under the chairmanship of Michael M. Davis, noted authority on health insurance.

A DELEGATION headed by Dr. Channing Frothingham, chairman of the Committee for the Nation's Health, and including CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, called on President Truman recently and presented the report to him.

The 24-page document charges that AMA state and local medical societies use restrictive state legislation, boycotts and other pressures to block the growth of health insurance plans providing comprehensive medical services sponsored by unions, cooperatives, industries, farmers, and other consumer groups.

Special laws instigated by medical societies have been enacted in 22 states, in effect preventing the establishment of voluntary health insurance plans unless these are controlled by organized medicine, the report declares.

DR. FROTHINGHAM told Pres. Truman that the report contained evidence "that the 140 million consumers of medical care cannot hope to get the comprehensive protection they need from voluntary health insurance plans because of organized medicine's monopoly controls."

The report points out that "medical societies not only refuse to sponsor the type of health insurance plan which high professional opinion has recommended as able to offer the most adequate medical service at reasonable cost, but also have endeavored to prevent their individual physician members from participation in such plans.

"They have choked the development of medical insurance plans offering comprehensive health services, in favor of plans offering only very limited services. They have restrained doctors from free experimentation in improved forms of medical service and have prevented the people from experimenting with improved methods of payment for the service.

"SUCH POLICIES are un-American restrictions upon free enterprise in medicine. They are disadvantageous to the public. They are a blot upon the medical profession. Foresighted, fairminded physicians ought to assist labor, business, farm, cooperative and civic organizations in removing these restrictions promptly from the American scene."

Dr. Frothingham said that "if organized medicine is sincere in its new-found admiration for voluntary health insurance (which it once condemned as a half-baked scheme . . . socialism . . . communism . . . inciting to revolution) let it join with consumers, farmers and labor to repeal these restrictive state laws and to stop its county societies from boycotting tactics."

OTHER DEVELOPMENTS on the national health front:

The National Physicians Committee, lobby outfit which spent more than $353,000 during the first nine months of 1948 in its fight against national health insurance (largest expenditure by any registered lobby), has announced that it is folding up.

Its work will be taken over by the AMA's own agency, according to a statement issued by the NPC's board of trustees. Widespread protests aroused by the nature of the NPC's propaganda undoubtedly had a lot to do with the decision to liquidate the NPC.

Health Program Speakers Offered

The New Jersey CIO Council has answered a "campaign of fear and fabrication" being conducted against President Truman's national health insurance program by the American Medical Association's New Jersey Society, by offering to debate the subject "before every organization, big or little, in the state."

Council Pres. Carl Holderman said that more than a score of speaking engagements and debates on the health insurance bill have already been filled by the regular New Jersey CIO staff, and that a number of others are pending.

"When the people know the true facts, we are certain they will press Congress to the prompt enactment of the national health insurance bill," Holderman said.

DAVENPORT: The Post Office Bldg. in Pittsburgh was the scene of this recess visit to a Congressman. The Representative in this case is Harry James Davenport, of Pennsylvania's 29th District. His area includes six Pittsburgh wards, nine suburban boroughs and five townships, all in Allegheny County. (Allegheny County, second in popuation only to Philadelphia County, had 1,411,539 residents in 1940, must be well above that now.) Davenport's district includes the huge Westinghouse plant at Wilkinsburg, home of CIO Electrical Workers' Local 601. Here, a delegation from Local 601 asked Davenport for advice on how they can help in the battle on T-H and for the rest of the Fair Deal. From left to right, seated on table,: James T. Fitzpatrick, editor of Local 601's Union Generator; Davenport and Fin. Secy. Eugene Rath. Standing, Vice Pres. Patty O'Connor, Rec. Secy. Stanley Glass and Treas. Al Pefferman; seated, Bus. Agent Charles Copeland, Pres. Philip Conahan and Michael Fitzpatrick (James' father), chairman of the Westinghouse UE Conference. Michael Fitzpatrick is brother of Thomas Fitzpatrick, former president of the local, who was defeated by Conahan in an anti-left-wing campaign. That campaign was led by Michael Fitzpatrick.

Congressmen, After Getting Home Views, Start New Debate

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

SOME CONGRESSMEN couldn't take it, so they spent the 10-day recess not at home, where they should have been, but at resorts.

(A few crossed picket lines to stay at Atlantic City hotels.)

Other Congressmen gave excuses as to why they couldn't see union delegations.

But, most Congressmen did return home and many of them conferred with CIO and other labor delegations, getting their ideas on the Fair Deal in general and Taft-Hartley repeal in particular. It seemed obvious that some waverers were due to come back to Washington this week convinced that Nov. 2 was really Fair Deal Day.

When Congress reconvenes this week, the first order of business in the House is to be the Thomas-Lesinski Bill (HR 2032) which would repeal T-H and reenact the Wagner Act with some revisions. HR 2032 is indorsed by CIO, AFL and other labor groups.

First, the House will debate HR 2032's rule. That rule, handed down by the House Rules Committee, gives an "open" basis to the bill, with eight hours of general debate. An open rule means that amendments can be offered and that each and every one of the 432 members of the House (three vacancies due to deaths) can talk for five minutes on any amendment.

One of the first moves in the House, after the rule debate ends, will be a move to substitute the Wood Bill (HR 4290) for the Thomas-Lesinski Bill. That move may be made by Rep. John Wood (D., Ga.)—if he is there. He hadn't been in Washington for at least two weeks before the recess.

Newsweek Magazine last week disclosed that the Wood Bill had been conceived in the minds of Rep. Joseph Martin (Mass.) and Charles Halleck (Ind.), leaders of the conservative Republicans in the House.

They planned the strategy by which the bill was offered and used Wood's name in an effort to take the GOP curse off the bill, Newsweek said.

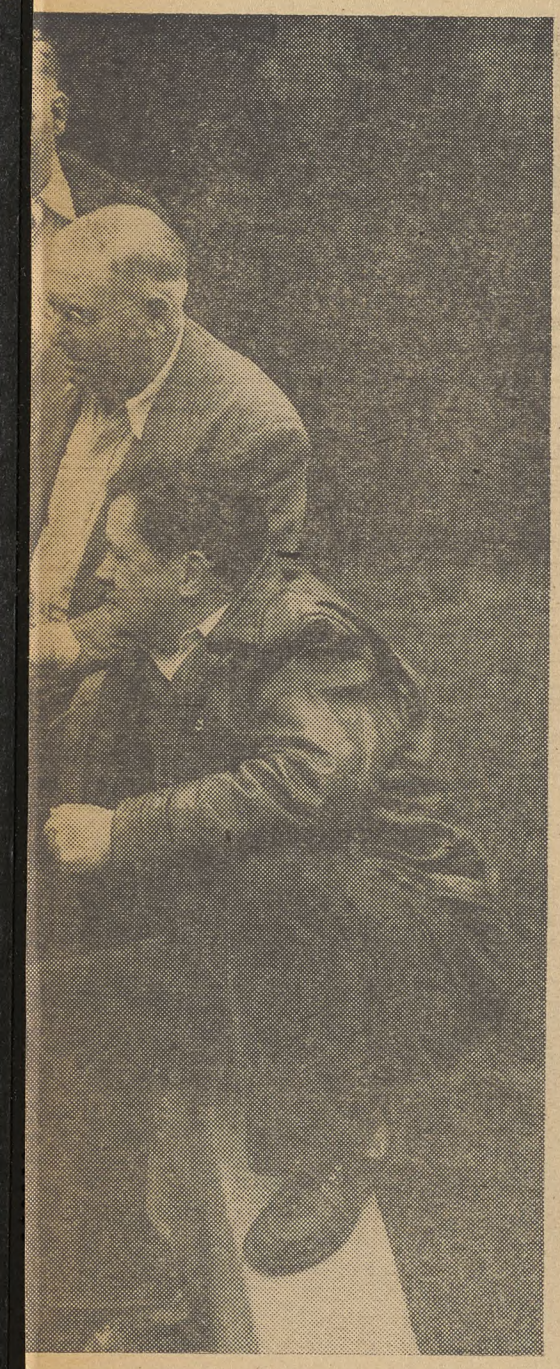
Also, the magazine disclosed that at its press time Wood had not even seen the bill which carries his name.

Such skullduggery can be expected all through the debate on Taft-Hartley, the CIO believes. Newsweek points out that the Dixiegops are getting worried over public reaction to their wrecking tactics of the early days of the session. The American people, Newsweek says, do not like obstruction which has indications of sabotage.

This week, CIO Pres. Philip Murray will be receiving reports from the field following his appeal to send delegations to Congressmen.

BUCHANAN: Pennsylvania's 33d District, which includes one Pittsburgh Ward, is also completely within Allegheny County. Congressman is Frank Buchanan. Here, at his home, he confers with steelworkers. Left to right: William Moran, Loc Rosensky, 1408. All the mills

KELLEY: Labor people in Westmoreland County, Pa., make no bones about their pride in the achievements of their Congressman, Rep. Augustine B. Kelley (D.). They know of Kelley's work on the House Labor Committee, they know of his work for the physically handicapped, they know of his work for education. To them he is a close friend who has never failed them. So, during the recess, many union members called on their friend, "Gus." They didn't have to urge him to support Fair Deal legislation. They praised him for what he has done. Here, in his office at the Greensburg postoffice, a delegation of Steelworkers has a friendly visit with Kelley. Seated, left to right: Sam Casina, President, Local 1194, Jeannette; Robert E. Poorman, President, Local 1551, American Locomotive Association; Raymond Hearn, Staff representative, USWA District 19; Raymond Hearn, also a staff representative; Patricia A. Curry, of Kelley's staff; Andrew G. Ferrari, a staff representative; George Smetak, financial secretary, Local 1537, Latrobe; Ralph Orbin, Local 1163 vice president, and Dick Rhea, president, Local 1163, Youngwood, Pa. Standing, l. to r.: William Weightman, president, Local 1145, Jeannette; Frank DeBone, President, Local 3086, Greensburg; S. I. Kamerer, 1275, Greensburg.



14, Buchanan; Tom Heilman, 1408; Matthew ; William Spang, 1408; Joseph Gallagher, to Buchanan's house direct from work in McKeesport area.

HOME SCENE: Rep. and Mrs. Buchanan relax in their McKeesport home during the Easter recess. The dog is Porky, whose official name, registered, is Ace Candidate. He's a relative of Jack Dempsey's famous Cocker Spaniel.

CHAT: Davenport and Conahan study plans for the furtherance of Fair Deal projects. Conahan, a veteran of many years of union work, is determined that America will never again see the return of the depression days of 1929.

Rep. Coffey Mourned By Pres. Murray

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has sent the following condolences to the widow of Rep. Robert L. Coffey (D., Pa.), who was killed in a plane crash last week:

"Deeply shocked at the tragic death of your esteemed husband. He was a true servant of the people in every sense of the word. His brief career in Congress has left a deep impression on the American scene, which will not forget his valiant efforts for the common man. My sincerest sympathy to you, your children and the other members of his family."

Coffey's district included Johnstown, where there are many CIO members. PAC worked hard for him in the entire 26th District.

SENATORS GREEN (R. I.), Douglas (Ill.), Morse (Ore.), Baldwin (Conn.), Ferguson (Mich.), talk to Negro resident of Washington slums.

THIS ONE-LEGGED TENANT lives in one of the Capital's slum shanties where electricity, running water, indoor toilets are unknown.

Senate Passes Housing Bill Despite Bricker, Cain

A GIANT FEDERAL housing program has passed the Senate for the fourth time in four years and is again awaiting action in the House, which has killed each of the previous measures.

It was shortly before midnight last Thursday, when the Senators, their tempers flaring, beat down decisively 12 Republican amendments designed to kill, curtail or stall the bill, and drove through to a final 57-13 vote.

The measure provides for the construction of 810,000 public housing units over the next six years. The President is empowered to step up the annual rate to 200,000, which means that the program could conceivably be completed in little over four years. An amendment by Republican Sen. Robert Taft sliced the maximum which could be built a year from 250,000, as originally provided in the bill.

Also provided is an ambitious slum clearance program through a billion dollars in federal loans and $500 million in grants to local communities. The government would put up $2 for each $1 local governments are willing to spend for this purpose.

To improve farm housing the bill provides $250 million in loans, $5 million in subsidies and $25 milion in grants to farmers on submarginal land.

THE explosive final nine hours of debate on the housing bill followed by three days a dramatic tour of some of Washington's worst slums by five of the Senators.

Organized by Sen. Ralph Flanders (R. Vt.) and Sen. Paul Douglas (D. Ill.), the tour had taken them just six blocks from the nation's handsome Capitol, and there they had smelled the stench and viewed the human waste created by slum squalor.

When they returned, they told of seeing small, tumbledown shanties which house four or five families. They told of the two beds on which 12 people sleep in one house, of how in the hot summer months many of these people, finding it unbearable, seek sleep in the city's parks or alleys.

Inside the gloomy hovels oil lamps supplied the only light, and not all had stoves for cooking and heat. None had running water or inside toliets. Outside, the garbage-strewn alley was lined with privies. A man was found frozen to death in one of these last winter, the police captain who accompanied the group reminisced. A health officer spoke of the tuberculosis and syphilis problem there.

When told that the shacks yield a landlord as much as $54 a month, the Senators said they didn't wonder why some landlords had been putting up such stiff opposition to the slum clearance program.

The Senators said what they had seen was no exception, that similar conditions exist in every big city. They expected the ugly picture to add impetus to other Senators' determination to do something about it—and quickly.

Most of the legislators were visibly moved by the report; some were not.

OHIO'S Republican Sen. John Bricker, himself an official of a savings and loan firm, said he thought the slum problem was being overemphasized.

"I think," he said, "we should sometimes look to the fine sections of our cities and to the good jobs which have been done, and should not always emphasize the deplorable side of our society."

Presumably to give the Senators and the nation's millions of slum dwellers a good chance to take a long look at the fine sections, Bricker joined with Sen. Harry Cain (R. Wash.) in swamping the Senate clerk with amendments to the housing bill.

Their proposals included such devices as a ban on segregation in public housing units. With the opposition led by strong civil rights advocate Sen. Douglas, this was defeated, 49 to 31.

Douglas emphasized that it was with a "heavy heart" that he and other liberal Democrats opposed the anti-bias amendment. He said that such a provision would kill the bill by losing 30 southern votes for the bill without a commensurate gain in support from the Republicans.

Another Cain concoction was an amendment to require Congress to approve each public housing project. Still another would have required each community to vote by referendum before a public housing project would be begun. One Bricker amendment would have stricken out the public housing and farm assistance programs altogether. By the time the bill reached a final vote the Republican pair had thought up 14 such amendments.

How soon the program can get under way depends now on the House. Committee hearings are scheduled to start this week, having been postponed by the Easter recess.

The bill's supporters are hoping the hearings will be short. They point out that an estimated 12,500 pages of committee hearings have aready been piled up by previous Congresses.

Jim Crow Placement

Gov. Forrest Smith of Missouri has closed down the Kansas City, Mo., of the Missouri State Employment Service and has ordered the office integrated with the office formerly operated for whites only.

THESE TIN CANS in the foreground substitute for toilets in the slum area. Because of the lack of sanitation, slum dwellers have a high disease rate.

THIS ALLEY is these children's only playground. Juvenile delinquency and crime is rampant in such surroundings.

Dixiecrats Distort Purpose Of FEPC Bill Aimed Only At Job Discrimination

By GLORIA CAPLAN

"The CIO unreservedly supports Pres. Truman's Civil Rights program . . . We feel that the enactment of this program will enable America in actual practice to show the world that we intend to close the gap between our stated ideals and our day-to-day practices." — CIO resolution on Civil Rights, 10th Constitutional convention.

IN THE SENATE it is known as S 174. In the House it has eight numbers, among them HR 371, HR 384 and HR 792. But most of us know it as the FEPC bill.

It has aroused more tempers, inspired more oratory, provoked more demagoguery and has been more beclouded by deliberate misrepresentations than perhaps any legislative proposal of the 20th Century.

And all it seeks to do—this Fair Employment Practices bill—is protect a worker against being done out of a job solely because of his color, his religion or his ancestry.

Purpose Of Bill

The specific purpose of the bill is explained very simply on its first page, but the distortions continue to fill the Congressional Record and newspaper editorials. In its declaration of policy, S 174 says:

"The Congress hereby finds that the practice of discriminating in employment against properly qualified persons because of their race, religion, color, national origin or ancestry is contrary to the American principles of liberty and of equality of opportunity, is incompatible with the Constitution, forces large segments of our population into substandard conditions of living, foments industrial strife and domestic unrest, deprives the United States of the fullest utilization of its capacities for production, endangers the national security and general welfare, and adversely affects the domestic and foreign commerce of the U. S."

Is This Hoey?

One of North Carolina Sen. Clyde Hoey's objections to FEPC is that "it would deny to employes the right of selecting their associates."

The only time employes ever had that right was under a closed shop. And we thought the Senator, who voted for Taft-Hartley, was against the closed shop.

Seems like a fair enough goal for those who believe in the American principle of equality of opportunity and judging every man by his merit, not his color. But that simple statement of objective has been blasted by Mississippi's Rep. John Rankin as "a Communist-inspired movement, fostered by an alien minority that has flooded in here from Russia in recent years."

(Emigration from Russia has been virtually non-existent in recent years, except for an occasional escape out of the country.)

FEPC Supporters

The list of FEPC supporters is heavy with American industrialists and clergymen. Among these is Eric Johnson who, when president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, said:

"The withholding of jobs and business opportunities from some people does not make jobs and business opportunities for others. Such a policy merely tends to drag down the whole economic level. You can't sell an electric refrigerator to a family that can't afford electricity. Perpetuating poverty for some merely guarantees stagnation for all . . ."

Although Eric Johnston, the CIO and numerous other groups and individuals consider an FEPC essential to prosperity, Rankin considers it "persecution" of the white people of the South. Why, he says, "it may well mean the end of this Republic and of our American way of life. It may mean Communistic regimentation of the American people, North and South."

FEPC proponents have argued that the wide gap between our democratic ideals of "equal opportunity" and our practice has provided a fertile ground for Communist endeavors.

Then Rankin waxes eloquent on the subject of segregation—the most abused misrepresentation of the bill, because the bill makes no mention of segregation.

"You're not going to force Negroes into our white schools!" he warns his fellow Congressmen. (Not that the President's civil rights program makes an effort to.) Then the Mississippian tells a little story to demonstrate the "evils" of FEPC:

According to the story, two New Yorkers were conversing in a taxicab.

Said the first: "I told you this FEPC would ruin the State of New York if they ever put it on the statute books."

The other replied: "I did not think so. I thought it was a humanitarian measure. But I now see my mistake."

Misrepresentation

Answered the first: "Here is what it has done to me. I own a good home . . . out on Riverside Drive, and I also own a house next to it which I bought for my own protection. I had a friend living in the other house, but his business took him to another section of the country and he had to vacate. Like a fool, I put up a sign 'for rent,' thinking that someone in the community whom I could afford to rent it to would apply. Somebody put a colored fellow up to come and apply for it and the court now says I must let him have it."

The New York anti-discrimination law, like the federal FEPC bills, bans discrimination only in employment. In fact, there is no New York law which forces a landlord to rent to a tenant against his will. Numerous organized groups in New York have attempted, for instance, to pry open the doors of Metropolitan Insurance Co. housing project to Negroes, but without success.

This particular type of fallacy was sharply attacked by another Southerner, Florida's Sen. Claude Pepper, in an address he made in Montgomery, Ala.:

"The President of the United States has been flagrantly if not designedly misrepresented in his recommendations on the so-called Civil Rights measures to the Congress. He has not recommended one thing relative to segregation in the States, in the public schools, in restaurants, in hotels, in theaters, swimming pools, and the like—and, of course, he has made no recommendation concerning churches, lodges, clubs, and associations of local and personal nature . . ."

Nor is the segregation issue the only myth which has glutted up the FEPC controversy. There's the widely-used story that FEPC would force employers to hire incompetents for jobs.

Hoey's Oratory

Sen. Clyde Hoey (D., N.C.) on March 2, 1949, lent his finest oratory to this type of attack. At that particular time he was very much concerned about "the rights of the individual citizen." But "individual citizen" soon became a synonym for "employer" in that address on the Senate floor.

The FEPC bill, said Hoey, "would deny to the employer the right to hire, promote, or discharge employes upon the basis of their efficiency, merit or faithfulness."

Yet, there on the first page of the bill was its stated purpose: to prevent discrimination in employment against "properly qualified persons."

The President's Civil Rights Committee, which has been so vehemently excoriated by "professional" Southerners, also emphasized its belief that a man should be judged by his merits, regardless of his color.

The committee's report to the President said: "In presenting this evidence, the committee is not ignoring the fact that an individual Negro worker may be less efficient than an individual white worker or vice versa. Nor does it suggest that wage differences which reflect actual differences in the competence of workers are indefensible. What is indefensible is a wage discrimination, based not on the race."

That is the FEPC bill's only goal.

That was what the wartime FEPC was so successful in doing, even though it lacked enforcement power and employed only persuasion and mediation. People said—and still say—"You can't legislate against intolerance." But the commission was successfull in peacefully opening employment doors to minorities where they had always been locked before.

Working Together On Ship

9 States Have FEPC

Nine states now have FEPC laws on the books. They are Connecticut, New Jersey, Wisconsin, New York, Massachusetts, New Mexico, Rhode Island, Oregon and Washington.

In many states anti-discrimination bills are under consideration. In at least eight there's a pretty good chance of passage this year. These are Ohio, Pennsylvania, Colorado, Illinois, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota and Missouri.

UAW's on FM

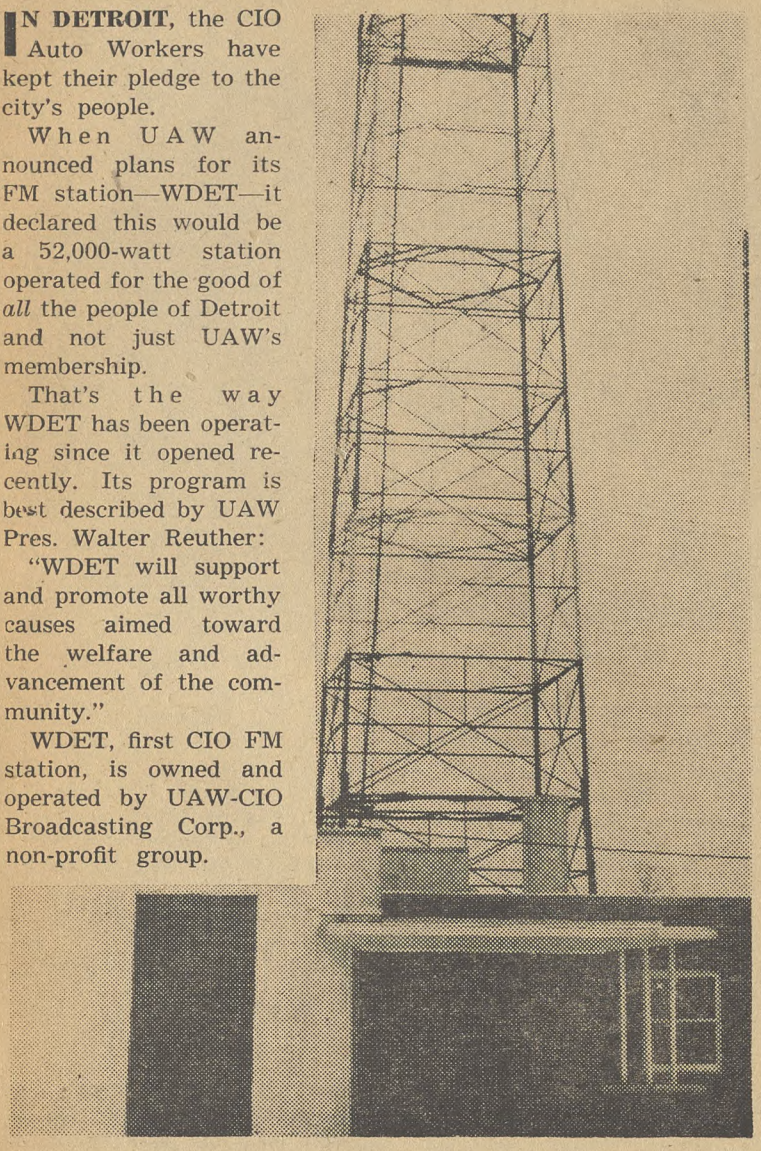
IN DETROIT, the CIO Auto Workers have kept their pledge to the city's people.

When UAW announced plans for its FM station—WDET—it declared this would be a 52,000-watt station operated for the good of all the people of Detroit and not just UAW's membership.

That's the way WDET has been operating since it opened recently. Its program is best described by UAW Pres. Walter Reuther:

"WDET will support and promote all worthy causes aimed toward the welfare and advancement of the community."

WDET, first CIO FM station, is owned and operated by UAW-CIO Broadcasting Corp., a non-profit group.



TOWER: Here is WDET's home.

WDET DIR. HOBERMAN

ANTI-BIAS: A weekly program on WDET is devoted to the Detroit Interracial Committee. George Scherner, (center), director of the committee, is moderator of the program, known as Community Clinic. Here, he interviews Geraldine Bledsoe, chief of the minority section of the Michigan Employment Service, and William Oliver, co-director of UAW's Fair Employment Practices Committee. Boaz Siegel, Wayne U. law professor, has also taken part. The station will concentrate on the whole community's welfare.

WOMEN'S SPORTS: At the right is Betty Hicks, former American women's golf champion, who broadcasts a weekly program, "Sports Fairway." She interviews sports figures, gives lively comment on sports events. Here, she interviews Shirley Spark, Detroit district golf champion. WDET also broadcasts news "every hour on the half hour," symphony music, students' forums, commentators, etc.

"WOMEN'S WORLD": Helpful information and hints on the latest in fashions, homemaking and other things of interest to women are brought to WDET by Lela Bingham. The announcer is Robert Caudill. Listeners in the area can get WDET on 101.9 megacycles, channel No. 290.

NLRB Acts to End Anti-Union Interference of One Family And Police in Alabama City

By FRED ROSS

THE National Labor Relations Board has acted to end the interference of the Russell family in union activities at Alexander City, Ala.

The board found three textile companies, Police Chief G. Mack Horton, Policeman Floyd Mann and Police Informer Alphonso Alford guilty of unfair labor practices.

The textile firms are the Russell Mfg. Co., Bettie Francis Cotton Mills and the Roberta Mills, which operate six plants.

The NLRB trial examiner found that "about half or more of the white population of working age, in Alexander City and environs" (the total population of which is estimated at 16,000) "was economically dependent on employment" on cotton textile manufacturing.

THE THREE plants cited by the NLRB and the Bevelle plant of the Avondale Mills of Alabama, the examiner found, were "the principal employing interests in the area."

The largest of the three cited firms, the Russell Co., was "owned largely" by the Russell family, according to the examiner.

The extent of the domination of the family over the community is shown by this paragraph from the examiner's report:

"The Russell Mfg. Co. Inc., according to Thomas, (secretary and treasurer of the three firms) owns the property identified as the Russell Hotel, provides the city with its water supply, and together with the other corporate respondents, owns a block of stock in the Alexander City Manufacturing Co., previously identified as a firm engaged in the manufacture of lumber and millwork."

The case arose from charges filed by the CIO Textile Workers prior to Sept. 30, 1946, when the NLRB regional director at Atlana, Ga., issued a complaint.

Ruling Hailed By Bittner

"The NLRB ruling in the Russell case is most significant, and it will go far in aiding the cause of the CIO and all organized labor in the South," said Dir. Van A. Bittner of the CIO's Southern Organizing Campaign.

"In this instance, the chief of police and two officers were actually employes of an incorporated town. In the case of the police force of Porterdale, Ga., the men involved were actually Bibb Mfg. Co. employes. Russell Mills, and its fellow defendants, went even further than Bibb for they were using a municipal police force as their tool against the Textile Workers Union of America-CIO."

THE BOARD ordered the companies to—

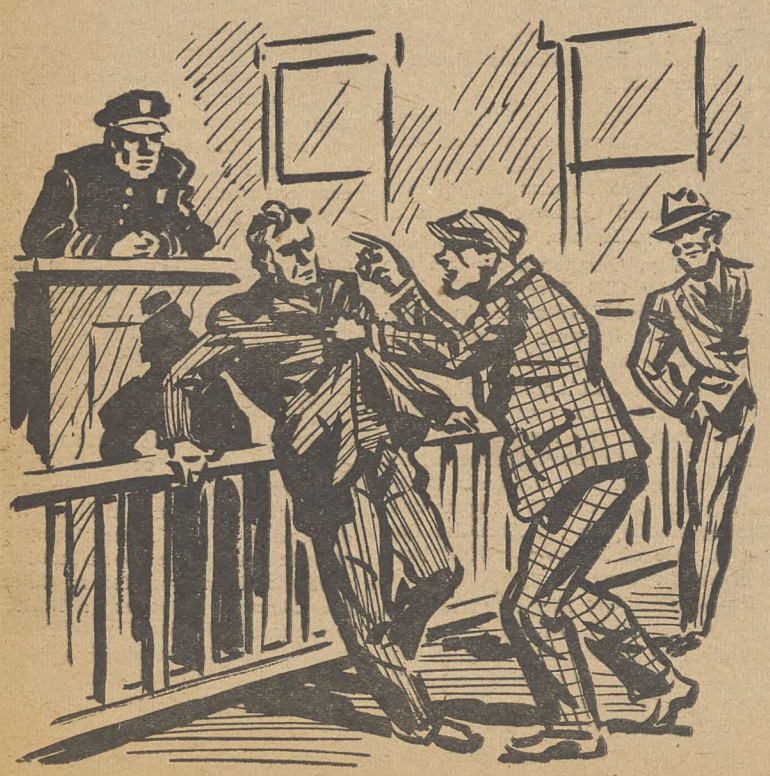
- Stop interfering with their employes' right to join TWUA.
- Instruct employes that physical assaults will not be permitted in the mills at any time. (Trial Examiner Maurice M. Miller told how an organizer was beaten while police stood by and was later arrested.)
- Refrain from recognizing "The Committee"—which was set up with the encouragement of the company's recreation director—as a collective bargaining agent.
- Reinstate immedately four discharged employes, give back their former jobs to two demoted employes and employ one denied work, all with back pay.

THE BOARD'S decision was rendered unanimously by a three-member panel—Chairman Paul M. Herzog and Members John M. Houston and Abe Murdock.

The board said that it found "it difficult to believe" that the three policemen would engage in such elaborate, expensive and time-consuming efforts to obtain information about the union and to discourage its activities for purely personal reasons, or in the conduct of their official duties, without prior knowledge of the corporate respondents."

The NLRB found that the policemen "acted directly or indirectly as agent of the companies" and that the companies were responsible for their acts.

The Board also ordered the policemen to post notices in the company plants and publish notices in the local newspaper that they would stop interfering with union activities.



ALEXANDER City's mayor is Thomas C. Russell, brother of Benjamin Russell, the founder of the Russell Mfg. Co., largest of the three companies. Mayor Russell is also uncle of the four principal stockholders of the Russell Co., Thomas D. and Robert A. Russell, Mrs. E. R. Allison and the widow of Benjamin C. Russell, who was Benjamin Russell's son. Mayor Russell, who is also president of the town's First National Bank, is the next largest stockholder.

Trial Examiner Miller reported that Chief Horton "has occupied his position for approximately 27 years—during which period of time, according to his testimony, he has worked 'very closely' with the mayor. At the time of the hearing, he was in charge of a staff which included six officers, one of them being the respondent Mann."

Miller found that Alford was a salaried collector of delinquent accounts for a finance company, but that he received pay—by his own admission—as a police informer and process server.

THE following incident was related by TWUA Organizer J. P. Mooney to the trial examiner:

When Mooney arrived in Alexander City during January, 1945, he was invited by a policeman to police headquarters, where Horton said that he had known his (Mooney's) "old man for a long time" and that he "should pick up and get out before any trouble starts.

"We don't want any trouble or organization, as I told you before, by God we are not going to have none and I hate to see you get mixed up like that and I am telling you to get the Hell out of town."

Mooney refused to leave town and was kept under the surveillance of Alford, who shadowed him while he ate his meals and drove by homes of employes of the plant while Mooney was visiting them.

Alford visited the home of plant employes to persuade them not to join the union, the trial examiner also reported.

Several months later Mooney was assaulted—the trial examiner reported—by two employes at one of the textile plants, Rex Nickerson and Obie Brown, who beat him after he acknowledged he was a union organizer.

ALFORD stood by and advised a soldier not to intervene in the fight.

Mooney told the trial examiner that Horton—whom he had seen on the opposite side of the street before the assault—and another policemen arrived and took him and the other to police headquarters.

Mooney testified that before he left, Nickerson said to him, "Now look, you g— d—- s—o--a-b——, don't you come back to that mill giving out any more of that literature. If you do, I'll kill you."

When Mooney protested to Horton against Nickerson's statements, the chief replied that "they can get away with anything around here."

Mooney was locked up until a friend of his was able to come to police headquarters to post bond.

The NLRB met with considerable resistance in its efforts to find a hall in which to hold hearings to establish these facts.

The Board said that attempts to obtain a hearing room were "repeatedly rejected" by Mayor Russell. Finally, the NLRB arranged to hold its hearings in the Old Hamlet Building.

THE companies objected to the hearings being held there on the grounds that it was known in the community as the "union hall," but the board declared:

"The record demonstrates that the premises in question were leased for the conduct of the hearing only after the trial examiner and agents of the board had made every reasonable effort to obtain other quarters. Board attempts to secure a hearing room in Alexander City Hall were repeatedly rejected by Mayor Russell . . .

"In any event, there is no basis in the record for the respondents' assertion that the premises, which had been rented by the union less than a month before the hearing, were commonly regarded as a union hall; and we note that, by the posting of signs and flags, the trial examiner gave reasonable notice that the building was being used for the conduct of business of the Federal government . . ."

The board also denied the motion that the report of Trial Examiner Miller be set aside because he "had been found unqualified and incompetent under the standards and examinations set up by the Civil Service Commission" and because he had been "discharged" by the board.

This was the first public comment of the board to the recent recommendations by Civil Service Commission consultants that 15 trial examiners had been found not qualified under new standards set up by the commission.

The board found the companies' request that the report be set said was "wholly without merit."

The NLRB said that the board had not discharged Miller and that "no final, unreviewable action" had been taken against him by the Civil Service Commission.

You Be Judge

EDITOR'S NOTE: Read the story on this page—which is based on a NLRB decision and a trial examiner's intermediate report—and then decide for yourself how much truth there is in the following statement from David Lawrence's column:

"The police chief, of course, was performing what he thought was his constitutional duty in seeking information and taking those steps which he believed would avoid a riot. But the National Labor Relations Board, which asserts the privilege of looking into other people's minds and deciding what their motives are or may be in the future, ruled that the police chief couldn't have had any reasons except those that sought to interfere with the rights of the union organizer."

Council Seeks Jobs For Disabled Vets

A New Jersey CIO Council program to spur the employment of disabled veterans in industry where CIO unions have collective bargaining contracts has been placed before veterans' spokesmen and staff members of the Veterans' Administration.

Stephen J. Moran, State CIO Council executive-secretary, and sponsor of the program, announced that the program which had met with the approval of the veterans' spokesmen had already been authorized by the CIO Council's Executive Board. He said it would now be recommended to the various CIO locals in the state for inclusion into negotiations for new contracts.

The CIO program authorizes every CIO local to propose to management, through collective bargaining, the placement of at least one physically handicapped veteran for every 500 employes or less in a plant.

Senate Unit Told Low-Pay Problems

A LONG line of witnesses from CIO unions in a dozen industries continued all last week to give the "facts of life" about low wages to a Senate subcommittee holding hearings on a bill to improve the minimum wage law.

Workers and union officials from the Textile, Clothing, Paper, Shipyard & Railroad, Maritime, Food & Tobacco, Fishermen, Woodworkers, Packinghouse and other CIO unions appeared before the subcommittee to testify in favor of S-653, the bill to increase the legal minimum wage to 75c an hour and to extend coverage.

The House Labor Committee has already approved the Lesinski Bill, companion measure to S-653, following extended hearings.

Testimony of CIO witnesses was highlighted by stories told by or about workers who are struggling for existence on the wages of low-pay industries. A group of workers from a slipper firm in Altoona, Pa., where the minimum rate is 50c an hour, told of their eight weeks' strike for a pay increase and a union contract.

What it means to support a family on wages of 60c and 62c an hour paid by a paper stock company in St. Louis, Mo., was described in sworn statements of the workers concerned, presented by the St. Louis Joint Board of the Textile Workers Union.

Families with two and three children forced to live in one room; harassed by frequent sickness and often forced to appeal for aid from charity societies was the dreary story common to these statements.

The low pay and poor working conditions in the southern woodworking industry were described in a statement presented by the Intl. Woodworkers in Virginia which also pointed to the hazards involved in the work.

"As we look around at any union meeting we see a large number of workers minus a finger, several fingers, or a hand. Scars mar even faces where contact with moving saws has left the mark of the industry," declared the IWA testimony.

Five Unions Are Set For Negotiations

IN THE spring, a labor union's fancy turns—but not lightly—to thoughts of contract demands.

Last week the CIO Steelworkers set May 5 as the date its 170-man wage policy committee will meet to map out the union's 1949 wage demands and strategy. The two days preceding that meeting, the union's executive board will meet for the same purpose.

Negotiations on wages and social insurance may be opened by giving 60 days notice before July 16. Talks are expected to begin in June.

THREE CIO maritime unions, meanwhile, presented contract proposals to Atlantic and Gulf Coast shipping operators.

The Natl. Maritime Union, the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association, and the American Radio Association are asking that all disputes arising during the life of a contract be settled by an impartial arbitrator.

They are also asking a 40-hour week at sea, use of the hiring hall for the hiring of unlicensed personnel, increased lodging allowance, a health and welfare fund, changes in working rules and a 15% boost in basic and overtime pay rates.

CIO Auto Workers at Ford's River Rouge plant, with company-wide negotiations three weeks off, began taking a strike vote in protest against a speed-up. Ford, they said, had violated an agreement to "lock" the assembly lines at the speed of a worker's normal gait.

Organizationally Speaking

Allan S. Haywood

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, a great humanitarian, has passed away. He stood out among men in his championship of human rights. He was a great friend to organized labor. With the workers everywhere whose cause he always defended, we extend heartfelt sympathies to his family. America will miss him.

Those who heard him address the CIO Convention of 1946 still remember his stirring words. They are timely still.

Rabbi Wise said ". . . The prayers for you should be said . . . by the Chaplain in Congress. The champion of the people who are to constitute the next Congress will require a great deal of praying for and a vigilant watching. We are assured these will do the first; you wil do the second." Rabbi Wise spoke with prophetic vision of the infamous 80th Congress. How well founded his fears were . . .

"I as an old American summon you to the great task, though you require not my summons, of resisting any and every atempt on the part of any political or industrial leaders in America to march backward. I have a simple formula. We are not going to surrender the gains for democracy, political, social or economic, achieved under the peerless leadership of Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

"Do battle, I beseech you, against every form of racial and religious prejudice. Fight those forms of racial and religious prejudices which maintained that iniquitous anachronism of the year of Bilbo and Rankin—the Poll Tax.

"Help to establish a permanent nation-wide FEPC and, above all, build up and strengthen a program which does not merely in negative fashion discourage anti-semitism but seeks to deepen the sources of understanding sympathy and to further every possible method of tolerance and brotherliness in American life."

VICTORY IN PHILADELPHIA

Reg. Dir. George Craig, Philadelphia, reports a better than 2 to 1 victory for Local 356, CIO, Hotel & Restaurant Workers. CIO received 369 votes to the AFL'S 145.

Thomas J. Gallagher, Organizational Director of the Shipbuilders Union, reports that the CIO Railroad Workers has won an election covering licensed and unlicensed deck personnel on the Central Railroad of New Jersey, the Erie, Long Island and the Lehigh Valley Railroads. Opposing the URRWA were the Master Mates and Pilots, AFL.

George Brown, Director of Organization, CIO Woodworkers, reports an election victory at the D & R Machine & Supply Co., Bemidji, Minn., and another at the Oceanside Lumber Co., Garibaldi, Ore. The Oceanside election was won by a vote of 181 for IWA and 46 for AFL.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bonacci, Salt Lake City, reports a 100% vote for the Shipbuilders Union in an election conducted at the A, S & R Mill, Monticello, Utah. Director Bonacci also reports an election victory for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers at the Price-Helpers Laundry, Helper, Utah.

Reg. Dir. Robert McVay, Oklahoma, reports the winning of an election by CIO Brewery Workers among employes of the Byrd Sales Co. in Oklahoma City. John Jacobson, Brewery Workers representative, was in charge of this election.

Reg. Dir. George DeNucci, Columbus, Ohio, reports that the Brewery Workers received a 100% vote in an NLRB election at the Stuckley Distributing Co., Lancaster, Ohio. Brewery Workers Rep. Joe Emmons was in charge of this election. Director DeNucci also reports that the CIO Paperworkers won a union shop election at the Hercules Box Co., Columbus, by a vote of 120 to 6. UPW Rep. Berkley Watterson was in charge.

Joseph Konowe, President, and Michael Cavanagh, Business Manager of Local 10, RWDSU, CIO, reports winning an election among the employes of the Black, Starr and Gorham Jewelry store on Fifth Avenue, New York. The employes voted 97 to 61 in favor of the CIO Retail Clerks.

Relief Cases Jump 6,441 In N. Y. City

Relief cases in March jumped 6,441 over the February total, making the largest monthly rise in New York City in 11 years.

This increase raised the total on the rolls to 147,903. "The rise," according to Welfare Commissioner Raymond M. Hilliard, "is clearly attributable to the unemployment situation now prevailing."

Hilliard warned of worse days ahead, pointing out that in addition to the increasing numbers on unemployment insurance rolls, "there are 4,000 a week who lose even those benefits by reason of having been unemployed for over six months."

Nine CIO Unions Back FDR, Jr.

Representatives of nine New York CIO unions here pledged support to the candidacy of Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr., Liberal Party nominee in New York's 20th district special Congressional election.

State CIO Sec. Harold Garno predicted that 20 or more CIO unions, with a local membership of between 300,000 and 400,000, would back Roosevelt in the May 17 election. The Liberal party candidate will be opposed by Democrat Benjamin Shalleck and American Laborite Annette Rubinstein.

Tobin's Wage Ruling Praised By Rieve

Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers Union has warmly praised Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin for meeting the union's request and establishing a minimum of $1.05 an hour in woolen and worsted mills handling government contracts.

Tobin's ruling, Rieve said, "is a realistic appraisal of the standards which should exist in this industry, and which do exist in the overwhelming majority of the mills."

Want To Air Views

The right to editorialize "to the end that radio's voice shall become an increasing factor in community thinking and action" was demanded by Natl. Association of Broadcasters in a resolution passed at its convention at Chicago. Because there are a limited number of broadcasting channels the Federal Communications Commission has ruled that broadcasters must operate their stations in the public interest.

IN THIS RICKETY SCHOOL, rural children get their meager preparation for life in a democracy. On the back rows students sit and shiver while attempting to concentrate, while those on the front rows fairly sizzle from the heat of the pot-bellied stove. Teacher usually has sub-standard qualifications. White and Negro children are victims of such conditions. (See Story Page 10.)

Can't Shun Pensions—High Court

"NO REASON now exists why satisfactory agreements on pensions and retirements cannot now be concluded through the process of collective bargaining," CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg said last week.

Goldberg made the statement the day after the Supreme Court refused to hear a petition by the Inland Steel Co. against a NLRB ruling that it must bargain collectively on pensions and retirement because these are essentially a part of the wages of the workers.

However, the NLRB at the same time had said that to bargain for pensions the Steelworkers would have to sign the non-Communist affidavits.

Inland Steel appealed the pension issue and the Steelworkers took the affidavit issue to the Circuit Court of Appeals in Chicago.

The court ruled for affidavits and pensions. Both sides appealed again, but the Supreme Court said that it would not hear the affidavit issue until next fall.

Union attorneys say that there is no reason now why companies should refuse to bargain with unions that have signed non-Communist affidavits.

Packard Strike Gains Demands

A strike by 9000 members of of Local 190, CIO Auto Workers against the Packard Motor Car Co. ended April 25—two hours after it began—when the company and union reached agreement on all issues. The settlement was announced while pickets were parading outside the plant.

Major issues in dispute were the company refusal to permit a union bargaining committee to enter the plant to investigate health hazards and the firing of six workers.

In the settlement, Local Pres. Ralph Urban said, the company agreed to reinstate five of the six fired workers and granted the union permission to send a safety inspection committee into the plant. The sixth worker, who had been fired for allegedly falsifying his employment card, was permitted to resign.

The CIO Auto Workers international executive board has authorized a strike May 5 at the Lincoln division of the Ford Motor Co., but delayed action on a walkout at the Ford River Rouge plant.

The Board backed up the local's charges of a speedup at the Lincoln plant, and is still investigating similar charges at the River Rouge plant.

Co-op Center Planned

Co-op Enterprises of Akron, Ohio, in conjunction with the Akron CIO Council has begun selling stock for a $250,000 co-op shopping center. Many locals of United Rubber Workers—CIO are active in the drive for the shopping center which is seeking membership from farm, church and civic groups as well as the unions.

In Tennessee

Anti-Labor Bill Veto Upheld, Steps Taken Against Poll Tax

LIBERALS and other lovers of clean government cheered last year when Tennessee voters rejected the stranglehold of Boss Edward H. Crump and chose Estes Kefauver as U. S. Senator and Gordon Browning as Governor.

But what of the Legislature? What has it accomplished since Browning's forces won control?

Two things stand out:

1. As the Memphis Press-Scimitar put it: "Tennessee's 76th General Assembly enacted more election reform legislation than any Tennessee legislature in many years—possibly more than any single Legislature in history."

2. Much legislation improving the lot of labor was passed. In fact, the only anti-labor measure passed was vetoed by Browning and his veto was upheld. (It provided for compulsory arbitration in power lines disputes.)

In 1947, the Legislature met just after the notorious incidents in McMinn County, when a group of veterans, shocked by corruption in the county government, took control of McMinn's reins. But that 1947 Legislature, subservient to Boss Crump, did nothing to correct the evils of Crump-Bossed McMinn.

But the 1949 legislative action on elections is obviously a blow to Crump. Since permanent registration is provided for in all counties of more than 50,000 population, it will be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to rig registration lists in Shelby County, home of Memphis.

Further, in a spirit of social reform, the Legislature took several steps to bring about the complete end of the poll tax. They were:

1. A bill which will lead toward a constitutional amendment ending all poll tax;
2. Repeal of a law which provided that in case the Federal Government repeals the poll tax, state and federal elections will be separate in Tennessee.
3. Removal of poll tax as a prerequisite in party primary elections, which are the most vital in Tennessee.
4. Exemption of women from the poll tax.
5. Exemption of the blind from poll tax.
6. Permanent exemption of World War I and II vets from poll tax.
7. A number of other election reforms were adopted, all blows at Crump.

Improvements for working people included:

A. Reduction of legal limit on working hours for women from 56 to 48.
B. Raise the legal minimum working age for children from 14 to 16.
C. Increased unemployment compensation maximum from $18 to $22 a week.
D. Workmen's compensation unchanged.
E. Factory inspection made more more rigid.
F. Ten-cent tax on oleomargarine repealed.

An initial step in the fight to end the ban on the closed shop was lost, but the Joint Labor Legislative Council — CIO, AFL, Brotherhoods and other legitimate independents — is confident it will win eventually.

The council followed the leadership of many civic-minded organizations in securing gains for all the people.

Murray Is Given Honorary Membership By Bridges' Home Longshoremen's Local

THE HOME LOCAL of Pres. Harry Bridges, of the CIO Longshoremen & Warehousemen, has conferred an honorary membership on CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

Comprising the longshoremen in San Francisco, Calif., Local 10 led the opposition to the Bridges administration at the international union's recent convention, which was marked by a policy controversy between ILWU officers and Murray.

Prior to the convention the local passed a resolution supporting National CIO policy. An effort to have the ILWU convention do likewise was unsuccessfully led by Local 10 Pres. James Kearney. The CIO head, in a telegraphed statement to the convention, had urged the delegates to discount "unfounded rumors" against the CIO and to follow CIO policy.

In accepting the honor, Murray wrote Kearney that he "was delighted and pleased at receiving the scroll which makes me a member of Local 10 of the Intl. Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, CIO.

"The members of Local 10 have made a tremendous contribution to the labor movement," he continued, "in the gains that they have achieved through trade unionism. Your members rendered an invaluable contribution to the American triumph in the recent war."

ALL THE RAGE: Representatives William J. Green, Jr. (left) and Harry J. Davenport, both Democrats from Pennsylvania, show off their Taft-Hartley ties. Davenport, who has been passing the T-H ties out in Congress, has pledged to wear his until the Taft-Hartley law is repealed. Last year a similar tie was presented to Sen. Alben W. Barkley by the Kentucky CIO.

Jobs Drop For Third Month-BLS

THE hoped-for spring upturn in employment has not yet arrived, newsmen were told by Ewan Clague, head of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

At the same time BLS made public figures which show that in March the average American factory offered a half hour less work per week than in February; with a corresponding drop of about $1 in gross income. Another BLS survey showed that non-farm employment dropped 150,000 during the month, in contrast to a seasonal pickup of more than 300,000 jobs in the corresponding period last year.

March was the third successive month for which a decline in non-agricultural jobs was reported.

"The spring upturn may be postponed until April, and we need those figures to get the picture," Clague said. He told reporters that the job decline marks "a drop in purchasing power, and will mean a decline in the total take of wage earners."

The figures released by BLS show:

1. That overtime is fast disappearing, and that in many industries, particularly consumer goods, factories are not offering a full week's work. Average durable goods week is now 39.3 hours, and in non-durables it is 36.8 hours.

2. That factory jobs went down from 15.7 million to 15.5 million, whereas the corresponding period of 1948 saw a slight increase in employment. Of 20 industry groups listed by BLS, 17 saw a loss in jobs during the month, and three stayed even.

3. That employment in mining and transportation also hit the skids, where increases had been recorded last year.

BLS said some of the effects of the employment drop were minimized by what it termed share-the-work plans. Reporters were told, however, that BLS has no record of how widespread such plans are, nor would Clague comment on their desirability.

THE CIO Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union has announced that a stop-work meeting will be held May 4 at San Francisco to discuss rising unemployment on the waterfront.

Longshore jobs in the San Francisco area have dropped 30% since the first of the year. The average weekly pay check in January was $62.50. It dropped to $50.05 in March, in contrast to the December 1948 average of $90.93, right after the west coast maritime strike. Average hours worked each week dropped from 49.8 in December to 27.5 in March. In the week ending March 13 it was only 12.8.

The stop-work meeting will discuss the question of reducing the registration rolls at the union hiring hall by 1000. This was proposed earlier by the union officers, but was turned down by the members.

A Buck For PAC Will Pay You Back

Final Vote Near On T-H Repeal

THE LONG—and occasionally bitter—struggle over the role the government should play in management-labor relations reached a crucial point on Capitol Hill last week.

After four days of debate and parliamentary maneuvering, the House was near a final vote on a Taft-Hartley repeal measure when the CIO News went to press.

Administration leaders were attempting to push through the Bill without crippling amendments.

A Republican-Southern Democratic coalition, however, had another idea. It sought to retain most of the features of T-H by substituting the Wood Bill for the T-L measure.

A move to bring about such a substitution was made after general debate on the Thomas-Lesinski Bill ended.

Rumors Fly

By Thursday of last week rumors that the Administration and the unions were making "compromise agreements" were flying thick and fast around Washington.

Rep. Augustine B. Kelley (D. Pa.), who was handling the bill on the floor for the Administration, denied such agreements had been made.

"I have agreed to nothing," Kelley said.

"Then it's the Lesinski Bill or nothing as far as the leadership is concerned and you will oppose all amendments?" asked Rep. Nixon (R. Calif.).

"Certainly, that's the position I take," Kelley replied. "You cannot write a complicated bill like this on the floor of the House."

CIO Pres. Philip Murray issued a public statement saying the CIO solidly supported the T-L Bill and had made no change in its position regarding amendments.

Major Battle

What occurred in the House last week was a major battle in the lengthy struggle over what part government should play in regulating or establishing rules for management-labor affairs.

The struggle started in earnest back in the days of the New Deal with enactment of the "Blue Eagle" NRA measure and—later—with passage of the Wagner Act.

Enactment of T-H over President Truman's veto in June 1947 marked culmination of a long, expensive business-industry campaign to discredit the Wagner Act, which labor generally regarded as its "Bill of Rights."

Unions waged a vigorous battle to keep T-H off the statute books—but lost.

After a short "breather," labor began a drive to bring about T-H repeal.

President Truman and the Democratic Party made repeal of T-H a major campaign issue—and Truman and the Democrats won last November.

Coalition Formed

Early in the present session of Congress a coalition of Republicans and Southern Democrats—the Dixiegops—formed a coalition to fight the Truman Fair Deal program.

This coalition at first talked of the possibility of winning a fight to keep T-H on the books, then switched to the plan of trying to retain a major portion of T-H by amending the Thomas-Lesinski Bill.

Some Democrats charged the Republicans were trying to retain the "worst provisions" of T-H but escape responsibility for doing so by keeping the GOP tag off the new legislation.

A bill bearing the name of Rep. Wood (D. Ga.) was prepared—by somebody—but wasn't pushed by the coalition because members considered it too harsh.

Second Bill

Then a second bill bearing Wood's name was introduced and hailed by sponsors as "meeting the major objections of labor."

CIO Pres. Murray said the second Wood Bill was in some respects worse than the T-H measure it was designed to replace.

Washington observers familiar with what happens on "The Hill" said openly and frequently that Republican leaders prepared the second Wood Bill and that Rep. Wood had not seen it when it was introduced.

Although labor attention last week focused on T-H repeal efforts, the hoppers of both House and Senate received one measure in which the CIO has a vital interest.

Ten Administration supporters introduced legislation to carry out President Truman's national health program.

The President proposed a nationwide system of health insurance, federal aid for expansion of medical services, increased governmental aid for construction of hospitals and an increase in federal funds to fight specific diseases and for improved child and maternal care.

Sponsors of the health legislation are Senators Murray (Mont.), Thomas (Utah), Wagner (N. Y.), Pepper (Fla.), Taylor (Idaho), McGrath (R. I.), Humphrey (Minn.) and Chavez (N. M.) and Reps. Biemiller (Wis.) and Dingell (Mich.).

The Senate Finance Committee last week approved the House-passed oleo tax repeal bill by a voice vote. Foes indicated they would fight the measure with a barrage of excise tax amendments when it reaches the floor.

A group of bills designed to carry out Truman's civil rights program, which the CIO has strongly indorsed, was introduced by Senator McGrath, Democratic National Committee chairman.

McGrath said the bills, if enacted, would carry out the civil rights planks of the Democratic Party platform.

The measures deal with the poll tax question, anti-lynching and the establishment of a Fair Employment Practices program.

CIO's Stand Unchanged

"The CIO stands solidly with President Truman and the Administration in support of the Thomas-Lesinski Bill.

"This was the CIO's position when the Thomas-Lesinski Bill was introduced. It is the CIO's position today—and it will continue to be our position.

"I make this statement merely because of unfounded newspaper reports and rumors that the CIO has altered its stand on the type of legislation that should be enacted to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act."

That's what CIO Pres. Philip Murray said last week when "compromise' rumors were flying thick and fast on Capitol Hill.

Rhode Island Probes Trusts

A ten-member committee, on which organized labor expects representation, has been created by the Rhode Island Assembly to inquire into charitable trusts to determine what state law is needed to protect industry from unfair competition through tax exemptions. Rhode Island has no law covering this subject.

Gov. John A. Pastore recommended creation of the committee in his inaugural message at the request of the State CIO Council. (A Senate committee probed Textron, Inc., textile manufacturers—which operates through charitable trusts—after it had closed some of its New England operations.) Pastore will name the committee.

Rhode Island has become the first of the States to indorse the program outlined by Former Interior Secy. Ickes to the Auto Workers' educational conference for creating a trust out of the $200 billion in tidelands oil royalties so that taxless federal aid for education can be extended to all the states.

A resolution indorsing the Ickes plan and sponsored by the Rhode Island CIO Council, was unanimously passed by both branches of the Legislature.

$1 Million A Day

The Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey averaged $1 million a day in profits through 1948. Total profits of the Rockefeller-owned company reached an all-time high last year after taxes, according to its annual report released April 25. They stood at $365,604,976, or a little over a million for each day of the year.

Give PAC $1, Make NAM Holler

Rep. Magee:

An Ex-President of a C. of C., He Refuses C. of C. Cocktails

From "Labor"

FACES OF some Missouri business "bigwigs" may be red, but a lot of other people are going to cheer a remarkable letter just sent by Rep. Clare Magee, "freshman" Missouri Democrat, to President George C. Smith of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce.

Magee was invited to attend a "cocktail party and dinner" to be held at the Statler Hotel in Washington on May 2, with delegates present from local Chambers of Commerce all over Missouri. It was to be a typical lobbyists' attempt to induce solons to keep the Taft-Hartley bill on the statute books and defeat all the rest of Pres. Truman's "Fair Deal" program. The Congressman's letter follows in full: "To George C. Smith, President, St. Louis Chamber of Commerce:

"Dear Mr. Smith: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of April 6, in which you invite me to a cocktail party and dinner. You state that the St. Louis, Kansas City and other Missouri Chambers of Commerce will be here attending the annual meeting of the U. S. C. of C.

"I must decline this invitation. Even the inducement of one hour of cocktails is not sufficient. In fact you would not be able to get enough cocktails down me in 60 minutes to make me agree with what you and the U. S. Chamber stand for.

REP. CLARE MAGEE

"You may recall that soon after the election of last fall, you invited the newly elected Missouri Congressmen to a dinner at St. Louis. Only three of us were foolish enough to attend. I had some idea of what we would hear; but it exceeded all expectations.

"We were not given a chance to say a word; but we were only expected to, and did sit meekly by while you and an officer of the Missouri Chamber of Commerce heaped every conceivable insult upon those of us who were elected by the support of liberal elements.

"You charged that we would probably witness the first 'Labor Government' in America when the 81st Congress convened. Yours was the most excoriating and reactionary speech I have ever heard or read.

"I am not a rubber-stamp politician, and perhaps cannot agree with every proposal of this Administration; but I believe that we have enough wealth and resources in this great country of ours, that no one need be in want.

"I believe the prime aim of this government, under the leadership of our distinguished fellow Missourian, is to grant the greatest good to the greatest number. I believe we can have a controlled economy within our democracy.

"Free enterprise and individual liberty become hollow terms when all wealth is aggregated in the hands of a few people.

"I do thank you for the invitation; but those cocktails might cause me to forget the usual amenities that a guest should display to his host.

"Very truly yours,
CLARE MAGEE, M. C."

What adds additional point to the letter is that Magee is not a so-called "labor" congressman, but a businessman and farmer who still operates the farm on which he was born 50 years ago near Unionville, Mo. Furthermore, he knows the Chamber's activities from the inside—for three terms he served as president of the Unionville Chamber of Commerce.

Anti-Semitism Drops in '48

A nationwide survey of anti-Semitism showed that 1948 was a year of "great gains, violent reactions and, in certain areas, increased discrimination," the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith discloses.

The survey, written by Prof. Ruth G. Weintraub and prepared under the supervision of former Asst. Dist. Atty. Jacob Grumet and Arnold Forster, describes the inroads of anti-Semitism in housing, employment, education, the professions and other phases of American life. It will be published in book form by Doubleday & Co. under the title, How Secure These Rights?

Negro College Fund Indorsed

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has indorsed the United Negro College Fund's sixth nation-wide campaign.

"Organized labor," said Murray in a memorandum to CIO unions, "has long been in the forefront of all endeavors looking toward the improvement of educational facilities and services for all Americans. The CIO has been particularly concerned to see that neither opportunities nor responsibilities be denied anyone on account of race, creed or color.

Wire Tapping Charged

The Bell Telephone System—AT&T—has been accused of tapping the wires of Communications Workers of America officers in Washington State and Idaho. On the basis of information received from E. J. Follis, Washington-Idaho negotiations committee Chairman, A. B. Harrington, CWA public relations director, requested the Federal Communications Commission to investigate Bell practices.

MINOR LEAGUES FIRST

Some folks seem to have the cockeyed notion that politics is a game which the nation plays earnestly only on Leap Year.

It's true that the big game in the Major League is played only once in four years—when a President is elected.

But all members of the House and a third of the Senate are elected each two years.

And in the odd-numbered years—such as 1949—there are several hundred city, county and state elections in areas where labor is an important force. This year there are more than 500 such elections.

Perhaps we can say that the off-year elections are in the Minor Leagues—but that doesn't mean they're not important.

They are important—vitally important—for two reasons:

1. In many respects, state and local legislation has more effect on the daily lives of citizens than do the laws passed by Congress.

2. Many of the players in the Minor Leagues move up to the Majors as time passes.

Thus PAC Dir. Jack Kroll isn't talking through his hat when he says CIO must carry on political action work the year around, year in and year out.

And his statement that PAC needs dollar contributions this year makes sense, too.

What's been happening on Capitol Hill in Washington shows the necessity for laying the groundwork now for the Congressional elections next year.

The 81st Congress isn't a shining example of the type of legislative body labor wants and the nation as a whole needs if progress is to be made.

Sure, a lot of "good guys" were elected last Fall—but there are still too many "bad guys" around.

And a lot of the latter are likely to be around in 1950, '52 and even later unless labor and other liberal forces use their energy and money to retire them to private life. ★ ★ ★

JUST AN INCIDENT

The other day one of the Washington newspapers carried an "unimportant" story about an "unimportant" woman employe at the Pentagon who didn't like the kind of milk served at Pentagon cafeterias.

The young lady began circulating a petition, asking that the cafeterias switch back to a brand of milk they formerly used.

A lieutenant-colonel stopped the young lady in a snack bar, asked her her name and where she worked. She told him such information was no concern of his.

"I'm going to have you picked up," said the officer—and he did. She was taken a short time later to an Army office and questioned. She was released, then called back.

On the second trip the young lady's boss, an attorney, went along. After listening to the questioning, he told the colonel, "I think you're a little out of order."

Said the officer, "Well, how do we know she's not a Communist"?

Said the boss, "Now I know damn well you're out of order"!

What happened was, of course, "just an incident" insofar as the public welfare is concerned, but it serves to illustrate the type of crackpot thinking on matters ideological which permeates a large part of official Washington.

The reporter who wrote the story said it "illustrates what a stupid thing a Gestapo can be."

Right!

Too Few And Not Good Enough

Nation's Educational System Needs Overhauling; Federal Aid Would Help

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE AMERICAN public school system is badly in need of a powerful "shot in the arm."

It's in pretty bad shape. There is a shortage of teachers and a shortage of buildings. Too many instructors are being underpaid and too many children are being "undereducated."

Perhaps the story of our educational system is an old one by now because it's been told so many times—but it's a frightening story.

It's been told by many persons in many different ways. But about all we've had is talk—and talk alone won't remedy the situation.

IN THE YEARS just before the war our states were spending slightly more than 2.50% of their total income on schools.

Today educational expenditures amount to about 1.56% of total state income.

That in itself is bad enough, but it lacks much of telling the entire story.

The pre-war educational systems of various states were inadequate. Schools in some of the Southern states—although they spent a relatively large portion of their income for education—were badly equipped and poorly staffed.

And since the beginning of the war many teachers were forced to give up their profession because they couldn't live on what they earned.

Extension

The CIO favors a Labor Extension Service program that would provide the nation's adult workers with special educational opportunities.

A MAJOR portion of our population obviously agrees that something's got to be done about our public school set-up.

But there the agreement stops. And the arguing begins when the subject of federal aid to education is brought up.

Proponents—including the National Education Association and the CIO—say the federal government should aid the states in pulling their school systems out of the mire.

Opponents—including the U. S. Chamber of Commerce—say the Federal Government should keep its nose—and its money—out of the field of education.

THE CIO at its convention last year summed up its view on education when it adopted a resolution saying:

"Education in a democracy must be a continuing process beginning in childhood and continuing throughout adult life and must be made available and equal for all citizens regardless of race, color, creed or geographical location.

"American schools in rural areas, many of whose students will become a part of the urban community, are receiving approximately half the expenditure per child that is being received by schools in city areas.

"American children are suffering a tragic injustice because of the inequality of educational services provided by the various states and it is most glaringly demonstrated in the contrast between facilities in the low-income Southern states and those in wealthier industrial states; while within the Southern states segregated schools for Negroes receive a fraction of the appropriations, small to begin with, that are appropriated for white children."

DETERIORATION of our school system has not been a sudden, dramatic thing. It has been going on gradually.

The problem will not be solved overnight. But the adoption of legislation providing federal aid to state school systems would be a big help.

Such legislation should be passed by Congress at its current session.

Every person interested in the future of the country should support the federal aid proposal and other measures designed to make our schools better.

Second Class Mail Aid Called "American Tradition"

"THE tradition of clear public subsidy in the free exchange of ideas, without censorship or political bias, has run unbroken since Benjamin Franklin," Rep. Arthur G. Klein (D., N. Y.) told the House Post Office Committee which is considering a bill to raise second-class postal rates.

(Benjamin Franklin was the first U. S. Postmaster General.)

Allan L. Swim, CIO director of publicity, had previously protested against the proposed postal hike on publications of non-profit organizations to both the Senate and the House Post Office Committees. Excerpts from Rep. Klein's statement follows:

"With this tradition I have full sympathy, and I could not support the bill in its present form, because I believe that it sacrifices a social imperative for a merely desirable fiscal end, and discriminates in favor of size and power against small free enterprises and against non-profit groups.

"I do not believe that the imposition of the rates in this bill will more than inconvenience the giants of the magazine and newspaper world. Mass circulation periodicals with huge advertising revenues, the great daily newspapers, the big mail order houses, will not falter in their stride. They will absorb the jolt, pass most of it on to their customers, and never miss a dividend.

"But there are hundreds of struggling small magazines, competing desperately for survival, who will go out of existence under these rates.

"There are more hundreds of small newspapers—and here I have most in mind the weeklies which serve rural areas or city neighborhoods—who cannot survive under these rates.

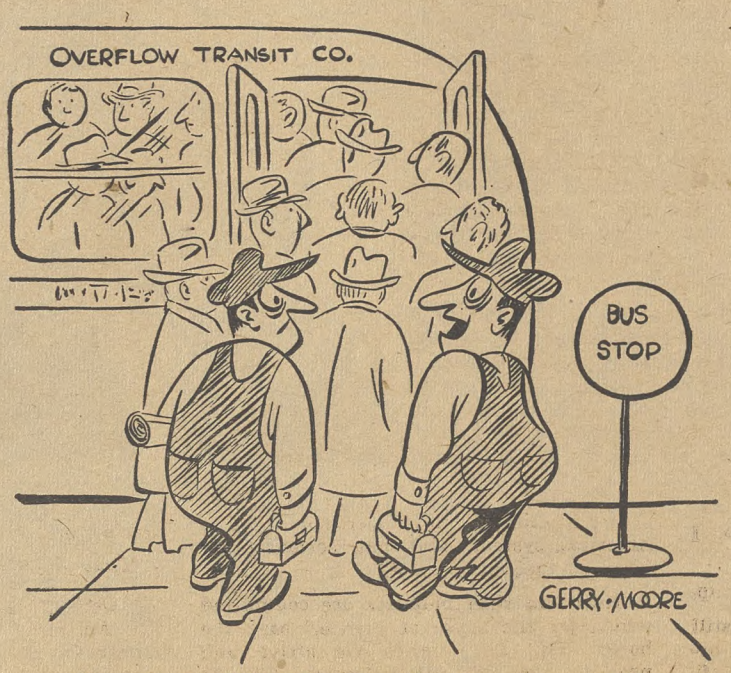
"There are churches, lodges, political movements, unions, all kinds of 'causes', to whom the postal subsidy is a sine qua non of existence.

"I am not speaking to the merits of any of these categories as individual enterprises; I am looking rather to the necessity of preserving an independent press, even a press violently opposed to everything I stand for, in order to preserve freedom and independence in America.

"We must not allow the channels of communication in this country to fall into the hands of a single economic class; and it is to the public interest to subsidize, through low mailing costs, free competition.

"The same principle applies to third class rates for commercial users. It is in the public interest to preserve the small direct mail and advertising companies and their clients, even if some very large and profitable concerns should benefit, too.

"The proposed new rates favor bigness."



"I understand the Lincoln prices have been cut."

Handicapped Kids Seen Needing Aid

Although special projects providing care for handicapped children are in operation in many states, the need is far greater than the facilities provided, according to Dr. Edwin F. Daily, director of health services for the U. S. Children's Bureau.

"The tragedy is," states Dr. Daily, that "the number of physically handicapped children in the U. S. can be counted in the millions, while the number being cared for in these public medical-car programs can be counted only in the thousands.

"We must do a great deal more if we are sincere in wanting to advance the total health of our children."

Heckler Let Him Have It---With Fist

HE LOOKED like a mild-mannered man but those who knew him well said he was "hell on wheels" when pushed too far.

But it took a lot of pushing to get him going.

Out in the Pacific, of course, it had been different. He was in uniform then and his job was devoted entirely to reducing the Japanese population.

Maybe his war experience calmed him down a bit. Maybe his months in hospitals gave him plenty of opportunity to think about—and learn to dislike—violence.

At any rate, he had learned that under certain circumstances a fellow must learn to take it without dishing it out in return.

THE UNION membership drive at the Oak Ridge atomic energy plants was going full blast, but nobody was certain of its outcome.

The mild-mannered man who had fought in the Pacific was in the midst of the fray. He made speeches, helped write leaflets, talked with any worker who would listen.

Occasionally he lost his temper and used strong profanity but he didn't go around threatening to poke folks in the nose.

And then, without warning, came a real test of his ability to "take it."

IT WASN'T yet daylight when a group of organizers—grumbling, of course—crawled out of bed and reported at the CIO office.

There they received copies of the weekly newspaper the CIO was publishing as part of the campaign. Then they headed for the big plants to begin distribution to workers at shift-change time.

The ex-service man stood near one of the exit gates and calmly handed out papers. He spoke to workers who spoke to him.

It appeared to be a routine distribution—and then it happened!

A big fellow said, "Keep your damn paper. I don't want your Communist propaganda."

THE ORGANIZER hesitated a second and then said, "Now, wait a minute, brother! I want to talk with you."

The worker halted, then turned around—belligerently. "I don't know whether I want to talk with you."

"Now, look," said the organizer. "I just got out of uniform and accepted a job with the CIO. And if it's a Communist outfit I'm not going to work for it. I don't like Commies.

"I suppose you know what you're talking about, so I'd like for you to trot out some proof—and I mean proof. And if you don't, I'm going to think you don't know what you're talking about or that you're a liar."

The worker made some brief reply—and then he smashed the organizer in the face with his fist!

THE ORGANIZER picked himself up off the ground, brushed the dirt from his clothes, spit out a mouthful of blood and said:

"Brother, I could tear you to pieces but I'm not going to. The CIO doesn't operate that way. You didn't know what you were talking about or you wouldn't have slugged me."

The worker walked away, but a number of others who had witnessed the incident surrounded the organizer. One of them said, "If that's the way you operate, I want to sign up." He did.

And so did several others in the group.

Later in the day the organizer, still spitting blood, declared, "Boy, that's organizing the hard way!" A. L. S.

U. S. Labor Dept. Book For Overseas:

'We Want To Share Our Common Political Treasures'

WORKERS in other countries have picked up some strangely cockeyed notions about life in our big, confusing United States.

On the one hand some of them think that everybody in this country is rolling in wealth, and that workers drive to their jobs in fine cars.

On the other hand, many think that most American workers toil like slaves on an assembly line speeded up so fast that they can't take time to wipe the sweat from their brows.

To clear up some of the confusion and misinformation which has been spread abroad, the U. S. Dept. of Labor's Bureau of Labor Statistics has issued a 142-page illustrated book entitled "The Gift of Freedom," which attempts to give some of the outstanding facts about the social and economic status of American workers.

The pamphlet will be translated into various languages and in foreign countries with the cooperation of American labor union representatives abroad.

"The Gift of Freedom discusses factors influencing life in working class America grouped under six main headings: work force; productive capacity; purchasing power and living standards; social security; labor organization and civil rights.

THE STUDY frankly admits that there are "flaws in the operation of the American system," and that "serious problems of inequality exist."

"Now and then blunders are committed which jar the sense of justice," says the book. "But in America we strive and progress; our mistakes impede but do not halt our progress or change our direction.

"In America today there is the combination of circumstances—free labor, free unions, social consciousness and social conscience, sacred regard for individual human dignity, and economic capacity—necessary to virile democratic leadership and reconstruction.

"Americans—and especially American labor—want to exercise that leadership and assistance, not as a largess but in the spirit of comradeship. We want to share our material treasure, certainly; but we want to share our common political treasures even more, those free institutions of free men which are imbedded in the very marrow of any democratic social structure.

"That indeed is the gift of freedom."

'Free Unions' Defined

"American trade unions are characterized by their freedom and their economic power. By these attributes they symbolize the free social and economic system in which they function.

"A free union is one which is controlled exclusively by the will of its members. It is not dominated by employers, by a political party, or by the Government. This tradition of independence is as old as the American labor movement, which, in turn, is about as old as the Nation."—From The Gift of Freedom.

A CHAPTER on the employment of the American people discusses some significant trends and tendencies such as the increasing employment of women—in April 1948 17.2 million women were working, or about 31% of all women over 14 years of age—and the changes the war brought about in "the occupational attachments of individuals."

"Significant long-run changes have taken place," the book states, "as the American economy has become more industrialized, as agricultural employment has diminished, and as technological advances create new products and industries or reduce the labor required in old industries."

A distinguishing feature of our economy, says a chapter on living standards, "is the prominence of large-scale standardized mass production for general consumption as distinguished from limited production to meet the special demands of privileged groups."

How workers have benefited by increases in productivity is shown by the fact that "the average factory worker today can buy twice as much with his weekly wage as a worker of 30 years ago could, and the work week now is at least 10 hours shorter."

Of special interest to unionists is the chapter on the American labor movement, which outlines the structure of the various branches of organized labor—CIO, AFL, and independent or unaffiliated—traces recent trends in labor policy, and describes unions in action.

Three pages are devoted to explaining the Taft-Hartley law in some detail. An editorial note points out that the law "was one of the important issues of the 1948 political campaigns," and that President Truman has strongly recommended that Congress repeal the measure.

Trouble

Rep. Chet Holifield (D., Calif.), during the T-H debate:

"Many years ago, I heard the following philosophical bit:

" 'Don't trouble trouble if trouble doesn't trouble you.'

"Applying this pithy truth to the serious and important problem before the House today, I make these observations:

"T-H is a trouble creator. It is a trouble stimulator. It sparks combustible matter."

Rep. Burke Says:

'I Know At First Hand About Bad Relations'

Rep. Thomas H. Burke (D., O.), a charter member of the CIO Auto Workers and former executive secretary of the Toledo, Ohio, CIO Council, declared during the Thomas-Lesinski debate:

Mr. Chairman, two years ago an enlightened Federal program for dealing with labor-management relations was brought to an abrupt end by the 80th Congress. In the words of one who should know, I quote from "Our National Labor Policy," by Fred A. Hartley, Jr., a former member of this body:

"The enactment of the Taft-Hartley Act marked the beginning of a new national labor policy."

The basic purpose of our national labor policy, prior to the enactment of the Taft-Hartley Act, was to encourage collective bargaining and to protect the rights of workers to organize and designate representatives of their own choosing for the purpose of collective bargaining.

Rep. Burke

Accordingly, the Wagner Act was a simple piece of legislation which legally guaranteed to workers the free exercise of an inherent human right by requiring of employers only that they refrain from using certain unfair practices which interfered with the right of workers to organize and that they, the employers, bargain with the freely chosen representatives of their employees.

The Wagner Act provided the minimum of Government interference with the voluntary procedures of free collective bargaining upon which our national labor policy was and should be based.

The Wagner Act stated briefly its requirements; established the Board to administer them; provided for judicial enforcement and review; and established a minimum of procedures for the guidance of the Board, properly leaving the further development of administrative procedures to the Board's discretion. To repeat, it was a simple act which could not be less meddlesome.

The 80th Congress in a period of emotional stress transformed this uncomplicated act into an intricate piece of legislation into which was placed every provision inspired by the "there ought to be a law" complex which so many persons seem to have—provisions dealing with matters of public policy outside the proper scope of labor - management legislation, provisions collateral to and not directly connected with the subject of labor-management relations.

I want to speak briefly about this one basic issue of national policy and about three among the many errors contained in T-H which contributed to the break-down of the act itself which has now come about.

- The basic question is the matter of a national labor policy.
- The errors are the writing into T-H of one, the requirement that the Dept. of Labor and the NLRB shall be furnished with facts about the internal organization of unions and financial statements; two, the requirement that before unions can apply for the advertised protection of the act the union officials shall execute affidavits that they are not members of the Communist Party; and three, the so-called mutual obligation to bargain laid upon employers and upon unions.

I should like, Mr. Chairman, to state that I know at first hand out of my own experience the harm that bad labor - management relations can do to all concerned—workers, employers, and the entire community.

I know, likewise, the beneficial effects of good labor-management relations.

In the industrial city of Toledo it has been my privilege to serve the UAW, the IUC, the Toledo municipal government, and the State of Ohio in a variety of official capacities.

Both as an official of organized labor and as a public official, I have had opportunities to see the internal workings of the collective bargaining process.

It has been our experience in Toledo, where labor-management relations have been unusually cordial in recent years, that good relations between unions and the management depend on good faith.

The Toledo plan, which has been studied and praised by scores of industrial-relations experts, was an experiment in good faith. And it worked. It has worked—and it is still working—for the benefit of workers, of management, of the entire community.

No section of T-H shows more openly its one-sidedness and its confusion than that section which calls upon elected union officers to sign non-Communist affidavits if they wish to use what few facilities of the NLRB are still of importance to them.

My own experience, and the conversations I have had with many union leaders—in national offices and local offices—confirms the fact that the anti-Communist affidavit is of little use to anybody but the factories which produce the paper for the affidavits, and a few clerks at the Labor Dept. whose jobs may depend on filing the affidavits into neat bundles.

I have always opposed Communists in unions and everywhere else. My union, the UAW has had considerable success in rooting out Communists from positions of leadership. Other unions in the CIO have had similar successes in recent years. But the affidavits had nothing to do with this cleansing of Communists from union positions.

The men who have been most successful in meeting the problem of communism in the American labor movement—who have the most experience—do not like the affidavit. Pres. Murray and Sec'y.-Treas. Carey of the CIO, Pres. Reuther of the UAW, and many others, are unanimously opposed to the affidavits.

The affidavit section was unnecessary legislation. So was the proposal that unions must file financial statements with the Federal Government. When T-H was first under consideration, its sponsors were told that almost every union files public financial statements.

Mr. Chairman, I urge that we pass H. R. 2032 to repeal T-H—as a first step toward enactment of the Fair Deal program which the people of the U. S. so earnestly demand.

Yes, Suh!

Rep. Graham Barden (D., N. C.), an ardent Wood Bill supporter, during the T-H debate:

"I am not anti-labor. I am pro-American."

Rep. Madden Declares:

You Can't Change T-H By Ch
You Can't Hide Limburger

When the House took up the Thomas-Lesinski Bill last week, the opening address—on the rule for the bill—was made by Rep. Raymond Madden (D., Ind.), a former member of the House Labor Committee. Here are pertinent excerpts from that address:

Mr. Speaker, this Congress is about to consider a bill, H. R. 2032, which involves the most important legislation that will be presented during the session.

H. R. 2032 endeavors to undo our greatest legislative mistake since the days of the Volstead Prohibition Act.

Rep. Madden

H. R. 2032 not only calls for the repeal of the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947, but provides for constructive changes in the Wagner Act of 1935, which it reenacts.

These changes in the original Wagner Act curtail and prohibit jurisdictional disputes and secondary boycotts. It also would set up machinery which encourages collective bargaining and arbitration of disputes arising out of the interpretation of contracts between labor and management.

H. R. 2032 improves the Wagner Act by providing for legislation concerning strikes in vital industries affecting the public interest. Under this provision, it does not jeopardize or endanger the basic rights of labor unions or our democratic freedoms as does the Taft-Hartley Act on the same provision.

The underlying principle involved in this new labor legislation is the promotion of free collective bargaining between employer and employe.

The Rules Committee held extended sessions on four different days, hearing testimony from members of the House Labor Committee. I have read the minority report submitted and signed by the Republican members of the Committee on Labor.

The first five pages are taken up criticizing the chairman of the Labor Committee and complaining that they received unjust treatment during the hearing. This will be part of the Republican strategy during this debate to take our minds off the real issue.

Since the Republican committee members are relying on the smoke screen of committee procedure to muddy thinking on the labor restrictions in the Taft-Hartley law I think the new Members of Congress should know what happened in the Hartley Labor Committee two years ago

At the time this Congress was made the victim of the best organized and most highly financed legislative lobby in Washington.

I was a member of the House Labor Committee and personally attended five weeks of public hearings. Most of these hearings I believe were conducted primarily to send out antiunion propaganda and soften the minds of the American public for the approach of T-H.

Whenever a celebrated-name witness appeared to present anti-labor testimony the caucus room in the old House Office Building was literally cluttered with kleig lights, television apparatus, radio broadcasting machinery, recording equipment, and special installation of tables to accommodate reporters and radio commentators.

Very few of us realized two years ago that the transforming of the Labor Committee hearing in the House caucus rooms into a Hollywood movie lot was just part of the well-organized propaganda of the NAM and their subsidiaries to undermine public opinion against organized labor in America.

The arbitrary tactics which existed during the hearings continued after the five weeks of open hearings were closed. Then the majority members went into secret session and drew the iron curtain against most of the minority members of the Labor Committee.

For almost two weeks Hartley and most of the Republican members were closeted with Theodore Eiserman, attorney for Chrysler, Attorney Jerry Morgan, and others, in the drawing up of the most complicated, deceptive, and highly involved piece of legislation that has passed the House in Congressional history.

Finally, after almost two weeks of secret meetings, Hartley officially called a meeting of all members of the Committee and immediately asked that this 76-page typewritten legal document be passed at that meeting.

By reason of strenuous protest on the part of myself and other members who were not asked to sit in with the legal experts, Hartley postponed the vote.

The following day this complex document was railroaded through the committee section by section without any opportunity of study for possible amendments by a considerable number of t bers.

Never in committee piece of leg under such tee tactics origin of Act on th House.

I have a great respect f Brown's opinion, but evidentl he was interpreting that th November election of 1946 ha given the Republican Party mandate for the T-H. If Brow was correct two years ago, cer tainly the Democratic membe of the Labor Committee and th 81st Congress, after the verdi of Nov., 1948, have the respor sibility for preparing and brin ing legislation to this floor fo action that will repeal T-H.

The Members who were o the floor before adjournmen last summer, remember Con gressman Halleck (R., Ind.) then the majority leader, chal lenging and daring Pres. Tru man and the Democratic pla form to make T-H Act an issu That and similar challenges b Republican statesmen was ac cepted by the President and th Democratic Party.

The people spoke emphati cally last November.

I think it is well to very brie ly review labor legislation sinc World War I.

Every member recollects th industrial disputes after Worl War I and during the '20's. Tha period was shadowed with strikes involving bloodshed and loss of life and property. Union labor and the wage earners were unsuccessful in making any progress. Low wages, poor working conditions, chaos, and bitterness hampered production and was one reason for the deplorable depression of 1929.

The Wagner Act was passed in 1935. Prominent lawyers told their clients the act was unconstitutional. Employers acted accordingly. In 1937 the Supreme Court decided it was constitutional. Until then the Wagner Act could not be enforced. During the next two years, the same lawyers advised their clients as to ways of evading, obstructing, and violating it.

Then came the war period. With the end of the war, as after every war or serious dislocation, we had a period of readjustment. In changing from war economy to peace economy, we naturally had difficulties and disputes. During the 80th Congress, propagandists cleverly and adroitly dramatized this situation, as I have already outlined, and passed T-H.

The history of the Wagner Act reveals that at no time has it been given a just and honest test over a period of time.

Many statements of generality have been made pro and con regarding T-H. It is my earnest wish that every member of Congress, before he votes on this legislation, read, line by line, paragraph by paragraph, the complex and involved provisions set out in the T-H law.

A short time ago, Business Week magazine stated:

"The Taft-Hartley law has failed—it went too far. It crossed the narrow line separating a law which aims only to regulate, from one which could destroy."

A member of Congress, in voting on this legislation, should not take the word of any commentator or propagandist, but a close study will reveal that Hartley was correct two years ago during the closing hours of debate when he admitted on the floor of this House that "everything that this bill contains does not meet the eye."

A close examination of T-H bill present its one-sided restrictions on labor, as set out in its various provisions dealing with: 1. injunctions; 2. union employer responsibility; 3. boycotts; 4. jurisdictional disputes; 5. penalties against striking employes; 6. damage suits; 7. arbitration of disputes over interpretation of existing contracts; 8. union security; 9. general counsel for board procedure; 10. check-off; 11. health and welfare funds; 12 free-speech provision; 13. restrictions on particular groups of employes; 14. complex system of elections; 15. political expenditures; and 16. outlawing closed shops. A study of these items will reveal T-H law is a union-busting device.

Not in my memory has legislation been filed with such mysterious origin as the so-called Wood bills. The first was H. R. 3228 and the second is H. R. 4290.

Congressman Wood appeared before the Rules Committee in behalf of the first. His knowledge of its content was very limited, according to his own testimony. Laudatory statements were made in the Rules Committee for Congressman Cox and others regarding the first Wood bill. He said that it contained the recommendations of the so-called watchdog committee.

When I was home during the Easter recess, I read that the first Wood bill, H. R. 3228, was withdrawn and a second Wood bill, H. R. 4290, was substituted. The article further said that the first Wood bill was more anti-labor than the Taft-Hartley law but that some Republican Congressmen revolted and the gentlemen from Georgia, Cox and Wood, consented to file another Wood bill and make it more palatable to some of the Republican rebels.

Why is the Republican leadership insisting that the good old Republican names like Taft and Hartley be erased from the National Labor Relations Act of 1947?

I ask why some of the Republican members of the Labor Committee have not the courage to lend their name to the so-called Wood bill? Is it because the Grand Old Party suffered such a defeat last November with two grand old Republican names from Ohio and New Jersey labeling anti-labor legislation?

I ask why the Republicans are now disclaiming any authorship of this 1949 T-H Act known as the Wood bill?

Ohio, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New York, and most northern Republicans now want to shed all connections with T-H and send it as far down south to Mason and Dixon as possible. Why pick on Georgia?

Has not Georgia suffered enough back through the years? It went through the reconstruction period, the Ku Klux Klan, two governors at the same time, and now the Republican leaders are trying to dump T-H—lock, stock, and barrel—onto its already overburdened shoulders.

No; you cannot change T-H by merely changing its name to the Wood bill. You cannot wrap limburger cheese in a beautiful pink, green, and black paper and conceal the odor.

Most members recollect reading in the newspapers in the fall of 1947 when Earl Bunting, president of the NAM, admonished NAM members not to be too hasty in taking advantage of the powers given them under T-H.

Evidently Bunting did not want the sixty-odd million wage earners in America and the 15,000,000 union members to realize its restrictive provisions until after the election in November, 1948.

I do not know whether Bunting has issued any orders to his members since Nov. 2, 1948, but the American people on that day issued an order to the Congress.

One hundred and three Members who voted for the T-H law in the 80th Congress are not present today. In my own State of Indiana, 9 of our 11 members in the 80th Congress voted for the Taft-Hartley law—6 of them are not in the 81st Congress.

The Taft-Hartley law, as it is now written, must be repealed in this session of the Eighty-first Congress. The issues were drawn last November and the people spoke at the polls—let the Congress carry out the mandate.

States Rights

Rep. Andrew Jacobs (D., Ind.) during the T-H debate:

"I wanted to ask Rep. Smith (D., Va.) about Wood Bill No. 2, which he said preserves State's Rights.

"While that is true in regard to any state forbidding the closed shop as provided in Section 14 (b); Section 14 (a) definitely strikes down States' Rights in these words:

" 'No employer subject to this act shall be compelled to deem individuals defined herein as supervisors as employes for the purpose of any law, either national or local, referring to collective bargaining.'

"I wanted to ask the gentleman from Virginia what became of his regard for States' Rights when they wrote Section 14 (a)."

Smith muttered something about opposing that, too. (He is the Smith of the Smith-Connally Act.)

GOP Congressman

Rep. Welch Says T-H Hits Lincoln's Party

Here are excerpts from other Congressmen against T-H nd in favor of the Thomas-Lesinski Bill:

Rep. Richard J. Welch R., Calif.):

Mr. Chairman, I spoke and voted against T-H when it was before this House during the 80th Congress.

I felt it was a mistake at that time and the best proof that those of us who voted against the bill were right is the fact that a coalition is here with a bill which makes a gesture of amending this antilabor law instead of repealing it outright and enacting a new law in keeping with the desires of millions of organized and unorganized workers of this country.

Mr. Chairman, I was chairman of the Committee on Labor during the Hoover administration and was complimented by that administration for the humanitarian and constructive legislation reported and enacted into law at that time.

Members of the House for years sought membership on the Labor Committee for the purpose of relieving the burdens of the toiling masses instead of reporting and helping to enact into law oppressive antilabor legislation.

I do not condone acts of some labor leaders, and at the same time I am unalterably opposed to legislation oppressive and punitive to nearly 60,000,000 workers by reason of the acts of a few.

I do not condone acts of unscrupulous lawyers who have been disbarred from the practice of their profession. But no sane person would attempt to condemn and punish the entire legal profession, from which the judicial branch of our Government is drawn, for those who disregard the ethics of that noble vocation.

Mr. Chairman, I deplore the effects of T-H on the party founded by that great humanitarian Abraham Lincoln.

The 60,000,000 workers in this country, with the exception of a few, are God-fearing, law-abiding, homeloving patriotic people. T-H in effect has been an indictment of these workers. Regardless of the intent of the proponents of the act, it has been generally accepted as an indictment and is strongly resented by them.

During the Revolutionary War, when the American Colonies were fighting for their independence, British Imperialists and Tories were demanding the extermination of what they termed the rebels. Edmund Burke, a great statesman and orator of that day, made a speech in the British Parliament urging conciliation in which he said:

"I do not know the method of drawing up an indictment against a whole people. I cannot insult and ridicule the feelings of millions of my fellow creatures."

Rep. Frank Buchanan (D., Pa.)

The present labor law has not reduced strikes. It has merely loaded the legal scales against unions, it has exposed their treasuries to harrassing suits.

It has had only a limited effect on reducing Communist influence in unions. The non-Communist affidavit sections of the act that have been introduced into our law are a dangerous menace and a definite threat to our liberties.

Rep. Carl Perkins (D., Ky.):

The average American would be shocked to know that the so-called Taft-Hartley bill was written by the most vicious big-business lobbyist and paid for by the National Republican Committee rather than being written as a fair law to provide equality of bargaining power between management and labor.

Rep. Cleveland Bailey (D., W. Va.):

Mr. Chairman, economic slavery is just as distasteful to a free people as physical servitude. I say to you, my colleagues, that our beloved America cannot long endure half free and half slave. This was so in the days of Lincoln. It is particularly true in our present highly industrial state.

No Hysteria

Chairman John Lesinski (D., Mich.), of the House Labor Committee, during the T-H debate:

"We are not interested in T-H repeal merely because it was a Republican measure and was driven through Congress in a spirit of hysteria and vengeance."

Brewery Pacts Won In 2 Cities

CIO Brewery Workers made wage and contracts gains in Detroit and Pittsburgh, while their strike in New York City continued with the employers' ranks broken by the signing of several contracts with smaller companies.

At Detroit—after a one-day strike—the union won from 6 to 8 cents an hour plus fringe gains of 8 cents to make at least 14 cents an hour, according to Secy.-Treas. Steve Lafferty.

The wage scales now range from $1.56½ to $1.76½ an hour, depending on job classification. Drivers, some of whom do not receive salaries, can now earn $125 a week if they get the breaks the new contract affords.

AT LEAST seven fringe gains of a dollar and cents character were won—such as a 5% premium for the second shift, and a 10% premium for the third shift.

Thirty-six hundred workers in eight breweries and numerous soft drink and related plants are covered by the new contracts. The brewers want a 3-year contract, but the Brewery Workers held out for one-year agreement and won it.

At Pittsburgh more than 2,000 workers in three locals of the Brewery Workers won $2 weekly wage increases in the new contract, which is retroactive to April 1 and runs for two years.

The contract provides insurance and hospital benefits, one more paid holiday and 5 cents an hour extra for night shift workers. Eight companies operating 14 breweries in western Pennsylvania are covered by the agreement.

THANKS TO REPORTER: Because CIO Newspaper Guildsman John G. Blair of the Cleveland Plain Dealer (r.) kept plugging the story of his conviction in the "slaying" of two Italian black marketeers, Pfc. Thomas A. Gusik, Cleveland, (center) was released from the U. S. Reformatory at Chillicothe, Ohio. Here young Gusik is having a happy reunion in the office of the Plain Dealer with his family (l. to r.), his brother, Donald, his mother, Mary, and his father, John. Gusik had been sentenced to life imprisonment.

Guildsman Refuses to 'Kiss Off' Dispatch, Helps Get Release of GI Sentenced in Slaying

BECAUSE CIO Guildsman John G. Blair of the Cleveland Plain Dealer refused to "kiss off" an Associated Press dispatch, he played a big part in obtaining the release of a Cleveland soldier who was serving a life sentence.

The dispatch from Leghorn, Italy, dated Oct. 9, 1947, said that Pfc. Thomas A. Gusik, 18, had received a life sentence in the slaying of two Italian black marketeers near Pisa, Italy.

First Blair interviewed the boy's parents. Shocked by the news, they told Blair that their son was a good boy, who "never even drank or smoked."

Blair wrote a "human interest" story for his paper, a morning publication. The Cleveland papers used only two or three paragraphs.

From the Plain Dealer's correspondent in Italy, he learned the Italians were killed as they tried to break into an Army depot Gusik was guarding. Blair kept playing the story.

Finally the Army moved Thomas Gusik from Italy to an Army prison at Greenhaven, N. Y., near Poughkeepsie, where, accompanied by Blair, Mr. and Mrs. Gusik saw their son.

His story was that he was accused of playing ball with the black marketeers and that he had killed the two, who were members of a gang of five, because of a personal grudge.

Blair continued to tell the story, and public interest in Thomas Gusik continued to grow. A committee to aid young Gusik was formed, consisting of lawyers, civic leaders and clergymen who offered their services free. When Army Secy. Royall came to Cleveland to speak, Mr. and Mrs. Gusik and a group of citizens got a promise from him that there would be an investigation of the case.

More committees were formed and veterans organizations protested Gusik's treatment. An Army Review Board looked into the case at a hearing attended by Gusik's parents, Blair, three Congressmen and a Catholic priest—and cut the sentence to 16 years.

Efforts in behalf of the young soldier were intensified. The promise of a Congressional investigation was obtained. Protest followed protest and finally the Gusik Committee filed a writ for a habeas corpus with Federal District Judge Underwood in Columbus, Ohio.

Judge Underwood ruled on March 31, this year, that the youth had been deprived of his liberty without due process of law and should be released from custody. Blair was one of those who went to the U. S. Reformatory at Chillicothe to obtain the prisoner's release.

Gusik was reunited with his parents in a dramatic scene in the Plain Dealer city room after state highway patrolmen accompanied him from Chillicothe.

Continue Vets' Pay Rights-CIO

NATHAN E. COWAN, CIO Legislative Representative, has urged passage of H. R. 1374, which would continue eligibility for payment of unemployment compensation to World War II veterans under the GI Bill of Rights after July 25, this year, when eligibility for payment will cease for most ex-servicemen.

"Under the GI Bill, a veteran is entitled to draw unemployment compensation of $20 a week for a maximum of 52 weeks during a period of two years after discharge or two years after the termination of the war . . . whichever is later," Cowan said.

"The Republican-dominated 80th Congress decided by resolution that the war ended July 25, 1947, as far as veterans' unemployment compensation is concerned.

"This means that for most ex-servicemen of World War II, eligibility for payment of unemployment compensation under the GI Bill will end next July 25—two years after the war was declared ended. The only exceptions are veterans who were discharged less than two years ago.

"This condition is manifestly unfair to the boys 'for whom the best was none too good.' This is particularly unjust in this period of increased unemployment.

CIO Spurns Franco Bid

CIO PRES. PHILIP MURRAY conferred last week with Trifon Gomez, exiled Spanish labor leader, and discussed the current drive in some quarters for American recognition of the Franco government in Spain.

After the meeting, Murray said that he had told Gomez that the CIO is opposed to American recognition of the government of Generalissimo Francisco Franco and recalled that the 1948 CIO convention at Portland, Oregon, had adopted a foreign policy resolution which included this sentence:

"We reaffirm CIO policy of opposing recognition of, or assistance by our government, to Fascist Franco Spain."

Noting that the only opposition to the CIO's foreign policy resolution came from a handful of left-wingers, Murray said that America should continue to follow the policy of the United Nations, which has refused to admit Spain to membership because of the policies of Franco.

Gomez, has lived in exile in France since the Franco government took over in the Spanish revolution. He has been general secretary of the Railroad Workers' Federation of Spain since 1918, is also president of the Spanish General Union of Workers (UGT), and was a general director of supplies in the Spanish Republic from 1936 to 1939.

Simultaneously with Murray's meeting with Gomez, it was announced that the CIO President and CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey were among several hundred prominent persons who signed a letter to President Truman opposing recognition of Franco Spain.

Loss Of Sea Jobs Is Told

THE CHARGE that the Maritime Commission has acquiesced in the transfer of 1½ million gross tons of American shipping to Panamanian and Honduran flags since the end of the war was made last week by Exec. Secy. Hoyt S. Haddock of the CIO Maritime Committee.

Haddock told the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee that such transfers have thrown 15,000 American seamen out of jobs and have caused a loss in payrolls of over $50,000,000 annually.

Haddock asked Congress "to severerly censure the Maritime Commission for dereliction of duty in allowing the transfers of millions of tons of American shipping which have done irreparable harm to the American Merchant Marine."

Haddock urged immediate favorable action on HR 3291, a bill introduced by Rep. Edward Hart (D. N. J.) to:

- Ban American shipowners from operating under foreign flags.
- Place further restriction on the sale of American-owned tonnage to non-citizens.
- Ban the use of ECA and other Federal funds for ships flying such spurious flags as the Panamanian and Honduran flags.

In a 30-page brief, the CIO Committee pointed out that over 1200 American vessels have been laid up in the last two years with a loss of 50,000 jobs.

Attempted 'Timber Grab' Reported

BIG TIMBER interests have a grab afoot which is one of the slickest schemes ever cooked up for looting the nation's public domain, warns Ellery Foster, a professional forester.

Under this scheme, says Foster, "a few large firms can get 25 to 100-year exclusive logging privileges in huge blocks of government-owned timber. Yet they do not have to pay any taxes, or fire protection costs or any other costs of carrying the timber. The public foots all those bills."

Foster, who was research and education director of the CIO Intl. Woodworkers of America for three years, resigned last year to devote his full time to a drive to save the nation's forests for the American people.

CERTAIN vested interests in timber—and their front organizations—are telling the public "that such monopoly of timber is necessary for 'sustained yield' forestry that will stabilize woodworking communities,' says Foster.

"Sincere, well-meaning people have been taken in by the propaganda. Government foresters have little choice in the matter because the public has left it to the lumber lobby to write public forestry policies.

"The plan is humbug because no such complicated, special privilege deals are needed for sustained yield. Instead, what we need is scientific selective logging. It can be practiced as well on small tracts as large, and can produce twice as big a sustained yield of logs as hundred-year cycles of clear-cutting. So it can stabilize communities without monopoly.'

"IF WE LEAVE it to the lumber lobby to write national forestry policy as they have been doing for a generation, there will never be a real policy of selective logging . . . So it is up to public-minded groups which do not have a vested interest in timber scarcity to form a forestry lobby of their own."

Foster strongly indorses the forestry program drawn up by the CIO Woodworkers and declares that "it is a splendid thing that organized labor is taking such a fundamental and constructive approach to the problems of stabilizing the destructive, wasteful, migrating wood industry."

The IWA-CIO's forestry program, adopted at the union's last convention, has been reprinted in pamphlet form for wide distribution. Foster offers to mail a copy to anyone upon request. His address is Box 444-A, Route 1, Oswego, Ore.

Rep. Kelley Honored For Aid To Handicaped

Rep. Augustine B. Kelley (D., Pa.) has been presented with an "Award of Appreciation" for his services to the handicapped.

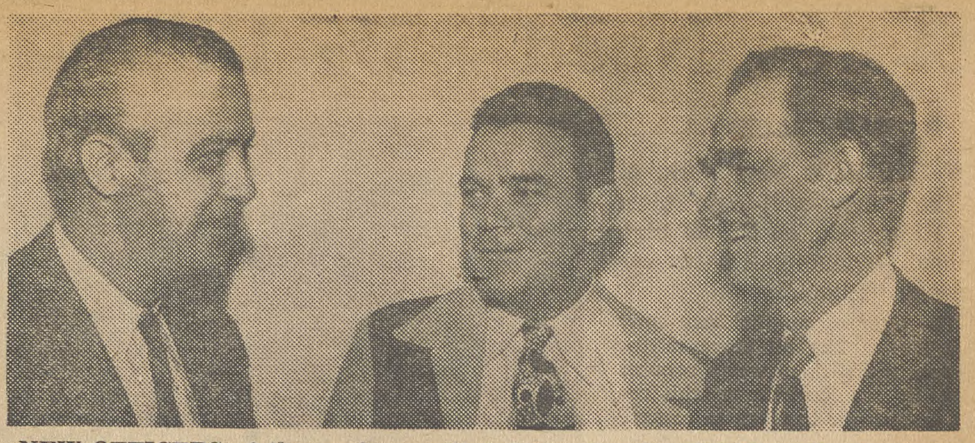
The presentation was made by Paul A. Strachan, president of the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped, in the presence of some of the men and women Kelley has helped. Kelley, chairman of the House Labor subcommittee which reported out the Thomas-Lesinski Bill, is also on a subcommittee working for better jobs and prosthetics for the handicapped.

Atomic Energy Body Upheld in UE Dispute

A federal district court in Washington, D. C., has declared that the Atomic Energy Commission was within its legal powers in ordering General Electric Co. not to recognize the CIO Electrical Workers in plants working on atomic contracts.

AEC said that its contractors should not deal with unions whose officers have not filed non-Communist oaths. UE had brought suit against the AEC and GE for $1,000,000. Judge F. Dickinson Letts dismissed the suit.

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD, CIO vice president and director of organization, swears in the new officers of the reorganized New York City CIO Council. L. to r.: Haywood; Council Pres. Mike Quill; Secy.-Treas., Moe Iushewitz; Vice Presidents Patrick McGrath and Murray Weinstein. Joseph Curran also was elected a vice president, but he was en route to Europe.



NEW OFFICERS of the newly constituted Los Angeles CIO Council. L. to r.: Secy.-Treas., Albert Lunceford; Pres., Clarence Stinson, and Vice. Pres., Robert Clark. Lunceford was leader of group that walked out of the old council several months ago because it failed to follow CIO policy. The pro-CIO group won all offices, and pushed through 40 constitutional changes.

CIO Backers Win in N. Y. City, L. A.

TWO CIO councils—the last of the Natl. CIO's "trouble spots' among its city-wide units — underwent a face-lifting last week and came up with features markedly resembling the parent organization.

Rejuvenation of the Los Angeles, Calif., CIO Council at a two-day convention the weekend of April 23-24 was followed the next day by similar action in New York City. Failure of both councils to follow Natl. CIO policy had aroused bitter controversies within each and finally resulted in the intervention of the National CIO.

ADMINISTRATOR

Pres. Louis Hollander of the New York State CIO Council was in charge of the affairs of the New York City CIO during its transition period.

In Los Angeles, the action constituted a reorganization of the old council by the CIO locals themselves, following an agreement between both factions worked out in March by CIO Vice-President Allan S. Haywood.

In New York, the convention created a brand new council, replacing the one which became defunct when the CIO Executive Board revoked its charter last November. The Board charged the unit had "slavishly followed the Communist Party line, and had interfered with internal affairs of local unions.

AT EACH convention candidates committed to support of Natl. CIO policy won comfortable majorities in the election of officers.

Now heading the New York group is Michael J. Quill, president of the CIO Transport Workers. Quill, who resigned as president of the old council and led his union out of it, defeated Leon Straus, Fur & Leather Workers, 234 to 114.

Morris Iushewitz, Newspaper Guild, was unopposed for the office of secretary-treasurer.

Three vice presidents were named: Joseph Curran, Natl. Maritime Union president, who, like Quill, had one time served as council president and later led his union out; Patrick J. McGrath, Utility Workers regional director, and Murray Weinstein, Clothing Workers vice president.

Losing candidates for the vice presidencies were Ewert Guinier, Public Workers secretary-treasurer, and Al Stern, Electric Workers.

IN LOS ANGELES strong anti-Communists won a clean sweep in the elections. The presidency went to Clarence H. Stinson, Auto Workers, who defeated Al Caplan, Longshoremen & Warehousemen, by a per capita vote of 64,429 to 24,927.

Robert Clark, Steelworkers, defeated Lawrence Turner, Furniture Workers, for the vice presidency, 62,095 to 27,545.

Albert T. Lunceford, Rubber Workers, was elected secretary-treasurer over Carl Brant, Electrical Workers, by a vote of 65,051 to 24,824.

Here is the story on the reorganization of each council:

LOS ANGELES: Conflict within the L. A. Council began about a year ago, when the group voted to sidestep CIO policy by remaining "neutral" on the Marshall Plan and the Wallace third party.

A group within the council argued heatedly that the council as an instrument of the parent body, was bound by the CIO constitution to follow the policy of Natl. CIO. When these attempts to line up the council behind the Natl. CIO failed, Albert Lunceford, new secretary-treasurer, and his supporters walked out of the meeting. With the national election approaching, the Lunceford faction proceeded to form the L. A. Committee for CIO policy.

The Committee's first objective was to establish an effective political action instrument in support of liberal candidates. Substantial Wallace support within the Council, meanwhile, had prevented the Council from forming a CIO-PAC organization.

The Committee continued to gain strength, until, by the beginning of this year, it claimed 80% of the CIO membership in the L. A. area.

Several months ago the CIO Policy group petitioned CIO Pres. Philip Murray to revoke the Council's charter. The signers listed 12 charges against the Council, including defiance of CIO policy and its constitution and interference in the affairs of locals in the area.

Following receipt of the charges, Murray sent CIO Vice-Pres. Haywood out to investigate the situation. There followed nine days of conferences with each faction separately and then with both simultaneously. A formula for settling the dispute amicably was drawn up by Haywood and signed by both groups.

COUNCIL OFFICER

Onetime president of the old New York City CIO Council, NMU Pres. Joseph Curran was elected vice president of the new council. Curran pulled out of the council in disgust over its failure to follow CIO policy.

THE AGREEMENT provided that officers of the two groups would resign on March 12. Simultaneously an administrative committee composed of Natl. CIO Rep. Richard Leonard and two assistants — Lunceford and William L. Lawrence, Council head—would take charge of both organizations.

Any officer, the agreement stated, who "failed to carry out Natl. CIO policy and who makes public utterance against CIO policy shall resign. Failing to resign, he shall be removed as per the Natl. CIO Constitution and Rules Governing Industrial Union Council."

This was the first time a so-called left wing group had openly acknowledged the constitutional role of councils as Natl. CIO instruments, rather than autonomous bodies.

When the two-day convention was over, the pro-CIO group had placed 25 candidates in office, completely ousting the former Council leadership, and had adopted 40 amendments to the constitution.

One sidelight was the absence of the council's paid secretary-treasurer, Philip "Slim" Connelly, among the 760 delegates. Connelly's Newspaper Guild local had not named him a delegate.

Among the 40 constitutional changes adopted was one barring the Council from affiliating with or supporting organizations, newspapers or political candidates "who are consistent supporters or who actively participate in the activities of the Communist Party or any fascist, totalitarian or other subversive organization..."

Commenting on the formula used in the L. A. situation, Haywood said the convention vote "demonstrated that when workers know the facts, they can be relied on to support Natl. CIO policy."

He said CIO had simply provided the mechanism for the workers to get together and that both sides had recognized that the duty of CIO councils is to implement CIO policy, while the autonomous right of local unions to follow whatever policy they wish is protected.

NEW YORK: Reorganization of the New York Council occurred after its charter was revoked by the CIO board, acting upon recommendation of a trial committee.

Charges against the Council had been filed with Murray by officers of the Retail, Wholesale union, the Utility Workers and the Transport Workers. Acting upon the complaint, Murray appointed a trial committee consisting of Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, of the Rubber Workers; Pres. Martin Wagner, Chemical Workers, and Pres. Joseph Froesch, president, Glass Workers.

Following a two-day hearing, the committee found the Council guilty of interference in the affairs of the Retail union, the Transport Workers and the Utility Workers. In these situations, the committee reported, "the Greater New York CIO Council was closely following the line of the Communist Party."

The officials of the Council, said the report, 'were unable at the hearing to refer to a single instance where the City CIO policy has recently differed from that of the Communist party.'

Dissatisfaction with the Council's policies, the report stated, had caused a long succession of local unions to withdraw from it. The committee estimated its membership in October to have been 125,000, although the Council continued to publicly claim 600,000.

The three-man committee also found the Council guilty of having "wilfully and flagrantly disregarded and acted contrary to Natl. CIO policy." It noted that, unlike a local or international union, "a council is the creature of the Natl. CIO and under the CIO Constitution and Rules is authorized to continue to function only so long as it functions . . . in the interest of Natl. CIO."

LAST NOVEMBER the CIO executive board revoked the council's charter. The task of winding up the affairs of the defunct council was given to Louis Hollander, State CIO head.

HELPED CHANGE

Richard Leonard was head of the committee chosen to administer the Los Angeles CIO Council during its period of reorganization.

Opening the reorganization meeting, Hollander characterized the old council as "a little cominform in New York City." There is no room, he said, for both the CIO and the Communist Party under one roof.

About 175 local unions and 12 joint boards, representing both factions, participated in the reorganization session.

Unlike the L. A. meeting, this conference was characterized by the continued insistence on the part of supporters of the old council that CIO councils must be "autonomous."

This view was disputed by Haywood, who emphasized that state and city central bodies were chartered by CIO for the purpose of "implementing CIO policy, not violating it."

By the time the votes were all counted, those who were suffering from what Hollander called "autonomitis" had taken a severe defeat. The pro-CIO candidates were all swept into office by better than 2-to-1 margins.

States Need $5½ Billion To End 'Slum' Schools

By GLORIA CAPLAN

IN UPSTATE New York, in the fairly well-to-do town of Rhinebeck, N. Y., 60 high school students call a two-car garage "school."

The children on the front rows are lucky. The oil stove in the corner keeps them warm enough. But in the back rows children sit and shiver and try to concentrate on English literature or history. The question of what would happen if the oil stove blew up hasn't been answered.

When New York Times reporter Benjamin Fine visited the town, a junior high school teacher, whose classes are held in a church chapel, said, "I call my room Broadway."

It was easy to see why. Students in one class had to pass through another class in order to reach their room. "A hundred yelling kids go through my room each day while I'm trying to teach."

No Isolated Case

What Benjamin Fine had found in Rhinebeck could be applied with slight variations to hundreds of rural communities throughout the country. He had made a survey of the school building needs in 48 states. The states had reported a minimum need of $5½ billion to wipe out the school "slums" and to accommodate a rapidly growing school population.

But the national problem of providing every American child with a decent education only begins with the vast need for new buildings.

The Senate Banking & Currency Committee recently reported that at least two million children are "suffering a major impairment in their schooling because of poorly prepared teachers and because of a widespread shortage of teachers and school facilities.

One out of every nine teachers in public schools is teaching with an emergency or substandard certificate, the committee reported.

In 1947, four million school-age children attended no school at all, many because no teachers could be found.

With the increasing birthrate the problem of finding teachers and buildings for the growing school population has reached alarming proportions.

It's just a problem for the states, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and other die-hard conservatives insist. But the free movement of population from state to state makes it a national problem, as does the economic dependence of one section of the country upon the other sections.

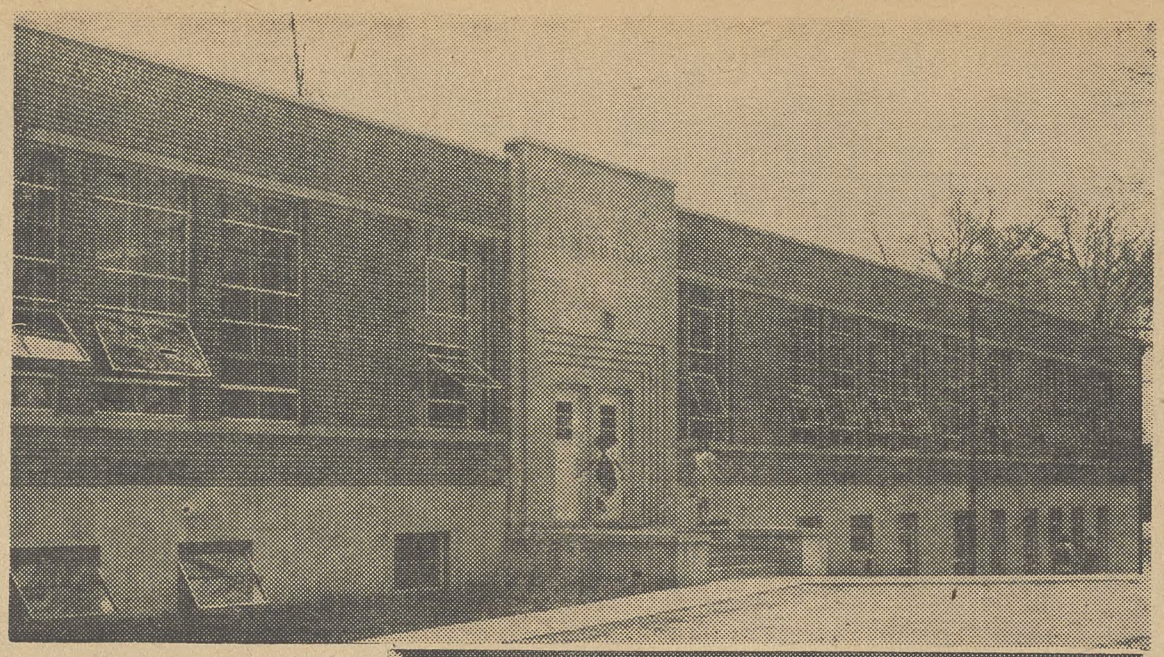
It's not that the states now supplying an inferior education haven't made an effort to raise standards. In fact, many of the states which spend the least number of dollars on education are devoting a greater portion of their revenue to these expenditures than the wealthier states.

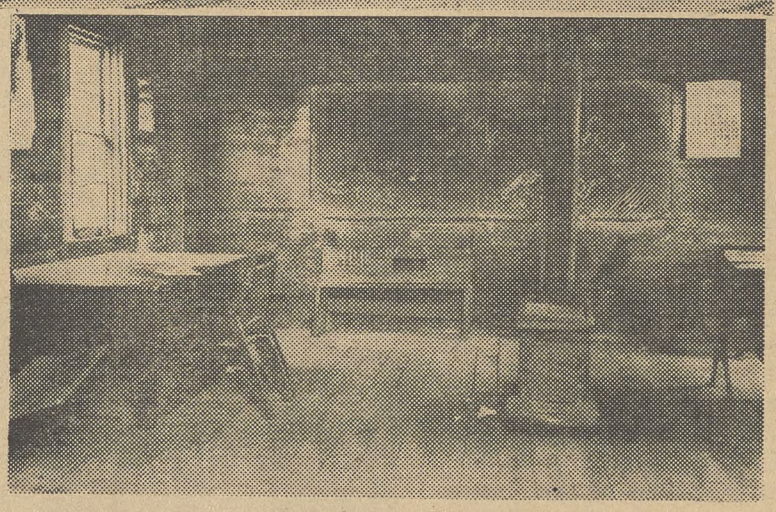
Case In South

Consider the case of North Carolina.

In 1945-46, North Carolina was seventh from the bottom in the amount it spent per pupil for education. It spent $76 a pupil, compared with Montana's $214 or the national average of $134.

Well, how hard had North Carolina actually tried to give its children a top-notch education? Its educational expenditures constituted 2.23% of its total revenue.





THE STRIKING CONTRAST between the handsome, new elementary school above and the depressing one-room rural school at right illustrates one of our biggest educational needs—money for adequate school buildings. A bill which would enable the federal government to lend money to the states for this purpose has been proposed.

That was a considerably bigger hunk than the national average of 1.82%.

North Carolina had tried harder than many of its sister states which afforded better education for their children. But North Carolina's population was poorer and its revenue, therefore, lower.

What was true of North Carolina was likewise true of many of the other southern states. Down at the bottom of the list for educational expenditures per school child was Mississippi. Its revenue per child was likewise the lowest.

What it all adds up to is that you can't squeeze blood out of a turnip. Because of poor populations and limited taxing powers, many states simply can't afford better education.

As a result, teachers have been leaving the profession in droves, and the number of college students planning to go into the profession is steadily dropping. Teachers' salaries aren't attractive enough to tempt most college graduates. Only three states have a $2400 minimum salary for teachers. That's $50 a week, less than the average wage in manufacturing.

In 1947-48, 43% of the public school teachers were to be paid less than $50 a week. About 12% were to receive less than $1600 a year—about $35 a week.

That's why the school systems have been forced to hire teachers without the necessary qualifications.

Two Bills Pending

To meet these two big problems in education—the critical need for buildings and money for operating expenses—two bills are now pending in Congress.

One, like the housing bill, has been around so long it has practically grown a beard—the federal aid to education bill.

The other, introduced by Senators Neeley (D., W. Va.), Pepper (D., Fla.) and Humphrey (D., Minn.), would permit the federal government to lend money to states at low interest rates and long-term payment for the construction of new school buildings.

The federal aid to education bill has an impressive list of 15 bi-partisan sponsors in the Senate. The same measure was passed by the Upper Chamber during the previous Congress, but was permitted to suffocate in the House.

This year it is again making its way through the Senate and is given a better chance for survival in the new Lower House. The Senate Banking Committee has approved it, and the Senate is expected to do likewise once it hits the floor.

The bill's purpose is to make a reality the American principle of "equal opportunity" for every child. Under its provisions, every child between 5 and 17 in the country would be guaranteed an expenditure of at least $55 a year on its education. Each state, regardless of its educational expenditures, would receive at least $5 per child for education. About 30 states would receive this amount. The poorer states would receive more, Mississippi receiving the top amount of $29.18 per child.

Much of the controversy which has stalled the bill's passage to date has centered around the question of whether non-public schools should be eligible to receive federal funds or not. A compromise section in S. 246 provides that these funds may be given non-public schools in states which do not bar the payment of public funds to private schools.

Most of the early uproar against federal aid, now considerably lessened, centered around the fear that the move would provide an opening wedge for government interference and dictation in the public school systems.

S. 246 specifically forbids any federal agency or officer from exercising any direction, supervision or control over any institution or educational agency.

Still another difficult hurdle in the fight for federal aid to education has been the question of segregated schools. While groups on one side have insisted that no federal funds be given states which have segregated school systems, others have insisted that such a provision would kill the entire bill.

Compromise Measure

The compromise worked out in S. 246 provides that in states which have segregated schools, the funds for education must be distributed so that the minority groups receive not less than a portion equal to their percentage of the population.

Another objection to the principle of federal assistance has been the fear that states would be encouraged to reduce their efforts and to "let Uncle Sam do it."

As now drawn up, the bill would prevent that.

Under its terms, only states which, in combination with the cities, are spending 2¼% of their income on education can obtain the full amount of federal aid to which they would otherwise be entitled. States spending less than that would receive proportionately less from the federal government. After the fourth year the bill has been in effect, states which spend less than 2% of their annual income payments on education would not be eligible to receive any federal funds at all.

Although the CIO has not endorsed any education bill specifically, S. 246 meets substantially the objectives listed in the resolution adopted at the Portland convention last year.

The resolution deplored the fact that rural children receive on the average half the expenditure per child that city children get. It called such inequities as the difference in education between Southern states and the wealthier industrial states or the differential between expenditures on Negro schools and white schools "a tragic injustice."

It urged federal aid to education to insure improved facilities.

Aid Advocates

Such federal assistance has been advocated by the nation's top educators, by teachers' unions, by the Natl. Eucation Association and by labor. Even conservative Sen. Robert A. Taft (R. O.) altered his position from staunch opposition to the principle to participation as a sponsor of the bill today.

Proponents of the bill have been particularly amazed by the inconsistency in the position of some die-hard opponents. While talking loud and long about the need for democracy, opponents of the bill have ignored the foundation of a democracy: the need for intelligent voters and responsible citizens.

The bi-partisan bill won't convert a sad situation into a model one overnight—but it will help.

Billion School Lunches To Be Served

A billion school lunches will be served during the current school year to a fourth of the children in the nation's grammar and high schools under the National School-Lunch Program, states the Federal Security Agency's Children's Bureau.

At least two-thirds of the lunches will be complete, and supply a third of the child's daily nutritive requirements. These school lunches are made possible through a $75 million grant-in-aid program passed by Congress.

(If the schools in your community do not provide good lunches for children, why not look into the National School-Lunch Program. You may get information from your State Dept. of Education, or from the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.)

New Pamphlet Is Issued On Credit Unions

It's not true that "the day of the loan shark and the high-rate money lender is passed," says a pamphlet on Credit Unions written by Exec. Secy. Jerry Voorhis of the Cooperative League of the USA.

"To the contrary, it can be shown that a well-managed credit union could contribute much to the welfare of almost any group in this whole continent."

Credit unions, he says, "are the most effective way by which individuals can democratically pool and control their financial resources.

UE and TWU's Biggest Local Announce Contract Proposals

CONTRACT proposals of the CIO Electrical Workers and of the CIO Transport Workers were announced last week.

UE's general executive board reported its local unions will "work out their demands for coming negotiations within the framework of $500 per year per employe."

TWU Local 100 will ask a 21c an hour increase for employes of the New York's publicly owned transit line and privately owned bus lines.

TWU also will seek a reduction in the work week from the present six-day, 48-hour stretch to one of five days and forty hours without any reduction in pay. In addition the union is seeking a number of other benefits. A mass meeting approved the demands, drawn up by the executive board.

Current aveage wage of the transit workers in $1.44 an hour. The minumum is $1.19.

TWU wage demands amount to over $435 per employe.

"Our people need an immediate increase in their purchasing power," the UE board declared, "an improved standard of living and a reduction of the hours of work in order to halt the present trend of mounting layoffs, part-time employment and falling weekly earnings."

James J. Matles, UE director of organization, was quoted in press dispatches as saying 90,000 of the union's members were not working full time as of March 1.

Employment is holding steady, Matles said, in the manufacture of heavy equipment but a downward trend has been shown in factories producing household appliances and other consumer goods.

The $500 yearly increase, according to UE Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald, includes "wages and salaries, pension improvements and health programs and other economic benefits."

Fitzgerald also announced that conferences of representatives of local unions, representing workers in General Electric, Westinghouse, RCA and Sylvania and other locals will take place within the next two weeks to work out contract demands prior to the opening of negotiations.

The UE contract with the electrical division of general motors does not expire until April 1, 1950, and has no provision for reopening wage discussions.

REASON FOR SMILES: These four members of the editorial department of the Toronto Star are happy over the new CIO Newspaper Guild contract which gives them not only pay increases but better hours and working conditions. Ia. House Fails To Aid Labor

In Iowa, the chairman of the State Republican Committee, the GOP legislative floor leader and the Cowles newspaper chain have called for revision of the state's anti-labor laws to allow the closed shop.

The chairman is Whitney Gilliland. The floor leader, who introduced the bill, is Rep. Harry Weichman. The Cowles papers said editorially; "Laws which attempt to stop the basic need of union organization go far beyond regulation in the public interest. "They would, if successful, virtually destroy many unions which are vital to the operation of our modern, large-scale industries."

Despite the pleas of theirs leaders, the majority of House Republicans voted against the bill and it lost, 56 to 51. A fourth of the GOP members and all the Democrats voted for the bill.

Packing Union Indorses Brannan Farm Program

Pres. Ralph Helstein of the CIO Packinghouse Workers has announced "wholehearted endorsement" by the union of the farm program advanced by Agriculture Secy. Charles Brannan.

Brannan's program provides that the consumer shall pay the market price, but that the farmer shall receive the parity price.

Pointing out that the Brannan program "will attain a high level of livestock output," Helstein noted that it will be "an important way to provide steady employment for workers in the packinghouses."

The UPWA represents some 200,000 workers in the meat packing, by-products and allied industries.

CITY RESIDENTS also will benefit by this program, the union leader asserted, since "it will result in lower food costs in the city."

"Unless the present rapid drift toward depressed farm prices is quickly halted," Helstein said, "the resulting blow to farm families' living standards will damage the economy of the rest of the nation.

"Secretary Brannan's program contains features which offer real inducements to the nation's feed grain and livestock producers to expand production.

"This program contains a broad and comprehensive plan on behalf of the family-type farm, with practical and workable provisions which seek to establish income parity with the rest of the population," he added.

Helstein urged the 350 local unions affiliated with the UPWA to "actively exert themselves toward inducing members of Congress to enact such legislation as may be necessary in order that Secretary Brannan's program may be put into operation without delay."

Rival Unions To Forego Raids

Pledges of mutual aid in organizing and in securing improved contracts in the machine cigar industry were made last week at the joint meeting in Philadelphia of the AFL Cigarmakers International Union and the CIO Food and Tobacco Workers.

The meeting and the pledges made are an example of united action between two international unions in the same industry, one part of the AFL and the other CIO. The meeting was called on the initiative of FTA.

Policies adopted by the conference included:

A pledge that neither union will raid the other; a pledge that "at any time FTA or Cmiu (Cigarmakers) begin organization at any plant each should notify the other that neither will go into the plant except to give assistance in organization; exchange of contracts and other information between the two unions; conferences between locals of the two unions that are organized in different plants of the same employer.

NLRB Finds Univis Unfair

The methods used by the Univis Lens Co. at its Dayton, O. plant to try to drive out the CIO Electrical Workers were not fair under T-H the NLRB said Apr. 22. But it said the company will be given another chance to decertify the union.

The company used the Taft-Hartley device of a decertification vote, staged by the NLRB, to try to rid itself of the obligation of dealing with UE Local 768. The election followed a bitter strike.

Among the tactics used by the company the NLRB listed: sending foremen to visit workers at home to campaign against the union; offering loans to the employes through a bank of which the Univis owner was a director; and using the plant superintendent and other supervisors to bring out the vote. The company gets a new election when the NLRB regional office thinks "circumstances permit a free choice."

Court Hears Packard Case

The jurisdiction of the same Detroit court which has sentenced hundreds of workers for making false statements under the Michigan Unemployment Compensation Commission Act was challenged by an employer representative accused of committing the same offense.

The challenge was hurled at Recorder's Court Judge Paul W. Krause by defense attorney Thomas F. Chawke in the case of Walter Upthegrove, Packard Motor Car Co. unemployment compensation director, charged with fraud under the MUCC act.

Upthegrove was found by MUCC referee Charles Rubinoff to have made false statements and misrepresentations in order to deny benefits to a former employee of the Packard Motor Car Co.

Proposals Sent N. J. Parties

THE NEW JERSEY State CIO has sent an eight-point program to the Democratic and Republican parties for inclusion in their platforms, slated to be written at party conventions this week.

In identical letters to Lloyd B. Marsh, GOP state chairman, and Rep. Edward J. Hart, Democratic chairman, Pres. Carl Holderman, of the State CIO, said:

The non-partisan labor organization, "concerned with the welfare of all the people of the state, including the more than 250,000 CIO members in New Jersey," will withhold endorsement of candidates for state office "pending clarification of the two major party platforms and the stands of the major candidates on issues of vital concern to the people."

CIO-suggested platform planks covered:

Abandonment of the State Senate caucus rule, opposition to retail minimum price fixing, new taxation to be imposed on the principle of ability to pay, defeat of the gross-receipts-financed veterans bonus referendum, increased state social security benefits.

Also a five-point labor relations legislative program, expansion of the Public Utility Commission to include consumer and labor representatives; and a $100,000,000 state public housing bond issue.

CIO Gives $1,000 For Tornado

The Natl. CIO has made a contribution of $1000 to be used for relief work in Warren, Ark., which was struck by a tornado last January.

Scores of CIO Woodworkers were killed or injured and the Warren area was badly damaged by the storm.

Arkansas CIO Dir. Lee Tucker said at the time that a major portion of those killed or injured were CIO members and that "the storm destroyed the homes and furnishings of about 300 IWA people."

No Pay For Leaders Of Local On Strike

Murray Local 2, CIO Auto Workers, has found the clause in its by-laws forbidding pay to union officers while the members are on strike so satisfactory that its example is being studied by other unions in Detroit.

Student Loyalty Oath

The lower house of the Texas Legislature has passed a bill requiring students of all state colleges to sign a loyalty oath. The American Civil Liberties Union protested last month to Governor Jester against a similar bill requiring a loyalty oath from teachers as well as students.

The Los Angeles Industrial Union Council, which has been operating under CIO administration in recent weeks, met for two days Saturday and Sunday, April 23 and 24, to reinstitute its autonomy. The CIO Provisional Administrative Committee consisted of Richard Leonard, Chairman and Albert T. Lunceford of the Rubber Workers and William Lawrence of the Longshoremen.

All previous officers of the Council had resigned under a voluntary agreement reached with CIO at conferences conducted by the writer. On Sunday the meeting elected the Council's new officers. They are: Clarence H. Stinson, UAW, President, Robert R. Clark, Steel, Vice-President, Albert T. Lunceford, Rubber, Secretary-Treasurer and 15 Board Members, 3 Trustees and 4 Sergeants-at-Arms.

In New York City on the following day, the greater New York Industrial Union Council met under the leadership of Louis Hollander, President of the State Industrial Union Council and elected Michael Quill, Transport Workers, as its President, Morris Iushewitz, Newspaper Guild, Secretary-Treasurer and 3 Vice-Presidents: Murray Weinstein, Amalgamated Clothing Workers, Patrick McGrath, Utility Workers and Joseph Curran, NMU. The Council was officially set up at this meeting and the writer installed the newly elected officers.

The CIO Telephone Workers achieved another great victory when New York Accounting employees of the telephone company, under the leadership of Margaret Kennedy, voted by a decisive majority to affiliate with the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee. This is the first of the New York City telephone groups to take such action. Approximately 5500 employees are involved.

The nation-wide vote of the Communications Workers of America for affiliation with CIO is nearing completion. It is impossible to report officially on the results as yet but indications are good.

Another independent telephone group has begun voting on affiliation with CIO, as ballots went into the mail last week from the Maryland Federation of Telephone Workers (plant employees) to its 2200 members. The union's executive board has unanimously recommended a vote for affiliation.

The fight in Washington for favorable labor legislation is going on and has reached its hottest stage. Many representatives of CIO unions as well as a number of CIO Regional Directors are in town to visit again the Congressmen from their respective states. The Congressmen are being urged to fulfill their campaign promises. The visits are having an effect and labor's forces are lining up.

George Brown, Director of Organization, Woodworkers of America, reports an election victory in Reed City, Mich. at the Robbins Flooring Mill. The IWA in this election defeated the AFL.

E. D. Hodson, CIO Regional Director for Delaware, reports that the United Brewery Workers has won an election over the AFL's Operating Engineers at the Diamond State Brewery.

Henry G. Schlenger, Executive Secretary of the Book and Magazine Guild, UOPWA-CIO, reports that the employes of Interscience Publishers, Inc., New York City and Interscience and Encyclopedia, Inc., Brooklyn, voted 2 to 1 to be represented by the Book and Magazine Guild. The election was conducted by the State Labor Relations Board and covered all professional, clerical and shipping employees of the two firms.

Home Aid For Middle ClassUrged

A COMPROMISE approach to the touchy question of segregation and discrimination in public housing developments has been proposed by the CIO.

The suggestion was offered last week by CIO Housing Committee Director Leo Goodman in testimony before the House Banking & Currency committee, now holding hearings on a housing bill.

From many sources has come the fear that the new federally-subsidized houses, which would be provided by the pending bill, would benefit mainly white tenants, while Negroes would be barred. Such a situation occurred in Chicago, where a redevelopment program displaced a Negro slum section, but the new housing was limited only to whites.

The CIO-proposed amendment, which won enthusiastic support from both northern liberals and southern conservatives on the committee, would require that families displaced by a slum clearance operation be given priority in the new dwellings, provided they can afford to pay the rent charged for comparable units in the same project.

In addition, the CIO suggested that a section be included in the bill which would bar local housing authorities or subsequent purchasers from "inserting any provisions unenforceable in law."

This is intended to bar restrictive covenants, which have been declared unenforceable by the Supreme Court.

The purpose of the proposed amendment would be to avoid a floor fight similar to one which occurred in the Senate. In the Upper House Sen. John Bricker (R. O.), strong opponent of public housing, attempted to kill the measure by offering a non-segregation amendment. If passed, this would have alienated southern support for the bill, and would probably have meant its loss.

Presenting the CIO testimony jointly with Goodman, John Edelman, CIO Textile Workers legislative representative, urged the committee to include in its bill provisions for housing aids to the lower middle income families.

These, Edelman said, would include most union workers, who earn too little to buy homes under present conditions, but who earn too much to qualify for housing in the proposed public housing units.

By direct loans to such families at low interest rates, the government could enable them to build their own homes, the CIO spokesmen said. They estimated that 70% of the American people fall in this category.

Layoffs Announced

Westinghouse and General Electric—the two major producers of electrical products—both announced layoffs as a result of what they called declining consumer demand.

Westinghouse said it had laid off 2559 since the beginning of 1949. General Electric's Erie, Pa., plant officials announced they would "furlough" 1200 workers by the end of April. A layoff of over 600 workers from the Philco Corp.'s Philadelphia refrigerator plant was described by a company spokesman as "an adjustment."

Vol. XII WASHINGTON, D. C., MAY 9, 1949 82 No. 18

THE VOICE WITH THE SMILE IS CIO: Members of the independent Communication Workers of America have voted in a membership referendum for affiliation with CIO, increasing CIO's coverage in telephone by over 200,000 workers. CWA will be granted a CIO charter, and it is planned to merge the newest affiliate and Telephone Workers Organizing Committee. (P. 2).

Over 200,000 Added To Coverage

CWA Votes Overwhelmingly For CIO

By GLORIA CAPLAN

WHAT was just a dream in the minds of some telephone workers two years ago is now blossoming into reality—one big telephone union within the CIO.

The largest single organized group of telephone workers—the Communications Workers of America—last week voted to cast off its traditional independent garb and come into the CIO.

CWA's Beirne

The overwhelming vote climaxed at least three years of deliberations by the group as to whether it should affiliate with one of the two big segments of organized labor.

Last February the CWA executive board, after numerous conferences with both CIO and AFL officials, recommended the move into CIO. Balloting in the membership referendum began March 7, ending May 5.

The vote, announced by CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne, was 71,312 for CIO, 34,419 for continued independence.

Other top officers, besides Beirne, include Secy.-Treas. Carlton W. Werkau and Vice Pres. John L. Crull.

Affiliation of CWA, which will be formalized by the issuance of a separate charter very shortly, will bring into CIO over 200,000 telephone workers. Already in CIO are 80,000 Bell System employes, now in the Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, which was set up two years ago.

The charter to be issued CWA will grant it jurisdiction over those employes for which it now has contracts. Thus, pending a CWA-TWOC merger, which is expected to take place next month, the CIO will have two unions operating in the telephone field.

DETAILS for accomplishing the merger will be worked out by a joint CWA-TWOC committee on amalgamation. Last step in the process will take place in Chicago the middle of June.

Both CWA and TWOC will hold separate conventions in the Windy City, the middle of June. By the end of the week, the two unions will join together in one big convention, marking the birth of CIO's newest union.

CWA's Werkau

It will begin life as a husky baby, encompassing close to half the nation's 750,000 telephone employes from the start. The example of CWA is expected to encourage numerous other non-affiliated telephone unions to follow suit.

Formation of the union is expected to have an impact particularly on the organization of white collar workers. CIO Vice Pres. and Organizational Director Allan S. Haywood pointed this out, explaining "our telephone workers are mostly white collar workers. Their friends are primarily other white collar workers. As CIO members they can be a powerful source of contact and inspiration to unorganized white collar workers everywhere."

BEHIND the story of the CWA vote to affiliate lies a long, sometimes sad history of the telephone unions in the country and of the many attempts to unite them.

The Bell Telephone System itself is a complicated structure. The unions which grew up within its confines followed the same crazy-quilt pattern.

Most of the 100-odd telephone unions were the outgrowth of the old company-formed Employe Representation Plans, designed to prevent the workers' left hand from knowing what the right hand was doing.

When the Wagner Act outlawed company unions, the company stepped out in many instances, but the workers retained the skeleton structure. Thus, in the industry today there are "traffic" unions (covering operators), "accounting" unions, "plant" unions, statewide unions, citywide unions, regional unions, building-wide unions, etc.

SOME HAVE a militant history, others more patient; all realized the need for a strong, unified organization to cope with the world's largest corporation, the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. But the crux of the issue was—should the unity take place within the confines of the 'phone unions' traditional independence; or should the unions join the mainstream of the American labor movement?

The Natl. Federation of Telephone Unions was an effort to unify the network of unions, and retain independence at the same time. In 1947 a seven-weeks telephone strike made the inadequacy of this setup apparent.

CWA's Crull

The NFTW was a loose combination of 51 unions. At the time the NFTW decided to strike, telephone workers were economically worse off than they had been eight years earlier, in 1939. While wages in CIO's industrial unions had moved to the top in the national picture, telephone pay was heading downward in comparison with other industries.

Most of the workers on the telephone picket lines in 1947 were young women undergoing their first strike experience. They stuck it out seven weeks, then returned with a somewhat larger pay check. The telephone giant had emerged scarcely moved and completely unscathed.

In another attempt to unify telephone unions, but to retain independence, the NFTW had adopted a new constitution and changed its name to CWA. Pressure for affiliation, meanwhile, was mounting within the organization.

Immediately after the strike, a number of telephone union leaders approached CIO on the subject of establishing a CIO union of telephone employes. TWOC was formed in April, 1947, as a result of their pleas.

Allan Haywood headed the group as Chairman. Having assisted the phone workers many times previously, this was not the first time he had given them his help.

FIRST TO JOIN CIO was the national long-lines union, the American Union of Telephone Workers, with 20,000 members. Next came the American Communications Equipment Workers, a nation-wide union of about 23,000 maintenance and installation employes.

One of the NFTW (CWA) leaders who resigned to work for affiliation to CIO was Ruth Weincek, the research director. She had been a member of the NFTW Fact-Finding Committee on Affiliation, which in 1946 had recommended CIO affiliation.

Explaining her resignation to her fellow workers, Miss Wiencek wrote that she was "weary of independence.

The fact-finding committee, of which Miss Wiencek was a part, had been impressed by the CIO's offer of an autonomous national union within the CIO, by the organizational, financial and advisory assistance that the CIO offered, and by the strength to be derived from the backing of 6 million CIO members. Also, through its representative on the CIO executive board, the union would have equal part with other CIO unions in shaping policy.

The potential power such a union, under the CIO banner, held, was fully realized and feared by A. T. & T. One instance occurred during the 1947 strike.

The Southern Bell Telephone Co. had submitted its "final offer": $4 million to be distributed among the white employes, nothing for the Negroes.

Henry Mayer, general counsel for many of the 'phone unions, and the other union negotiators adjourned the session. He then announced to the press that the Southern union was planning to disband and poll its members on affiliation with CIO.

Southern Bell's "final offer" immediately shot up to $10 million for all employes.

Commented Mayer: "If a vengeful, vindictive employer like Southern Bell could have been scared into increasing its 'final' offer of $4 million by the mere threat of CIO affiliation, then CIO affiliation must be a good thing."

Last week, two years after Mayer made that statement, telephone workers agreed—and in a loud chorus.

MEMBERS OF THE first executive board of the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee are shown here. They are, l. to r., top row, Ernest Weaver, vice chairman; Ted F. Silvey, former secretary-treasurer, now with ECA; Richard W. Long, present secretary-treasurer; seated, Norma Naughton; Allan S. Haywood, chairman and CIO vice president; Margaret Weiss, and John J. Moran, vice chairman. Members since elected to the board are James Massey and Marie A. DeMartini. TWOC will soon merge with the CWA.

THIS SCENE was reenacted in thousands of towns throughout the U. S. as members of the Communication Workers of America voted CIO affiliation.

'Only Beginning,' Says Haywood

Welcoming the Communication Workers of America vote to enter CIO, Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and chairman of the CIO Telephone Organizing Committe, said:

"Great as is this achievement of bringing over 300,000 telephone workers into CIO in just two years, I look upon it as the beginning of greater and greater successes, not as the end of a job. The additional gains into which the creation of this new national union for telephone workers can lead CIO will be found in three important fields—telephone itself, the political field and white collar organization.

"We have before us the task of aiding our newest affiliate in completing the organization of the nation's 750,000 telephone workers."

New Labor Bill Hearing To Be Held Soon

CONGRESS is having a right busy time these days.

Last week, the House, in a series of somersaults, finally recommitted the Wood Bill—which purports to be different from T-H, but isn't really—to the Labor Committee.

The Senate, after rebuffing attempts to water it down, passed an excellent aid to education bill by a lopsided vote of 58 to 15.

Thomas Harris, CIO associate general counsel, and John Edelmen, legislative representative for the CIO Textile Workers, testified in behalf of an anti-poll tax bill.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey appeared before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to pledge CIO's support of the Atlantic Pact.

More news of T-H and the roll calls on the Wood Bill and Recommittal Bill are on Pages 6 and 7.

Incidentally, the work of that committee is being seriously hampered by questioning of witnesses by volunter quizzers Sens. Donnell and Watkins. They are not members of the committee, but have exercised their prerogatives to sit in. Diplomatic observers term it sheer obstruction.

THE HOUSE action had the effect of ordering the Labor Committee to write a complete new labor law. It was obvious that many Representatives felt that labor needed a better break.

The legislative situation seems to stack up this way:

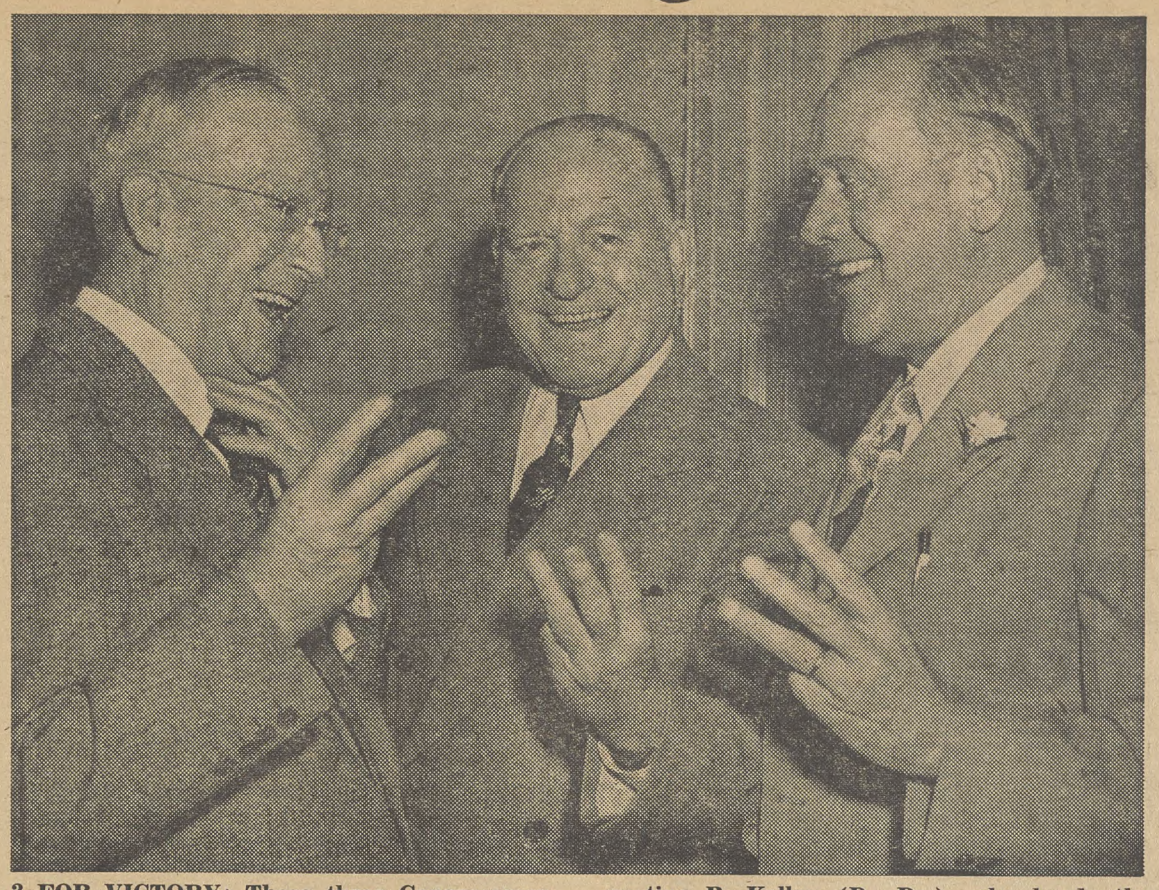
The House Labor Committee will open new hearings, perhaps this week, on a labor bill to replace T-H. Rep. Augustine B. Kelley (D., Pa.), will again head the 13-man sub-committee.

Rep. John Lesinski (D., Mich.) is chairman of the full committee.

The Senate will take up the Thomas-Lesinski Bill, which had been approved by the Senate Labor Committee, 8 to 5. Chairman Elbert Thomas (D., Utah) of that committee has expressed confidence that the Senate will approve his bill.

CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll pointed out that in the 212-209 vote by which the House recommitted the Wood Bill, only five of the 168 Representatives who won with PAC support reneged on their obligation to their constituents. Kroll pledged a vigorous PAC campaign in 1950.

Sen. Taft—Robert A., Republican of Ohio—was in there again, this time with a new labor bill. The bill, also sponsored by Sens. Donnell (R., Mo.) and Smith (R., N. J.), retains the basic spirit of T-H.



3 FOR VICTORY: These three Congressmen, all with three fingers raised, are happy just after the House voted to recommit the Wood Bill—by a margin of three votes. Left to right are: Rep. Richard J. Welch (R., Calif.), who made the motion to recommit; Rep. Augustine B. Kelley (D., Pa.), who heads the sub-committee committee which will hold hearings on the new labor bill, and Rep. John Lesinski (D., Mich.), chairman of the full House Labor Committee. Senate takes up labor legislation soon.

The Five

Here are the five representatives who accepted PAC support in the campaign and then voted for the Wood bill and against recommitting it:

DEMOCRATS

North Carolina: Rep. F. Ertel Carlyle, 7th District.

Kentucky: Noble J. Gregory, 1st District.

Louisiana: Edwin E. Willis, 3rd District.

REPUBLICANS

Illinois: Richard W. Hoffman, 10th District.

Michigan: Gerald R. Ford, Jr., 5th District.

Vanport Misery Goes On; Court Refuses Suits

VICTIMS of the flood that wiped out one of the largest wartime housing projects in the U. S. over a year ago are wondering if Vanport, Ore., was really in the U. S. after all.

The question arises from the fact that damage suits filed in a state circuit court against the Portland Housing Authority were thrown out of court on grounds that the authority is an "agency of the state and therefore cannot be sued."

The suits were thrown out although the U. S. Supreme Court and other appellate courts have ruled that housing authorities can sue and be sued. "This is Oregon," Ray G. Brown, attorney for nine plaintiffs, was told when he cited precedent. The authority is the target of the damage suits because it lulled Vanport residents into thinking there was no danger in a notice sent out minutes before rampaging river waters broke through a dam and inundated all 18,000 homes in the war-built town.

Brown has filed an amended complaint and at the same time taken his cases into federal court. He said the state court cases will be "allowed to pend" until a final determination can be obtained in federal court. About 400 damage suits based on property losses in the flood are in preparation here under the federal torte (personal claims) act. Expiration date on the filing of actions on such claim is May 30.

Ship Union Asks 35-Hour Week

CIO Shipbuilding Workers have announced their collective bargaining program.

Calling for wage boosts, a 35-hour workweek in place of the current 40-hour week without any pay cut, a health and welfare plan and other benefits, the program will be presented to shipyard owners at negotiations preceding formal contract reopening talks June 23.

Under the present contract, which expires June 23, 1950, the union is barred from striking except for "money issues." IUMSWA Pres. John Green made it clear that each of the demands is a "money issue" and that consequently the no-strike clause in the contract would not apply.

Swedes Hit Reds

Swedish Communists, never an important political force, have lost virtually all the positions they formerly held in the Swedish Trade Union Confederation.

Half TWUA Funds Go To Organizing

Almost half of the CIO Textile Workers' 1948 income was spent for organizing purposes, the union's financial statement released by Secy.-Treas. William Pollock revealed.

Total income was $5,668,591. TWUA spent $5,588,579 of which $2,730,105 was for direct organizational work and servicing of local unions and joint boards.

Pollock pointed out that most of the money was spent for organizational work so that the conditions of all workers may be improved.

Most of the union's assets are in U.S. War and Treasury Bonds. Besides its $205,800 per capita payment to the CIO, TWUA also contributed over $102,500 to the CIO's southern organizing drive.

Year-Long Dispute Of Fur Union Ended

After almost a year of strife, marked by court cases and arguments before an arbitrator, the New York Furriers Joint Council, CIO Fur & Leather Workers and the Associated Fur Manufacturers, Inc., have reached agreement on all issues.

Under the settlement both sides agreed to withdraw all suits, pending cases for arbitration and all claims arising out of disputes which have plagued the union since May 1948, following the end of a 5-week lockout and strike.

The union hailed the settlement as providing "an orderly and constructive procedure for the handling of wage problems which, if carried out in good faith by both sides, will contribute much to better labor relations."

All-request weekly concerts will be held in Union Square, sponsored jointly by the Musicians Union-AFL, and a department store, the Musicians Union has announced.

Denham Hit By NLRB Examiner

THE WAY the division of power between the NLRB and its own general counsel combines with the injunctive power under the Taft-Hartley law to crush labor has been brought out in an NLRB trial examiner's ruling.

The ruling, by A. Bruce Hunt, said that the injunction which stopped Local 218, AFL Natl. Farm Labor Union from picketing the DiGiorgio fruit ranch in California was improper because the Taft-Hartley act does not cover farm workers. The local went out on strike in October 1947, and was hit by a court injunction in July 1948 at the request of NLRB Gen. Counsel Robert N. Denham.

The ruling, however, leaves the issue still short of final settlement because the million-dollar DiGiorgio interests have the right, and the money, to appeal the ruling to the NLRB and then to the federal courts. But all sides agree that the union has no right to ask for a representation election or to file unfair labor practice charges against the company, because the labor law does not cover farm workers.

Denham's claim that the union, along with Local 87, Intl. Bro. of Teamsters (which represented DiGiorgio drivers) should be stopped from picketing was based on his belief that farm workers should have no "rights" under the law, but should be curbed by its restrictions. Said Hunt in his opinion:

"I find no indication that Congress intended to place unions of agricultural laborers in a special category of 'Now we see you; now we don't,' depending upon through which eye one were looking."

Hiring Halls Are Found Illegal Again Under T-H

The American Radio Assn. and the Natl. Maritime Union, both CIO unions, have been violating the Taft-Hartley law by demanding continuation of the hiring hall system, a three-member NLRB panel has ruled. The ruling follows a similar finding of last August in connection with a strike to retain the hiring hall on the Great Lakes.

The new ruling upheld the findings of Trial Examiner Wallace Royster, specifying that under the Taft-Hartley terms the hiring hall system discriminates against nonunion men. Insisting on the hall, the NLRB said, constitutes a failure to bargain in good faith with the shipowners, and threatening to strike over the issue is illegal compulsion on the owners to discriminate.

TELLS OF NEEDS

Shirley Hall, member of the CIO Textile Workers, Danville, Va., home of the huge Dan River cotton mills, said that the company's excuse for laying off 1500 workers at the plant was that demand for sheeting and other cotton material is dropping. But, she testified at minimum wage hearings, workers need and would buy such material, but they don't have the money.

MORE DIXIEGOPPERY

There was quite a show up on Capitol Hill last week.

Nobody was quite certain as to who was running it, who was winning, who was losing and which was being substituted for what.

First it was the Lesinski Bill, then the Wood substitute, then the Sims substitute, then the Wood Bill again.

The Wood Bill was approved by a 14-vote margin as a substitute for the Lesinski Bill and then, on the following day—by a 3-vote margin—was sent back to the Labor Committee for further study.

Yep, that's what happened—and when it was all over there was still confusion. But out of it emerged these facts:

1. By the very skin of its teeth, labor escaped a beating in the House.

2. Labor still has the Taft-Hartley Act on its hands.

3. The unions and the Truman Administration still have a chance to salvage something good out of the situation.

Regardless of what the next move may be or how it may turn out, there are some valuable political lessons the unions can learn from what happened.

One of the most valuable of these is that the coalition of Southern Democrats and Republicans—the Dixiegops—is powerful and is determined to prevent enactment of the Truman Fair Deal program.

Another is that the "Solid South" is far from solid politically. Over one-fourth of the total pro-labor votes in the various T-H repeal moves came from Southern Democrats.

And the Republican ranks weren't solid either. An average of about 20 GOP members voted either against the Wood Bill or for sending it back to the Labor Committee.

SHOWS NEED FOR POLITICAL ACTION

What happened in Washington last week illustrates the practical results of political action and shows the need for more of it in the future. And it emphasizes the importance of the CIO's membership campaign in the South.

All but five of the 168 House members who received CIO-PAC indorsement last November "went down the line" for labor.

A majority of the Republicans did the expected. They followed the usual GOP line.

But the 71 Southern Democrats who voted for the Wood Bill went directly contrary to the Democratic Party platform and to the wishes of a majority of the voters as expressed at the polls in 1948.

It makes little difference whether the Dixiecrats were deliberately striking at labor or were slapping at Truman because of his civil rights program. Results are what count.

And the results were bad.

One of the really encouraging things was the performance of Southern Democrats who backed the Administration and the Republicans who voted against the punitive Wood Bill. Both groups deserve a vote of thanks from the unions.

Nobody who knows politics will dispute the assertion that there was a direct connection between the CIO's Southern drive and the number of Southern Democrats who opposed the Wood Bill.

And nobody who understands politics will doubt that more and more pro-labor Congressmen will be elected in Dixie in the future as the CIO keeps increasing its membership in the region.

There's still a big job to be done in Congress this year—and in the Congressional elections of 1950.

Industry's Profit Grab Now 'Paying Off'

Unemployment And Decreased Production Result From Corporation Squeeze

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE POST-WAR economic squeeze play of American corporations is beginning to have serious consequences for a large portion of the nation's wage-earners.

More than 3 million are unemployed and thousands more are working only part time.

Wartime savings of many have dwindled or disappeared and others have been forced to go in debt.

Attempts are being made to impose the speed-up or stretchout in many unorganized plants—and in some organized plants, too.

And there's much evidence that industry decided to cut production—rather than prices—in an effort to "straighten the situation out."

MONTHS AGO the CIO warned that our economy was getting badly out of balance and that the consequences were likely to be serious.

Let's see what has happened:

Between 1945 and 1948 the wages of all persons engaged in manufacturing increased about 20%.

During the same period corporate profits (after taxes) increased approximately 126%—or more than six times as much as wages.

In 1945 wages and salaries represented about 68% of our national income. In 1948 this dropped to 62%.

But during the same period the proportion of the national income which went to profits rose from 11% to 14%. (And that's an increase of more than 27%—not just 3%.)

THESE STATISTICS tell an important and rather frightening story. In other terms, it goes this way:

Since the end of the war, corporate profits have been increasing steadily and rapidly—not by accident but by design.

Price increases were necessary to obtain the higher profits—and in an effort to pay the higher prices labor sought and obtained wage increases.

But wages didn't keep pace with prices and profits.

Savings of wage-earners began disappearing and many went into debt.

Then the inevitable began happening. Purchasing power dropped to such a point that many could no longer buy what they needed and wanted at current prices.

As a result, production was cut back and unemployment began to rise.

THERE HAS been much recent talk about price reductions—but more talk than price cutting on the things which make up the average person's budget.

The reduction since last September's peak amounted to 2.9%. And there was a slight price rise in March.

Unfortunately, production and employment have been dropping faster than prices.

The consequences of this "rat race" in reverse could be disastrous if permitted to continue for any length of time.

Industry spokesmen seem inclined to brush the matter aside with the comment that we're merely witnessing a "healthy readjustment."

But the wage-earners aren't buying that line!

THERE IS much evidence that industry's profit grab and failure to distribute normal dividents resulted from a desire to obtain reserves big enough to weather the "inevitable" depression.

And in doing what they did they set the nation on the path which leads to depression.

It's a terribly cruel way to do business—and it's a dangerous way, too.

To stem the current tide we need more production, more employment, greater consumer purchasing power.

Industry has the resources and the knowledge necessary for providing them. They'd better be used—and soon—or we'll be in serious trouble.

Trade Group Likes PAC's Know-How

THE NATL. COAL Association has looked down upon the techniques of PAC and has found them good, although it violently disagrees with the aims of CIO's political arm. That is shown by the following industry bulletin issued by the association:

"We don't know who is the author of the article quoted below, but we ran across it recently and whoever the author is, we give him due credit without knowing his name. It deals with a vital problem affecting all of us and is sent in the hope that every one of our people will read it and take a lesson from it.

"Certain of the businessmen of this country ought to take a direct and positive part in the election of their representatives to the Congress of the United States. The article follows:

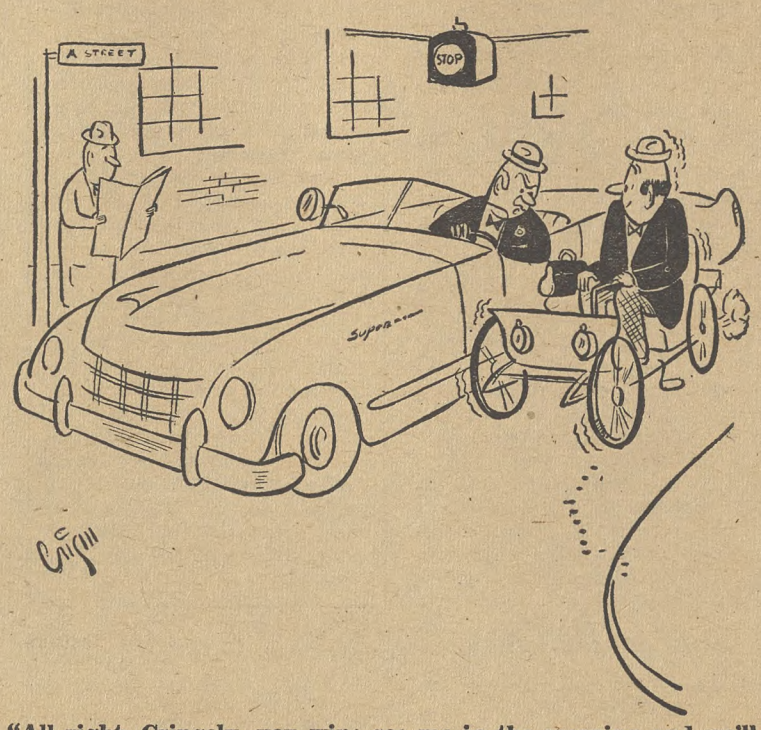
"THE 1949 ELECTIONS"

"LAST NOVEMBER we had to elect a new Congress, remember? But it didn't bother businessmen. Most of them were much too busy to "mess around" in politics. Besides they never took sides in an election. All of which worked out just swell for Jack Kroll and his CIO-PAC doorbell ringers.

"They were not too busy to work, nor was there any doubt about whom they were trying to elect. And as we have since found out, they did a pretty good job with the result that the businessmen, who were too busy to help send friends of good government to Washington, are not spending time and money commuting to Washington trying to get labor-conscious Congressmen to listen to their troubles. Postal rates are just one case in point.

"Some come back pretty mad and swear the next time there is a Congressional election they are going to do something about it. And that is the trouble. Electing Congressmen is a full time, year-in and year-out project. Men like Jack Kroll, who heads CIO's political action machine which he claims is now functioning in 111,000 precincts, give it all they have all the time. 1949 may be an off-year politically to you and me, but to Jack Kroll it is the year when labor will make its power felt in 535 city elections and shape the complexion of 5 state legislatures.

"No one likes pressure government, but so long as businessmen think they are too busy to go into politics and too smart to take sides in a political campaign, they have nobody to blame but themselves for what Congress does to them. Perhaps a little time spent in politics before the election, might save the hours they now spend trying to get consideration from Congressmen the CIO put into office."



"All right, Cringely, you win; see me in the morning and we'll discuss a raise!"

Election Day Holiday

Members of the CIO Brewery Workers at Cincinnati, 1,500 strong, have won a general election day paid holiday. This gain was written into the local contract along with a general 10c hourly pay hike and establishment of a basic Monday-through-Friday workweek.

He Was A 'Model' Employe, And Then—

SOME OF the valley folk said the trouble with Joe was that he bit the hand which had fed him, but Joe didn't look at it that way.

He merely did what he thought was right. He'd learned to fight for democracy the hard way—in a fox-hole with a gun in his hand—and he thought he should continue the battle in his old home town.

He put up a good scrap but the odds against him were too strong. Some of his old friends got into the fray with him, but there weren't enough of them and they weren't strong enough.

When the battle ended Joe wasn't merely jobless. He was blacklisted in the town in which he had lived for years.

JOE (which isn't his real name) grew up in a Southern town completely dominated by the owners of a big textile firm.

He was taught in early childhood that "the people up on the hill"—mill officials who lived on a high spot of ground near the edge of town—were capable of making wise decisions for the community.

He learned later that the mill owner completely controlled local politics, ran the civic affairs of the town and even had a hand in selecting the local school teachers.

These things didn't bother Joe because he didn't know much about life "on the outside."

WHEN THE war began, Joe, a family man, decided he should lend his mechanical skill to the building of badly needed airplanes.

He moved half way across the country, got a job and joined a CIO union.

Later he donned a uniform and fought overseas.

When the fighting was over he went back to his home town to settle down, but the old home disturbed him. He missed the democracy he had seen in the union to which he'd belonged.

And he wondered why there was no democracy in his town when that's what he'd fought so hard for.

CIO STAFF members came into Joe's town and launched an organizing drive—and Joe was one of the first to sign up.

Soon he became a volunteer organizer. His chief value resulted from the fact that he knew all the workers, had been considered a "model" employe, was a church leader and a native of the town.

Suddenly, without notice, Joe was fired —because of his union activities. He was immediately given temporary employment with the organizing staff.

Dozens of others who joined the union were fired later and the CIO lost the NLRB election campaign.

JOE DIDN'T want to become an organizer and he didn't want to leave his home town—so he got a job in a filling station.

A textile mill official drove in one day, bought some gasoline, then drove away. Joe was fired the next day and his boss said it was because of "pressure from the mill."

He got a job at an ice house—and the same thing happened again.

He soon learned he had been placed on a town-wide blacklist.

"Well," Joe told a CIO organizer, "I guess I've got to leave town to make a living. It burns hell out of me but I guess I gotta go. Let me know if you ever get a union here and I'll be back."

"OK," said the organizer. "I don't know when it'll be, but we'll be back."

And two "defeated" men shook hands and parted.

OUT OF THE 'WOOD,' ANYWAY!

Mutual Respect Found Basis of Peace at Sharon

PATIENCE, understanding and painstaking work on the part of both management and labor went into making the industrial peace which prevails at the Sharon Steel Corp., says the Natl. Planning Assn. in its latest case study on the causes of industrial peace under collective bargaining.

The study, fifth of a series so far issued in pamphlet form, concerns the working relationship between Sharon Steel and the CIO Steelworkers. With the exception of the industry-wide steel strike in 1946, there has been no strike at Sharon plants during the 12 years the concern has been under agreement with the union.

Sharon Steel, which began in 1900 as a small fabricating company, now controls more than half a dozen steel plants, plus coal and coke facilities. Its main plants are at Sharon and Farrell, Pa., and at Lowellville, Niles and Warren, Ohio.

Units dealt with in the present report, written by J. Wade Miller Jr., are those at Sharon, Farrell and Lowellville, which are geographically concentrated and produce the largest part of the concern's output. A total of some 6000 workers were employed in the three plants as of June 30, 1947.

A SINGLE agreement with the CIO Steelworkers covers all three plants. Other units and subsidiaries have separate contracts. The study declares that industrial peace has existed at Sharon Steel since the summer of 1937 when the first company-union agreement was signed without the bitterness and passions typical in many other situations.

Furthermore, it adds, "every grievance has been adjusted without resort of arbitration," and "not a single dispute at Sharon was referred to the War Labor Board during World War II."

"The achievement of this constructive peace has required patience, understanding, and painstaking work of both management and employes, but it has not been 'purchased' at the expense of the company's economic position, stockholders, or the public," declares the NPA Committee's preliminary statement.

A share of the credit for Sharon's peaceful industrial relations is given to the effect of wartime and postwar demand for steel on the corporation's improved economic position, and to the "pattern bargaining" in the steel industry "which has eliminated, for Sharon, much of the haggling, exhausting debate, and emotional frustration and bitterness which frequently characterize contract negotiations."

Study of Causes Of Peace Urged

"We may hope that if men understand well enough the causes and the techniques of industrial peace we can make progress toward consciously achieving it," wrote Clinton Golden in a foreword to the pamphlet on industrial peace at Sharon Steel. Golden is chairman of the NPA committee responsible for the industrial studies.

"In the past, even where the emphasis has ben directed toward peace, it has usually been in the sense of reconciliation and settlement of strife," he continued. "We have not yet systematically examined the circumstances and peaceful processes of working relationships."

CAUSES OF PEACE for which the union has been primarily responsible, states the case study, are:

1. High caliber of union leadership.

2. Responsible character of the union—its respect for its commitments and legitimate obligations.

3. Union's efforts to avoid factionalism within or between the locals.

4. Union efforts to increase the responsibility and authority of local union officials.

"Mutual confidence and respect are the major antidotes for fear," states the report. "The Sharon management has respected and fostered the integrity of the union and through this has developed in the union a firm conviction that it can expect a square deal from the company."

The report admits that Sharon did not welcome the organization of its employes in the initial period of unionization. "Nevertheless, when it became apparent to top management that a majority of the eligible employes might favor such representation, the company readily consented to an NLRB election," the pamphlet states.

WHEN the union won the election by a 2½ to 1 majority, the company promptly signed a contract recognizing the CIO union as collective bargaining agent for all eligible employes.

"The outstanding feature of the general labor-management picture at Sharon," says the study, "is that both parties accepted the relationship from the start. No time was wasted attempting to undermine or betray it. Instead, the parties devoted their energies to making the relationship work for their mutual benefit."

House Group to Hold Hearings on Labor; Senate to Debate

By ARTHUR RIORDAN

"Mr. WELCH of California. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit the bill H. R. 2032 to the Committee on Education and Labor.

"The SPEAKER: Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

"Mr. WELCH of California. I am unalterably opposed to the bill in its present form.

"The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit."

Thus, one sweltering day last week in Washington, there came the climax to nearly 20 hours of the dizziest whirlpool Capital Hill has seen in many a year, if ever before.

The central figure in this drama was, of course, the Taft-Hartley Bill. In those nearly 20 hours, these things occurred:

A. The House, on a teller vote of 211 to 183, rejected the "amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. Sims) as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Wood)."

(A teller vote is one of several ways by which the House determines how its members stand on an issue. On a teller vote, members parade up the aisle. The yeas go first and a proponent of the measure being considered taps each on the shoulder as he passes, with the clerk recording the vote.)

B. Next, the House, on a roll call vote of 217 to 203, accepted the "amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. Wood), as amended." Rep. Vito Marcantanio, thinking fast, demanded a reading of the engrossed bill. Since it was not available, final vote was put off till the next day.

C. Then, after a night's sleep, the House voted to accept, 212 to 209, the motion of the "gentleman from California, Mr. Welch."

ALL THAT language in the House added up to this fact:

The House had in effect ordered its Committee on Education & Labor to write a new labor bill.

Best immediate effect of the moves, from labor's viewpoint, was the rejection of the Wood Bill, a measure admittedly concocted by the Republican leadership, but offered by the Republican Party's Dixiegop errand boy, Rep. John Wood (D., Ga.).

(Editor's Note: The "D" is for identification purposes only, we assure you.)

Much of the credit for the destruction of the Wood Bill goes to 60 Southern Democrats and 21 Republicans who refused to go along with the Dixiegop coalition which had spawned the Wood Bill.

In fact, almost half of the Southern Democrats joined with the Northerners and Westerners of their party and with the 21 Republicans in labor's behalf.

Specific credit must go to these 11 Representatives, who voted for the Wood Bill, but switched on the recommital motion:

Democrats: William P. Bolton and George H. Fallon, Maryland; Oren Harris, Brooks Hays, W. F. Norrell and Boyd Tackett, Arkansas; Porter Hardy Jr., Virginia; Joe L. Evins, Tennessee; A. S. Herlong Jr., and Hardin Peterson, Florida.

Republican: Paul Cunningham, Iowa.

The legislative future on labor legislation shaped up something like this:

House: The House Labor subcommittee headed by Rep. Augustine B. Kelley (D., Pa.) will schedule hearings on the new labor bill, probably starting this week.

Senate: The Thomas-Lesinski Bill, which has been approved by Sen. Elbert Thomas' Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, will probably come up for debate sometime this week.

Pres. Truman and Sen. Thomas, a Democrat from Utah and a long-time friend of labor, last week expressed confidence that a just labor bill would be passed by this Congress.

THERE WERE a lot of good words said about labor legislation last week—some of them by Congressmen from the ranks of labor who know well its problems.

Take Rep. Leonard Irving (D., Mo.), who happens to be Truman's home Congressman and also happens to be a member of the AFL.

After the recommittal vote, Irving told his colleagues:

"I want to thank personally those members who voted to recommit the bill. It took real courage for some who voted for the original Wood subsitute to support the motion.

"We have heard the former Speaker, Mr. Joseph Martin, whose leadership in the 80th Congress was so profoundly repudiated by the good people of this United States last November, make a stirring speech in favor of the continuation of democracy in this country.

"Yesterday, when the Sims amendment was up for a vote, the Republican leaders formed a barricade of their own bodies in the path of the line voting yea for that bill. Reluctant Republicans who sought to enter that line were cautioned and advised against voting for the Sims amendment Many turned away and did not go through the barricade which would have taken a flying wedge to penetrate.

"Now, I ask, was that democracy in action?"

Rep. Eugene McCarthy (D., Minn.): "I do not like to attribute motives to the actions of any members of the House. It appears to be the custom here to preface your remarks by saying you make no such judgment against them.

"However, there was a good practice in medieval times. When, in Christian charity, men could not pass upon the motives of their fellow men, they coined the term 'culpable ignorance' to fix responsibility.

"I think it might be well for some members of this House to give some consideration to culpable ignorance when they examine their political consciences.

"The gentleman from North Carolina (Rep. Graham Barden) early this afternoon spoke consolingly to the chairman of the subcommittee (Rep. Kelley). He made reference to a rug-pulling operation.

"I am satisfied that if the gentleman from North Carolina would submit to examination we would find lint under his fingernails."

Rep. Carl Perkins (D., Ky.): "I wish to voice my objection to the non-Communist affidavit requirement. This is just as un-American as anything possibly could be.

"To me a Communist is a person who is disloyal to our form of Government. In T-H, the affidavit requirement was applicable to only unions and their officials.

"This was unfair on its face because this brought about the assumption that labor was Communistic. Not only was this an un-American requirement, but this played right in the hands of the Communists. Communists don't mind taking such an oath.

"Under our law in America we are presumed innocent until proven guilty and it is an insult to both labor and management to cast any reflection that any American group of people are suspected of being tainted with Communism."

Rep. E. C. Gathings (D., Ark.): "I am a Southerner and I am proud of it.

"Both the Democratic platform and the President called for repeal of T-H and not just the name. Certainly, there is nothing offensive about the name Taft and the name Hartley but there are definitely some provisions of the law that are objectionable to the public, offensive to labor, and incompatible with to the spirit of a free man."

Rep. Adolph Sabath (D., Ill.): "When laboring men observe in the press the tremendous profits their employers are making and the luxuries they are enjoying, they feel that they are entitled to decent treatment."

Wayne L. Hays (D., O.): "T-H was founded upon the false premise that the wage earners of this country had become too powerful in the collective bargaining process.

"At a time when industry was reporting its greatest profits on record, it was ordained that the right of the worker to share in decisions affecting wages, hours and conditions of work had to be curbed."

Rep. Harold Donohue (D., Mass.): "The labor movement is led by honorable men whose records in private and public life will bear comparisons with the records of the leaders of any other group in America."

Switch

On the vote to recommit the Wood Bill, 38 Representatives who voted for the Taft-Hartley Law in 1947 now cast their ballots for recommital.

Jack Kroll Says

The following letter has been sent to all state and local political action groups by PAC Dir. Jack Kroll:

We call to your attention the votes of your Representatives in the House of Representatives on May 3 and May 4. These votes are on the Wood Bill, which CIO President Philip Murray termed "more vicious than" the Taft-Hartley Act, and on the motion to send the Wood Bill back to the House Labor Committee, which had the effect of killing the measure.

The Wood Bill was approved by the House on May 3 by a vote of 217 to 203. On May 4 the Wood Bill was killed by a vote of 212 to 209.

I think it is especially important to note that of the 168 people supported by PAC and elected to the House on November 2, 1948, only five broke faith with their constituents and voted for the Wood Bill. This demonstrates that, with these five exceptions, our course last November was chosen wisely and that political action, when applied, works.

The future of Taft-Hartley is still in doubt, but it is already clear that CIO-PAC has much work to do between now and the next congressional elections.

The vote on recommital shows that there are still at least 209 districts in which we need to exert more effort than ever before if we want to accomplish the enactment of sound, progressive legislation. There are at least 212 districts in which we must maintain our organizations. is qualified to vote.

Effective political action, as we have learned, depends primarily upon the registration and voting of each of our union members and each eligible member of his family.

It depends further on carrying the message of political action from door to door to make sure that every eligible citizen is qualified to vote and that when he does vote, he is informed on the issues. It depends also on adequately financed and adequately staffed political action headquarters.

I am confident that, as a nation, we are making additional progress toward the clear alignment of liberal and conservative forces and toward the further development of an electorate that will decide between candidates on the basis of issues and not on the basis of party labels.

We have won battles and we have won skirmishes, but we have not yet won the war for economic security with democratic freedoms. With your continued efforts, we shall achieve our goal.

the statute. The Secretary is required to hold a hearing upon the application of any interested party. Here is a new and novel device for burdening unions and postponing the effectiveness of welfare arrangements.

12) The Federal Mediation Service is retained as an independent agency.

13) The national emergency provisions of Taft-Hartley are dropped in favor of the following provisions:

(a) If the President finds that a strike threatens the national health and safety, he issues a proclamation urging the parties to resume work and appoints an emergency board.

(b) The emergency board within 30 days makes a report, including recommendations for settlement, which are made public.

(c) The President, at any time after issuing the proclamation, may direct the Attorney General to go into court to secure either an injunction or an order for the U. S. to take possession of the property.

(d) The Act contains no provision as to whether the President shall seek an injunction or seizure of the property, as, for example, that he should enjoin if the union were at fault but seize if the employer were at fault.

(e) The Act contains no provision to make the seizure anything but a formal and phony gesture. It contains no provision as to what should be done with the profits of the plant during the seizure. Obviously, as in the past, the seizure would be a merely nominal one providing no real sanction against the employer.

(f) At the end of 60 days following the issuance of the proclamation the injunction is to be dissolved or the plant returned.

14) The political contribution provisions of Taft-Hartley are retained, except that the prohibition against expenditures in connection with elections is dropped while the prohibition against contributions is retained.

15) The provision of Taft-Hartley denying strikers the right to vote in Labor Board elections is dropped.

In general, the national emergency provisions are less vicious but the seizure provisions have not been made real to provide a sanction against the employer comparable to that of an injunction against the union. The rest of the act is substantially T-H with no important improvement except, perhaps, the elimination of the provision denying the strikers the right to vote.

Sen. Donnell

Newsweek News?

THE PRESS of America was at it again last week against American labor.

Newsweek, closest (not too close) rival of Time, sent Staffer Samuel Shaffer to New Hampshire, it said, to see how Rep. Norris Cotton (R.,) met labor and other groups during the Easter recess.

Its article, as a result of that visit, said that the "Second Congressional District," which Cotton represents, "divides almost equally between industry and agriculture and is regarded as a close election district."

You've guessed it. The article (and we don't blame Mr. Shaffer for this, since he no doubt was under orders from Newsweek to produce such a result) drew the conclusion that labor really doesn't want full T-H repeal; that fine public spirited men such as Rep. Cotton don't take to obeying labor bosses.

The CIO News, curious about that "close election district" checked some statistics.

Our Conclusion: Newsweek's definition of "close" is far from the one we learned in our little school house.

For, the 2d district has gone Republican every election since 1932 (and probably before that, since we didn't go back any further.)

In 1948, Cotton had 58% of the vote.

In 1946, the Republican candidate had 65%.

In 1944, it was 54%.

Close, our eye.—A. R.

(Incidentally, Cotton learned his politics as secretary at the knee of the late Sen. George Moses (R., H. N.), who, with Sens. Smoot and James Watson, ruled the Republican roost in the days that brought on the depression.)

The Bread You Have To Eat These Days Won't Give You Much Pep, Brother

THAT BREAD which appears so fresh when you reach for it at your grocery store may have little food value.

Most spectacular of the current probes of the bread industry was the case involving the General Baking Co. of St. Louis, which several weeks ago pleaded guilty in St. Louis Federal Court to two counts of delivering adulterated bread.

The court imposed a $1500 fine.

U. S. Atty. Drake Wilson charged that the bread was delivered in East St. Louis and Granite City, Ill., just across the Mississippi from St. Louis.

He also charged that General violated the Federal Pure Food, Drug and Cosmetics Act by introducing into interstate commerce bread that contained a "filthy substance" into which insect parts and rodent hairs were detected.

The bread, it was further charged, was prepared and produced under "insanitary conditions" and "may have become contaminated with filth."

THAT IS ONLY part of the story.

The Food and Drug Administration has been holding hearings on the use of synthetic substitutes for milk and shortening in bread.

And according to Columnist Drew Pearson a confidential report prepared for Agricultural Secy. Brannan by Ralph Trugg, chief of the Production and Marketing Division, stated:

"It is our opinion that the department should object to the approval of chemical softeners as acceptable ingredients in baking formulas, because of the effect on the health of the Nation, since evidence indicates that substitution of chemical softners for fats, eggs and milk considerably reduce the food value of the product.

"If the facts warrant, and if the Food and Drug Administration, because of statutory limitations, is unable to prevent or limit the use of synthetics as substitutes for natural foods in baking products, we would further suggest that the department request new legislation on this matter."

There is nothing new about the charges of the poor nutritional value of commercial "white bread."

"Bread—take it from the lawyers and baking technologists of the milling and baking industries—is a bloated and bleached phony that tastes like wall paper paste," said James Rorty, author of "Tomorrow's Food."

It's customarily made by the commercial bakeries, not from the wheat flour, water, salt, sugar, shortening and yeast that you'd expect.

It also has chlorine diozide (a bleach), benzoyl peroxide, sodium alum, potassium bromate, polyoxethlene monostearate (a softener to conceal staleness), Rorty warns. "All these dubious chemicals may be used in white bread without declaration on the wrapper. On the other hand, it is not permitted to add good, wholesome, nutritionally valuable ingredients such as wheat germ, soya flour, dry yeast, and corn germ, except in quantities too small to affect appreciably the nutritional value of the bread."

A study made by the Agricultural Dept. between January and October last year showed that the bakers but not the farmers are making the profits out of bread. Farmers were getting 30% less for their wheat, the retail price of bread was down 15%, but the retail price of bread rose to the all-time high of 14.5c a pound. The profits of the big six baking companies for the third quarter of last year were $103,606,000 compared to $95,430,000 during the corresponding period in 1947.

Jersey Needs 360,000 Home Units

CLAIMING that slums "act as invisible recruiters for the Communist Party," the New Jersey CIO Council estimated that between 360,000 and 380,000 new dwelling units are needed in New Jersey.

Testifying in favor of Governor Driscoll's housing program—with four suggested amendments—before the joint legislative judiciary committees in the State House at Trenton, N. J., last week was Stephen J. Moran, executive secretary of the State CIO.

Moran pointed out that a recent New Jersey opinion poll showed 22% of the people would move tomorrow if they could find a place and another 16% dissatisfied with their present quarters.

"If we project these percentages into tangible figures," Moran said, "they mean that roughly 220,000 families, containing nearly 900,000 individuals, are urgently in need of housing accommodations into which they would move tomorrow. They also mean that about 160,000 additional families, containing about 650,000 individuals, are also dissatisfied with their present dwelling units.

"Altogether, then, this poll indicates a need for about 380,000 new dwelling units in New Jersey to house more than 1,500,000 people.

Two Textile Chains Cut Pay

Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers has assailed as "dangerous" and "immoral" the action of two South Carolina mill chains in cutting the wages of their workers.

Rieve told a meeting of TWUA's southern state directors at Atlanta that Brandon Corp., one of the two chains, had earned profits of 67% in 1948 and 71% in 1947, after taxes. Both Brandon and its affiliated Abney chain have cut wages 8%.

CIO Aides Give the Facts of Union Life to Newark High School Pupils

SO RARE IS IT for pupils to have a chance to get any understanding of the aims of organized labor that a recent project conducted among seniors in American history classes at East Side High School, Newark, N. J., can well be called a pioneer experiment.

The program, sponsored by the Essex—West Hudson CIO Council, was arranged by Joel Jacobson, chairman of the Council's educational committee, and New Jersey State CIO research director. Natl. CIO Associate Education Dir. George Guernsey assisted in drawing up the project.

Students who attended the classes and took part in the question and discussion periods were lavish in their praise of the CIO's project, which was conducted for three days with 240 boys and girls participating.

"The CIO men gave us straight-from-the-shoulder answers to our questions," said Joseph Helminski, one of the seniors.

"THEY HAVE talked to us in a very convincing manner and have told us just what we wanted to hear," said Walter Specht, another student. "I feel that the student's views on labor are a lot clearer on the whole, and a lot of students have become friendlier toward unions."

Student Henry Wojcik said, "The CIO showed us where the fault for today's high prices lies," by pointing to the tremendous profits made by business, and showing that wage demands had not been the major factor in the price boosts.

Student Josephine Catena said the "experiment should be continued."

STATE CIO Pres. Carl Holderman praised the school officials for permitting the CIO labor program, and a previous one sponsored by the AFL. "So little is taught about the labor unions in our schools of this country that they justly can feel they are pioneers," he said.

Dr. David Weingast, chairman of the school's social sciences department, and himself a member of the AFL teachers' union, declared that the "entire school had been electrified by the CIO program."

Subjects discussed during the three days' program were: origin and development of the CIO; how the CIO and AFL differ; and wages, prices and profits. The CIO instructors came from various unions in the area and included:

Harry Kranz and Arthur Chapin, New Jersey CIO Council; Al Loewenthal, Electrical Workers Local 447; Marguerite McCollum, American Newspaper Guild; Emanuel Kurzberg, Textile Workers; Max Greenberg and Irving Rosenberg, Local 108, Retail & Wholesale Workers, and Hyman Bookbinder, research director, Clothing Workers.

Job Bias Complaints Increase in N. Y. State

A 20% increase in complaints charging job discrimination were filed with the New York State Commission against Discrimination in the first quarter of 1949, the agency reported.

Seventy-four percent of the complaints were based on racial discrimination, 17% on creed, 5% on national origin, and 4% for other reasons. The commission said the percentages were about the same as for the entire year of 1948. Fifty-six complaints were filed against employers, 10 against employment agencies and 30 against unions.

UAW Member Sells CIO News

Aloysius Totter rose to his feet recently at a meeting of Auto Workers Local 971 at Elmyra, Ohio, and made a motion that was carried.

As a result, 33 more names were placed on The CIO News mailing list.

Totter's motion was that money from the local's educational fund should be used to send copies of the CIO News to the homes of all members of the local's executive board and to all stewards and committee chairmen.

In a letter to the CIO News Totter said he thought other locals should do the same thing.

New Procedure On Disputes Notices

Cyrus S. Ching, director of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, has again urged unions to file 30-day dispute notices with the Service's regional offices rather than in Washington.

The new procedure was announced last November, but presumably escaped many unions' attention, Ching said. As a result, filing of the notices with the proper offices has frequently been delayed.

The list of regional offices and their addresses, as well as copies of the new report form issued last November may be obtained from the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, Labor Dept. Bldg., Rm. 3421, Washington, D. C.

Notice of a bargaining dispute is required of unions by the Taft-Hartley Act.

UOPWA-CIO Beats AFL At Hancock

THE CIO Office & Professional Workers has beaten down an AFL raiding attempt in an NLRB representation poll which reaffirmed UOPWA as bargaining agent for 5500 John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co. industrial insurance agents.

The employes gave 3088 votes to UOPWA, 2240 to the AFL Federation of Insurance Agents and 68 to the Intl. Union of Life Insurance Agents.

An additional 500 agents are now included in the UOPWA bargaining unit as a result of their inclusion in the balloting. They were formerly AFL.

The CIO union has had a contract at John Hancock since 1941.

In three other instances the UOPWA trounced the AFL last week—at the Home Life Insurance Co. in Delaware and Pennsylvania, at the Burkhardt bindery office in Detroit, and at the I. Miller offices, New York City.

The insurance agents are asking pay increases of $15 a week, a guaranteed weekly minimum of $65 and improved security provisions.

L. A. Council Honors Haywood

A testimonial dinner was held May 4 for CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood by the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council at the Alexandria Hotel, Los Angeles. Haywood was the guest of honor in recognition of the success of his formula in bringing together the quarreling unions into a reconstituted council designed to abide by CIO policy.

CIO Pres. Murray wired his regrets at not being able to attend the affair because of meetings of the Steelworkers' executive board and wage policy committee in Pittsburgh. "One cannot think of CIO without thinking of Allan Haywood," Murray said.

Steel Aims: Raises, Pensions, Insurance

ACHIEVEMENT of a three-pronged contract program including wage boosts, pensions and social insurance—will be the CIO Steelworkers' goal when it enters negotiations with the giant steel industry around May 16.

The program was drafted first last week by the union's 36-man executive board, then ratified by its 170-man wage policy committee. Affected by the demands will be about a million Steelworkers in both basic and steel fabricating plants.

Steelworkers and CIO Pres. Philip Murray said the amount of the wage increase sought and the cost of the pension program would be resolved in negotiations. He estimated the cost of the insurance program at 8.4c per hour per worker. The pension plan, he said, would be "variable." The union will demand that the pension plan be entirely employer-financed, and that compulsory retirement be banned.

ALSO IN the list of demands are:

- Elimination of geographical differentials
- Improvement of shift premiums
- Severance pay for loss of employment other than by quitting or discharge for cause
- Elimination of wage and salary inequities
- Union shop

(Inclusion of this last demand is an indication of the union's confidence that the union shop restrictions in the Taft-Hartley Act will be eliminated. The law requires an NLRB election before a union shop can be instituted. Since the Steelworkers have refused to sign the T-H non-communist affidavit, the union is barred from participation in an NLRB poll. Thus, the union shop demand anticipates the elimination of this requirement.)

- Guaranteed minimum weekly wage
- Improved vacations
- The problem of declining employment in the industry to be coped with by negotiating committees and management on a company by company, plant-by-plant basis.

The 835 steel companies, with whom talks are scheduled to begin around May 16, have all been notified of the wage reopening, Murray said. Most of the contracts do not expire until July 16, 1950.

Union Asks Vets' Rights

THE OREGON Telephone Union, affiliate of the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, representing the vast majority of the 5400 employes of the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. in Oregon, has objected to the company's proposal to increase telephone rates.

The union's 17-man executive board unanimously petitioned Public Utility Commissioner Flagg to withhold granting any rate increases to PT&T at least until such time as the company "meets its responsibilities to the state of Oregon, its citizens and World War II veterans, by complying with a state law with which it has continuously failed to comply."

The union said:

"This company's non-compliance policy causes some 800 World War II vets in its employ to be denied training and compensation for which they are eligible under the GI Bill of Rights federal law.

"THE GI BILL of rights provides that World War II vets may receive federal funds while serving out apprenticeships in skilled trades when the training provided the veteran is approved by the authorized state agency and meets the requirements of the state statutes covering the subject of apprenticeship training.

The corporation is asking a minimum guaranteed 7% profit.

The Oregon CIO Council is supporting the union's stand.

Pension Upped to $60

Both houses of the Michigan legislature approved a proposal to raise the maximum for state old-age pensioners from the present $50 a month to $60. About 93,000 pensioners will benefit.

Three Graduates: Three CIO members who were awarded certificates for completing the Workers' Education Training Program at Hudson Shore Labor School are congratulated by Ted F. Silvey, principal speaker at the ceremony held in New York City. USWA Names Wm. Thornton President

WILLIAM E. THORNTON, Lynn, Mass., last week was appointed president of the CIO United Shoe Workers of America.

Thornton was selected by the union's board by a vote of 10 to 6 over Isadore Rosenberg, New York City, it was announced by USWA Secy.-Treas. James J. Mitchell. The board met in Washington, D. C.

Thornton has been with the union since its inception, being active even before it became part of CIO. He has been an organizer, a regional director, a vice president and prior to his appointment was territorial director of Territory No. 1, which includes Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut.

He will serve until April 30, 1950. There will be a referendum election in March, 1950.

He filled the unexpired term of Rocco Franceschini, who died Dec. 26, 1948.

Rosenberg is territorial director of New York, Pennsylvania, Delaware and Maryland, and is manager of New York Joint Council No. 13, New York City.

FE Signs Pact With Harvester

The CIO Farm Equipment Workers has signed a one-year contract with the Intl. Harvester Co., covering 40,000 workers at 22 FE locals. All provisions of the old agreement were extended in the new one.

The contract permits the union to open wage talks at any time during the year with the right to strike if no settlement is reached.

Longshore Gang Bosses Given Raise

Gang bosses in the CIO Longshoremen & Warehousemen have received a voluntary pay raise of 5c an hour from the employers "in recognition of the responsibility of their job."

This is the first time in San Francisco waterfront history that such a raise has been granted without action by the workers. The increase went into effect May 2, raising the scale from $1.92 an hour to $1.97.

UAW Blames Strike On Ford Speedup

CHARGING a Ford speedup, 65,000 CIO Auto Workers last week streamed out of the Ford River Rouge and Lincoln-Mercury plants.

Persistent efforts to settle the dispute continued after the plants were emptied, but without success. The company stood firm in denying existence of a speedup.

The walkout had been approved by the union's international executive board after an investigation which it said backed up the locals' charges. Originally the board had withheld permission for the River Rouge workers to strike, pending an investigation.

On the day the union's investigators were to make the check and again on the day the check was actually made, the UAW said, the assembly line was slowed down to a normal speed.

The following day, however, the union charged, the lines were stepped up again.

"The international union and its members will not and cannot tolerate this kind of double dealing and bad faith on the part of any management," UAW Pres. Walter Reuther said.

THE STRIKE is the first big one in the auto industry since the Chrysler walkout a year ago. Reuther predicted it would not interfere with contract negotiations, due to start May 16.

Meanwhile the UAW was still engaged in a strike over the same issue at the Bendix plant in South Bend, Ind. Now in their third strike week, 7500 workers are involved in the protest against speedup and the firing of 47 employes.

In Brooklyn, N. Y., the union's local 116 last week walked out at the American Machine & Foundry Co., protesting what the union called management's refusal to bargain in good faith. The UAW became bargaining agent a month ago.

Other CIO locals engaged in strike last week:

In Elizabeth, N. J., 5000 CIO Electrical Workers shut down the Singer Sewing Machine Co., after company negotiators rejected all union demands for wage boosts, a cut in the work week and an end to a speedup plan.

In New York City, 7000 CIO Brewery Workers were still on strike protesting a speedup and demanding that two men be assigned to each truck, a wage increase, shorter work week and job security. The union claims the industry has the highest incident of ruptures of any occupation in the city because one man must carry 213-pound beer kegs.

Wood Union Backs Officer

THE CIO Woodworkers' executive board recently passed a motion expressing "complete confidence" in the organization's secretary, Carl Winn. Only one member of the 18-man board dissented.

Winn was accused by officers of the Northern Washington District IWA Council of having suggested to the employes of the Galbraith Logging Co. at Acme, Wash., during a strike that a separate charter of the Union be issued to them. Winn has denied the charges as being the falsification of people "embarked upon a suicidal campaign to ruin the Woodworkers."

The dissenting vote cast on the motion, made by Ken Ohnemus, Olympia, Wash., who represents the Boommen and Rafter's District Council on the Board, was that of Karly Larson, of Seattle, president of the Northern Washington District Council.

President J. E. Fadling expressed the utmost confidence in Winn, declaring that Winn "merits the support of the entire membership of the Union and of this Executive Board."

"Carl Winn was acting in my behalf in this situation and at my suggestion because I could not get up there to do the job myself and I am confident that he did not propose to those people a separate charter," Fadling declared.

"Joe's alarm clock did not go off this morning."

Maritime Union Fights Efforts Of Snug Harbor Home To Get All Of Sailor Guests' Money

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THE CIO'S National Maritime Union, a mere 12-year-old stripling, has gone to bat against a home for aged sailors that is 150 years old and is tied in with some of the most exciting chapters in the nation's early history.

The home is Sailors Snug Harbor. NMU and the State of New York have entered the case with charges that the trustees of the estate administering the home have reversed the policy of not requiring payments from the guests and are seeking to get their hands on all money the old sailors have or might receive.

It's quite a story—both because of its origin and its present developments, which involve the spending of millions of dollars income from New York City real estate under the terms of a will written in 1801.

Snug Harbor was provided for under the 150-year-old will of Capt. Robert Richard Randall. The will was drawn up by Alexander Hamilton, renowned American statesman and member of George Washington's cabinet, who was killed in 1804 in a duel with Aaron Burr.

Privateer's Money

Capt. Randall was the seagoing son of a privateer in the Revolutionary War era. The elder Randall made scads of money, some of which he invested in New York real estate. The 21-acre estate and farm in Manhattan which Capt. Randall inherited from his father, today is part of the wealthy Washington Square area of New York City and yields millions in yearly income.

The former Randall farm comprised the area that now is bounded roughly by Waverly Place, Tenth St., Fourth and Fifth Avenues. New York University recently leased for 203 years—rental not revealed—a block of the former Randall holdings.

Under the terms of the Randall will the income from this property was to go to build and maintain a home for retired seamen to be known as "The Sailors' Snug Harbor."

Will Disputed

For almost 30 years after Capt. Randall's death in 1801, his surviving relatives tried in vain to break the terms of the will, fighting the case clear to the U. S. Supreme Court. In 1830 the highest court in the land finally declared the will unbreakable, and the Snug Harbor trustees named in the will went ahead with plans for the seamen's home.

This was built on Staten Island, instead of in Manhattan—where real estate values were already shooting upward—with the income from the original property used to construct and maintain the institution.

As it is today, more than 50 buildings, including two churches, a hospital, dormitories, workshops and powerhouse, stand on Snug Harbor's extensive Staten Island grounds. The rest of the 100-acre property is devoted to a farm and gardens.

Less than 400 old mariners are living there at present, although there is said to be room for 900 to 1000.

The NMU's interest in Snug Harbor has naturally always been strong, as a few of its members have already entered the home, and others in greater numbers may want to live there in the future.

Home Accused

Some months ago the NMU learned that the Snug Harbor authorities, reversing a policy of a hundred years' standing, were suddenly requiring the old mariners at the home to sign an agreement turning over every cent of savings to the trustees of the estate.

The agreement also provided any income the guests received, including even their meager Navy, War Service, or Social Security pensions, would go to the trustees, NMU charged.

In return for this, the retired seamen would get room and board at rates up to $4 a day, and a $15 monthly "allowance." They would also be required "to readily and cheerfully" perform any labor or services about the estate required of them, without remuneration—unless excused by the Snug Harbor physician.

When the NMU heard from some of the indignant seamen about this scheme, it, together with other maritime unions, immediately challenged the move. The National NMU office wrote to all the Snug Harbor trustees, protesting the action, and asking that signing of the agreements be held up pending inquiry.

The letter pointed out that Capt. Randall meant Snug Harbor to be "a place where seamen could spend the rest of their days in an atmosphere not usually attributed to an institution for the aged," and reminded the trustees that mariners had sailed at the request of the U. S. Government during the two World Wars.

Records Quoted

NMU officials also laid the case before the State Attorney General, and asked him to look into the claims of the Snug Harbor controller that the income from Capt. Randall's estate wasn't sufficient to pay for the keep of the 375 mariners there.

The Pilot, NMU official newspaper, quotes from the records of a 1937 law suit against Snug Harbor by the City for collection of taxes in which it was stated that Snug Harbor "is the owner of a number of very valuable parcels of real estate in the City of New York; that it operates a number of very valuable apartment houses in the City of New York, and that it is in effect a real estate operating company employing a number of people, paying substantial salaries to such people, constantly building, making improvements upon the real property which it owns, is moreover engaged in a utility business selling electric service and . . . is engaged in other than charitable activities and that it operates property other than that used by it as its asylum on Staten Island."

Aside from this, and a Snug Harbor financial statement for the year 1946, showing an accumulated surplus of more than $4,000,000, the NMU reported it was unable to find out much about how the income from the wealthy Randall manor estate was spent. A reply to the NMU's letter to the trustees merely stated that the correspondence had been "referred to Counsel."

Last week N. Y. State Atty. Gen. Nathaniel L. Goldstein started action in the N. Y. Supreme Court to enjoin the institution's trustees from charging the 375 men at the institution for their room and board.

Injunction Sought

Goldstein also requested a temporary injunction to prevent Snug Harbor from expelling the seamen who refused to sign the "property agreement."

Goldstein, who gave $30 million as a conservative estimate of the Randall estate holdings, said he is seeking a complete accounting of the charity's property and finances.

The financial statements which the trustees of the estate are required to file annually with the State Legislature had been "incomplete and unsatisfactory," Goldstein declared. The last report filed, as of Dec. 31, 1947, showed an accumulated surplus income exceeding $4,144,000, he stated.

Goldstein questioned the right of the Snug Harbor trustees to accumulate surplus income, and asked the court to direct that such income be used "to better accomplish the charitable purposes of Capt. Randall."

He said he had been unable so far to find out "why the Harbor, showing an accumulation of surplus income and having been specifically set up for the purpose of maintaining aged sailors, was finding it necessary to seek payments from the mariners. Such fees have never been levied on inmates in the long history of the Harbor."

Asst. Atty. Gen. P. Hodges Combier, who is in charge of the Snug Harbor case, said the institution began circulating the "property agreements," several months ago, and that he had testimony from some of the seamen stating that they were asked to sign under threat of expulsion.

Goldstein agreed to the postponement of argument on the case, first set for May 9, to May 23, and attorneys for Snug Harbor promised that none of the retired seamen would be ousted for refusal to turn over their savings or pensions required by terms of the agreement, pending completion of legal action in the case.

More Jobs, Better Distribution Of Income Urged By Outlook

MAINTENANCE of maximum employment and production and a more equitable distribution of income are economic necessities for America, the CIO Economic Outlook declared.

In 1948, when inflation was at its peak, the Outlook said, the CIO warned:

"There is no comfort in the pious promise of business leaders that inflation will end with a general softening of demand which will reduce prices. When this happens, there will also be a softening of production and the employment it sustains. We cannot wait for the cure that kills the patient.

"After eight uninterrupted years of wartime boom, uncertainty now besets the economy. While still bringing to their readers the latest spectacular summaries of 1948 profits, our business journals are telling of lagging retail sales, declining residential housing starts, and falling business loans in 1949."

The policy of letting nature take its course is leading us down the road to reduced production and employment, says the Outlook, and if economic decline is to be reversed and prevented from turning into a large-scale recession or depression, "every effort must be made to increase the dollars available for consumption on the one hand while a reduction in inflated price levels is brought about. Only in this way can the gap between purchasing power and maximum output be closed."

AT THE WAR'S end in 1945, prospects for a great American prosperity were high indeed, the Outlook said. As a result of the economic progress made by the lower income group in the war years, the American people found that "never had they been more solvent and never had the economy been so primed to produce abundance. The problem was to keep the economy producing and distributing its potential output to meet the needs of America."

But in a postwar situation calling for restraint, with great purchasing pressure still pent up as a result of wartime savings and shortages of goods, "all the elements for an explosion were present and Big Business struck the match. The scuttling of price controls in 1946 set the stage for the greatest profit taking in history.

Plans 3-Day School

For the second straight year, the Ohio CIO will conduct a school on accident prevention and unemployment. It will be held at the Seneca Hotel, Columbus, Ohio, May 26-28.

"There were more than 300,000 industrial accidents in Ohio last year," said Secy. Treas. Jacob Clayman of the Ohio CIO Council. "That is an all-time high. Unemployment is climbing daily. Obviously, the need for union officials trained in these fields has gown."

Carey Calls N. Atlantic Pact 'Sound U. S. Foreign Policy'

THE NORTH Atlantic Pact constitutes "sound American foreign policy in the light of international conditions as they have developed during the past three years," CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee last week.

"The breakdown of the wartime unity between the United States and the Soviet Union was followed by the excessive use of the veto power by the Soviet Union to disrupt the work of the United Nations and a series of tactics in the international field which are known as the 'cold war.'

"The United States has been compelled, because of its desire to support free political and economic life, to elaborate a series of policies in complete conformity with the United Nations Charter but outside the United Nations structure. It is our opinion that the North Atlantic Pact is a necessary development following the Truman Doctrine and the European Recovery Program."

CAREY SAID the CIO would not support any program "which diverted money from reconstruction to military purposes, and it is our understanding that this Pact will not require any such diversion.

"We still believe that one of the major threats of Communism against the free world is the exploitation of economic distress and economic chaos."

He added that the CIO supports the Pact because it is "purely defensive in character" and because it is "the answer to fears of aggression in Europe."

Organizationally Speaking

Allan S. Haywood

"Step by step the longest march can be won, can be won;
Single stones will form an arch one by one, one by one.
And by union what we will can all be accomplished still.
Drops of water turn a mill, singly none, singly none."

Members of the Communication Workers of America have voted 71,312 to 34,419 for CIO affiliation.

This means that the Certificate of Affiliation for CWA with CIO will be issued almost immediately and that procedures of amalgamation of CWA and our own Telephone Workers Organizing Committee will be worked out and made effective.

This achievement has great significance to all CIO Unions. Telephone workers are located in every village and city in our great Nation. These workers have now been brought within the ranks of CIO. In many places they will be the only union members in the entire community.

Through this affiliation, tens of thousands of hitherto unreached locations will have spokesmen of CIO who are also neighbors and fellow workers of the residents. Our influence will be felt; our constructive program will be furthered; our voice will be magnified.

Our newest brothers and sisters, the telephone workers of the nation, will be of great aid to us in our organizing tasks and in our political aims.

SOUTHERN CAMPAIGN

Six election victories and a voluntary union recognition for the CIO were reported last week by Van A. Bittner, Director of CIO's Southern Organizing Campaign.

Two of the victories and the voluntary recognition after a card check were reported to Bittner by Paul Christopher, CIO's Tennessee State Director. Christopher reported: Voluntary recognition of CIO's Brewery Workers as collective bargaining representatives for truck driver-salesmen and helpers at Tennessee Brewing Co., Nashville. Recognition followed a card check which revealed all eligible voters to be union members. A contract is now being negotiated.

Election victories reported by Christopher were: Blue Ridge Glass Corp. of Kingsport, where 363 production employes voted affiliation with CIO's Glass Workers of America, and 26 of 35 employes of the Midwest Dairy Products Co., Jackson, voted affiliation with the Packinghouse Workers.

Georgia: Dir. Charles H. Gillman reports two victories for the Packinghouse Workers in Valdosta, namely, the American Cyanamid Co. and the Valdosta Milling Co.

Florida: Dir. Charles Cowl reports that the employes of the E. B. Malone Co. of Tampa voted for affiliation with the Textile Workers when 12 out of the 20 eligible voters cast their vote for CIO with only 2 against and 5 challenged votes.

South Carolina: Dir. Franz Daniel reports another win for the Woodworkers when the employes of the American Lumber and Treating Co. of Florence chose the IAW-CIO as their bargaining representative by a vote of 77 for and 3 against.

UN Probe Sought For Prisoners

Ernest Schwarz, secretary of the CIO's Committee on Latin-American Affairs, has written to Trygve Lie, United Nations general secretary, asking for an investigation of the imprisonment of members of the labor movement in Venezuela by the military government which seized power there.

This government, Schwarz wrote Lie, "has not only restricted the labor movement but also imprisoned for political reasons many of its opponents, among them members of the labor movement. The prisoners, as far as I have learned, have not been granted a fair trial.

"A general amnesty should immediately be granted to all political prisoners, and everything should be done to bring about a return to democratic government in Venezuela."

Education Bill Voted By Senate

EVERY American school child will be guaranteed a minimum expenditure of $55 a year on his education if the House of Representatives doesn't stumble with the ball tossed it last week by the Senate.

The Upper House overwhelmingly approved a bi-partisan federal-aid-to-education bill which would allot at least $5 per child between the ages of 5 and 17 to the wealthier states and as much as $29 to the poorest, Mississippi.

In the process, the Senators slapped down a deluge of amendments to the measure, some designed to kill it, others designed to limit use of the funds. The tactics and the Senate's reaction to them closely resembled the situation during the recent debate on a federal housing bill, which also passed handily.

As in the housing debate, a non-segregation amendment was offered, but was defeated.

Die-hard conservatives in both instances pulled out the old standby argument that federal assistance would result in federal control and socialism. These were the grounds on which the U. S. Chamber of Commerce has been attacking the measure. In this camp were the familiar faces of Republican Senators John Bricker (O.), Kenneth S. Wherry (Neb.), Styles Bridges (N. H.) and Virginia Democrat Harry Byrd. Few legislators were taken in by the argument and went on to approve the bill, 58 to 15.

STEERED through the Senate by Sen. Elbert D. Thomas, (D. Utah.), the bill had 15 sponsors, ranging from such liberals as Thomas Pepper (Fla.), Hill (Ala..), Murray (Mont.), Neely (W. Va.) and Chavez (N.M.)—all Democrats—to such conservatives as Taft (O.), and Smith (N.J.), Republicans.

To prevent states from passing the burden of education entirely over to the Federal government, the bill provides that states spending less than 2¼% of their income on education will receive proportionately less federal aid. After the fourth year in operation, the bill provides, states spending under 2% of their income would not be eligible for federal aid at all.

To assure equitable distribution of federal funds to Negro schools in those states which have segregation, the bill requires that the money must be distributed to these schools at a ratio not less than the minority's proportion of the state's population.

NEEDS HIS BOOKS: John W. Hemmings, who is recording secretary of Local 210 of the CIO Steelworkers, Monongahela, Pa., also has to keep records at home in the family Bible to check off his sixteen children in their proper order. Two of the older boys, Herbert and Harold, work in the same plant as their father, the Combustion Engineering Co., and are also members of Local 210. Mr. and Mrs. Hemmings are holding Robbie Lynn, their youngest, who was born last month.

Home Unit Approves DP Aid

THE HOUSE Judiciary committee has approved a bill permitting 339,000 displaced persons to enter the country in the next two years.

The present law's priorities for farmers and for Baltic refugees, as well as the "cut-off" date of Jan. 1, 1945, were eliminated in the bill.

The "cut-off" date, which in the bill, is moved up to Jan. 1, 1949, has been widely criticized as discriminatory against Jews and Catholics, many of whom had fled from pogroms and purges into the DP camps after 1945.

Committee Chairman Emmanuel Celler (D., N.Y.) described the measure as a "good bill in the sense that it is practical and realistic."

Meanwhile, as a part of its campaign to acquaint the public with the DP problem, the Citizens Committee on Displaced Persons, of which CIO Pres. Philip Murray is a vice chairman, has produced a 15-minute dramatization which is available for radio use by local unions without charge.

Included in the recording are speeches by both Murray and AFL Pres. William Green. The dramatization itself deals with a young DP whose rehabilitation and integration into his new American environment were given a push by a local union.

Unions which sponsor regular broadcasts or which can procure radio time may obtain the recording free by writing Ted Hudes, Citizens Committee On Displaced Persons, 39 E. 36th St., N. Y. 16, N. Y.

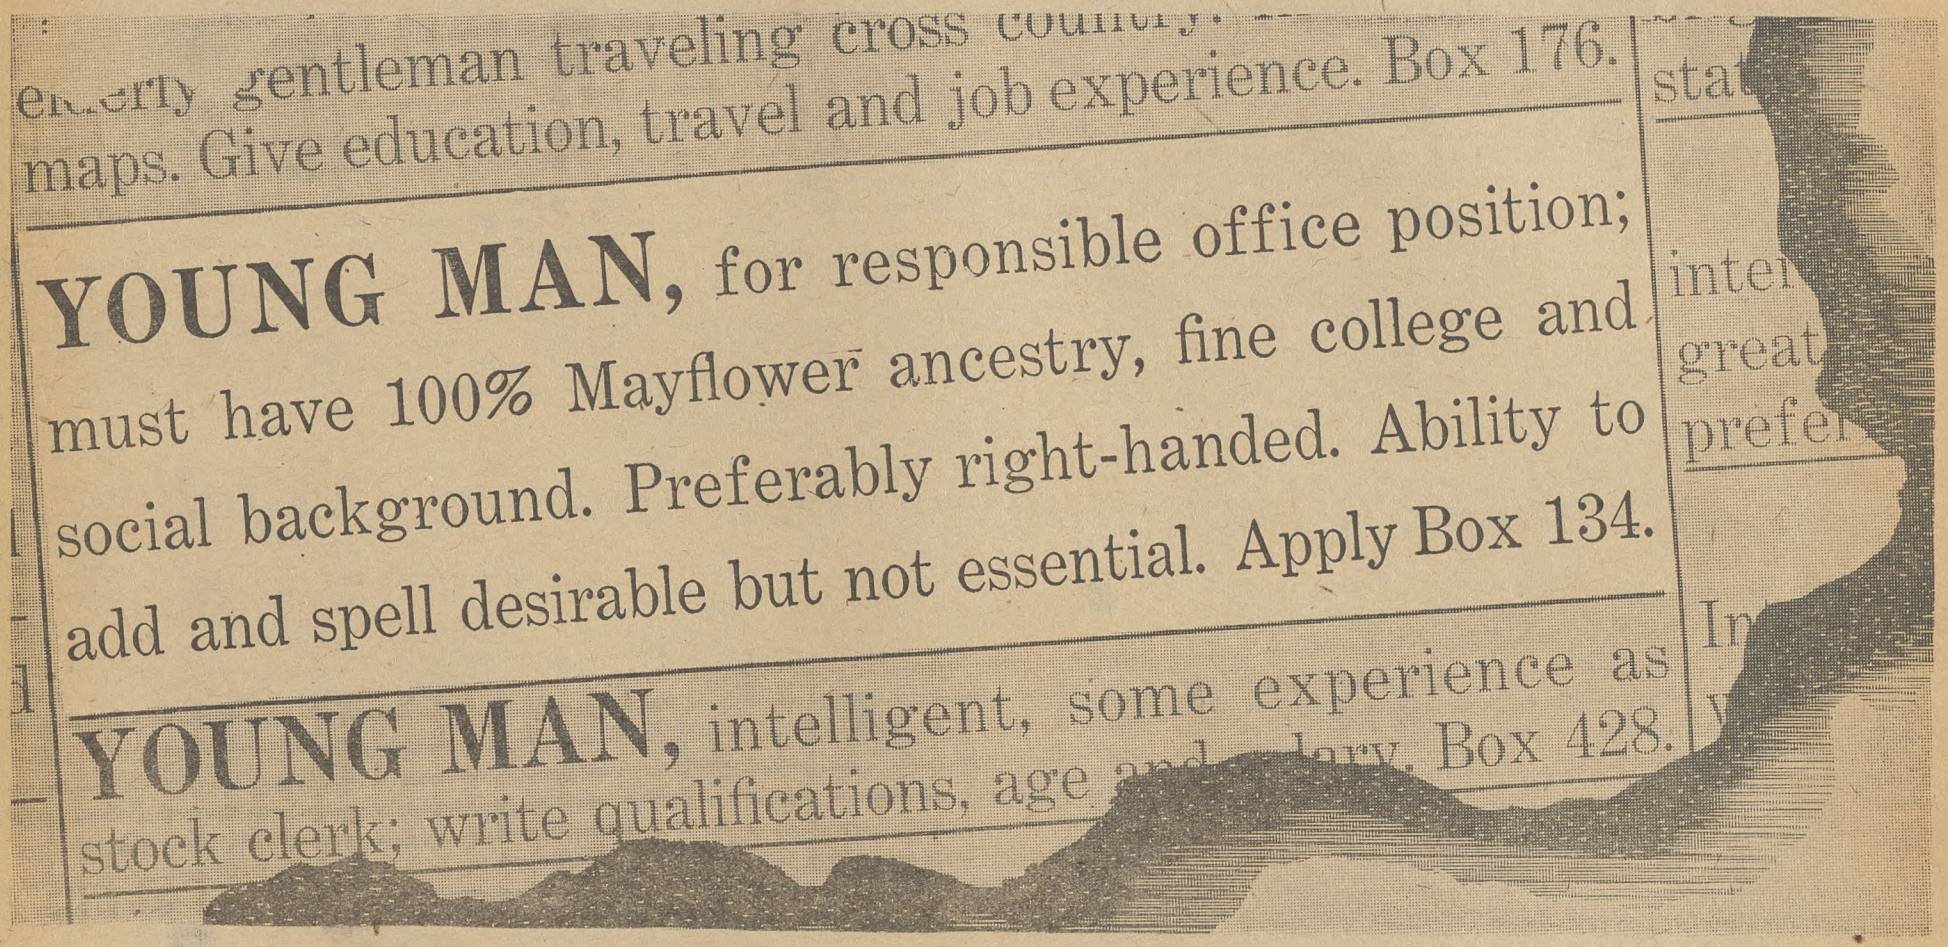
"Ugh! . . . Foreigners"

And Today—



THESE PICTURES RIDICULE race prejudice, but witnesses before a House Labor subcommittee last week testified it is a serious matter. They said job discrimination — one form of prejudice—not only makes the United States ridiculous in the eyes of the world, but also hurts our economy. FEPC bill could pass, they said, if Congressmen stuck by campaign pledges. (See P. 6-7.)

Telephone Union Gets Charter

THE CIO last week issued a charter of affiliation to the Communications Workers of America, whose members had voted 2-1 in a referendum in favor of joining with the CIO.

The charter was presented to Pres. Joseph Bierne and members of the CWA Executive Board by Vice President Allan S. Haywood of the CIO.

A joint CWA-TWOC amalgamation committee will now work out plans for merging the two unions.

Upon completion of the almagamation, to take place after the CWA and TWOC conventions in June, the new union will receive a CIO charter covering full jurisdiction over all telephone workers with full representation on the CIO executive board.

The new union, including some additional groups expected to join with the amalgamation, will start out with more than 350,000 members.

The CWA affiliation brings in the largest single group of workers since the original affiliations of the founding unions of the CIO.

IN MAKING the charter presentation at a Washington press conference, Haywood declared:

"The affiliation with CIO of the Communications Workers of America and their determination, through the process of amalgamation with other telephone unions already in CIO or still independent—looking toward establishment of a national union within CIO for all telephone workers—is the most significant development in the history of collective bargaining in the telephone industry.

"The American Telephone and Telegraph Company can no longer rely on the traditional isolation of its employees and on the disunity created by a myriad of splinter size organizations, to give it an overwhelming advantage at the bargaining table.

"The CIO accepts the affiliation of CWA as an obligation to finish the job of organizing the nation's 500,000 telephone workers. It sees, in the creation of this new telephone union, an opportunity to bring its message, through these workers, to millions of citizens in small-town and rural areas who have heretofore been isolated from CIO members. Labor's political arm is thereby strengthened and extended.

"The CIO recognizes that it now was hailed, upon issuance of a CIO charter, as a double barreled includes within its ranks the largest single white collar workers' union. These new CIO members will inspire and lead all other white collar workers into the field of organized labor."

SAID CWA Pres. Beirne in accepting the charter:

"With affiliation an accomplished fact, we can now look forward to the next step—amalgamation of all 'phone union groups in the CIO into one union.

"That union at the outset will attract to it a number of other unions, now independent, but working toward affiliation, and the 'phone union will almost immediately have a membership of around 350,000.

"From then on, our job will be to bring the CIO to the remainder of the telephone industry. Immediately after our June convention in Chicago, where final amalgamation is to be accomplished, we will launch a drive to bring these independent unions into the CIO.

"Our goal is at least 500,000 members within the next 18 months. We expect to accomplish this objective."

Entrance of the Communication Workers of America into the Congress of Industrial Organizations victory for both the new International Union and the CIO by Dir. Van A. Bittner of CIO's Southern Organizing Campaign.

"The national vote of 71,312 for the CIO to 34,419 against is indeed gratifying. Outstanding, I believe, was the vote in the Southern Federation where more than 22,000 men and women of the Telephone Company voted for CIO affiliation to approximately 3,000 against, or a majority of better than 7 to 1.

"I take this opportunity to congratulate Mr. Allan Haywood, Joseph Bierne, and the Communication Workers of America who made this overwhelming sectional victory possible."

Gratification

CIO's newest affiliate was welcomed by CIO Pres. Philip Murray with these words:

"On behalf of the entire CIO and with real personal pleasure I hereby welcome the Communications Workers of America into our great organization of industrial unions. We are naturally gratified with the overwhelming vote cast in your membership referendum in favor of CIO affiliation. This large vote is a clear manifestation of the confidence which your membership has in the CIO. In turn, I wish to express the reciprocal good will which the entire membership of the CIO has towards the membership of the Communications Workers of America. The referendum likewise demonstrates that the Executive Board of the CWA in recommending affiliation was clearly and unmistakably giving voice to the will and aspirations of the members of your union."

Three Firms Guilty Of Giving GOP Money

Two more Detroit area auto firms have been found guilty of violations of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act.

Fines of $500 were imposed on the Hickey Motor Sales Co. and the Merollis Chevrolet Sales & Service, Inc., by Federal Judge Arthur F. Lederle for illegal contributions to the Republican Party campaign fund.

The Hickey firm, located at Lincoln Park, was charged with contributing $100 while the Merollis Agency kicked in $353. Last month the Northwest Chevrolet Co., was fined $1,650 for making a similarly illegal contribution of $1,865.

Housing Bill Is OK'd By House Unit

HOPES FOR passage of the administration's giant federal housing program surged last week as the House Banking & Currency committee reported out a bill to construct 1,050,000 low-rent housing units in the next seven years.

Substantially the same bill, although providing 810,000 units in six years, had already sailed through the Senate. That it is assured of passage once it hits the House floor was even indicated by its most vehement foe, Rep. Jesse Wolcott, who last year succeeded in killing it.

Major provisions of the bill are:

- A federal expenditure of up to $400 million a year over a 40-year span to finance construction of the public housing units. Much of this cost would be offset by rentals and local contributions.
- A five-year slum clearance program, financed by a billion dollars in federal loans and $500 million in grants. Two-thirds of this cost is to be carried by local communities.
- A farm housing program, through which farmers would receive federal loans and grants.
- A federal research program to cut construction costs through new methods and materials.

During the program's first five years in operation, preference would be given veterans in occupancy of the new units.

House Banking Committee Chairman Brent Spence (D., Ky.) predicted a smashing administration victory when the issue comes before the House next week.

900 More Laid Off At Allegheny Ludlum

Allegheny Ludlum Steel Corp. has laid off 700 additional workers at its nearby Brackenridge, Pa., plant and 200 more at the West Leechburg, Pa., works, it was announced May 4. Two more open hearths were closed at Brackenridge, making a total of four idle there, due to a decline in orders for silicon steel.

It was estimated that layoffs in all of Allegheny Ludlum's plants, including one at Watervliet, N. Y., now total about 2000, leaving 10,500 still at work. Some of the latter are working only two or three 8-hour shifts a week. Previous layoffs included 500 at Brackenridge and 275 at West Leechburg.

Marcantonio (Wallace Backer) Has Strange Bedfellows

THE SOLE backer of Henry A. Wallace in the House of Representatives is Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP, N. Y.).

Rep. Marcantonio, along with other Wallaceites, has refused to back the Thomas-Lesinski Bill and had been crying that support of anything different from the Wagner Act is a sellout.

(Marcantonio is more Wagner than Wagner himself. Sen. Robert F. Wagner (D., N. Y.), sponsor of the Natl. Labor Relations Act of 1935, recently indorsed the Thomas-Lesinski Bill as an up-to-date version of his law.)

The day before the Dixiegop Wood Bill was recommitted, Marcantonio was keeping strange, strange company, even for a Wallaceite.

He offered a substitute for the Wood bill, which would repeal Taft-Hartley and reenact Wagner.

Up rose Rep. Howard W. Smith (D., Va.), co-daddy of the wartime Smith-Connally anti-labor law and sometimes considered even to the right of Rep. Fred A. Hartley (R., N. J.). Said Smith:

"Mr. Chairman, as often and as vehemently as I have disagreed with the gentleman from New York (Marcantonio), who has just preceded me, I always admire his forthrightedness.

"The gentleman for the first time in this debate had brought to this House the real issue—the issue whether you shall go forward with T-H and its principles, or whether this House is going to be a reactionary House and go back to all the evils and all the abuses and all the Communists' control that was involved in the whole administration of the NLRA.

"Gentlemen, he has presented to you the issue. Now, stand up and be counted."

A FEW MINUTES later, up popped a character named Rep. Noah Mason (R., Ill.), who's been right in there pitching with Smith.

Mason: "First I want to state I agree with the gentleman from Virginia in his position and attitude towards the gentleman from New York.

"I very seldom, if ever, agree with the gentleman from New York. I do on this occasion, and I have always admired him for his forthrightedness, because if there is anything this nation needs today, it is forthrightedness on matters that involve the welfare of the nation."

NEXT TO CLIMB on the bandwagon was Rep. Fred Michener (R., Ill.), who's definitely no pal of the CIO or Michigan's biggest union, the CIO Auto Workers. Quote this gent:

"Most of us do not agree with the philosophy of the gentleman from New York. I seldom vote with him, but I admire his ability and his fearlessness."

That was known in uncouth political circles as the buttering-up process. Marcantonio had fallen right into the trap of being used by the members of the House who are generally rated as being at the opposite political polls from him.

Who was it that made a remark about politics and bedfellows?

Goldberg To Congress:

'The People Won't Be Deceived'

Following is a letter from CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg to Sen. Elbert Thomas (D., Utah,) chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, and Rep. John Lesinski (D., Mich.), chairman of the House Labor Committee:

In the week that has elapsed since the recommittal of the vicious Wood Bill, we of the CIO have reviewed the legislative situation and we are still confident that the Taft-Hartley Act can be repealed, and at this session of the Congress.

The CIO is still as determined as it has been for the past two years to secure the removal of that unjust law from the statute books, and there will be no slackening of our efforts to this end. Our position throughout has been that we will press forward, not only for the repeal of T-H but for our ultimate objective, improvements in the Wagner Act to furnish additional and much-needed protection to labor's basic rights, to insure fairness and equity in our federal labor policy.

There have been efforts, on the part of some newspaper columnist, some radio commentators and some maliciously-motivated or poorly-informed persons, to cast reflections on the seriousness of the efforts of responsible leaders of democratic trade unions to win repeal of T-H. Needless to say, these aspersions have no basis in fact; and in some cases they were publicized only in a desperate effort to undermine the solidarity of union members in their resistance to the T-H, and to paralyze labor's efforts to bring about its repeal.

The CIO has never relaxed in any way its outright support for the Thomas-Lesinski Bill. We supported this bill from the time it was first offered; we support it today; and we will continue our support in the future. It is our considered judgment that only through passage of the Thomas-Lesinski Bill without crippling amendments can the Congress begin to provide a structure on which free collective bargaining can be securely built for the years ahead.

The CIO definitely and unequivocally labels—as it has done throughout this campaign—any amendment providing for injunctions in national emergency or other labor disputes. as completely unacceptable. Government by injunction has been tried in T-H—and in the years before the Norris-LaGuardia Act—and found wanting. It is abhorrent to labor and contrary to the functioning of a free society.

The CIO and its responsible officials, including the undersigned, at no time and under no circumstances have given their support to the use of injunctions in labor disputes. Our opposition to injunctions is a matter of fundamental principle, now and for the future.

As a necessary part of the fight for the Lesinski Bill in the House, it became necessary to defeat the Wood Bill—that unnatural legislative child sired by Republicans unknown and nurtured by a Georgia Dixiecrat. We were gratified by the vote to recommit that bill. It was a clear-cut vote against T-H, and a definite repudiation by the House of Representatives of this notorious law.

There can be scant room for satisfaction in the ranks of the National Association of Manufacturers over the increase in anti-Taft-Hartley votes, from 83 in 1947 to 212 in 1949.

In this vote of disapproval lies the basis for repeal of T-H at this session of Congress.

Sen. Robert A. Taft of Ohio has proposed a series of amendments to the Thomas Bill. These amendments substantially re-enact T-H. These amendments are drawn with a principal purpose of removing Sen. Taft's name from the most unpopular law since prohibition, while at the same time preserving the basic principles of that law.

The people of America—and the people of Ohio—will not be deceived by such an obvious political maneuver. Sen. Taft's proposals are not an honest effort to improve the existing labor-management relations law. They do not reflect the sound thinking of independent experts in this field. They provide no basis for stable labor-management relations in the future.

The Taft amendments resort to a process of thin sugar-coating to gloss over the many sections of T-H which they preserve.

The anti-union character of the amendments becomes most evident in Sen. Taft's double-standard attitude on union-security contracts. In this field, he supports states rights, but only if they are used against union security. On the other hand, where state law permits union security, he denies states rights in favor of a federal anti-labor statute.

Thus, Sen. Taft would retain the use of the writ of injunction against labor unions, not only in national emergency situations but in the unbridled discretion of the National Labor Relations Board.

His proposals continue the T-H legal machinery against many legitimate economic boycotts, with only an insignificant change, regardless of the justice of labor's use of that often necessary weapon against unfair employers.

He would continue to leave labor unions open to crushing damage suits in the federal courts.

He would place the National Labor Relations Board in the role of policing local strikes, already subject to adequate local laws, thereby putting unions in double jeopardy.

The Taft amendments pretend to modify the much-criticized restrictions on union security imposed by the Taft-Hartley Act. In fact, they fail to change in any significant way the disruptive provisions of T-H. For example, they would outlaw maritime union hiring halls which have been accepted and approved by management and labor alike, and would bring back the descredited and corrupt hiring practices conducted by unscrupulous foremen.

Labor-management collective bargaining on welfare funds is made even more complicated than the already unintelligible provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act. By providing for a certification and approval procedure by the government, they impose on industry, labor and the government an unmanageable administrative burden, which will tend to prolong labor-management disputes.

No principle except a naked bid for Dixiecrat support for anti-unionism can motivate this particular amendment.

In Ohio, for instance, the state's common law permits the closed shop agreement. Taft's amendments would over-ride the law of his own state. In Georgia, however, a state statute prohibits every form of union security, and Senator Taft gives this anti-union law precedence over the federal law.

We believe that the Thomas-Lesinski Bill can and should be passed without crippling amendments. We believe that the use of injunctions is neither effective as a means of bringing about labor-management peace nor sound as an instrument of public policy in a democratic society. We do not believe that the anti-Communist affidavit provision has any rightful place in a statute covering labor-management relations.

Sen. Taft's 23 self-described "corrections" of T-H are forced concessions begrudgingly made on minor—for the most part—aspects of the law. These "corrections" would not in any appreciable degree ameliorate the harsh conditions which were imposed on organized labor by the remaining sections of T-H as preserved by the Senator's amendments.

These "corrections" would not repeal that Act. They are, moreover, deliberately intermingled with additional and newly-introduced repressive features.

It is equally obvious that constructive labor-management relations cannot be long continued in the highly uncertain and demonstrably unsatisfactory status imposed by the Taft-Hartley Act. Repeal is needed now.

Thousands of contracts, entered into before T-H and which have afforded a measure of industrial peace and economic stability, expire in the next few weeks. Under these circumstances, organized labor cannot idly wait until 1950 or 1952 for legislation which will permit equitable contracts affording mutual security to labor and management, entered into by the normal process of bargaining.

The proposal to extend the affidavit to management compounds absurdity. Existing laws now make criminal the advocacy of the overthrow of the government by force or violence. If any further laws on this subject are required in the interest of national security, they should be separately considered apart from a decision on our national industrial relations policy.

In stating our position on the Thomas-Lesinski Bill, which we continue to support, the CIO is not maintaining an unrealistic attitude of utopian perfectionism. We are mindful that in the legislative process there is room for alteration in any bill—particularly one dealing with so complex a problem as labor relations. But we stand solidly against any changes which impinge on basic principles, such as the use of injunction, to break strikes.

We hope that the Congress of the United States will move ahead, in line with the clear desires of the people, to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act. We look forward to final votes on this issue in the Senate and in the House. We voice again our support of the Thomas-Lesinski Bill.

Ample time remains at this session of Congress for decisive action to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act.

It is unthinkable that this Congress will adjourn or recess without repealing this repudiated act.

CIO Urges Congress: Finish Job

WHILE HOUSE and Senate administration leaders were busily trying to get Taft-Hartley repeal on the floor at the earliest possible date, they received a reminder from CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg that ample time still remains to complete the job before adjournment.

In the House—which, after a stormy floor fight, finally sent the issue back to committee—a "harmony" meeting of Labor Committee Democrats decided to begin studying a repeal measure in two weeks. There will be no hearings this time, Committee Chairman John Lesinski announced, nor will the committee wait to see what the Senate does. The group will begin work on T-H as soon as it completes action on the federal aid to education bill.

In the Senate—whose labor committee has already reported out the Thomas-Lesinski bill—administration leaders expect to get the issue on the floor in a week or ten days—immediately after the floor is cleared of debate on Reciprocal Trade Agreements.

The possibility that Congress will adjourn without repealing "this repudiated law," Goldberg wrote the heads of both labor committees, "is unthinkable."

"The CIO has never relaxed in any way its outright support for the Thomas-Lesinski Bill," he said. We believe that the Thomas-Lesinki Bill can and should be passed without crippling amendments."

The CIO counsel hit both the use of injunctions and the anti-communist affidavits provision as having no place in a labor-management relations law.

The letter attacked the 23 amendments submitted by Sen. Robert A. Taft as substantially re-enacting the T-H act.

"These amendments are drawn with a principal purpose of removing Sen. Taft's name from the most unpopular law since Prohibition, while at the same time preserving the basic principles of that law," Goldberg charged.

EARLIER, AT LEAST one Republican had openly admitted the damage T-H had done the Republican party.

During the House debate, Rep. William Lemke of North Dakota had said:

"With no apologies to its authors, the T-H act was an insult to the laboring man. It was dictated by large industrialists and was passed in a 'labor be damned' spirit. The election on Nov. 2 should be an eye-opener to those who unwittingly fell into the trap of a few clever corporation lawyers. The price that we Republicans paid for that blunder came too high."

Instead of promoting peace, said the North Dakotan, T-H "created bitterness and hatred."

Jobless Compensation Claims Top 2 Million

The week ending Apr. 30 found 2,051,000 continued claims for unemployment compensation on the records of the Bureau of Employment Security, it was announced at Washington, D. C. The bureau noted, however, that new claims were only 322,000 during the week, compared to nearly 342,000 the week before.

IT'S GOT TO STOP

The winds came, and the dust blew, and once-prosperous farmers became the "Oakies" who lined the highways between Oklahoma and California.

The rains came, the streams rose, the thousands fled to high ground to escape the flood which left great destruction in its wake.

It's an old story now in America—a story that's too old and too much this year like it was the year before.

Those who saw the Dust Bowl develop and those who have lived along our large rivers have known for a long time that nature itself does great damage once it's been badly disturbed by man.

And it was man who cut down the trees, plowed the straight furrows, robbed the soil of its life-giving qualities and permitted the gullies to develop.

And it was man, too, who demonstrated—in the Tennessee Valley and elsewhere—that "conservation" is much more than just a word.

Perhaps this is the kind of editorial one might expect in a farm journal. Perhaps the garment maker in New York and the steel worker in Pittsburgh think more about the problems of city life and industrial production than they do about the soil.

But unless they—and many others—think more about it, and do something about it soon either they or their children will pay a high price for their neglect.

CIO SUPPORTS CONSERVATION

During recent years the CIO has become increasingly aware of the fact that a great portion of our natural wealth is blown-away or washed into the oceans every year—and increasingly conscious, too, that group action and careful planning are needed to remedy this situation.

That's why representatives of the CIO joined in Washington last week with spokesmen for other large organizations and the government in the National Emergency Conference on Resources.

That's why the regional planning program of the CIO is likely to be more and more in the news—and in the minds of industrial workers—as time passes.

What has occurred in the past demonstrated that the problem is not one which can be solved by individuals working singly. It's a national problem—one of as much concern to labor and business as to the farmer.

TVA PROVIDES GOOD EXAMPLE

There is no longer any question as to whether we can preserve our natural resources and repair much of the damage that has been done to our soil and our people by erosion. It's a question of whether we WILL.

No person who has visited the Tennessee Valley before and after TVA was created could seriously doubt that we have the technical know-how.

The proof is there for anybody to see.

Sure, it took a lot of time and energy and money to build TVA.

But floods and wind erosion and misuse of our resources take a great toll.

What was spent on TVA was an investment. What is spent sandbagging levees and hauling refugees to high ground is almost like money thrown down the drain.

Think it over. And why not get some expert on the subject to talk to your local union or council about it?

We Call It Gutter-Sniping

It's Doubtful That Facts Could Be Stranger Than Commie Fiction

By ALLAN L. SWIM

I HIGHLY recommend the Communist Daily Worker of New York and the People's Daily World of San Francisco to those who enjoy low-grade fiction.

I also recommend them to those naive characters in business, Congress and elsewhere who think Phil Murray and other responsible leaders of CIO have trouble sleeping nights because of the discomfort of the hammers and sickles which they hide beneath their pillows.

The Worker and the World are a couple of Red sheets which pretend to be newspapers and great friends of the working people. Actually they print factual news only coincidentally and would sell the workers down the Volga or any other river at the drop of Joe Stalin's hat.

Right now the chief objective of the two publications seems to be to perform an effective lead-pipe job on those in the CIO who believe in democratic trade unionism.

TO GRASP the full significance of what's been happening lately it's necessary to go back to the days when Old Uncle Joe was playing footsie with a little man with a mustache—a fellow named Hitler.

In those days the Commies were calling Roosevelt a warmonger and were giving you-know-what in big doses to Phil Murray because he advocated preparedness.

The Yanks weren't coming. The "fascists" in the U. S. were bent on waging an imperialistic war. So the Commies said.

Then Joe and Adolf had a little falling-out, or something, and Russia and Germany were at each other's throats.

In about the time it takes to bat an agile eye, the Commies had launched a second front campaign for the great "people's war."

And Murray, to use one of his own expressions, was "elevated to sainthood" by the domestic Reds.

DURING THE war Roosevelt was a great hero and Murray was a saint because they—along with many others—threw their strength into the battle against Germany and Japan.

But the situation changed not long after the fighting ended. Relations between Russia, the U. S. and the democracies of Western Europe became strained.

Russia imposed her totalitarian rule wherever she could and the U. S. assumed leadership of the democratic bloc.

Almost overnight Murray was back in the little Red doghouse and the Commies were yapping at him.

They've been at it ever since—with increasing intensity — although his position on important matters has not altered.

The Commie line, however, has taken another turn.

MURRAY AND other right-wing leaders of the CIO aroused the hatred of the party liners when they gave solid support to the Marshall Plan and vigorously fought the Progressive Party, in which the Reds played an active role.

The Commie yapping became louder—and nastier—when Murray read the "riot act" to the Kremlin lads out at the CIO's Portland convention last November.

He told them, bluntly, to keep their noses out of CIO affairs. And a big majority of the delegates gave full support to his position.

Since then a number of CIO groups have told the Commies to go peddle their papers—including, of course, the Worker and the World.

DURING RECENT weeks the Commies have really been turning on the heat and it's obvious they got a lot of their fuel out of the gutter.

Directly and by inference they have accused Murray and other top CIO leaders of incompetence, cowardice and treachery.

(And, incidentally, they've blasted the CIO News and its editor.)

The Worker and the World, being mouthpieces of the party, have been right in there pitching with eloquent and crude distortions.

An example of their tactics was a story in the May 6 issue of the World, which said: "The design of incompetence and misleadership was unveiled full-grown at the Portland CIO convention late last November."

Yep, cheap fiction!

Dixiegops 'Causing Grave Concern'

THE NOW-FAMOUS zoological cartoon phenomenon, the Dixiegop, was born in the CIO News editorial offices in mid-March. Characterized by a tail pointing north and south, an elephant-like trunk and donkey-like ears, he has attracted considerable attention in the nation's press.

Down in Texas, the Dixiegop is causing college students some concern.

An editorial entitled "Dixiegop; Its Rise and Fall (We Hope)" appeared in The Battalion, campus daily of Texas Agricultural & Mechanical College. "Unfortunately," writes Battalion Editorial Assistant Charles Kirkham to the CIO News, "Texas has a small herd of these creatures grazing around in Washington." The editorial:

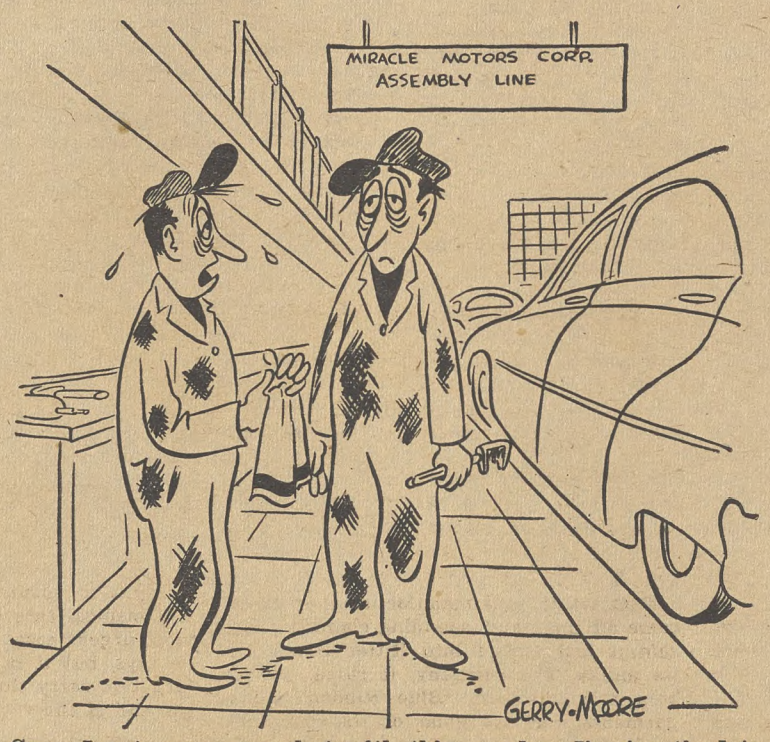
A NEW AND STRANGE herd of little political beasts have been sighted on the Washington scene. Some report the animals as having the heads of elephants and the bodies of donkeys; others swear they have donkeys' faces and elephants' bodies. What ever their appearance, we are coming to know of them by the name Dixiegops.

A Dixiegop is a little political critter that holds to the ideals of the Dixiecrat, votes with the Republicans, and runs on the Democratic ticket. These funny looking little beasts have migrated from the southern United States. Several have been reported from as far west as Texas.

These little creatures are a pathetic lot. They run on the Democratic ticket because they know they could not otherwise get elected. They hold to the Dixiecratic principles because their capacity for broad thinking is restricted by the South's and particularly Texas' prejudiced shortsightedness. And they vote with the Republicans because Republicans have taken sympathy upon the poor little animals and promise them all sorts of nice things if they vote right.

What to do about these Dixiegops is causing many in this country grave concern. Those of us who have raised one in our own backyard are surprised at the product of our labor. We can't decide if he is a vermin or a precious playful little fellow.

We get sad thinking that many of these cute little animals will get killed at the next election.



Sure, I got a new car, but with this speedup, I'm too tired to drive it."

Rubber Worker Gets Tenn. State Position

Different Policy For Their Own Employes

THIS IS A STORY about a couple of trade unionists who got into the habit of clipping stories and editorials from a certain newspaper.

It started during the Christmas holiday season one year and continued into late spring of the next. Hardly a week went by without one or the other adding something new to his collection.

Occasionally one of their fellow workers would see them cutting away with scissors and wisecrack: "Cuttin' out paper dolls again, eh?"

But they went right ahead with their snipping.

NEWSPAPER Guild negotiations opened in the late spring with the paper from which the clippings had come—and the two "scissors boys" were on the union's contract committee.

As usual, the first few sessions were devoted to what are generally called preliminaries.

Certain provisions of the old contract were extended to the new one, and certain new provisions were given an OK.

And then both sides buckled down to business.

The Guild was asking for quite a few things. Management was saying only "no" —not even "maybe."

This went on for several weeks with neither side budging an inch.

THE GUILD HELD an emergency meeting that lasted late into the night and finally adopted a scorcher of a resolution which implied that a strike might be forthcoming unless management changed its tune.

The resolution was presented to management representatives the next afternoon—and then the fireworks began! Editors and business office representatives blew their tops individually and collectively.

"How could our employes say such things about us?" demanded an irate editor.

"Oh, that's easy to answer," replied a Guildsman. "They can say such things because they're true."

The meeting was soon recessed to allow managerial tempers to cool down.

ON THE FOLLOWING afternoon negotiations were resumed, with about half of the members of the Guild unit accompanying their spokesmen to the session.

"Why are all of these people here?" asked the business manager.

"We just wanted to see if you'd talk as nasty to a big group as you do to our small negotiating committee," said a Guild officer.

There was a sudden change in management's attitude.

Well, maybe, they hadn't given full consideration to every angle. Perhaps something could be worked. They'd be willing to give a little if the Guild did likewise.

"Well," said one of the negotiators, "We're willing to settle the pension issue on your own terms."

"Our terms?" asked a management man.

AT THIS POINT one of the "scissors boys" tossed onto the table a copy of an editorial which had appeared in the paper months before. It said all business firms should make a real effort to provide their employes with adequate pensions.

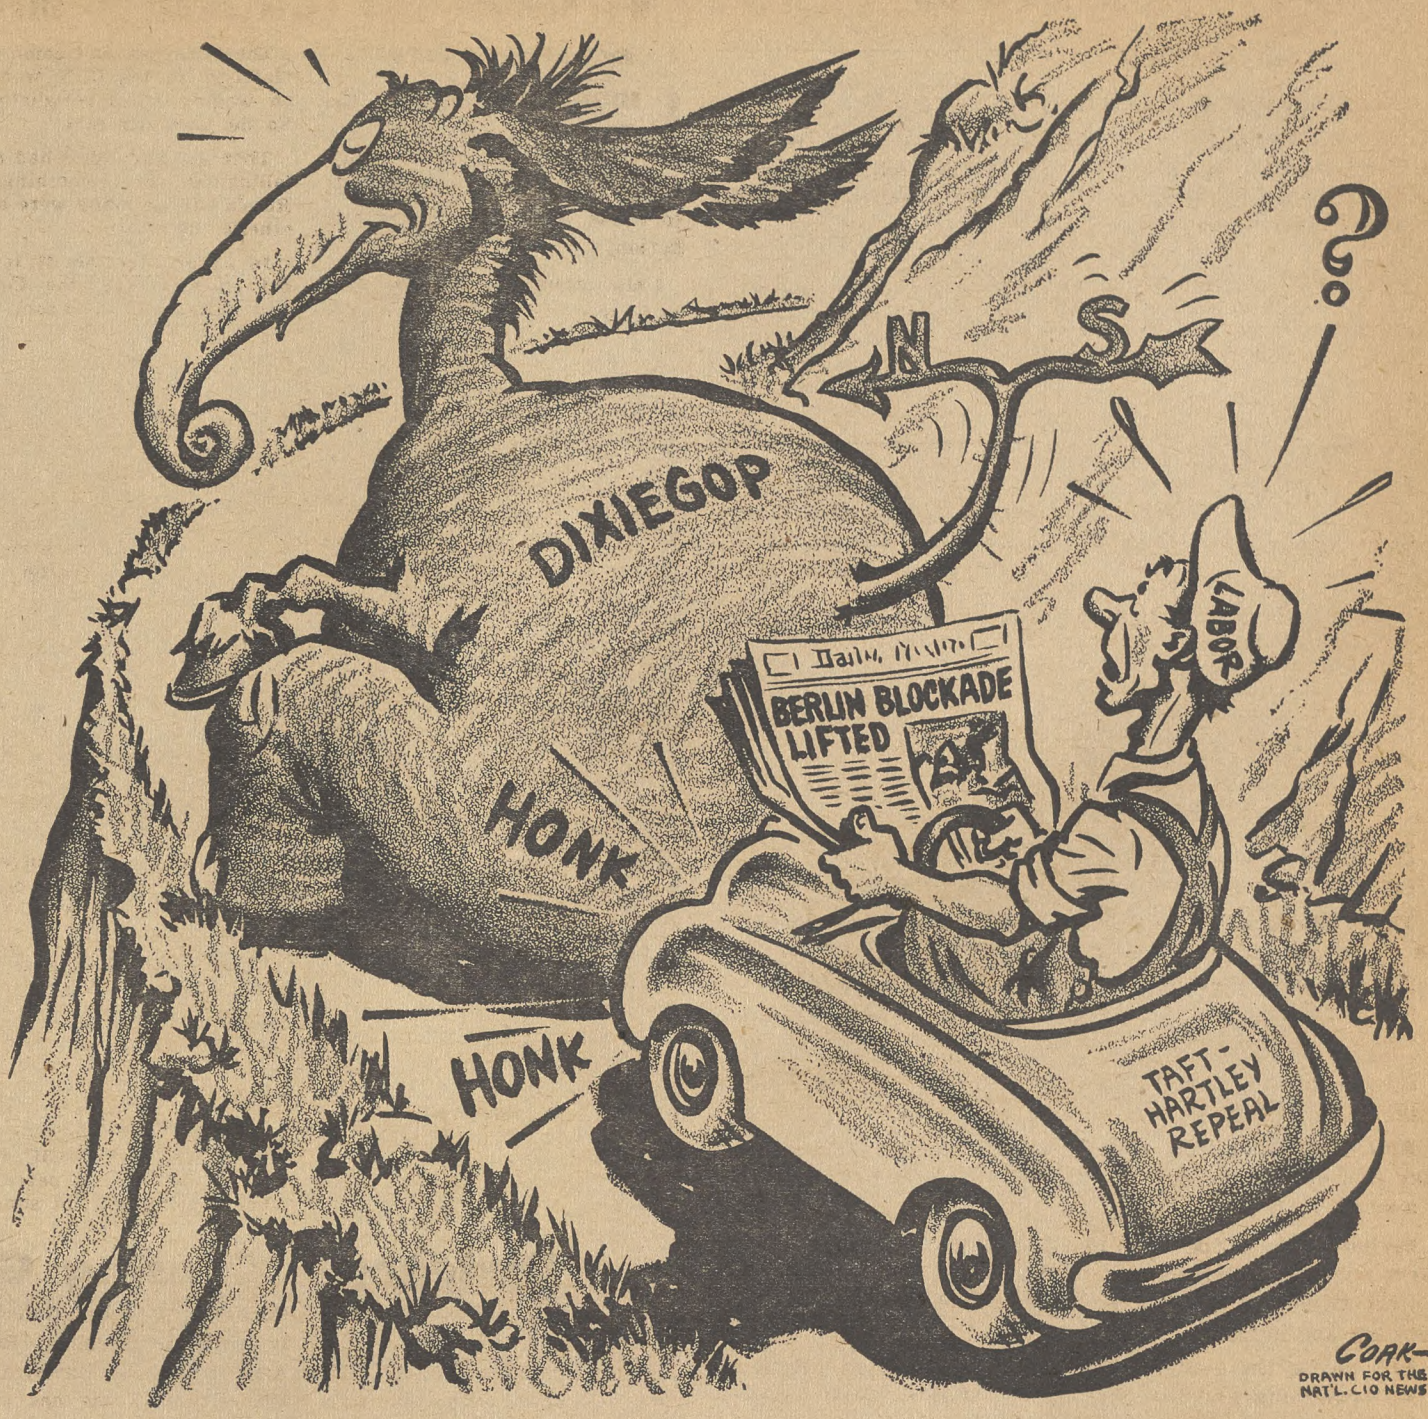
The other "clipper" tossed out an editorial on union security and offered to settle for the plan it advocated.

Then they tossed out story after story on the increased cost of living.

"Finally a red-faced editor mumbled, "Well, I guess you know some of the things we advocate are for business generally but don't apply to newpapers."

P. S. The Guild didn't obtain pensions or real union security but got a sizeable wage increase and other benefits. A. L. S.

TIME TO LIFT ANOTHER BLOCKADE



Murray Supports Reuther Plan For Pre-Fabs

HOPE THAT the CIO program for building pre-fab houses in unused aircraft factories will be "given serious consideration at the highest levels of government" has been voiced by CIO Pres. Murray.

"Immediate steps should by given to put the plan into gear," Murray said of the program, first made public three months ago by UAW Pres. Walter Reuther, who heads the CIO's Housing Committee.

Writing an introductory statement in a new edition of the program, which has just been published as a CIO pamphlet, Murray compared the suggestion for mass producing of housing to the Reuther plan for mass production of airplanes in the early days of the defense program.

At that time, Murray recalled, "the critics of organized labor refused to heed our proposals, and the advantages which might have been gained had our program had early acceptance, were lost by the many months of delay before the automobile industry was required to convert to war production.

"Once again organized labor, through its accumulated experience and skills in the application of advanced modern techniques, proposes a program seeking solution of country's most pressing need."

FACTORY methods which could produce hundreds of thousands of low-priced homes should be carefully studied, in line with the Reuther proposals, Murray declared.

In putting forward the housing program, Reuther declared that "it is not exaggerated to describe our housing crisis as a war—a war between the national welfare and special interests."

The housing committee chairman noted that government-built airframe plants and other government-owned facilities are standing idle, and that thousands of machines are lodged in government warehouses.

Use of these facilities would put men to work, keep defense industries functioning on a stand-by basis for possible emergency, and help solve the housing crisis.

Blue Ribbon Mink Label Found Phony

The lucky girl whose daddy buys her a mink coat made by Ritter Bros., Inc., in New York will not longer be fooled into believing that each little mink she wraps around her has won a blue ribbon in a mink show, the Federal Trade Commission made it clear last week.

FTC, which tells manufacturers when to come off their high-sounding claims in ads, said it had looked into Ritter Bros. and its minks. The company, it ruled, should stop talking about "Blue Ribbon" mink garments, because none of its coats are made from "registered or champion, trophy winning or prize winning" minks.

Children's Fund Needs Money

Faced by a critical financial shortage, the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund may be forced into a premature closure of its work throughout the world unless government and private contributions are rapidly made available, states Col. Alfred G. Katzin, coordinator of the UN Appeal for Children.

Not only does the Fund have no money in sight to ensure that minimum feeding and medical care will be provided for the most urgent cases throughout next winter, he says, but it is $28 million short of its target to carry through its programs until the end of the year.

An official statement issued by the Fund states that the organization supplies a daily supplementary half meal for some four million children in war dislocated countries in Europe, and a basic feeding program of essential dietary items for half a million destitute children among the Arab refugees.

In addition, in association with others, it provides medical supplies and assistance to help check tuberculosis, malaria, tubercular meningitis and other diseases among children in Europe.

It is also developing small-scale medical assistance to children in Southeast Asia and the Far East. Small supplementary help in the form of sponsorship of training courses in child care and nutrition is also furnished by the Fund.

Job Discrimination Knows No Bou

By GLORIA CAPLAN

TO REP. Clare Hoffman, the problem of discrimination against minority groups in employment is no problem at all.

Discrimination against Negroes? Well, says the Michigan Republican, it doesn't exist in his district. He doesn't know about other districts — Detroit, for instance—because "I'm not a travelled citizen."

Discrimination against Jews? Don't be silly. "There is no such thing as discrimination against the Jews. In this country, if I understand the situation correctly, the Jews have the world by the tail. They are on top."

The Congressman made these "revelations" last week before a five-man subcommittee of the House Labor Committee. The sub-committee was holding hearings on a Fair Employment Practices bill. Hoffman was against the whole thing.

The Congressman summed up his philosophy this way: "I do not believe legislation is necessary. . . . We are gradually getting where there is no discrimination."

The following two days a steady stream of witnesses—both Republican and Democrat—gave the sub-committee facts to the contrary, and pleaded for enactment of a federal FEPC law.

MINNESOTA'S Sen. Hubert Humphrey, credited with pushing through the Democratic Party's strong civil rights plank at the last party convention, said:

"If we are going to export democracy, we better get tooled up for mass production of it here at home. We can't export something we're short of, Mr. Chairman."

All the pro-FEPC witnesses expressed concern over the effects of discrimination on our foreign policy. But they were even more concerned about the devastating effects on our economy.

Sub-committee Chairman Adam Clayton Powell (D., N. Y.) pointed out discrimination isn't confined to one section of the country. "I want our colleagues in the South," he said, "to realize this is not directed against them. Proof of that is the fact that we enacted it (FEPC laws) in ten Northern states."

That discrimination knows no state or regional boundaries was brought out in the testimony repeatedly.

Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D., Calif.), herself sponsor of a FEPC bill, called attention to a 1948 job application blank of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. The applicant is asked his religion, lineage, father's birthplace, etc., Rep. Douglas said. In addition, a photograph of the job seeker is required, "otherwise, says the form, "your application will not be considered."

But at the top of the blank there is the sentence: "This form not to be used in the States of Connecticut, Massachusetts, New York and New Jersey."

In these states FEPC laws are in effect, the witness noted. "If Goodyear didn't have a guilty conscience, why should it—on its own initiative—withdraw the questionnaire from these states?"

WHAT THE opposition (which often asserts that "you can't legislate against prejudice") ignores, said Rep. Douglas, is that there is a difference between prejudice and discrimination.

"Our system," she said, "can indulge a man's individual prejudice, however wrongfully conceived, so long as it remains a state of mind. But our democratic system cannot permit a man to translate his prejudices into action which infringes the rights and liberties of others. . . .

"When prejudice is translated into active discrimination whereby men, solely because of their race, religion, color or national origin are denied an opportunity of earning a livelihood for themselves and their families, it is the proper function of government to prevent such practices."

In the Northern city of Minneapolis, Minn., Sen. Humphrey told the committee, an FEPC ordinance was enacted while he was mayor. Very shortly thereafter 75 department stores opened their employment doors for the first time to minority groups. In numerous other industries the same was true, he said.

Committee members were able to add instances from their own personal observations. Chmn. Powell commented that in 1938 the president of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. told a New York commission that the company employed no Negroes, few Jews and few Catholics in New York City. Today, after enactment of a state FEPC, a Negro will soon become chief operator in the city, he said.

REP. TOM BURKE (D., Ohio), former president of a CIO Auto Workers local, noted that in his state, unions had made great strides in reducing discrimination, but found they needed legislation to do a complete job. (An FEPC bill has been passed by both houses of the Ohio state legislature, and is now in conference committee).

Humphrey emphasized the nation's need for maximum use of its human skills, the necessity of raising living standards by opening employment opportunities to all people. To those who argue that education, not legislation, is the only cure, Humphrey said:

"Day-to-day contacts between the members of different racial, religious, and nationality groups in employment is the best possible device for building mutual understanding, respect, and good will. It is through this kind of educational process that we will break down those false and vicious stereotypes which have grown up in our society because of the limited and unnatural status of intergroup contacts. This increase in personal acquaintance with members of other groups will lead us to treat all of our fellow men as individuals . . ."

MIKE MATSAOKA, representing the Japanese American Citizens League, told committee members how discrimination against his people has deprived them of using their skills and education.

The Institute of Labor Economics of the University of Washington had reported, he said, that "almost universally, employment agencies report difficulties in placing non-whites." This is particularly true, the survey said, of technical and professional persons "who frequently must take jobs as laborers or service workers."

In California, the State Employment Service reported that

"Because of this experience," he said, "we are convinced that federal legislation on this subject is not only necessary, but that it will also be effective."

THE OBJECTIVE of the FEPC proponents was well summed up by Hobson R. Reynolds, civil liberties department director of the Independent Benevolent Protective Order of Elks of the world:

"What my people want," said Reynolds, himself a Negro, "is the opportunity to be self-supporting, to take care of their children, to buy a little roof over their heads, to live without fear of violence. What they want is a chance to prove what they can do. They want to rise and fall—as workers—not on their color or racial background, but on their capacity, skill and merit."

Rep. Jacob Javits (R. N. Y.) told the subcommittee that "never in our history has there been a more favorable climate" for righting the wrongs committed against minority groups through economic discrimination.

Testifying in behalf of an FEPC bill, of which he is a sponsor, Javits said that two major questions are involved in the "struggle for economic opportunity:

"1) Shall the validity of our constitutional democracy be maintained or shall it be cynically flouted?

"2) Shall we continue to furnish to the protagonists of the communist idealogy the greatest propaganda weapon they possess—the continued discrimination and segregation practiced in parts of the United States against Negroes."

Javits said that the struggle for equal opportunity affects every minority — not only Negroes, Jews or Catholics. The dangerous strain on the economy will come, he said, when there is a depression.

FEPC Bill Seen Passing -- If Promises Are Kept

Both Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D. Minn.) and Rep. Helen Douglas (D. Calif.) expressed certainly that FEPC legislation could be passed in both houses—if Congressmen who have said they are for the bill "will vote for it."

Rep. Douglas estimated 40 to 50 Southern votes in the House against FEPC. Sen. Humphrey said "the maximum number in the Senate who have expressed themselves against civil rights legislation is 22."

While Republican committee member Rep. Richard Nixon kept trying to point the finger of blame at the Democrats, Humphrey and Douglas both insisted that if Republicans would carry out their campaign promises when they voted, the legislation could be easily passed.

"They (the Southerners) frankly don't have that many votes," said Humphrey.

N.J.Council Urges 5c Bus Fare

PRES. CARL Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council, has called the testimony presented to the Public Utility Commissioners by the AFL bus drivers union, "more in agreement with the views of the National Association of Manufacturers than with any bona fide trade union."

The New Jersey CIO has been seeking to have the PUC order the Public Service Corp. to cut its bus fare from 7c to 5c, the previous rate.

In a letter to PUC Pres. John E. Boswell, Holderman recommended that the testimony presented by Charles D. Cicchino, vice-president of the Amalgamated Association of Street, Electrical Railway and Motor Coach Employes, be considered by the Board "only after the true facts of the related incidents—as herein described by me—have been considered."

"AS A MATTER of fact, there should be no single individual in New Jersey more familiar with this universal anti-labor tactic than Mr. Cicchino and the members of his union.

"When the bus drivers received their well-deserved wage increase —and let me state parenthetically that I believe that they deserve the still higher wages—the Public Service Corp. took tremendous steps to impress upon the riding public that Mr. Cicchino's union was responsible for the 'need' for the 7c fare.

"While the wage award amounted to less than $3,000,000 the Public Service admits publicly that at the end of the first year, they will have taken in close to $8,000,000 in increased revenue as a result of the 7c fare.

"It takes only the simplest process of mathematics to show that the Public Services has earned a net profit of 150% on the wage award, while simultaneously trying to make everyone believe the AFL union was responsible for the fare increase.

Cicchino's testimony concerning the CIO position on similar cases elsewhere is based upon serious misinformation.

"In Philadelphia in 1948 immediately following 15c hourly wage increase, the CIO appeared before the Board of Public Utility Commissioners in opposition to the application for a fare increase.

"Today, in Philadelphia, the local CIO council is busy at work on its testimony to be presented before the PUC again in opposition to the proposed fare increase.

"In 1949, the CIO councils in Montgomery, Chester, and Delaware Counties (Pa.) assumed the identical position in opposition to a fare increase despite the fact that CIO unions were the collective bargaining agents representing the workers.

"In 1949, in both New Jersey and Pennsylvania, the State CIO Councils opposed rate increases again despite the fact that CIO unions represented the workers employed by the telephone company.

"With regard to the Transport Workers Union in the New York subway case, this additional information may be of interest.

"The New York subways are municipally-owned and prior to the fare increase were operating at a deficit."

T-H Shows Active Racial Hatred

TO MOST Southern cotton mill employers, Taft-Hartley's "free-speech-for-employers" guaranty means the right to stir up religious and racial hatred in their anti-union campaigns, John Edelman has charged.

Illustrating the way the "free speech" provision has been used by employers, the CIO Textile Workers' legislative representative, in a letter to 100 Senators and Representatives, cited what he termed a typical anti-union circular used by Southern mill owners.

The circular was sent by the Pacific Mills to its Lyman, S. C., employes, shortly before an NLRB representation election. Its key paragraph read:

"Who are the men who are running this union, anyway? I will name some of its main leaders to you: Baldanzi, Rieve, Chupka, Genis, Jabor, Knapik, Rosenberg. Where do you think these men come from? Are their backgrounds, their upbringing, their beliefs, their faiths and their principles anything like yours and mine? Would you sooner trust these men whom you have never seen than those of us who have lived and worked here with you throughout the years?"

OF THOSE mentioned, two were no longer connected with TWUA at the time the circular was issued; all but two were born in this country; the other two were brought to this country as infants, Edelman pointed out.

Use of such appeals to prejudice, he said, is fairly standard among Southern cotton manufacturers.

"Employers, like anyone else, have constitutional rights, and we are prepared to do our bit towards protecting those rights while we are fighting for our own," said Edelman. "But when it comes down to the facts of industrial life in America today, we find employers, as a class, and cotton mill owners in particular abusing basic rights in an effort to intimidate or subvert workers seeking to assert their rights to form unions of their own choosing."

Enactment of the Thomas-Lesinski bill would help check such abuses, Edelman suggested, because it would eliminate T-H.

Mich. GOP Scuttles Gov. Williams' Program

THE REPUBLICAN - dominated Michigan Legislature at Lansing has virtually completed its job of shattering Gov. Williams' legislative program even though it meant going back on some of the GOP campaign promises.

Not one of the many Democratic bills embracing the Governor's program—and fulfilling all pledges in his platform—has been allowed to come up for debate in the House. Williams was elected with PAC support.

Democratic efforts to discharge some of the bills from committee, where the proposals are dead or dying, met with no success.

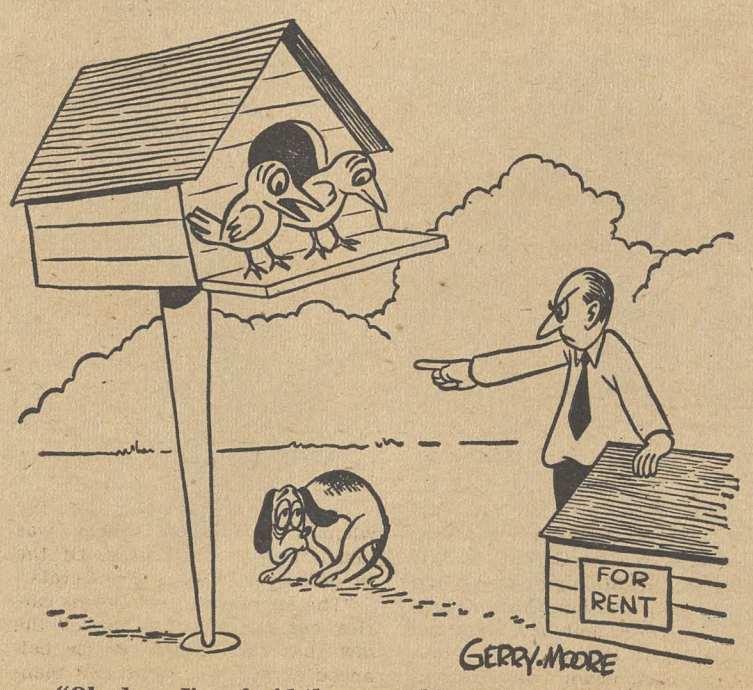
Rep. Martha Griffiths, wife of the Democratic Party's state chairman, made use of the constitutional provision allowing discharge of a bill from committee. Capitol observers said that this was the first time in legislative history that the almost-forgotten constitutional provisions had been invoked.

Mrs. Griffiths moved for discharge of the administration's FEPC bill. "I speak not to put the political parties in Michigan on the spot," she told the House, "but to take them off the spot, since both had pledged an FEPC law."

A ROLL CALL on the motion for discharge showed every Democrat for, and every Republican against debating the measure. Motions this week to discharge bills on housing assistance and banning of interim utility rate increases also found the House voting on strict party lines. In recent months, the Michigan Public Service Commission has granted utility increases amounting to $30,000,000.

Democrats were able to eke out some gains recently. The use of the calendar week, which disqualified many workers from unemployment compensation benefits, was stricken from the law.

The Unemployment Compensation Act was also improved by liberalizations in the payment of partial benefits for a worker who is employed part of a week and by elimination of the cancellation of wage credits. The latter provision stipulates that if a worker quits one job for another and then is laid off, his wage credits from the first job will be used in computing his benefits.



"Oh, dear, I'm afraid the same thing will happen to us."

Oil Union Will Seek 36 Hours

By RAY DAVIDSON

THE NATIONAL policy committee of the CIO Oil Workers union has voted unanimously to seek a 36-hour work week instead of the 40-hour week now standard in the petroleum industry, with no reduction in take home pay of workers.

The committee, meeting in Denver, voted to delay drives for a fourth round wage increases for the present, so that emphasis may be placed on the campaign for a 36-hour week. Thus far the oil industry has not been so hard hit as many others by layoffs, but many companies are beginning to curtail forces and further discharges are in prospect.

By reducing the work week to 36 hours, OWIU believes that all of its members can be kept at work. In a statement adopted by the policy committee, OWIU asked all other labor organizations to join in the drive for a shorter work week in order to prevent depression.

Prior to World War II, the 36-hour week was standard in oil industry. The work week was increased to 48 hours during the war and reduced to 40 hours immediately after the end of hostilities. The policy committee pointed out that 1948 profits were such that the oil companies can grant their workers the same take-home pay for the shorter work week and still maintain handsome profits.

Adoption of a 36-hour week with the present take-home pay would add 11.11% to employer labor costs. But statistics show that in 1948 the average oil company made net profits greater than its entire wage bill.

Productivity of oil workers has increased significantly since prewar days, the statement of policy added. After a discussion of wages, the committee agreed to postpone for the time any demands for increased take-home pay. However, the policy may be changed at any time conditions warrant, for the policy committee can be called into session by order of OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight. Success of the OWIU drive to spread employment cannot be determined for several months. The union has more than 500 separate contracts in effect and their termination dates are scattered around the calendar.

Kirwan Voted Right

Due to an error, a printing slug was dropped out of the roll call on the Wood Bill recommittal vote in last week's CIO News.

The blank space gave the impression that Rep. Michael J. Kirwan, Democrat of Youngstown, O., had been absent or not voting on the roll call. On the contrary, Rep. Kirwan was present and voted "right," as is consistent with his long record in Congress.
